3. Tractable; obsequious; complying; yielding.
He generous thoughts instills
Of true nobility; forms their ductile minds
To human virtues. Phillips.
Their designing leaders cannot desire a more ductile and easy people to work upon. Addison's Freeholder, N<sup>o</sup>. 7.

DU'CTILENESS. n. f. [from ductile.] Flexibility; ductility.
I, when I value gold, may think upon
The ductileness, the application;
The wholsomness, the ingenuity,
From rust, from soil, from fire ever free. Donne.

DUCTILITY. n. f. [from ductile.]
1. Quality of suffering extension; flexibility.
Yellow colour and ductility are properties of gold: they belong to all gold, but not only to gold; for saffron is also yellow, and lead is ductile. Watts's Logick.

2. Obsequiousness; compliance.
DU'DGEON. n. f. [dolch, German.]

1. A small dagger.

There is likewise due to the publick a civil reprehension of advocates, where there appeareth cunning, gross neglect, or slight information. Bacon, Essay 57.

Mirth and cheerfulness are but the due reward of innocency of life. More's Divine Dialogues.

A present blessing upon our fasts is neither originally due from God's justice, nor becomes due to us from his veracity. Smalridge's Sermons.

There is a respect due to mankind, which should incline ever the wisest of men to follow innocent customs. Watts.

2. Proper; fit; appropriate.
Opportunity may be taken to excite, in persons attending on those solemnities, a due sense of the vanity of earthly satisfactions. Atterbury.

3. Exact; without deviation.
You might see him come towards me beating the ground in so due time, as no dancer can observe better measure. Sidn.

And Eve within, due at her hour, prepar'd
For dinner savoury fruits. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. v.

DUE. adv. [from the adjective.] Exactly; directly; duly.
Like the Pontick sea,
Whose icy current, and compulsive course,
Ne'er feels retiring ebb, but keeps due on
To the Propontick and the Hellespont. Shakesp. Othello.

DUE. n. f. [from the adjective.]

1. That which belongs to one; that which may be justly claimed.
My due from thee is this imperial crown,
Which, as immediate from thy place and blood,
Derives itself to me. Shakespeare.

The son of Duncan,
From whom this tyrant holds the due of birth,
Lives in the English court. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Thou better know'st
The offices of nature, bond of childhood,
Effects of courtesy, dues of gratitude:
Thy half q' th' kingdom thou hast not forgot,
Wherein I thee endow'd. Shakespeare's King Lear.

I desire of you a conduct over land.
—My lord, you are appointed for that purpose;
The due of honour in no point omit. Shakesp. Cymbeline.

I take this garland, not as given by you,
But as my merit, and my beauty's due. Dryd. Ind. Emperor.

No popular assembly ever knew, or proposed, or declared what share of power was their due. Swift.

2. Right; just title.

The

Us thy vow'd priests, 'till outmost end
Of all thy dues be done, and none left out. Milt. Par. Reg.
They pay the dead his annual dues. Dryden.
4. Custom; tribute.
In respect of the exorbitant dues that are paid at most other ports, this deservedly retains the name of free. Addison.
- TO DUE. v. a. [from the noun.] To pay as due.
This is the latest glory of their praise,
That I thy enemy due thee withal. Shakespeare's Henry VI.
- DU'EL. n. f. [duellum, Latin.] A combat between two; a single fight.
In many armies, if the matter should be tried by duel between two champions, the victory should go on the one side;
and yet if it be tried by the gross, go on the other side. Bacon.
To whom thus Michael: dream not of your fight
As of a duel, or the local wounds
Of head or heel. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xii. l. 387.
'Twas I that wrong'd you; you my life have fought:
No duel ever was more justly fought. Waller.
- TO DU'EL. v. n. [from the noun.] To fight a single combat.
The challenging and fighting with a man, a certain positive mode of action, by particular ideas distinguished from all others, is called duelling. Locke.
- TO DU'EL. v. a. To attack or fight with singly.
Who single
Duell'd their armies, rank'd in proud array,
Himself an army, now unequal match
To save himself against a coward arm'd,
At one spear's length. Milton's Agonistes, l. 344.
- DU'ELLER. n. f. [from duel.] A single combatant.
They perhaps begin as single duellers, but then they soon get their troops about them. Decay of Piety.
- DU'ELLIST. n. f. [from duel.]
1. A single combatant.
If the king ends the differences, the case will fall out no worse than when two duellists enter the field, where the worsted party hath his sword again, without further hurt. Suckling.
Henceforth let poets, ere allow'd to write,
Be search'd like duellists before they fight. Dryden.
2. One who professes to live by rules of honour.
His bought arms Mung not lik'd; for his first day
Of bearing them in field, he threw 'em away;
And hath no honour lost, our duellists say. Ben. Johnson.
- DUE'LLLO. n. f. [Italian.] The duel; the rule of duelling.
The gentleman will, for his honour's sake, have one bout with you: he cannot by the duello avoid it. Sh. Twelfth Night.
- DUE'NNA. n. f. [Spanish.] An old woman kept to guard a younger.
I felt the ardour of my passion increase as the season advanced, 'till in the month of July I could no longer contain:
I bribed her duenna, was admitted to the bath, saw her un-dressed, and the wonder displayed. Arbutnot and Pope.
- DUG. v. f. [deggia, to give suck, Islandick.]
1. A pap; a nipple; a teat: spoken of beasts, or in malice or contempt of human beings.
Of her there bred
A thousand young ones, which she daily fed,
Sucking upon her poisonous dugs; each one
Of sundry shape, yet all ill favoured. Fairy Queen, b. i.
They are first fed and nourished with the milk of a strange dug. Raleigh's History of the World.
Then shines the goat, whose brutish dugs supply'd
The infant Jove, and nurs'd his growing pride. Creech.
2. It seems to have been used formerly of the breast without reproach.
It was a faithless squire that was the source
Of all my sorrow, and of these sad tears;
With whom, from tender dug of common nurse,
At once I was up brought. Fairy Queen, b. ii. cant. 4.
As mild and gentle as the cradle-babe,
Dying with mother's dug between its lips. Shakesf. Hen. VI.
- DUG. preterit. and part. pass. of dig.
They had often found medals, and pipes of lead, as they dug among the rubbish. Addison's Remarks on Italy.
- DUKE. n. f. [duc, French; dux, Latin.] One of the highest order of nobility in England; in rank a nobleman next to the royal family.
The duke of Cornwall, and Regan his dutchess, will be here with him this night. Shakespeare's King Lear.
Aurmarle, Surrey, and Exeter must lose
The names of dukes, their titles, dignities,
And whatsoever profits thereby rise. Daniel's C. War.
- DU'KEDOM. n. f. [from duke.]
1. The seigniority or possessions of a duke.
Her brother found a wife,
Where he himself was lost; Prospero his dukedom
In a poor isle. Shakespeare's Tempest.

DUL

This arm of mine hath chastised
The petty rebel, dulbrain'd Buckingham. Shakesf. Rich. III.
- DU'LCET. adj. [dulcis, Latin.]
1. Sweet to the taste; luscious.
From sweet kernels press'd,
She tempers dulcet creams; nor these to hold
Wants the fit vessels pure. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. v.
2. Sweet to the ear; harmonious; melodious.
I sat upon a promontory,
And heard a mermaid, on a dolphin's back,
Uttering such dulcet and harmonious breath,
That the rude sea grew civil at her song. Shakespeare.
A fabrick huge
Rose like an exhalation, with the sound
Of dulcet symphonies, and voices sweet. Milt. Parad. Lost.
- DULCIFICA'TION. n. f. [from dulcify.] The act of sweetning;
the act of freeing from acidity, saltiness, or acrimony.
In colcothar the exactest calcination, followed by an exquisite dulcification, does not reduce the remaining body into elementary earth; for after the salt or vitriol, if the calcination have been too faint, is drawn out of the colcothar, the residue is not earth, but a mixt body, rich in medical virtues. Boyle's Scept. Chym.
- TO DU'LCIFY. v. a. [dulcifier, French.] To sweeten; to set free from acidity, saltiness, or acrimony of any kind.
A decoction of wild gourd, or colocynthis, though somewhat qualified, will not from every hand be dulcified into aliment, by an addition of flower or meal. Brown's Vulgar Err.
I dressed him with a pledgit, dipt in a dulcified tincture of vitriol. Wifeman's Surgery.
Spirit of wine dulcifies spirit of salt; nitre, or vitriol have other bad effects. Arbutnot on Aliments.
- DU'LCIMER. n. f. [dolcimello, Skinner.] A musical instrument played by striking the brass wires with little sticks.
Ye hear the sound of the cornet, flute, harp, sackbut, psaltery, dulcimer, and all kinds of musick. Dan. iii. 5.
- TO DULCORATE. v. a. [from dulcis, Latin.] To sweeten;
to make less acrimonious.
The ancients, for the dulcorating of fruit, do commend swine's dung above all other dung. Bacon's Natural History.
Turbith mineral, as it is sold in the shops, is a rough medicine; but being somewhat dulcorated, first procureth vomiting, and then salivation. Wifeman's Surgery.
- DULCORA'TION. n. f. [from dulcorate.] The act of sweet-ening.
Malt gathereth a sweetness to the taste, which appeareth in the wort: the dulcoration of things is worthy to be tried to the full; for that dulcoration importeth a degree to nourishment:
and the making of things inalimental to become alimental, may be an experiment of great profit for making new victuals.
Bacon's Natural History, N°. 649.
- DU'LHEAD. n. f. [dull and head.] A blockhead; a wretch foolish and stupid; a dolt.
This people be fools and dulheads to all goodness; but subtle, cunning, and bold in any mischief. Ascham's Schoolm.
- DU'LIA. n. f. [δουλια.] An inferiour kind of adoration.
Paleotus saith, that the same worship which is given to the prototype may be given to the image; but with the different degrees of latria and dulia. Stillingfleet.
- DULL. adj. [dwl, Welsh; doole, Saxon; dol, mad, Dutch.]
1. Stupid; doltish; blockish; unapprehensive; indocile; slow of understanding.
Such is their evil hap to play upon dull spirited men. Hooker.
He that hath learned no wit by nature, nor art, may complain of gross breeding, or comes of a very dull kindred. Shak.
Sometimes this perception, in some kind of bodies, is far more subtle than the sense; so that the sense is but a dull thing in comparison of it. Bacon's Natural History.
Every man, even the dullest, is thinking more than the most eloquent can teach him how to utter. Dryden.
2. Blunt; obtuse.
Meeting with time, Slack thing, said I,
Thy scythe is dull; whet it, for shame. Herbert.
3. Unready; awkward.
Gynecia a great while stood still, with a kind of dull amaze-
O help thou my weak wit, and sharpen my dull tongue.
Fairy Queen, b. i. stanza. 2.
Memory is so necessary to all conditions of life, that we are not to fear it should grow dull for want of exercise, if exercise would make it stronger. Locke.
4. Hebetated; not quick.
This people's heart is waxed gross, and their ears are dull of hearing. Math. xiii. 15.
5. Sad; melancholy.
6. Sluggish; heavy; slow of motion.
Thenceforth the waters waxed dull and slow,
And all that drunk thereof did faint and feeble grow. F. 2.
7. Gross;

D U M

7. Gross; cloggy; vile.
She excels each mortal thing
Upon the dull earth dwelling. Shak. Two Gent. of Verona.
8. Not exhilarating; not delightful; as, to make dictionaries is dull work.
9. Not bright; as, the mirror is dull, the fire is dull.
I'll not be made a soft and dull ey'd fool,
To shake the head, relent, and sigh, and yield
To Christian intercessors. Shakespeare's Merch. of Venice.
10. Drowsy; sleepy.
To DULL. v. a. [from the adjective.]
1. To stupify; to infatuate.
Nothing hath more dulled the wits, or taken away the will of children from learning, than care in making of Latin. Asch.
Those drugs she has
Will stupify and dull the sense awhile. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.
2. To blunt; to obtund.
This entrance of the battle did whet the courage of the Spaniards, though it dulled their swords. Bacon.
3. To sadden; to make melancholy.
4. To hebetate; to weaken.
Now forc'd to overflow with brackish tears,
The troublous noise did dull their dainty ears. Spenser.
5. To damp; to clog.
Prayers were short, as if darts thrown out with a sudden quickness, lest that vigilant and erect attention of mind, which in prayer is very necessary, should be wasted or dulled through continuance. Hooker, b. v. f. 33.
In bodies, union strengtheneth and cherisheth any natural action; and, on the other side, weakeneth and dulleth any violent impression, and even so is it of minds. Bacon's Essays.
6. To make weary, or slow of motion.
7. To fully brighten.
The breath dulls the mirror. Bacon.
- DU'LLARD. n. f. [from dull.] A blockhead; a dolt; a stupid fellow; a dunce.
What, mak'st thou me a dullard in this act?
Wilt thou not speak to me? Shakespeare's Cymbeline.
Thou must make a dullard of the world,
If they not thought the profits of my death
Were very pregnant and potential spurs
To make thee seek it. Shakespeare's King Lear.
- DU'LLY. adv. [from dull.]
1. Stupidly; doltishly.
It is not sufficient to imitate nature in every circumstance dully, literally, and meanly; but it becomes a painter to take what is most beautiful. Dryden's Dufresnoy.
2. Slowly; sluggishly.
The air, if it be moist, doth in a degree quench the flame, and howsoever maketh it burn more dully. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
3. Not vigorously; not gaily; not brightly; not keenly.
DU'LNES. n. f. [from dull.]
1. Stupidity; weakness of intellect; indolence; slowness of apprehension.
Nor is the dulness of the scholar to extinguish, but rather to inflame the charity of the teacher. South's Sermons.
Shadwel alone my perfect image bears,
Mature in dulness from his tender years. Dryden.
2. Want of quick perception.
Nature, by a continual use of any thing, groweth to a satiety and dulness, either of appetite or working. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
3. Drowsiness; inclination to sleep.
Here cease more questions;
Thou art inclin'd to sleep. 'Tis a good dulness,
And give it way. Shakespeare's Tempest.
4. Sluggishness of motion.
5. Dimness; want of lustre.
6. Bluntness; want of edge.
DU'LY. adv. [from due.]
1. Properly; fitly; in the due manner.
Ever since they firmly have retained,
And duly well observed his behest. Spenser.
I do not know
What kind of my obedience I should tender,
More than my all, which is nothing; nor my prayers
Are not words duly hallow'd, nor my wishes
More worth than vanities; yet prayers and wishes
Are all I can return. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.
In the body, when the principal parts, as the heart and liver, do their offices, and all the inferior smaller vessels act orderly and duly, there arises a sweet enjoyment upon the whole, which we call health. South's Sermons.
If attention be duly engaged to those reflections, they cannot fail of influence. Rogers, Sermon 3.
2. Regularly; exactly.
Seldom at church, 'twas such a busy life;
But duly sent his family and wife. Pope, Epistle 3.
- DUMB. adj. [from ἄφωνος he was silent; dumbs, Gothick; dumbe, Saxon; dum, Danish; dom, Dutch, dull.]
1. Mute; incapable of speech.
It hath pleased himself sometime to unloose the very tongues even of dumb creatures, and to teach them to

D U N

- plead in their own defence, lest the cruelty of man should persist to afflict them. Hooker, b. v. f. 8.
- They spake not a word;
But like dumb statues, or unbreathing stones,
Star'd each on other. Shakespeare's Richard III.
Some positive terms signify a negative idea: blind implies a privation of sight, dumb a denial of speech. Watts's Logick.
2. Deprived of speech.
They sung no more, or only sung his fame;
Struck dumb, they all admir'd the godlike man. Dryden.
  3. Mute; not using words.
He is a proper man's picture; but, alas! who can converse with a dumb show? Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.
His gentle dumb expression turn'd at length
The eye of Eve to mark his play. Milton's Paradise Lost.
Her humble gestures made the residue plain,
Dumb eloquence persuading more than speech. Roscommon.
For he who covets gain in such excess,
Does by dumb signs himself as much express,
As if in words at length he show'd his mind. Dryden's Juv.
Nothing is more common than for lovers to complain, relent, languish, despair, and die in dumb show. Addis. Spect.
  4. Silent; refusing to speak.
The good old seer withstood
Th' intended treason, and was dumb to blood;
'Till tir'd with endless clamours, and pursuit
Of Ithacus, he stood no longer mute. Dryden's Æn.
  - DU'MBLY. adv. [from dumb.] Mutely; silently; without words.
  - DU'MBNESS. n. f. [from dumb.]
  1. Incapacity to speak.
  2. Omission of speech; muteness.
There was speech in their dumbness, language in their very gesture: they looked as they had heard of a world ransomed, or one destroyed. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.
To th' dumbness of the gesture
One might interpret. Shakespeare's Timon of Athens.
  3. Refusal to speak; silence.
'Tis love, said she; and then my downcast eyes,
And guilty dumbness, witness'd my surprize. Dryden.
  - To DU'MBFOUND. v. a. [from dumb.] To confuse; to strike dumb. A low phrase.
They had like to have dumbfounded the justice; but his clerk came in to his assistance. Spectator, No. 616.
  - DUMP. n. f. [from dm, stupid, Dutch.]
  1. Sorrow; melancholy; sadness.
Sing no more ditties, sing no mo
Of dumps so dull and heavy;
The frauds of men were ever so,
Since Summer first was leafy. Sh. Much Ado about Nothing.
Visit by night your lady's chamber window
With some sweet consort: to their instruments
Tune a deploring dump; the night's dead silence
Will well become such sweet complaining grievance. Shak.
Funerals with stately pomp
March slowly on, in solemn dump. Hudibras, p. i. cant. 1.
The squire who fought on bloody stumps,
By future bards bewail'd in doleful dumps. Gay's Pastorals.
  2. Absence of mind; reverie.
This shame dumps cause to well-bred people, when it carries them away from the company. Locke.
  - DU'MPISH. adj. [from dump.] Sad; melancholy; sorrowful.
New year, forth looking out of Janus' gate,
Doth seem to promise hope of new delight;
And bidding th' old adieu, his passed date
Bids all old thoughts to die in dumpish sight. Spenser.
The life which I live at this age is not a dead, dumpish, and four life; but chearful, lively, and pleasant. Herbert.
  - DU'MPLING. n. f. [from dump, heaviness.] A sort of pudding.
You prate too long, like a book-learn'd sot,
'Till pudding and dumpling burn to pot. Dryden.
  - DUN. adj. [dun, Saxon.]
  1. A colour partaking of brown and black.
By mixing such powders we are not to expect a strong and full white, such as is that of paper; but some dusky obscure one, such as might arise from a mixture of light and darkness, or from white and black, that is, a grey, or dun, or russet brown. Newton's Opt.
  2. Dark; gloomy.
Come, thick night!
And pall thee in the dunest smoke of hell,
That my keen knife see not the wound it makes;
Nor heav'n peep through the blanket of the dark,
To cry hold! hold! Shakespeare's Macbeth.
He then survey'd
Hell, and the gulph between, and Satan there
Coasting the wall of heav'n on this side,
In the dun air sublime. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. iii. l. 69.
  - To DUN. v. a. [dunan, Saxon, to clamour.] To claim a debt with vehemence and importunity.
Borrow of thy back, and borrow of thy belly: they'll never ask thee again. I shall be dunning thee every day. Bacon.
I remember

D U N

I remember what she won:
And hath she sent so soon to dun? Swift.

When thou dun'st their parents, seldom they,
Without a suit before the tribune, pay. Dryden's Juvenal.

DUN. n. f. [from the verb.] A clamorous, importunate, troublesome creditor.

Thus, while my joyless minutes tedious flow,
With looks demure, and silent pace, a dun,
Horrible monster! hated by gods and men,
To my aerial citadel ascends. Phillips.

It grieves my heart to be pulled by the sleeve by some rascally dun, Sir, remember my bill. Arbutnot's History of F. Bull.
DUNCE. n. f. [A word of uncertain etymology; perhaps from dum, the Dutch stupid.] A dullard; a dolt; a thickskul; a stupid indocile animal.

Dunce at the best; in streets but scarce allow'd,
To tickle, on thy straw, the stupid crowd. Dryden's Virgil.

Was Epiphanius so great a dunce to imagine a thing, indifferent in itself, should be directly opposite to the law of God? Stillingfleet.

I never knew this town without dunces of figure, who had credit enough to give rise to some new word. Swift.

DUNG. n. f. [Dineg, Saxon.] The excrement of animals used to fatten ground.

For dung, all excrements are the refuse and putrefactions of nourishment. Bacon's Natural History, No. 696.

I judge the likeliest way to be the perforation of the body of the tree in several places, one above the other; and the filling of the holes with dung, mingled with the medicine; and the watering of those lumps of dung, with squirts of an infusion of the medicine in dunged water, once in three or four days. Bacon's Natural History, No. 500.

For when from herbs the pure part must be won,
From gross by 'stilling, this is better done
By despis'd dung than by the fire or sun. Donne.
He soon would learn to think like me,
And bless his ravish'd eyes to see
Such order from confusion sprung,
Such gaudy tulips rais'd from dung. Swift.

TO DUNG. v. a. [from the noun.] To fatten with dung.

It was received of old, that dunging of grounds, when the West wind bloweth, and in the decrease of the moon, doth greatly help. Bacon's Natural History, No. 667.

There, as his dream foretold, a cart he found,
That carry'd compost forth to dung the ground. Dryden.

DUNGEON. n. f. [from donjon, the tower in which prisoners were kept, whence all prisons eminently strong were in time called dungeons.] A close prison: generally spoke of a prison dark or subterraneous.

Then up he took the slumbered senseless corse,
And e're he could out of his swoon awake,
Him to his castle brought with hasty force,
And in a dungeon deep him threw without remorse. Fa. Qu.
We know not that the king of heav'n hath doom'd
This place our dungeon; not our safe retreat
Beyond his potent arm. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ii.

Now from the North
Of Norumbeque, and the Samoed shore,
Bursting their brazen dungeon, arm'd with ice,
And snow, and hail, come stormy gust, and flaw. Milton.
By imagination a man in a dungeon is capable of entertaining himself with scenes and landscapes, more beautiful than any that can be found in the whole compass of nature. Addis.

DUNGFORK. n. f. [dung and fork.] A fork to toss out dung from stables.

Dungforks and paddles are common every where. Mortimer.

DUNGHIL. n. f. [dung and hill.]

1. An heap or accumulation of dung.
I, his brother, gain nothing under him but growth; for the which his animals on his dunghils are as much bound to him as I. Shakespeare's As you like it.

Turn out that eyeless villain; throw this slave
Upon the dunghil. Shakespeare's King Lear.

Two cocks fought a duel for the mastery of a dunghil. L'Est.
Never enter into a league of friendship with an ingrateful person; that is, plant not thy friendship upon a dunghil: it is too noble a plant for so base a soil. South's Sermons.

The dunghil having raised a huge mushroom of short duration, is now spread to enrich other mens land. Swift.

2. Any mean or vile abode.
Perhaps a thousand other worlds, that lie
Remote from us, and latent in the sky,
Are lighten'd by his beams, and kindly nurs'd,
Of which our earthly dunghil is the worst. Dryden.

3. Any situation of meanness.
The poor he raiseth from the dust,
Even from the dunghil lifts the just. Sandys.

4. A term of reproach for a man meanly born.
Out, dunghil! dar'st thou brave a nobleman? Shakesp.

DUNGHIL. adj. Sprung from the dunghil; mean; low; base; vile; worthless.

His dunghil thoughts, which do themselves enure

D U R

To dirty drops, no higher dare aspire. Spenser on Love.
DUNGY. adj. [from dung.] Full of dung; mean; vile; base; low; odious; worthless.

If it be so,
We need no grave to bury honesty;
There's not a grain of it, the face to sweeten
Of the whole dungy earth. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

DUNGYARD. n. f. [dung and yard.] The place of the dunghil.

Any manner of vegetables cast into the dungyard. Mortimer.
DUNNER. n. f. [from dun.] One employed in soliciting petty debts.

They are ever talking of new filks, and serve the owners in getting them customers, as their common dunners do in making them pay. Speclator, No. 454.

DUODECUPLE. adj. [duo and decuplus, Latin.] Consisting of twelve.

Griseplus, a learned Polander, endeavours to establish the duodecuple proportion among the Jews, by comparing some passages of Scripture together. Arbutnot on Coins.

DUPE. n. f. [dupe, French, from duppe, a foolish bird easily caught.] A credulous man; a man easily tricked.

An usurping populace is its own dupe, a mere underworker, and a purchaser in trust for some single tyrant. Swift.

First slave to words, then vassal to a name,
Then dupe to party; child and man the same. Dunciad.

TO DUPE. v. a. [from the noun.] To trick; to cheat.

The throne a bigot keep, a genius quit;
Faithless through piety, and dup'd through wit. Pope's Epist.

DUPLE. adj. [duplus, Latin.] Double; one repeated.

TO DUPLICATE. v. a. [duplico, Latin.]

1. To double; to enlarge by the repetition of the first number or quantity.

And some alterations in the brain duplicate that which is but a single object to our undisturbed sentiments. Glanv.

2. To fold together.

DUPPLICATE. adj. [from the verb.]

Duplicate proportion is the proportion of squares. Thus, in a rank of geometrical proportions, the first term to the third is said to be in a duplicate ratio of the first to the second, or as its square is to the square of the second: so in 2, 4, 8, 16, the ratio of 2 to 8 is a duplicate of that of 2 to 4; or as the square of 2 to the square of 4. Phillips. Harris. Bailey.

It has been found, that the attraction is almost reciprocally in a duplicate proportion of the distance of the middle of the drop from the concourse of the glasses, viz. reciprocally in a simple proportion, by reason of the spreading of the drop, and its touching each glass in a larger surface; and again reciprocally in a simple proportion, by reason of the attractions growing stronger within the same quantity of attracting surface. Newton's Opt.

DUPPLICATE. n. f. Another correspondent to the first; a second thing of the same kind, as a transcript of a paper.

Nothing is more needful for perfecting the natural history of bodies than the subjecting them to the fire; to which end I have reserved duplicates of the most considerable. Woodward.

DUPPLICATION. n. f. [from duplicate.]

1. The act of doubling.

What great pains hath been taken concerning the quadrature of a circle, and the duplication of a cube, and some other mathematical problems. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

2. The act of folding together.

3. A fold; a doubling.

The peritonæum is a strong membrane, every where double; in the duplications of which all the viscera of the abdomen are hid. Wifeman's Surgery.

DUPPLICATURE. n. f. [from duplicate.] A fold; any thing doubled.

Vast bags are requisite to contain the water which issues from the lympheducts, either dilacerated or obstructed, and exonerating themselves into the foldings, or between the duplicatures of the membranes. Ray on the Creation.

DUPPLICITY. n. f. [duplicis, Latin.]

1. Doubleness; the number of two.

This duplicity was ill contrived to place one head at both extremes, and had been more tolerable to have set three or four at one. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iii. c. 14.

Do not affect duplicities nor triplicities, nor any certain number of parts in your division of things. Watts's Logick.

2. Deceit; doubleness of heart, or of tongue.

DURABILITY. n. f. [durabilis, Latin.] The power of lasting; continuance; endurance.

Stones though in dignity of nature inferior unto plants, yet exceed them in firmness of strength, or durability of being. Hooker, b. i. f. 6.

Our times upon the earth have neither certainty nor durability. Raleigh's History of the World.

DURABLE. adj. [durabilis, Latin.]

1. Lasting; having the quality of long continuance.

The bones of his body we may compare to the hard rocks and stones, and therefore strong and durable. Raleigh's History.

DUR

With pins of adamant;

And chains, they made all fast; too fast they made,

And durable! Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x. l. 320.

The glories of her majesty's reign ought to be recorded in words more durable than brass, and such as our posterity may read a thousand years hence. Swift.

2. Having successive existence.

When on a day,

For time, though in eternity, apply'd

To motion, measures all things durable

By present, past, and future, on such day

As heav'n's great year brings forth. Milton's Paradise Lost.

DURABLENESS. n. f. [from durable.] Power of lasting; continuance.

The different consistence and durableness of the strata whereof they consist, are more or less. Woodward's Nat. Hist.

A bad poet, if he cannot become immortal by the goodness of his verse, may by the durableness of the metal that supports it. Addison on ancient Medals.

DURABLY. adv. [from durable.] In a lasting manner.

There indeed he found his fame flourishing, his monuments engraved in marble, and yet more durably in mens memories. Sidney.

DURANCE. n. f. [from dureffe, law French.]

1. Imprisonment; the custody or power of a jailor; a prison.

Thy Dol, and Helen of thy noble thoughts,

Is in base durance and contagious prison;

Haul'd thither by mechanick dirty hands. Shakesp. Hen. IV.

A poor, innocent, forlorn stranger, languishing in durance, upon the false accusations of a lying, insolent, whorish woman. South's Sermons.

There's neither iron bar nor gate,

Portcullis, chain, nor bolt, nor grate;

And yet men durance there abide,

In dungeons scarce three inches wide. Hudibras, p. i. cant. 2.

Notwithstanding the warning and example before me, I commit myself to lasting durance. Congreve's Old Batchelor.

2. Endurance; continuance; duration.

Sick nature at that instant trembled round,

And mother earth sigh'd as she felt the wound:

Of how short durance was this new made state!

How far more mighty than heaven's love, hell's hate! Dryd.

DURA'TION. n. f. [duratio, Latin.]

1. A sort of distance or length, the idea whereof we get, not from the permanent parts of space, but from the fleeting and perpetually perishing parts of succession. Locke.

2. Power of continuance.

Duration is a circumstance so essential to happiness, that if we conceived it possible for the joys of heaven itself to pass from us in an instant, we should find ourselves not much concerned for the attainment of them. Rogers's Sermons.

3. Length of continuance.

Aristotle, by greatness of action, does not only mean it should be great in its nature, but also in its duration, that it should have a due length in it. Addison's Spectator, N<sup>o</sup>. 267.

To DURE. v. n. [duro, Latin.] To last; to continue; to endure.

The delights and pleasures of the world are most pleasing while they dure. Raleigh's History of the World.

DUREFUL. adj. [from endure and full.] Lasting; of long continuance; durable.

The dureful oak, whose sap is not yet dry'd,

Is long e'er it conceive the kindling fire;

But when it once doth burn, it doth divide

Great heat, and makes his flames to heaven aspire. Spenser.

DURELESS. adj. [from dure.] Without continuance; fading; transitory; short.

Yet were that aptitude natural, more inclinable to follow and embrace the false and dureless pleasures of this stage-play world, than to become the shadow of God. Raleigh's History.

DURESSE. n. f. [French, hardship, severity.]

1. Imprisonment; constraint; confinement.

2. [In law.] A plea used by way of exception, by him who being cast into prison at a man's suit, or otherwise by threats, beating, &c. hardly used, seals any bond to him during his restraint. This the law holds as invalid, and supposes to be constrained. Cowel.

DURING. prep. [This word is rather a participle from dure; as, during life, durante vita, life continuing; during my pleasure, my pleasure continuing the same.] For the time of the continuance of; while any thing lasts.

If during his childhood he be constantly and rigorously kept from drinking cold liquor whilst he is hot, forbearance grows into a habit. Locke.

DURITY. n. f. [dureté, French; durus, Latin.] Hardness; firmness.

Ancients did burn fragments of marble, which in time became marble again, at least of indissoluble durability, as appeareth in the standing theatres. Wotton's Architecture.

Irradiancy or sparkling, found in many gems, is not discoverable in this; for it cometh short of their compactness and durability. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. ii. c. 1.

DUS

DURST. The preterite of dare.

The Christians durst have no images of the Deity, because they would rather die than defile themselves with such an impiety. Stillingfleet's Def. of Disc. on Rom. Idol.

DUSK. adj. [duyster, Dutch.]

1. Tending to darkness. See DUSKY.

2. Tending to blackness; dark coloured.

The hills to their supply,

Vapour, and exhalation dusk, and moist,

Sent up amain.

Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x. l. 741.

DUSK. n. f. [from the adjective.]

1. Tendency to darkness; incipient obscurity.

I will wait on you in the dusk of the evening, with my shew upon my back. Spectator, N<sup>o</sup>. 271.

2. Darkness of colour; tendency to blackness.

Some sprinkled freckles on his face were seen,

Whose dusk set off the whiteness of the skin. Dryden's Fab.

To DUSK. v. a. [from the noun.] To make duskyish. Dict.

To DUSK. v. n. To grow dark; to begin to lose light or brightness; to have lustre diminished. Dict.

DUSKILY. adv. [from dusky.] With a tendency to darkness or blackness.

DUSKISH. adj. [from dusk.]

1. Inclining to darkness; tending to obscurity.

From his infernal furnace forth he threw

Huge flames, that dimmed all the heaven's light,

Enroll'd in duskyish smoak, and brimstone blue. Fai. Queen.

2. Tending to blackness; dark coloured.

Sight is not contented with sudden departments from one extreme to another; therefore rather a duskyish tincture than an absolute black. Wotton's Architecture.

DUSKISHLY. adv. [from duskyish.] Cloudily; darkly.

The sawdust burned fair, 'till part of the candle consumed; the dust gathering about the snaf, made the snaf to burn duskyish. Bacon's Natural History, N<sup>o</sup>. 365.

DUSKY. adj. [from dusk; duyster, Dutch.]

1. Tending to darkness; obscure; not luminous.

Here lies the dusky torch of Mortimer,

Chok'd with ambition of the meaner fort. Shakesp. H. VI.

There fierce winds o'er dusky valleys blow,

Whose every puff bears empty shades away. Dryd. Ind. Em.

Through the plains of one continual day,

Six shining months pursue their even way;

And six succeeding urge their dusky flight,

Obscur'd with vapours and o'erwhelm'd in night. Prior.

2. Tending to blackness; dark coloured; not clear; not bright.

They did plot

The means that dusky Dis my daughter got. Shak. Tempest.

It is not green, but of a dusky brown colour. Bacon.

When Jove in dusky clouds involves the skies,

And the faint crescent shoots by fits before their eyes. Dryd.

The surface is of a dusky yellow colour. Woodward.

By mixing such powders we are not to expect a strong and full white, such as is that of paper; but some dusky obscure one, such as might arise from a mixture of light and darkness, or from white and black; that is, a grey or dun, or russet brown. Newton's Opt.

3. Gloomy; sad; intellectually clouded.

While he continues in life, this dusky scene of horror, this melancholy prospect of final perdition, will frequently occur to his fancy. Bentley's Sermons.

Umbriel, a dusky, melancholy sprite,

As ever fully'd the fair face of light,

Down to the central earth, his proper scene,

Repairs to search the gloomy cave of spleen. Pope.

DUST. n. f. [durz, Saxon; duist, Erse.]

1. Earth or other matter reduced to small particles.

The dust

Should have ascended to the roof of heav'n,

Rais'd by your populous troops. Shakesp. Anth. and Cleopat.

Dust helpeth the fruitfulness of trees, inasmuch as they cast dust upon them: that powdering, when a shower cometh, maketh a foiling to the tree, being earth and water finely laid on. Bacon's Natural History, N<sup>o</sup>. 666.

2. The grave; the state of dissolution.

The scepter, learning, physick must

All follow this, and come to dust. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

Thou

Out of the ground wast taken, know thy birth;

For dust thou art, and shalt to dust return.

Milton's Paradise Lost.

3. A mean and dejected state.

God raiseth up the poor out of the dust, to set them among princes. 1 Sam. ii. 8.

To DUST. v. a. [from the noun.] To free from dust; to sprinkle with dust.

DUSTMAN. n. f. [dust and man.] One whose employment is to carry away the dust.

The dustman's cart offends thy cloaths and eyes,

When through the street a cloud of ashes flies. Gay.

DUSTY.

D U T

Du'sty. adj. [from dust.]

1. Filled with dust; clouded with dust.

Arms and the dusty field I less admire,
And soften strangely in some new desire.

Dryden.

2. Covered or scattered with dust.

Even drudgery himself,
As at the car he sweats, or dusty hews

The palace stone, looks gay. Thomson's Summer, l. 1445.

Du'tchess. n. f. [duchesse, French.]

1. The lady of a duke.

The duke of Cornwall, and Regan his dutchess, will be here.

Shakespeare's King Lear.

The duke was to command the army, and the dutchess, by the favour she possessed, to be near her majesty.

Swift.

The gen'rous god, who wit and gold refines,
And ripens spirits as he ripens minds,

Kept dross for dutchesses, the world shall know it,

To you gave sense, good humour, and a poet. Pope's Epist.

2. A lady who has the sovereignty of a dukedom.

Du'tchy. n. f. [duché, French.] A territory which gives title to a duke, or has a duke for its sovereign.

France might have swallowed up his whole dutchy.

Swift.

Different states border on it; the kingdom of France, the dutchy of Savoy, and the canton of Bern.

Addison on Italy.

Du'tchycourt. n. f. A court wherein all matters appertaining to the dutchy of Lancaster are decided by the decree of the chancellor of that court.

Cowel.

Du'teous. adj. [from duty.]

1. Obedient; obsequious; respectful to those who have natural or legal authority.

Great Auréngzebe did duteous care express,

And durst not push too far his great success. Dryd. Aureng.

A female softness, with a manly mind;

A duteous daughter, and a sister kind;

In sickness patient, and in death resign'd.

Dryden.

Who taught the bee with winds and rains to strive,

To bring her burden to the certain hive;

And through the liquid fields again to pass

Duteous, and hark'ning to the founding brass?

Prior.

2. Obsequious; obedient to good or bad purposes.

I know thee well; a serviceable villain!

As duteous to the vices of thy mistress,

As madness would desire.

Every beast, more duteous at her call,

Than at Circean call the herd disguis'd. Milt. Parad. Lost.

3. Enjoined by duty; enforced by the relation of one to another.

With mine own tongue deny my sacred right,

With mine own breath release all duteous ties. Shakesf. R. II.

Du'tiful. adj. [duty and full.]

1. Obedient; submissive to natural or legal superiors; reverent.

She died in an extreme old age, without pain, under the care of the most dutiful son that I have ever known or heard of.

Swift to Pope.

2. Expressive of respect; giving token of reverence; respectful; reverential.

There would she kiss the ground, and thank the trees,
Bless the air, and do dutiful reverence to every thing she thought did accompany her at their first meeting.

Sidney, b. ii.

Du'tifully. adv. [from dutiful.]

1. Obediently; submissively.

2. Reverently; respectfully.

His daughter Philoclea he found at that time dutifully watching by her mother, and Miso curiously watching her.

Sidney.

He with joyful, nimble wing,

Flew dutifully back again,

And made an humble chaplet for the king.

Swift.

Du'tifulness. n. f. [from dutiful.]

1. Obedience; submission to just authority.

Piety, or dutifulness to parents, was a most popular virtue among the Romans.

2. Reverence; respect.

It is a strange kind of civility, and an evil dutifulness in friends and relatives, to suffer him to perish without reproof or medicine, rather than to seem unmannerly to a great sinner.

Taylor's Rule of living holy.

Du'ty. n. f. [from due.]

1. That to which a man is by any natural or legal obligation bound.

When ye shall have done all those things which are commanded, you say we are unprofitable servants: we have done that which was our duty to do.

Lu. xvii. 10.

Good my lord,

You have begot me, bred me, lov'd me: I

Return those duties back, as are right fit;

Obey you, love you, and most honour you. Shak. K. Lear.

The pain children feel from any necessity of nature, it is the duty of parents to relieve.

Locke.

2. Acts or forbearances required by religion or morality.

All our duty is set down in our prayers, because in all our duty we beg the Divine Assistance; and remember that you are bound to do all those duties, for the doing of which you have prayed for the Divine Assistance.

Taylor's Devotion.

3. Obedience or submission due to parents, governors, or superiors; loyalty; piety to parents.

Thinkest thou that duty shall have dread to speak,

When pow'r to flatt'ry bows? To plainness honour

Is bound, when majesty to folly falls. Shakesf. King Lear.

God's party will appear small, and the king's not greater; it being not probable, that those should have sense of duty to him that had none to God.

Decay of Piety.

4. Act of reverence or respect.

They both attone;

Did duty to their lady as became. Fairy Queen, b. ii.

5. The business of a soldier on guard.

The regiment did duty there punctually. Clarendon, b. viii.

Otho bribed his guards at a high rate; for as often as Galba supped with him, he used to give every soldier upon duty an aureus.

Arbutnot on Coins.

6. The business of war; service.

The night came and severed them, all parties being tired with the duty of the day.

Clarendon, b. viii.

See how the madmen bleed! Behold the gains

With which their master, love, rewards their pains!

For sev'n long years, on duty ev'ry day,

Lo! their obedience, and their monarch's pay! Dryden.

7. Tax; impost; custom; toll.

All the wines that come down from Tuscany make their way through several duties and taxes, before they reach the port.

Addison's Travels.

Such shekels as they now shew, were the old ones in which duty was to be paid by their law.

Arbutnot on Coins.

DWARF. n. f. [ðpeorɔ, Sax. dwerg, Dutch; sherg, Scottish.]

1. A man below the common size of men.

Get you gone, you dwarf!

You minimus, of hind'ring knot-grass made. Shakespeare.

Such dwarfs were some kind of apes. Brown's Vulg. Err.

They but now who seem'd

In bigness to surpass earth's giant sons,

Now less than smallest dwarfs in narrow room

Throng numberless. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. i. l. 779.

2. Any animal or plant below its natural bulk.

It is a delicate plantation of trees, all well-grown, fair, and smooth: one dwarf was knotty and crooked, and the rest had it in derision.

L'Estrange.

Saw off the head of the stock in a smooth place; and for dwarf trees, graft them within four fingers of the ground.

Mortimer's Art of Husbandry.

3. An attendant on a lady or knight in romances.

The champion stout,

Estfoones dismounted from his courser brave,

And to the dwarf a-while his needful spear he gave. F. Qu.

4. It is used often by botanists in composition; as, dwarf elder, dwarf honeysuckle.

To DWARF. v. a. [from the noun.] To hinder from growing to the natural bulk; to lessen; to make little.

It is reported that a good strong canvas, spread over a tree grafted low, soon after it putteth forth, will dwarf it, and make it spread.

Bacon's Natural History, No. 534.

The whole sex is in a manner dwarfed, and shrunk into a race of beauties, that seems almost another species. Addison.

DWA'RFISH. adj. [from dwarf.] Below the natural bulk; low; small; little; petty; despicable.

Their dwarfish pages were

As cherubins, all gilt.

Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

And are you grown so high in his esteem,

Because I am so dwarfish and so low?

Shakespeare.

This unheard sawciness, and boyish troops,

The king doth smile at; and is well prepar'd

To whip this dwarfish war, these pigmy arms,

From out the circle of his territories. Shakesf. King John.

A thicket close beside the grove there stood,

With briars and brambles choak'd, and dwarfish wood. Dry.

We should have lost oaks and cedars, and the other tall and lofty sons of the forest, and have found nothing but dwarfish shrubs, and creeping moss, and despicable mushrooms.

Bentley's Sermons.

DWA'RFISHLY. adj. [from dwarfish.] Like a dwarf.

DWA'RFISHNESS. n. f. [from dwarfish.] Minuteness of stature; littleness.

'Tis no wonder that science hath not outgrown the dwarfishness of its pristine stature, and that the intellectual world is such a microcosm.

Glanv. Sceps. c. 17.

To DWA'ULE. v. a. [ðpelian, Sax. to wander; dwaelen, Dut.]

To be delirious: a provincial word mentioned by Junius.

To DWELL. v. n. preterite dwelt, or dwelled. [duala, old Teutonic, is stay, delay; duelia, Islandick, to stay, to stand still.]

1. To inhabit; to live in a place; to reside; to have an habitation.

If thy brother that dwelleth by thee be waxen poor, and be sold unto thee, thou shalt not compel him to serve as a bond-servant.

Lev. xxv. 39.

He

He shall dwell alone, without the camp shall his habitation be. Lev. xiii. 46.

John Haywood and Sir Thomas More, in the parish wherein I was born, dwelt and had possessions. Peacham on Poetry.

Why are you vex'd, lady? Why do you frown?

2. To live in any form of habitation.

Abraham sojourned in the land of Promise as in a strange country, dwelling in tabernacles. Heb. xi. 9.

3. To be in any state or condition.

'Tis safer to be that which we destroy,

Than by destruction dwell in doubtful joy. Shakesf. Macbeth.

4. To be suspended with attention.

Th' attentive queen

Dwelt on his accents, and her gloomy eyes

Sparkled with gentler fires. Smith's Phæd. and Hippolitus.

5. To fix the mind upon; to hang upon with fondness.

Such was that face, on which I dwelt with joy,

Ere Greece assembled, stemm'd the tides to Troy;

But parting then for that detested shore,

Our eyes, unhappy! never greeted more. Pope's Odyssey.

6. To continue long speaking.

He preach'd the joys of heav'n and pains of hell,

And warn'd the sinner with becoming zeal;

But on eternal mercy lov'd to dwell. Dryd. Good Parson.

We have dwelt pretty long on the considerations of space and duration. Locke.

Those who defend our negotiators, dwell upon their zeal and patience. Swift.

To DWELL. v. a. To inhabit.

I saw and heard; for we sometimes

Who dwell this wild, constrain'd by want, come forth

To town or village nigh. Milton's Paradise Regained, b. i.

DWELLER. n. f. [from dwell.] An inhabitant; one that lives in any place.

The houses being kept up, did of necessity enforce a dweller; and the proportion of land for occupation being kept up, did of necessity enforce that dweller not to be beggar or cottager, but a man of some substance. Bacon's Henry VII.

Their cries soon waken all the dwellers near;

Now murmuring noises rise in every street. Dryden.

DWELLING. n. f. [from dwell.]

1. Habitation; place of residence; abode.

His dwelling is low in a valley green,

Under the foot of Rauran mossy bore. Fairy Queen, b. i.

Hazor shall be a dwelling for dragons, and a desolation for ever. Jer. xlix. 33.

If he have several dwellings, let him sort them so, that what he wanteth in the one he may find in the other. Bacon.

God will deign

To visit oft the dwellings of just men,

Delighted. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vii. l. 570.

So it seems

To thee who hast thy dwelling here on earth. Milt. P. Lost.

All dwellings else

Flood overwhelm'd, and them with all their pomp

Deep under water roll'd; sea cover'd sea,

Sea without shore! Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xi. l. 747.

The living few, and frequent funerals then,

Proclaim'd thy wrath on this forsaken place;

And now those few, who are return'd again,

Thy searching judgments to their dwellings trace. Dryden.

The force of fire ascended first on high,

And took its dwelling in the vaulted sky. Dryden's Ovid.

2. State of life; mode of living.

My dwelling shall be with the beasts of the field. Dan. iv. 25.

DWELLINGHOUSE. n. f. [from dwell and house.] The house at which one lives.

A person ought always to be cited at the place of his dwellinghouse, which he has in respect of his habitation and usual residence; and not at the house which he has in respect of his estate, or the place of his birth. Ayliffe's Pargson.

DWELLINGPLACE. n. f. [from dwell and place.] The place of residence.

People do often change their dwellingplaces, and some must die, whilst other some do grow up into strength. Spenser.

To DWINDLE. v. n. [from spinan, Saxon.]

1. To shrink; to lose bulk; to grow little.

Proper names, when familiarized in English, dwindle to monosyllables; whereas in modern languages they receive a foster turn, by the addition of a new syllable. Addison's Spect.

Our drooping days are dwindled down to nought;

Their period finish'd e'er 'tis well begun. Thomson's Spring.

2. To degenerate; to sink.

'Tis now dwindled down to light frothy stuff. Norris.

If there have been such a gradual diminution of the generative faculty of the earth, that it hath dwindled from nobler animals to puny mice and insects, why was there not the like decay in the production of vegetables? Bentley's Sermons.

He found the expected council was dwindling into a conventicle, a packed assembly of Italian bishops, not a free convention of fathers. Atterbury.

Religious societies, though begun with excellent intentions, are said to have dwindled into factious clubs. Swift.

3. To wear away; to lose health; to grow feeble.

Weary sev'nights nine times nine,

Shall he dwindle, peak, and pine. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

How often do we see, that some small part of the foot being injured by a wrench or a blow, the whole leg or thigh thereby loses its strength and nourishment, and dwindles away. Locke.

Physicians, with their milky cheer,

The love-sick maid and dwindling beau repair. Gay's Triv.

4. To fall away; to be diminished; to moulder off.

Of all the forces under Greenvil, there were only five hundred foot and three hundred horse left with him for the blocking up Plymouth; the rest were dwindled away. Clarendon.

DYE. See DIE.

DYING. The participle of die.

1. Expiring; giving up the ghost.

2. Tinging; giving a new colour.

DYNASTY. n. f. [from δυναστεία.] Government; sovereignty.

Some account him fabulous, because he carries up the Egyptian dynasties before the flood, yea, and long before the creation. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

Greece was then divided into several dynasties, which our author has enumerated under their respective princes. Notes on Pope's Iliad.

DYSCRAZY. n. f. [from δυσκρασία.] An unequal mixture of elements in the blood or nervous juice; a distemperature, when some humour or quality abounds in the body. Diët.

In this pituitous dyscrasy of blood, we must vomit off the pituita, and purge upon intermissions. Floyer on the Humours.

DYSENTERY. n. f. [from dysenterie, French, from δυσεντερία.] A looseness wherein very ill humours flow off by stool, and are also sometimes attended with blood. Diët.

From an unusual inconstancy of the weather, and perpetual changes of the wind from East to West, proceed epidemical dysenteries. Arbuthnot on Air.

DYSPEPSY. n. f. [from δυσπεψία.] A difficulty of digestion, or bad fermentation in the stomach or guts. Diët.

DYSPHONY. n. f. [from δυσφωνία.] A difficulty in speaking, occasioned by an ill disposition of the organs. Diët.

DYSPNOEA. n. f. [from δυσπνοία.] A difficulty of breathing; straitness of breath.

DYSURY. n. f. [from δυσουρία.] A difficulty in making urine.

It doth end in a dysentery, pains of the hæmorrhoids, inflammations of any of the lower parts, diabetes, a continual pissing, or a hot dysury, difficulty of making water. Harvey.

E.

E A G

Has two sounds; long, as scène, and short, as men. E is the most frequent vowel in the English language; for it not only is used like the rest in the beginning or end of words, but has the peculiar quality of lengthening the foregoing vowel, as cān, cāne; mān, māne; gāp, gāpe; glād, glāde; brēd, brēde; chīn, chīne; whīp, wīpe; thīn, thīne; nīd, nīde; tūn, tūne; plūm, plūme. Yet it sometimes occurs final, where yet the foregoing vowel is not lengthened; as gōne, knowlēdge, ēdge, gīve. Anciently almost every word ended with e; as for can, canne; for year, yeare; for great, greate; for need, neede; for flock, flocke. It is probable that this e final had at first a soft sound, like the female e of the French; and that afterwards it was in poetry either mute or vocal, as the verse required, 'till at last it became universally silent.

Ea has the sound of e long: the e is commonly lengthened rather by the immediate addition of a than by the apposition of e to the end of the word; as mēn, mēan; sell, sal; mēt, mēat; nēt, nēat.

EACH. pron. [elc, Saxon; elch, Dutch; ilk, Scottish.]

1. Either of two.

Though your orbs of diff'rent greatness be,
Yet both are for each other's use dispos'd;
His to inclose, and your's to be inclos'd. Dryden.

2. Every one of any number. This sense is rare, except in poetry.

Th' invention all admir'd, and each how he
To be th' inventor miss'd. Milton, b. vi.

Let each
His adamant coat gird well, and each
Fit well his helm. Milton, b. vi.

By hunger, that each other creature tames,
Thou art not to be harm'd, therefore not mov'd;
Thy temperance invincible besides. Milton's Paradise Reg.

Wise Plato said, the world with men was stor'd,
That succour each to other might afford. Denham.

To EACH the correspondent word is other, whether it be used of two, or of a greater number.

'Tis said they eat each other. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
Let each esteem other better than themselves. Phil. ii. 3.

Loveliest of women! heaven is in thy soul;
Beauty and virtue shine for ever round thee,
Bright'ning each other! Thou art all divine! Addis. Cato.

EAD. [æd, ed.] in the compound, and eadig in the simple names, denotes happiness, or blessedness. Thus Eadward is a happy preserver; Eadulph, happy assistance; Eadgar, happy power; Eadwin, happy conqueror; which Macarius Euphemus, Fausta, Fortunatus, Felicianus, &c. do in some measure resemble. Ead may also in some cases be derived from the Saxon eath, which signifies easy, gentle, mild. Gib. Camden.

EA'GER. adj. [eagon, Saxon; aigre, French.]

1. Struck with desire; ardently wishing; keenly desirous; vehement in desire; hotly longing.

Of action eager, and intent of thought,
The chiefs your honourable danger fought. Dryden's Ovid.
Eager to read the rest, Achates came. Dryden's Æn.

With joy th' ambitious youth his mother heard,
And eager for the journey soon prepar'd;
He longs the world beneath him to survey,
To guide the chariot, and to give the day. Dryden.

Love inflam'd, and eager on his bliss,
Smother'd her words. Addisou's Ovid's Metam. b. ii.

2. It is used sometimes with of, sometimes with on or after before the thing fought.

3. Hot of disposition; vehement; ardent; impetuous.
Apt as well to quicken the spirits as to allay that which is too eager. Hooker, b. v. f. 38.

Nor do the eager clamours of disputants yield more relief to eclipsed truth, than did the sounding brass of old to the labouring moon. Glanv. Sceps. c. 19.

This is not a general character of women, but a reproof of some eager spirited gypsies. L'Estrange.

Imperfect zeal is hot and eager, without knowledge. Spratt.

Palemon replies,
Eager his tone, and ardent were his eyes. Dryden.

E A G

A man, charged with a crime of which he thinks himself innocent, is apt to be too eager in his own defence. Dryden.

4. Quick; busy; easily put in action.

His Numidian genius
Is well dispos'd to mischief, were he prompt
And eager on it; but he must be spurr'd. Addison's Cato.

5. Sharp; fower; acid.

With a sudden vigour it doth posset
And curd, like eager droppings into milk,
The thin and wholsome blood. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

6. Keen; severe; biting.

The air bites shrewdly; it is very cold.
—It is a nipping and an eager air. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

The resistance of bone to cold is greater than of flesh; for that the flesh shrinketh, but the bone resisteth, whereby the cold becometh more eager. Bacon's Natural History, N<sup>o</sup>. 688.

7. Brittle; inflexible; not ductile. A cant word of artificers.

Gold will be sometimes so eager, as artists call it, that it will as little endure the hammer as glass itself. Locke.

EA'GERLY. adv. [from eager.]

1. With great ardour of desire; with impetuosity of inclination.

To the holy war how fast and eagerly did men go, when the priest persuaded them that whosoever died in that expedition was a martyr? South's Sermons.

How eagerly he flew, when Europe's fate
Did for the seed of future actions wait. Stepney.

2. Ardently; hotly.

Brutus gave the word too early,
Who having some advantage on Octavius,
Took it too eagerly; his soldiers fell to spoil,
Whilst we by Anthony were all inclos'd. Shak. Jul. Caesar.

3. Keenly; sharply.

Abundance of rain froze so eagerly as it fell, that it seemed the depth of Winter had of a sudden been come in. Knolles.

EA'GERNESS. n. f. [from eager.]

1. Keeness of desire; ardour of inclination.

She knew her distance, and did angle for me,
Madding my eagerness with her restraint. Shakespeare.
Have you not seen, when whistled from the fist,

Some falcon stoop'd at what her eye design'd,
And, with her eagerness, the quarry miss'd. Dryden.

The eagerness and strong bent of the mind after knowledge, if not warily regulated, is often an hindrance to it. Locke.
Detraction and obloquy are received with as much eagerness as wit and humour. Addison's Frecholder.

Juba lives to catch

That dear embrace, and to return it too,
With mutual warmth and eagerness of love. Addison's Cato.

His continued application to publick affairs diverts him from those pleasures, which are pursued with eagerness by princes who have not the publick so much at heart. Addison.

The things of this world, with whatever eagerness they engage our pursuit, leave us still empty and unsatisfied with their fruition. Rogers's Sermons.

2. Impetuosity; vehemence; violence.

It finds them in the eagerness and height of their devotion; they are speechless for the time that it continues, and prostrate and dead when it departs. Dryden.

I'll kill thee with such eagerness of haste,
As fiends, let loose, would lay all nature waste. Dryd. Aur.

EA'GLE. n. f. [aigle, French; aquila, Latin; ealler, Erse.]

1. A bird of prey, which, as it is reported, renews its age when it grows old. But some think that this recovery of youth happens no otherwise in the eagle than in other birds, by casting their feathers every year in the moulting season, and having others in their room. It is also said not to drink at all, like other birds with sharp claws. It is given out, that when an eagle sees its young so well grown as to venture upon flying, it hovers over their nest, flutters with its wings, and excites them to imitate it, and take their flight; and when it sees them weary, or fearful, it takes and carries them upon its back. Eagles are said to be extremely sharp-sighted, and, when they take flight, spring perpendicularly upward, with their eyes steadily fixed upon the sun, mounting 'till, by their distance, they disappear. Calmet.

Dismay'd

Dismay'd not this

Our captains Macbeth and Banquo?

—Yes,

As sparrows eagles, or the hare the lion. Shakesp. Macbeth.

Draw forth the monsters of th' abyss profound,

Or fetch th' aerial eagle to the ground. Pope's Ess. on Man.

2. The standard of the ancient Romans.

Arts still follow'd where Rome's eagles flew.

Pope.

EAGLE-EYED. adj. [from eagle and eye.]

1. Sharp-sighted as an eagle.

As he was rarely quick and perspicacious, so was he inwardly eagle-eyed, and perfectly versed in the humours of his subjects.

Howel's Vocal Forrest.

Ev'ry one is eagle-ey'd to see

Another's faults and his deformity. Dryden's Pers. Sat. 4.

EA'GLESPEED. n. f. [eagle and speed.] Swiftness like that of an eagle.

Abrupt, with eaglespeed she cut the sky,

Instant invisible to mortal eye.

Pope's Odyssey, b. i.

EA'GLESTONE. n. f. A stone said to be found at the entrance of the holes in which the eagles make their nests, and affirmed to have a particular virtue in defending the eagle's nest from thunder. The stones of this kind which are most valued are flat and blackish, and found, if shaken near the ear; a lesser stone being contained in the greater.

Calmet.

The eaglestone contains, in a cavity within it, a small loose stone, which rattles when it is shaken; and every fossil, with a nucleus in it, has obtained the name. The sort of analogy that was supposed to be between a stone, thus containing another within it, or, as the fanciful writers express it, pregnant with another, and a woman big with child, led people to imagine that it must have great virtues and effects in accelerating or retarding delivery; so that, if tied to the arm of a woman with child, it prevents abortion; and if to the leg, it promotes delivery. It is pretended, that the eagles seek for these stones to lay in their nests, and that they cannot hatch their young without. On such idle and imaginary virtues was raised all the credit which this famous fossil possessed for many ages.

Hill's Materia Medica.

If you stop the holes of a hawk's bell it will make no ring, but a flat noise or rattle; and so doth the ætites, or eaglestone, which hath a little stone within it. Bacon's Nat. History.

EA'GLET. n. f. [from ea-le.] A young eagle.

This treason of his sons did the king express in an emblem, wherein was an eagle with three eaglets tiring on her breast, and the fourth pecking at one of her eyes. Davies.

EA'GRE. n. f. [æger, in Runick, is the ocean; eggia, in Islandick, is to agitate, to incite.] A tide swelling above another tide, observable in the river Severn.

For as an ægre rides in triumph o'er the tide,

The tyrant passions, hope and fear,

Did in extremes appear,

And flash'd upon the soul with equal force.

Dryden.

EA'LDERMAN. n. f. [ealderman, Saxon.] The name of a Saxon magistrate; alderman.

EAME. n. f. [cam, Saxon; com, Dutch.] Uncle: a word still used in the wilder parts of Staffordshire.

Daughter, says she, fly, fly; behold, thy dame

Foreshows the treason of thy wretched eame!

Fairfax.

EAR. n. f. [eape, Saxon; oor, Dutch.]

1. The whole organ of audition or hearing.

What fire is in my ears? Can this be true?

His ears are open unto their cry. Pf. xxxiv. 15.

Gomez, stand you out of earshot.—I have something to say to your wife in private.

Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

EA'RWAX. n. f. [ear and wax.] The cerumen or exudation which smeares the inside of the ear.

The ear being to stand open, because there was some danger that insects might creep in thereat; therefore hath nature loricated or plaistered over the sides of the hole with earwax, to entangle any insects that should attempt to creep in there.

Ray on the Creation.

EA'RWIG. n. f. [eape and pygga, a grub, Saxon.] A sheath-winged insect, imagined to creep into the ear.

Himself he on an earwig set;

Yet scarce he on his back could get,

So oft and high he did curvet.

Drayton's Nymphid.

Earwigs and snails seldom infect timber. Mortimer's Husb.

Doll never flies to cut her lace,

Or throw cold water in her face,

Because she heard a sudden drum,

Or found an earwig in a plum.

Swift.

2. By way of reproach, a whisperer; a prying informer.

EA'RWITNESS. n. f. [ear and witness.] One who attests, or can attest any thing as heard by himself.

All present were made earwitnesses, even of each particular branch of a common indictment.

Hooker, b. v. f. 36.

The histories of mankind, written by eye or earwitnesses, are built upon this principle.

Watts's Logick.

To EAR. v. a. [aro, Latin.] To plow; to till.

He that ears my land spares my team, and gives me leave to enjoy the crop.

Shakespeare's All's well that ends well.

Saw stately Ceres to her passion yield. Pope's Odyssey, b. iv.

EARL. n. f. [eopl, Saxon; eoryl, Erse.] A title of nobility, anciently the highest of this nation, now the third.

Thanes and kinsmen,

Henceforth

Henceforth be earls, the first that ever Scotland
For such an honour nam'd. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
EARL-MARSHAL. n. f. [earl and marshal.] He that has chief care of military solemnities.
The marching troops through Athens take their way;
The great earl-marshal orders their array. Dryden.
EA'RLDOM. n. f. [from earl.] The feignory of an earl; the title and dignity of an earl.
The duke of Clarence having married the heir of the earl of Ulster, and by her having all the earldom of Ulster, carefully went about the redressing evils. Spenser's State of Ireland.
When I am king, claim thou of me
The earldom of Hereford. Shakespeare's Richard III.
EA'RLINESS. n. f. [from early] Quickness of any action with respect to something else: as earliness in the morning, the act of rising soon with respect to the sun; earliness of growth, the act of growing up soon in comparison with other things of the same kind.
The next morning we, having striven with the sun's earliness, were beyond the prospect of the highest turrets. Sidney.
The goodness of the crop is great gain, if the goodness answer the earliness of coming up. Bacon's Natural History.
EARLY. adj. [æp, Saxon, before.] Soon with respect to something else: as, in the morning, with respect to the sun; in time, with respect to creation; in the season, in comparison with other products.
I am a tainted wether of the flock,
Meetest for death: the weakest kind of fruit
Drops earliest to the ground, and so let me. Shakespeare.
It is a curiosity to have several fruits upon one tree; and the more when some of them come early, and some come late, so that you may have upon the same tree ripe fruits all Summer. Bacon's Natural History, N<sup>o</sup>. 501.
God made all the world, that he might be worshipped in some parts of the world; and therefore, in the first and most early times of the church, what care did he manifest to have such places erected to his honour? South's Sermons.
And yet my numbers please the rural throng,
Rough satyrs dance, and Pan approves the song;
The nymphs, forsaking ev'ry cave and spring,
Their early fruit and milk-white turtles bring. Pope.
Sickness is early old age: it teaches us a diffidence in our earthly state, and inspires us with the thoughts of a future.
Pope.
Oh foul of honour!
Oh early hero! Smith's Phædra and Hippolitus.
EA'RLY. adv. [from the adjective.] Soon; betimes.
Early before the morn with crimson ray
The windows of bright heav'n opened had. Fairy Queen.
None in more languages can show
Those arts, which you so early know. Waller.
The princess makes her issue like herself, by instilling early into their minds religion, virtue and honour. Addison's Freehol.
TO EARN. v. a. [earnian, Saxon.]
1. To gain as the reward or wages of labour, or any performance.
Those that have joined with their honour great perils, are less subject to envy; for men think that they earn their honours hardly. Bacon's Essays.
Winning cheap the high repute,
Which he through hazard huge must earn. Milt. Par. Lost.
I to the evil turn
My obvious breast; arming to overcome
By suffering, and earn rest from labour won. Milt. Pa. Lost.
Men may discern
From what consummate virtue I have chose
This perfect man, by merit call'd my son,
To earn salvation for the sons of men. Paradise Regained.
Since they all beg, it were better for the state to keep them, even although they earned nothing. Graunt's Bills of Mortality.
This is the great expence of the poor, that takes up almost all their earnings. Locke.
The poems gained the plagiary wealth, while the author hardly earned his bread by repeating them. Pope's Ess. on Homer.
After toiling twenty days,
To earn a stock of pence and praise,
Thy labour's grown the critick's prey. Swift.
2. To gain; to obtain.
I can't say whore;
It does abhor me, now I speak the word:
To do the act, that might th' addition earn,
Not the world's mafs of vanity could make me. Sh. Othello.
EA'RNEST. adj. [connerz, Saxon.]
1. Ardent in any affection; warm; zealous; importunate.
He which prayeth in due sort, is thereby made the more attentive to hear; and he which heareth, the more earnest to pray for the time which we bestow, as well in the one as the other. Hooker, b. v. f. 34.
2. Intent; fixed; eager.
On that prospect strange
Their earnest eyes they fix'd; imagining,
For one forbidden tree, a multitude

Now ris'n, to work them further woe or shame. Milt. P. L.
They are never more earnest to disturb us, than when they see us most earnest in this duty. Duppa.
EA'RNEST. n. f. [from the adjective.]
1. Seriousness; a serious event not a jest; reality not a feigned appearance.
Take heed that this jest do not one day turn to earnest. Sid.
I told you Klaius was the hapless wight,
Who earnest found what they accounted play. Sidney.
Therewith she laugh'd, and did her earnest end in jest. F. 2.
That high Ail-feer, which I dallied with,
Hath turn'd my feigned prayer on my head,
And given in earnest what I begg'd in jest. Shak. Rich. III.
Nor can I think that God, Creator wise!
Though threat'ning, will in earnest so destroy
Us, his prime creatures. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ix.
But the main business and earnest of the world is money, dominion, and power. L'Estrange, Fab. 5.
We shall die in earnest, and it will not become us to live in jest. Government of the Tongue, f. 7.
Sempronius, you have acted like yourself;
One would have thought you had been half in earnest. Add.
2. [ernitz penge, Danish; arres, French.] Pledge; handsel; first fruits; token of something of the same kind in futurity.
The apostles term it the handsel or earnest of that which is to come. Hooker, b. v. f. 5.
Which leader shall the doubtful vict'ry bless,
And give an earnest of the war's success. Waller.
It may be looked upon as a pledge and earnest of quiet and tranquillity. Smalridge's Sermons.
The mercies received, great as they are, were earnests and pledges of greater. Atterbury.
3. The money which is given in token that a bargain is ratified.
You have conspir'd against our person,
Join'd with an enemy proclaim'd, and from his coffers Receiv'd the golden earnest of our death. Shakesf. Henry V.
Pay back the earnest penny received from Satan, and fling away his sin. Decay of Piety.
EA'RNESTLY. adv. [from earnest.]
1. Warmly; affectionately; zealously; importunately; intensely.
When earnestly they seek Such proof, conclude they then begun to fail. Milt. P. L.
Shame is a banishment of him from the good opinion of the world, which every man most earnestly desires. South.
Earnestly invoke the goodness and power of an all merciful and almighty God. Smalridge's Sermons.
2. Eagerly; desirously.
Why so earnestly seek you to put up that letter? Sh. K. Lear.
EA'RNESTNESS. n. f. [from earnest.]
1. Eagerness; warmth; vehemence; impetuosity.
Often with a solemn earnestness,
More than, indeed, belong'd to such a trifle,
He begg'd of me to steal it. Shakespeare's Othello.
Audacity and confidence doth in business so great effects, as a man may doubt, that besides the very daring and earnestness, and persisting and importunity, there should be some secret binding, and stooping of other mens spirits to such persons. Bacon's Natural History, N<sup>o</sup>. 943.
Marcus is overwarm; his fond complaints
Have so much earnestness and passion in them,
I hear him with a secret kind of horror,
And tremble at his vehemence of temper. Addison's Cato.
2. Solemnity; zeal.
There never was a charge maintained with such a shew of gravity and earnestness, which had a slighter foundation to support it. Atterbury's Sermons, Preface.
3. Solicitude; care; intenseness.
With overstraining, and earnestness of finishing their pieces, they often did them more harm than good. Dryden's Dufresne.
EARSH. n. f. [from ear, to plow.] A plowed field.
Fires oft are good on barren earshes made,
With crackling flames to burn the stubble blade. May's Virg.
EARTH. n. f. [eorð, Saxon.]
1. The element distinct from air, fire, or water; soil; ter-rene matter.
The smiling god is seen; while water, earth,
And air attest his bounty. Thomson's Spring, l. 855:
2. The terraqueous globe; the world.
Nought so vile that on the earth doth live,
But to the earth some special good doth give. Shakespeare.
This solid globe we live upon is called the earth, though it contains in it a great variety of bodies, several whereof are not properly earth; which word, taken in a more limited sense, signifies such parts of this globe as are capable, being exposed to the air, to give rooting and nourishment to plants, so that they may stand and grow in it. Locke.
3. Different modification of terrene matter. In this sense it has a plural.
The five genera of earths are, 1. Boles. 2. Clays.
3. Marls. 4. Ochres. 5. Tripelas. Hill's Mat. Medica.
Earth.

Earths are opaque, insipid, and, when dried, friable, or consisting of parts easy to separate, and soluble in water; not disposed to burn, flame, or take fire. Woodward's Met. Foss.

4. This world opposed to other scenes of existence.

What are these,

So wither'd, and so wild in their attire,

That look not like th' inhabitants o' th' earth,

And yet are on't?

They can judge as fitly of his worth,

As I can of those mysteries which heav'n

Will not have earth to know.

Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

5. The inhabitants of the earth.

The whole earth was of one language.

6. Turning up the ground in tillage. [from ear, to plow.]

Such land as ye break up for barley to sow,

Two earths, at the least, ere ye sow it bestow.

Tuss. Husb.

To EARTH. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To hide in earth.

The fox is earthed; but I shall send my two terriers in after him.

Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

2. To cover with earth.

Earth up with fresh mould the roots of those auricula's which the frost may have uncovered.

Evelyn's Kalendar.

To EARTH. v. n. To retire under ground.

Hence foxes earth'd, and wolves abhor'd the day,

And hungry churles ensnar'd the nightly prey.

Tickell.

EARTHBOARD. n. f. [earth and board.] The board of the plow that shakes off the earth.

The plow reckoned the most proper for stiff black clays, is one that is long, large, and broad, with a deep head and a square earthboard, so as to turn up a great furrow.

Mortimer.

EARTHBOBN. adj. [earth and born.]

1. Born of the earth; terrigenous; meanly born.

The wounds I make but sow new enemies;

Which from their blood, like earthborn brethren rise.

Dryd.

The God for ever great, for ever king,

Who slew the earthborn race, and measures right

To heav'n's great habitants?

Prior.

2. Meanly born.

Earthborn Lycon shall ascend the throne.

Smith.

EARTHBOUND. adj. [earth and bound.] Fastened by the pressure of the earth.

That will never be:

Who can impress the forest, bid the tree

Unfix his earthbound root?

Shakespeare's Macbeth.

EARTHEN. adj. [from earth.] Made of earth; made of clay.

About his shelves

Green earthen pots, bladders, and musty seeds

Were thinly scatter'd.

Shakespeare.

As a rustick was digging the ground by Padua, he found an urn, or earthen pot, in which there was another urn, and in this lesser a lamp clearly burning.

Wilkins's Math. Magic.

The most brittle water-carriage was used among the Egyptians, who, as Strabo saith, would sail sometimes in the boats made of earthen ware.

Arbutnot on Coins.

EARTHFLAX. n. f. [earth and flax.] A kind of fibrous fossil.

Of English tile, the coarser sort is called plaister, or parget; the finer, earthflax, or salamander's hair.

Woodward.

EARTHINESS. n. f. The quality of containing earth; grossness.

EARTHLY. n. f. [from earth.] An inhabitant of the earth; a mortal; a poor frail creature.

To earthlings, the footstool of God, that stage which he raised for a small time, seemeth magnificent.

Drummond.

EARTHLY. adj. [from earth.]

1. Not heavenly; vile; mean; sordid.

But I remember now

I'm in this earthly world, where to do harm

Is often laudable; to do good, sometime

Accounted dangerous folly.

Shakespeare's Macbeth.

When faith and love, which parted from thee never,

Had ripen'd thy just soul to dwell with God,

Meekly thou didst resign this earthly load

Of death, call'd life.

Milton.

2. Belonging only to our present state; not spiritual.

Our common necessities, and the lack which we all have as well of ghostly as of earthly favours, is in each kind easily known.

Hooker.

You have scarce time

To steal from spiritual leisure a brief span,

To keep your earthly audit.

Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

It must be our solemn business and endeavour, at fit seasons, to turn the stream of our thoughts from earthly towards divine objects.

Atterbury's Sermons.

3. Corporeal; not mental.

Great grace that old man to him given had,

For God he often saw, from heaven high,

All were his earthly eyes both blunt and bad.

Fairy Queen.

Sudden he view'd, in spite of all her art,

An earthly lover lurking at her heart.

Pope's Ra. of the Lock.

VOL. I.

4. Any thing in the world; a female hyperbole.

Oh! if to dance all night, and dress all day;

Charm'd the small-pox, or chas'd old age away,

Who would not scorn what housewife's cares produce?

Or who would learn one earthly thing of use?

Pope.

EARTHNUT. n. f. [earth and nut.] A pignut; a root in shape and size like a nut.

It is an umbelliferous plant, with a rose-shaped flower, consisting of many leaves orbicularly placed, which turns to a fruit composed of small oblong smooth leaves, gibbous on one side, and plain on the other. It has a fleshy tuberose root. It is very common in shady woods and pastures, rising early in Spring, and flowering in May: in July the seeds are ripe, and soon after the leaves decay. Some dig up the roots, and eat them raw: they are very much like chestnuts, and not an unpleasant morsel; but boiled they are a very delicious food, eaten with butter and pepper, and are esteemed very nourishing.

Where there are earthnuts in several patches, though the roots lie deep in the ground, and the stalks be dead, the swine will by their scent root only where they grow.

Ray.

EARTHQUAKE. n. f. [earth and quake.] Tremor or convulsion of the earth.

This subterranean heat or fire being in any part of the earth stop'd, by some accidental glut or obstruction in the passages through which it used to ascend, and being preternaturally assembled in greater quantity into one place, causes a great rarefaction and intumescence of the water of the abyss, putting it into very great commotions; and making the like effort upon the earth, expanded upon the face of the abyss, occasions that agitation and concussion which we call an earthquake.

These tumults were like an earthquake, shaking the very foundations of all, than which nothing in the world hath more of horror.

King Charles.

Was it his youth, his valour, or success,

These might perhaps be found in other men:

'Twas that respect, that awful homage paid me;

That fearful love which trembled in his eyes,

And with a silent earthquake shook his soul.

The country, by reason of its vast caverns and subterraneous fires, has been miserably torn by earthquakes, so that the whole face of it is quite changed.

Addison's Remarks on Italy.

EARTHSHAKING. adj. [earth and shake.] Having power to shake the earth, or to raise earthquakes.

By the earthshaking Neptune's mace,

And Tethys grave majestic pace.

Milton.

Now scarce withdrawn the fierce earthshaking pow'r,

Jove's daughter Pallas watch'd the fav'ring hour;

Back to their caves she bad the winds to fly,

And hush'd the blust'ring brethren of the sky.

Pope.

EARTHWORM. n. f. [earth and worm.]

1. A worm bred under ground.

Worms are found in snow commonly, like earthworms, and therefore it is not unlike that it may likewise put forth plants.

Bacon's Natural History, N. 569.

Upon a shower, after a drought, earthworms and land-snails innumerable come out of their lurking places.

Ray.

2. A mean sordid wretch.

Thy vain contempt, dull earthworm, cease;

I won't for refuge fly.

Norris.

EARTHY. adj. [from earth.]

1. Consisting of earth.

Long may'st thou live in Richard's seat to sit,

And soon lie Richard in an earthly pit!

Shakesp. Richard II.

These lamps are inflamed by the admission of new air, when the sepulchres are opened, as we see in fat earthly vapours of divers sorts.

Wilkins's Math. Magic.

All water, especially that of rain, is more or less stored with matter, light in comparison of the common mineral earthly matter.

Woodward's Natural History.

2. Composed or partaking of earth; terrene.

To survey his dead and earthly image,

What were it but to make my sorrow greater.

Him lord pronounc'd, he, O indignity!

Subjected to his service angel-wings,

And flaming ministers to watch and tend

Their earthly charge.

3. Inhabiting the earth; terrestrial.

Those earthly spirits black and envious are;

I'll call up other gods of form more fair.

Dryd. Ind. Emper.

4. Relating to earth.

Mine is the shipwreck, in a watry sign;

And in an earthly, the dark dungeon thine.

Dryden.

5. Not mental; gross; not refined.

Teach me, dear creature, how to think and speak;

Lay open to my earthly gross conceit,

Smother'd in errors, feeble, shallow, weak,

The folded meaning of your words deceit.

Shakespeare.

Nor is my flame

So earthly, as to need the dull material force
Of eyes, or lips, or cheeks.

Denham's Sophy.

EASE. n. f. [aïse, French.]

1. Quiet; rest; undisturbed tranquillity; no solicitude.

We should not find her half so brave and bold

To lead it to the wars, and to the seas;

To make it suffer watchings, hunger, cold,

When it might feed with plenty, rest with ease. Davies.

The priest on skins of off'rings takes his ease,

And nightly visions in his slumber sees. Dryden's Æn.

Lucan, content with praise, may lie at ease

In costly grotts and marble palaces. Dryden's Juv. Sat. 7.

Men of parts and penetration were not idly to dispute at their ease, but were to act according to the result of their debates. Locke.

No body is under an obligation to know every thing; knowledge and science in general is the business only of those who are at ease and leisure. Locke.

2. Freedom from pain; a neutral state between pain and pleasure.

That which we call ease is only an indolency, or a freedom from pain. L'Estrange.

Is it a small crime to wound himself by anguish of heart, to deprive himself of all the pleasures, or eases, or enjoyments of life? Temple.

3. Rest after labour; intermission of labour.

Give yourselves ease from the fatigue of waiting. Swift.

4. Facility; not difficulty.

The willing metal will obey thy hand,

Following with ease, if favour'd by thy fate,

Thou art foredoom'd to view the Stygian state;

If not, no labour can the tree constrain,

And strength of stubborn arms and steel are vain. Dryden.

5. Unconstrained; freedom from harshness, formality, forced behaviour, or conceits.

True ease in writing comes from art, not chance;

As those move easiest who have learn'd to dance. Pope's Ess.

To EASE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To free from pain.

Help and ease children the best you can; but by no means bemoan them. Locke.

2. To relieve; to assuage; to mitigate; to alleviate.

Thy father made our yoke grievous, now therefore ease
thou somewhat the grievous servitude. 2 Chro. x. 4.

Complain, queen Margaret, and tell thy grief;

It shall be ease'd, if France can yield relief. Shakesp. H. VI.

As if with sports my sufferings I could ease. Dryden.

Though he speaks of such medicines as procure sleep, and ease pain, he doth not determine their doses. Arbuthnot on Coins.

Will he for sacrifice our sorrows ease?

And can our tears reverse his firm decrees? Prior.

3. To relieve from labour.

If ere night the gath'ring clouds we fear,

A song will help the beating storm to bear;

And that thou may'st not be too late abroad,

Sing, and I'll ease thy shoulders of thy load. Dryden's Past.

4. To set free from any thing that offends.

I will ease me of mine adversaries. Jf. i. 24.

No body feels pain that he wishes not to be eased of, with a desire equal to that pain, and inseparable from it. Locke.

EA'SFUL. adj. [ease and full.] Quiet; peaceable; fit for rest.

I spy a black, suspicious, threat'ning cloud,

That will encounter with our glorious sun,

Ere he attain his easy western bed. Shakesp. Henry VI.

EA'SEMENT. n. f. [from ease.]

1. Assistance; support; relief from expences.

He has the advantage of a free lodging, and some other ease- ments. Swift.

2. [In law.] A service that one neighbour has of another by charter or prescription, without profit; as a way through his ground, a sink, or such like. Cowel.

EA'SILY. adv. [from easy.]

1. Without difficulty.

Those move swiftly, and at great distance; but they require a medium well disposed, and their transmission is easily stopped. Bacon's Natural History, N<sup>o</sup>. 647.

She ask'd the reason of his woe;

She ask'd, but with an air and mien,

That made it easily foreseen

She fear'd too much to know. Prior.

3. Without pain; without disturbance; in tranquillity.

Is it not to bid defiance to all mankind to condemn their universal opinions and designs, if, instead of passing your life as well and easily, you resolve to pass it as ill and as miserable as you can? Temple.

3. Readily; without reluctance.

I can easily resign to others the praise of your illustrious family. Dryden's Dedic. to State of Innocence.

Not soon provok'd, she easily forgives;

And much she suffers, as she much believes. Prior.

EA'SINESS. n. f. [from easy.]

1. Freedom from difficulty.

Believe me, friends, loud tumults are not laid

With half the easiness that they are rais'd. Ben. Jonns. Catil.

Easiness and difficulty are relative terms, and relate to some power; and a thing may be difficult to a weak man, which yet may be easy to the same person, when assisted with a greater strength. Tillotson, Sermon 6.

The seeming easiness of Pindarick verse has made it spread;
but it has not been considered. Dryden.

You left a conquest more than half achiev'd,

And for whose easiness I almost griev'd. Dryden.

This plea appears under a colour of friendship to religion, and to invite men to it by the easiness of the terms it offers.

Rogers, Sermon 15.

2. Flexibility; compliance; readiness; not opposition; not reluctance.

His yielding unto them in one thing might happily put them in hope, that time would breed the like easiness of condescending further unto them. Hooker, Pref.

Since the custom of easiness to alter and change laws is so evil, no doubt but to bear a tolerable fore is better than to venture on a dangerous remedy. Hooker, b. iv. f. 14.

Give to him, and he shall but laugh at your easiness; save his life, but, when you have done, look to your own. South.

The safest way to secure honesty, is to lay the foundations of it early in liberality, and an easiness to part with to others whatever they have or like themselves. Locke.

3. Freedom from constraint; not effort; not formality.

Abstruse and mystick thoughts you must express

With painful care, but seeming easiness;

For truth shines brightest through the plainest dress. Rose. }

4. Rest; tranquillity.

I think the reason I have assigned hath a great interest in that rest and easiness we enjoy when asleep. Ray on the Creation.

EAST. n. f. [eorre, Saxon; hees, Erse.]

1. The quarter where the sun rises.

They counting forwards towards the East, did allow 180 degrees to the Portugals eastward. Abbot.

2. The regions in the eastern parts of the world.

I would not be the villain that thou thinkest,

For the whole space that's in the tyrant's grasp,

And the rich East to boot. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

EA'STER. n. f. [earstne, Saxon; cofter, Dutch.] The day on which the Christian church commemorates our Saviour's resurrection.

Did'st thou not fall out with a taylor for wearing his new doublet before Easter? Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet.

Victor's unbrother-like heat towards the Eastern churches, in the controversy about Easter, fomented that difference into a schism. Decay of Piety.

EA'STERLY. adj. [from East.]

1. Coming from the parts towards the East.

When the easterly winds or breezes are kept off by some high mountains from the vallies, whereby the air, wanting motion, doth become exceeding unhealthful. Raleigh.

2. Lying towards the East.

These give us a view of the most easterly, southerly, and westerly parts of England. Graunt's Bills of Mortality.

3. Looking towards the East.

Water he chuses clear, light, without taste or smell, drawn not from snow, but from springs with an easterly exposition.

Arbuthnot on Aliments.

EA'STERN. adj. [from East.]

1. Dwelling or found in the East; oriental.

Eastern tyrants from the light of heaven

Seclude their bosom-slaves. Thomson's Spring.

2. Lying or being towards the East.

The eastern end of the isle rises up in precipices. Addison.

3. Going towards the East.

A ship at sea has no certain method in either her eastern or western voyages, or even in her less distant sailing from the coasts, to know her longitude, or how much she is gone east- ward or westward, as can easily be known in any clear day or night how much she is gone northward or southward. Addison.

4. Looking towards the East.

EA'STWARD. adv. [East and toward.] Towards the East.

The moon, which performs its motion swifter than the sun, gets eastward out of his rays, and appears when the sun is set. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iv. c. 13.

What shall we do, or where direct our flight?

Eastward, as far as I could cast my sight,

From op'ning heav'ns, I saw descending light. Dryden. }

EA'SY. adj. [from ease.]

1. Not difficult.

The service of God, in the solemn assembly of saints, is a work, though easy, yet withal very weighty, and of great respect. Hooker, b. v. f. 31.

There is a slave, whose easy-borrow'd pride

Dwells in the fickle grace of her he follows. Shak. K. Lear.

How much it is in every one's power to make resolutions

to

to himself, such as he may keep, is easy for every one to try. Locke.

The whole island was probably cut into several easy ascents, and planted with variety of palaces. Addison on Italy.

2. Quiet; at rest; not harrassed; not disturbed; without anxiety.

Those that are easy in their conditions, or their minds, refuse often to enter upon publick charges and employment. Temple.

Keep their thoughts easy and free, the only temper wherein the mind is capable of receiving new informations. Locke.

A marriage of love is pleasant, a marriage of interest easy, and a marriage where both meet happy. Addison's Spectator.

When men are easy in their circumstances, they are naturally enemies to innovations. Addison's Freeholder, No. 42.

A man should direct all his studies and endeavours at making himself easy now, and happy hereafter. Addison's Spectator.

We plainly feel whether at this instant we are easy or uneasy, happy or miserable. Smalridge's Sermons.

3. Complying; unresisting; credulous.

Baited with reasons not unplaufible,

Win me into the easy hearted man,

And hug him into snares. Milton.

With such decets he gain'd their easy hearts,

Too prone to credit his perfidious arts. Dryden's Æn.

The kindest father I have ever found him,

Easy and good, and bounteous to my wishes. Addison's Cato.

4. Free from pain.

Another part, in squadrons and grofs bands,

On bold adventure to discover wide

That dismal world, if any clime perhaps

Might yield them easier habitation. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Pleasure has been the bus'ness of my life,

And every change of fortune easy to me,

Because I still was easy to myself. Dryden's Dan Sebastian.

5. Ready; not unwilling.

Pity and he are one;

So merciful a king did never live,

Loth to revenge, and easy to forgive. Dryden's Span. Fryar.

6. Without want of more.

They should be allowed each of them such a rent as would make them easy. Swift's Arg. against abolishing Christianity.

7. Without constraint; without formality.

Those move easiest that have learn'd to dance. Pope.

Praise the easy vigour of a line,

Where Denham's strength, and Waller's sweetness join. Po.

To EAT. v. a. preterite ate, or eat; part. eat, or eaten. [etan, Sax. itan, Gothick; eich, Erse.]

1. To devour with the mouth.

Locusts shall eat the residue of that which is escaped from the hail, and shall eat every tree which groweth. Ex. x. 5.

Other states cannot be accused for not staying for the first blow, or for not accepting Polyphemus's courtesy, to be the last that shall be eaten up. Bacon's War with Spain.

Even wormwood, eat with bread, will not bite, because it is mixed with a great quantity of spittle. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. To consume; to corrode.

Thou best of gold art worst of gold;

Other less fine in carrat is more precious,

Preserving life in medicine potable:

But thou, most fine, most honour'd, most renown'd,

Hast eat thy bearer up. Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. ii.

They entail a secret curse upon their estates, which does either insensibly waste and consume it, or eat out the heart and comfort of it. Tillotson, Sermon 4.

There arises a necessity of keeping the surface even, either by pressure or eating medicines, that the eminence of the flesh may not resist the fibres of the skin in their tendency to cover the wound. Sharp's Surgery.

3. To swallow back; to retreat. This is only used of a man's word.

They cannot hold, but burst out those words, which afterwards they are forced to eat. Hakewill on Providence.

Credit were not to be lost

B' a brave knight errant of the post,

That eats, perfidiously, his word,

And swears his ears through a two inch board. Hudibras.

To EAT. v. n.

1. To go to meals; to take meals; to feed.

He did eat continually at the king's table. 2 Sa. ix. 13.

And when the scribes and pharisees saw him eat with publicans and sinners, they said unto his disciples, how is it that he eateth with publicans and sinners? Mat. ii. 16.

2. To take food.

He that will not eat 'till he has a demonstration that it will nourish him, he that will not stir 'till he infallibly knows the business he goes about will succeed, will have little else to do but sit still and perish. Locke.

3. To be maintained in food.

The righteous eateth to the satisfying of his soul, but the belly of the wicked shall want. Prov. xiii. 25.

Thou art past the tyrant's stroke;

Care no more to cloath and eat. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

4. To make way by corrosion.

The plague of sin has even altered his nature, and eaten into his very essentials. South's Sermons.

A prince's court eats too much into the income of a poor state. Addison's Italy.

EA'TABLE. n. f. [from eat.] Any thing that may be eaten.

If you all sorts of persons would engage,

Suit well your eatables to ev'ry age. King's Art of Cookery.

EA'TER. n. f. [from eat.]

1. One that eats any thing.

The Caribees and the Cannibals, almost all, are eaters of man's flesh. Abbot's Description of the World.

A knave, a rascal, an eater of broken meats. Sh. K. Lear.

If the taste of this fruit maketh the eaters like gods, why remainest thou a beast? Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. i. c. 1.

As if the lotus grew only here, the virtue of whose fruit is to cause in the eaters an oblivion of all other foils. Howel.

2. A corrosive.

EATH. adj. [eað, Saxon.] Easy; not difficult. An old word.

Where ease abounds, it's eath to do amiss. Fairy Queen.

What works not beauty, man's relenting mind

Is eath to move with plaints and shews of woe. Fairfax, b. iv.

The way was strait and eath. Fairfax.

EATH. adv. [from the adjective.] Easily. An old word.

Who hath the world not try'd,

From the right way full eath may wander wide. Hubb. Tale.

EA'TINGHOUSE. n. f. [eat and house.] A house where provisions are sold ready dressed.

An hungry traveller stept into an eatinghouse for his dinner. L'Estrange.

EAVES. n. f. [eeyre, Saxon.] The edges of the roof which overhang the house.

Every night he comes

With musick of all sorts, and songs compos'd

To her unworthiness: it nothing steads us

To chide him from our eaves; for he persists,

As if his life lay on't. Shakespeare's All's well that ends well.

His tears run down his beard, like Winter drops

From eaves of reeds. Shakespeare's Tempest.

If in the beginning of Winter the drops of the eaves of houses come more slowly down than they use, it portendeth a hard and frosty Winter. Bacon, No. 811.

Usher'd with a shower still,

When the gulf hath blown his fill,

Ending on the rustling leaves,

With minute drops from off the eaves. Milton.

The icicles hang down from the eaves of houses. Woodward.

To EA'VEDROP. v. a. [eaves and drop.] To catch what comes from the eaves; in common phrase, to listen under windows.

EA'VEDROPPER. n. f. [eaves and drop.] A listener under windows.

Under our tents I'll play the eavesdropper,

To hear if any mean to shrink from me. Shakesp. Rich. III.

EBB. n. f. [ebba, epylob, Saxon; ebbe, Dutch.]

1. The reflux of the tide towards the sea.

The clear sun on his wide wat'ry glass

Gaz'd hot, and of the fresh wave largely drew,

As after thirst; which made their flowing shrink

From standing lake to tripping ebb, that stole

With soft foot tow'rs the deep. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Hither the seas at stated times resort,

And shove the laden vessels into port;

Then with a gentle ebb retire again,

And render back their cargo to the main. Addison on Italy.

2. Decline; decay; waste.

You have finished all the war, and brought all things to that low ebb which you speak of. Spenser on Ireland.

This tide of man's life, after it once turneth and declineth, ever runneth with a perpetual ebb and falling stream, but never floweth again. Raleigh's History of the World.

Thus all the treasure of our flowing years,

Our ebb of life for ever takes away. Roscommon.

The greatest age for poetry was that of Augustus Cæsar, yet painting was then at its lowest ebb, and perhaps sculpture was also declining. Dryden's Dufresnoy, Preface.

Near my apartment let him pris'ner be,

That I his hourly ebbs of life may see. Dryden's Aurengzebe.

What is it he aspires to?

Is it not this? To shed the flow remains,

His last poor ebb of blood in your defence? Addison's Cato.

To EBB. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To flow back towards the sea.

Though my tide of blood

Hath proudly flow'd in vanity 'till now,

Now it doth turn and ebb back to the sea. Shakesp. Hen. IV.

From thence the tide of fortune left their shore,

And ebb'd much faster than it flow'd before. Dryden's Æn.

2. To decline; to decay; to waste.

2. To

Well, I am standing water :

— I'll teach you how to flow.

— Do so: to ebb

Hereditary sloth instructs me. Shakespeare's Tempest.

But oh he ebbs! the smiling waves decay!

For ever, lovely stream, for ever stay! Halifax.

E'BEN. } n. f. [ebenus, Latin.] A hard, heavy, black, valuable wood, which admits a fine gloss.
E'BON. }
E'BONY. }

If the wood be very hard, as ebony, or lignum vitæ, they are to turn: they use not the same tools they do for soft woods. Moxon's Mech. Exercises.

Oft by the winds extinct the signal lies,

Or smother'd in the glimmering socket dies,

Ere night has half roll'd round her ebon throne. Gay's Triv.

EBRI'ETY. n. f. [ebrietas, Latin.] Drunkenness; intoxication by strong liquors.

Bitter almonds, as an antidote against ebriety, hath commonly failed. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. ii. c. 6.

EBRI'LLADE. n. f. [French.] A check of the bridle which a horseman gives a horse, by a jerk of one rein, when he refuses to turn.

EBRIO'SITY. n. f. [ebriositas, Latin.] Habitual drunkenness.

That religion which excuseth Noah in surprisal, will neither acquit ebriosity nor ebriety in their intended perversion. Brown.

EBULLITION. n. f. [ebullio, Latin.]

1. The act of boiling up with heat.

2. Any intestine motion.

3. That struggling or effervescence which arises from the mingling together any alkalizate and acid liquor; and hence any intestine violent motion of the parts of a fluid, occasioned by the struggling of particles of different properties, is so called. Quincy.

The dissolution of gold and silver disagree; so that in their mixture there is great ebullition, darkness, and, in the end, a precipitation of a black powder. Bacon.

Iron, in aqua fortis, will fall into ebullition with noise and emication; as also a craffe and fumid exhalation, caused from the combat of the sulphur of iron with the acid and nitrous spirits of aqua fortis. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. ii.

When aqua fortis, or spirit of vitriol, poured upon filings of iron, dissolves the filings with a great heat and ebullition, is not the heat and ebullition effected by a violent motion of the parts; and does not their motion argue, that the acid parts of the liquor rush towards the parts of the metal with violence, and run forcibly into its pores, 'till they get between its outmost particles and the main mass of the metal. Newton.

A violent cold, as well as heat, may be produced by this ebullition; for if sal ammoniac, or any pure volatile alkali, dissolved in water, be mixed with an acid, an ebullition, with a greater degree of cold, will ensue. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

ECCENTRICAL. } adj. [eccentricus, Latin.]

ECCENTRICK. }

1. Deviating from the center.

2. Not having the same center with another circle: such circles were supposed by the Ptolemaick philosophy.

Thither his course he bends

Through the calm firmament; but up or down,

By centrick or eccentrick, hard to tell. Milton's Parad. Lost.

They build, unbuild, contrive,

To save appearances: they gird the sphere

With centrick, and eccentrick, scribbled o'er,

Cycle, and epicycle, orb in orb. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Whence is it that planets move all one and the same way in orbs concentrick, while comets move all manner of ways in orbs very eccentrick? Newton's Opt.

3. Not terminating in the point; not directed by the same principle.

Whatsoever affairs pass such a man's hands, he crooketh them to his own ends; which must needs be often eccentrick to the ends of his master. Bacon's Essays.

4. Irregular; anamalous; deviating from stated and constant methods.

This motion, like others of the times, seems eccentrick and irregular. King Charles.

A character of an eccentrick virtue, is the more exact image of human life, because it is not wholly exempted from its frailties. Dryden's Dedicat. to the Conquest of Granada.

Then from whate'er we can to sense produce,

Common and plain, or wondrous and abstruse,

From nature's constant or eccentrick laws,

The thoughtful soul this gen'ral inference draws,

That an effect must presuppose a cause. Prior.

ECCENTRI'CITY. n. f. [from eccentrick.]

1. Deviation from a center.

2. The state of having a different center from another circle.

In regard of eccentricity, and the epicycle wherein it moveth, the motion of the moon is unequal. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

By reason of the sun's eccentricity to the earth, and obliquity to the equator, he appears to us to move unequally. Holder.

3. Excursion from the proper orb.

The duke at his return from his eccentricity, for so I account favourites abroad, met no good news of the Cadiz attempt. Wotton.

4. Eccentricity of the earth is the distance between the focus and the center of the earth's elliptick orbit. Harris.

ECCHY'MOSIS. n. f. [εκχυμωσις] Livid spots or blotches in the skin, made by extravasated blood. Quincy.

Ecchymosis may be defined an extravasation of the blood in or under the skin, the skin remaining whole. Wise's Surg.

Laxations are accompanied with tumour and ecchymosis. Wise.

ECCLESIASTICAL. } adj. [ecclesiasticus, Latin]

ECCLESIASTICK. }

1. Relating to the church; not civil.

Is discipline an ecclesiastical matter or civil? If an ecclesiastical, it must of necessity belong to the duty of the minister. Hooker, Preface.

Clergymen, otherwise little fond of obscure terms, yet in their sermons are liberal of those which they find in ecclesiastical writers. Swift.

A church of England man has a true veneration for the scheme established among us of ecclesiastick government. Swift.

ECCLESIASTICK. n. f. [from the adjective.] A person dedicated to the ministries of religion.

The ambition of the ecclesiasticks destroyed the purity of the church. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

ECCOPROTICKS. n. f. [εκ and πρῶτον.] Such medicines as gently purge the belly, so as to bring away no more than the natural excrements lodged in the intestines.

The body ought to be maintained in its daily excretions by such means as are eccoprotick. Harvey on the Plague.

ECHINA'TE. } adj. [from echinus, Latin.] Bristled like an

ECHINA'TED. } hedgehog; set with prickles.

An echinated pyrites in shape approaches the echinated crystalline balls. Woodward on Fossils.

E'CHINUS. n. f. [Latin.]

1. A hedgehog.

2. A shellfish set with prickles.

3. [With botanists.] The prickly head, cover of the seed, or top of any plant.

4. [In architecture.] A member or ornament, taking its name from the roughness of the carving, resembling the prickly rind of a chestnut, and not unlike the thorny coat of a hedgehog.

This ornament is used by modern architects in cornices of the Ionick, Corinthian, and Composite orders; and generally set next to the abacus, being carved with anchors, darts, and ovals or eggs. Harris.

E'CHO. n. f. [ἠχώ.]

1. Echo was supposed to have been once a nymph, who pined into a sound for love of Narcissus.

The pleasant myrtle may teach th' unfortunate Echo
In these woods to resound the renowned name of a goddess. Sidney, b. i.

2. The return or repercussion of any sound.

Babbling echo mocks the hounds,
Replying shrilly to the well-tun'd horns,

As if a double hunt were heard at once. Shak. Titus Andron.

The sound, filling great spaces in arched lines, cannot be guided; therefore there hath not been any means to make artificial echoes. Bacon's Natural History, No. 242.

To you I mourn, nor to the deaf I sing;
The woods shall answer, and the echo ring. Pope's Summer.

'Tis not enough no harshness gives offence;
The sound must seem an echo to the sense. Pope's Ess. Crit.

3. The sound returned.

Wilt thou hunt?
Thy hounds shall make the welkin answer them,
And fetch shrill echoes from their hollow earth. Shakespeare.

O woods, O fountains, hillocks, dales and bow'rs!
With other echo late I taught your shades

To answer, and resound far other song! Milt. Parad. Lost.

To E'CHO. v. n.

1. To resound; to give the repercussion of a voice.

At the parting
All the church echo'd. Shakespeare's Taming of the Shrew.

Through rocks and caves the name of Delia sounds;
Delia each cave and echoing rock rebounds. Pope's Autumn.

2. To be sounded back.

Hark, how the sound disturbs imperious Rome!
Shakes her proud hills, and rolls from dome to dome!

Her miter'd princes hear the echoing noise,
And, Albion, dread thy wrath and awful voice. Blackmore.

To E'CHO. v. a. To send back a voice; to return what has been uttered.

Our modern separatists do but echo the same note. Decay of Piety.

With peals of shouts the Tyrians praise the song;
Those peals are echo'd by the Trojan throng. Dryden's Æn.

One great death deforms the dreary ground;
The echo'd woes from distant rocks resound. Prior.

ECLAIRCISSEMENT. n. f. [French.] Explanation; the act of clearing up an affair by verbal expostulation.

ECLAT. n. f. [French.] Splendour; show; lustre.

Nothing more contributes to the variety, surprize, and eclat of Homer's battles, than that artificial manner of gaging his heroes by each other.

Pope's Essay on Homer.

ECLICTICK. adj. [ἐκλεκτικός] Selecting; chusing at will.

Cicero gives an account of the opinions of philosophers; but was of the eclictick sect, and chose out of each such positions as came nearest truth. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

ECLIGMA. n. f. [ἐκ and λῆξις.] A form of medicine made by the incorporation of oils with syrups, and which is to be taken upon a liquorice stick.

Quincy.

ECLIPSE. n. f. [ἐκλειψις.]

1. An obscuration of the luminaries of heaven; the sun is eclipsed by the intervention of the moon; the moon by the interposition of the earth. The word originally signifies departure from the place, to which Milton alludes.

Slips of yew,

Sliver'd in the moon's eclipse. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Planets, planet-struck, real eclipse

Then suffer'd. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x. l. 413.

So though the sun victorious be,

And from a dark eclipse set free,

The influence, which we fondly fear,

Afflicts our thoughts the following year.

Waller.

An eclipse of the moon is when the atmosphere of the earth, being between the sun and the moon, hinders the light of the sun from falling upon and being reflected by the moon: if the light of the sun is kept off from the whole body of the moon, it is a total eclipse; if from a part only, it is a partial one.

Locke.

2. Darknes; obscuration.

All the posterity of our first parents suffered a perpetual eclipse of spiritual life.

Raleigh's History of the World.

Experience we have of the vanity of human glory, in our scatterings and eclipses.

King Charles.

To ECLIPSE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To darken a luminary.

Let the eclipsed moon her throne resign.

Sandys.

Now if the earth were flat, the dark'ned moon

Would seem to all eclips'd as well as one. Creech's Manilius.

2. To extinguish; to put out.

Then here I take my leave of thee, fair son,

Born to eclipse thy life this afternoon. Shakespeare's Henry VI.

3. To cloud; to obscure.

They had seen tokens of more than common greatness, howsoever now eclipsed with fortune.

Sidney.

Praise him to his father:

Let the prince's glory

Seem to eclipse, and cast a cloud on his. Denham's Sophy.

Let other muses write his prosp'rous fate,

Of conquer'd nations tell, and kings restor'd;

But mine shall sing of his eclips'd estate,

Which, like the sun's, more wonders does afford. Dryden.

He descended from his father, and eclipsed the glory of his divine majesty with a veil of flesh.

Calamy's Sermons.

4. To disgrace.

She told the king, that her husband was eclipsed in Ireland by the no-countenance his majesty had shewed towards him.

Clarendon, b. viii.

Another now hath to himself engross'd

All pow'r, and us eclips'd. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. v.

ECLIPTICK. n. f. [ἐκλειπτικός.] A great circle of the sphere, supposed to be drawn through the middle of the Zodiack, and making an angle with the Equinoctial, in the points of Aries and Libra, of 23°. 30'. which is the sun's greatest declination.

This is by some called via solis, or the way of the sun, because the sun, in his annual motion, never deviates from this line. It is this line which is drawn on the globe, and not the Zodiack.

But in the new astronomy the Ecliptick is that path among the fixed stars, which the earth appears to describe to an eye placed in the sun, as in its annual motion it runs round the sun from West to East. If you suppose this circle to be divided into twelve equal parts, they will be the twelve signs, each of which is denoted or distinguished by some asterism or constellation.

Harris.

All stars, that have their distance from the Ecliptick northwards not more than twenty-three degrees and a half, may, in progression of time, have declination southward, and move beyond the Equator.

Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iv. c. 13.

The terraqueous globe had the same site and position, in respect of the sun, that it now hath: its axis was not parallel to that of the Ecliptick, but inclined in like manner as it is at present.

The earth's rotation makes the night and day;

The sun revolving through th' Ecliptick way,

Effects the various seasons of the year. Blackm. on the Creat.

You must conceive an imaginary plane, which passing through the center of the sun, and the earth, extends itself on all sides as far as the firmament: this plane is called the Ecliptick, and in this the center of the earth is perpetually carried, without any deviation.

Bentley's Sermons.

VOL. I.

ECLOGUE. n. f. [ἐκλογία.] A pastoral poem so called, because Virgil called his pastorals eclogues.

What exclaiming praises Basilus gave this eclogue any man may guess, that knows love is better than spectacles to make every thing seem great.

Sidney.

It is not sufficient that the sentences be brief, the whole eclogue should be so too.

Pope.

ECONOMY. n. f. [ὀικονομία.] This word is often written, from its derivation, æconomy; but æ being no diphthong in English, it is placed here with the authorities for different orthography.]

1. The management of a family; the government of a household.

By St. Paul's economy the heir differs nothing from a servant, while he is in his minority; so a servant should differ nothing from a child in the substantial part. Taylor's Rule of living holy.

2. Frugality; discretion of expence; laudable parsimony.

Particular sums are not laid out to the greatest advantage in his economy; but are sometimes suffered to run waste, while he is only careful of the main. Dryden's State of Innocence, Preface.

I have no other notion of economy, than that it is the parent of liberty and ease.

Swift to Lord Bolingbroke.

3. Disposition of things; regulation.

All the divine and infinitely wise ways of economy that God could use towards a rational creature, oblige mankind to that course of living which is most agreeable to our nature. Hamm.

4. The disposition or arrangement of any work.

In the Greek poets, as also in Plautus, we shall see the economy and disposition of poems better observed than in Terence.

Ben. Johnson's Discoveries.

If this economy must be observed in the minutest parts of an epick poem, what soul, though sent into the world with great advantages of nature, cultivated with the liberal arts and sciences, can be sufficient to inform the body of so great a work?

Dryden's Dedication to the Æn.

5. System of motions; distribution of every thing active or passive to its proper place.

These the strainers aid,

That, by a constant separation made,

They may a due economy maintain,

Exclude the noxious parts, the good retain. Blackm. Creat.

ECO'NOMICK. } adj. [from economy.]

ECO'NOMICAL. } adj. [from economy.]

1. Pertaining to the regulation of an household.

Her quick'ning power in ev'ry living part,

Doth as a nurse, or as a mother serve;

And doth employ her economick art,

And busy care, her household to preserve.

Davies.

In economical affairs, having proposed the government of a family, we consider the proper means to effect it.

Watts.

2. Frugal.

Some are so plainly economical, as even to desire that the seat be well watered, and well fuelled.

Wotton's Architect.

ECBPRA'CTICKS. n. f. [ἐκ and φεράω.] Such medicines as render tough humours more thin, so as to promote their discharge.

Quincy.

Procure the blood a free course, ventilation, and transpiration, by suitable purges and ecbpRACTICK medicines.

Harvey.

ECSTASY. n. f. [ἐκστασις.]

1. Any passion by which the thoughts are absorbed, and in which the mind is for a time lost.

Follow them swiftly,

And hinder them from what this ecstasy

May now provoke them to. Shakespeare's Tempest.

'T may be

No longer joy there, but an ecstasy.

Suckling.

Whether what we call ecstasy be not dreaming with our eyes open, I leave to be examined.

Locke.

2. Excessive joy; rapture.

O, love, be moderate! Allay thy ecstasy!

Shakespeare.

The religious pleasure of a well disposed mind moves gently, and therefore constantly: it does not affect by rapture and ecstasy; but is like the pleasure of health, still and sober.

South's Sermons.

Each delighted, and delighting; gives

The pleasing ecstasy which each receives.

Prior.

A pleasure, which no language can express;

An ecstasy, that mothers only feel,

Plays round my heart. Phillips's Distress Mother.

3. Enthusiasm; excessive elevation of the mind.

He lov'd me well, and oft would beg me sing;

Which when I did, he on the tender grass

Would sit, and hearken even to ecstasy.

Milton.

4. Excessive grief or anxiety. This is not now used.

Sighs and groans, and shrieks that rend the air,

Are made, not mark'd; where violent sorrow seems

A modern ecstasy.

Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Better be with the dead,

Than on the torture of the mind to lie

In restless ecstasy.

Shakespeare's Macbeth.

5. Madness; distraction. This sense is not now in use.

Now see that noble and most sovereign reason,

- These are as common to the inanimate things as to the most ecstasied soul upon earth. Norris.
- ECSTA'TICAL. } adj. [εκστατικός.]
ECSTA'TICK. }
1. Ravished; rapturous; elevated to ecstasy.
There doth my soul in holy vision sit,
In pensive trance, and anguish, and ecstasick fit. Milton.
When one of them, after an ecstasick manner, fell down before an angel, he was severely rebuked, and bidden to worship God. Stillfleet's Def. of Disc. on Rom. Idol.
In trance ecstasick may thy pangs be drown'd;
Bright clouds descend, and angels watch thee round. Pope.
  2. In the highest degree of joy.
To gain Pescennius one employs his schemes;
One grasps a Cecrops in ecstasick dreams. Pope.
  3. Tending to external objects. This sense is, I think, only to be found once, though agreeable enough to the derivation.
I find in me a great deal of ecstasick love, which continually carries me out to good without myself. Norris.
- E'CTYPE. n. f. [εκτύπος.] A copy.
The complex ideas of substances are ectypes, copies, but not perfect ones, not adequate. Locke.
- E'CURIE. n. f. [French; equus, Latin.] A place covered for the lodging or housing of horses.
- EDA'CIOUS. adj. [edax, Latin.] Eating; voracious; devouring; predatory; ravenous; rapacious; greedy.
- EDA'CITY. n. f. [edacitas, Latin.] Voracity; ravenousness; greediness; rapacity.
The wolf is a beast of great edacity and digestion: it may be the parts of him comfort the bowels. Bacon's Nat. History.
- TO EDDER. v. a. [probably from edge.] To bind or interweave a fence.
To add strength to the hedge, edder it; which is, bind the top of the stakes with some small long poles on each side. Mortimer's Husbandry.
- E'DDER. n. f. [from the verb.] Such fencewood as is commonly put upon the top of fences, and binds or interweaves each other.
In lopping and felling, save edder and stake,
Thine hedges, as needeth, to mend or to make. Tusser.
- E'DDY. n. f. [ed, backward, again, and ea, water, Saxon.]
1. The water that by some repercussion, or opposite wind, runs contrary to the main stream.
My praises are as a bulrush upon a stream: if they sink not, 'tis because they are born up by the strength of the current, which supports their lightness; but they are carried round again, and return on the eddy where they first began. Dryden.
  2. Whirlpool; circular motion.
The wild waves master'd him, and suck'd him in,
And smiling eddies dimpled on the main. Dryd. Ann. Mirab.
So, where our wide Numidian wastes extend,
Sudden th' impetuous hurricanes descend,
Wheel through the air, in circling eddies play,
Tear up the sands, and sweep whole plains away. Add. Cato.
- E'DDY. adj. Whirling; moving circularly.
And chaff with eddy winds is whirl'd around,
And dancing leaves are lifted from the ground. Dryd. Virgil.
- EDEMATO'SE. adj. [οίδημα.] Swelling; full of humours. See CEDEMATOUS.
A serosity obstructing the glands may be watery, edematose, and schirrous, according to the viscosity of the humour. Arb.
- EDE'NTATED. adj. [edentatus, Latin.] Deprived of teeth. Diët.
- EDGE. n. f. [ecge, Saxon.]
1. The thin or cutting part of a blade.
Seize upon Fife; give to the edge o' th' sword
His wife, his babes. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
He that will a good edge win,
Must forge thick, and grind thin. Proverb.
The edge of war, like an ill sheathed knife,
No more shall cut his master. Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. i.
'Tis slander,
Whose edge is sharper than the sword. Shakesp. Cymbeline.
If the iron be blunt, and he do not whet the edge, then must he put to more strength. Eccl. x. 10.
  2. A narrow part rising from a broader.
Some harrow their ground over, and then plow it upon an edge. Mortimer's Husbandry.
  3. Brink; margin; extremity.
The rays which pass very near to the edges of any body, are bent a little by the action of the body. Newton's Opt.
We have, for many years, walked upon the edge of a precipice, while nothing but the slender thread of human life has held us from sinking into endless misery. Rogers's Sermons.
Yes, the last pen for freedom let me draw,
When truth stands trembling on the edge of law. Pope.
  4. Sharpness; proper disposition for action or operation; intenseness of desire.
Give him a further edge,

E D I

- And drive his purpose into these delights. Shakesp. Hamlet.
But when long time the wretches thoughts refin'd,
When want had set an edge upon their mind,
Then various cares their working thoughts employ'd,
And that which each invented, all enjoy'd. Creech's Manil.
Silence and solitude set an edge upon the genius, and cause a greater application. Dryden's Dufresnoy.
5. Keeness; acrimony of temper.
Abate the edge of traitors, gracious Lord!
That would reduce these bloody days again. Shak. Rich. III.
  6. To set teeth on EDGE. To cause a tingling pain in the teeth.
A harsh grating tune setteeth the teeth on edge. Bacon.
- TO EDGE. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To sharpen; to enable to cut.
There sat she rolling her alluring eyes,
To edge her champion's sword, and urge my ruin. Dryden.
  2. To furnish with an edge.
I fell'd along a man of bearded face,
His limbs all cover'd with a shining case;
So wond'rous hard, and so secure of wound,
It made my sword, though edg'd with flint, rebound. Dryd.
  3. To border with any thing; to fringe.
Their long descending train,
With rubies edg'd, and sapphires, swept the plain. Dryden.
I rid over hanging hills, whose tops were edged with groves, and whose feet were watered with winding rivers. Pope.
  4. To exasperate; to embitter.
By such reasonings the simple were blinded, and the malicious edged. Hayward.
He was indigent and low in money, which perhaps might have a little edged his desperation. Wotton's Life of D. of Bucks.
  5. To put forward beyond a line.
Edging by degrees their chairs forwards, they were in a little time got up close to one another. Locke.
- TO EDGE. v. n. [perhaps from eo, backward, Saxon.] To move forward against any power; going close upon a wind, as if upon its skirts or border, and so sailing slow.
I must edge upon a point of wind,
And make slow way. Dryden's Cleomenes.
- E'DGED. participial adj. [from edge.] Sharp; not blunt.
We find that subtle or edged quantities do prevail over blunt ones. Digby on Bodies.
- E'DGING. n. f. [from edge.]
1. What is added to any thing by way of ornament.
The garland which I wove for you to wear,
And border'd with a rosy edging round. Dryden.
A woman branches out into a long dissertation upon the edging of a petticoat. Addison's Spectator, N<sup>o</sup>. 247.
  2. A narrow lace.
- E'DGELESS. adj. [from edge.] Blunt; obtuse; unable to cut.
To-morrow in the battle think on me,
And fall thy edgeless sword; despair and die. Shakesp. R. III.
They are only edgeless weapons it hath to encounter. Decay of Piety.
- E'DGETOOL. n. f. [edge and tool.] A tool made sharp to cut.
There must be no playing with things sacred, nor jesting with edgetools. L'Estrange.
Nurses from their children keep edgetools. Dorset.
I shall exercise upon steel, and its several forts; and what fort is fittest for edgetools, which for springs. Moxon's Mech. Ex.
- E'DGEWISE. adv. [edge and wise.] With the edge put into any particular direction.
Should the flat side be objected to the stream, it would be soon turned edgewise by the force of it. Ray on the Creation.
- E'DIBLE. adj. [from edo, Latin.] Fit to be eaten; fit for food.
Some flesh is not edible; as horses and dogs. Bacon.
Wheat and barley, and the like, are made either edible or potable by man's art and industry. More against Atheism.
Some of the fungus kind, gathered for edible mushrooms, have produced a difficulty of breathing. Arbuthnot on Aliments.
The edible creation decks the board. Prior.
- E'DICT. n. f. [edictum, Latin.] A proclamation of command or prohibition; a law promulgated.
When an absolute monarch commandeth his subjects that which seemeth good in his own discretion, hath not his edict the force of a law. Hooker, b. i. f. 10.
The great king of kings,
Hath in the table of his law commanded
That thou shalt do no murder; will you then Spurn at his edict, and fulfil a man's? Shakesp. Richard III.
Severe decrees may keep our tongues in awe,
But to our thoughts what edict can give law? Dryd. Aureng.
The ministers are always preaching, and the governors putting out edicts, against gaming and fine cloaths. Addison.
- EDIFICA'TION. n. f. [edificatio, Latin.]
1. The act of building up man in the faith; improvement in holiness.
Our blessed Saviour told us, that we must account for every idle word, not meaning that every word which is not designed to edification, or is less prudent, shall be reckoned for a sin. Taylor's Rule of living holy.
  2. Improvement;

2. Improvement; instruction.

Out of these magazines I shall supply the town with what may tend to their edification. Addison's Guardian, N<sup>o</sup>. 114.
EDIFICE. n. f. [edificium, Latin.] A fabrick; a building; a structure.

My love was like a fair house built on another man's ground; so that I have lost my edifice by mistaking the place where I erected it. Shakefp. Merry Wives of Windsor.

He built

So spacious, and his line stretch'd out so far,

That man may know he dwells not in his own;

An edifice too large for him to fill. Milton's Paradise Lost.

The edifice, where all were met to see him,

Upon their heads and on his own he pull'd. Milton's Agon.

As Tuscan pillars owe their original to this country, the architects always give them a place in edifices raised in Tuscany. Addison's Remarks on Italy.

He must be an idiot that cannot discern more strokes of workmanship in the structure of an animal than in the most elegant edifice. Bentley's Sermons.

EDIFIER. n. f. [from edify.] One that improves or instructs another.

To EDIFY. v. a. [edifico, Latin.]

1. To build.

Men have edify'd

A lofty temple, and perfum'd an altar to thy name. Chapm.

2. To instruct; to improve.

He who speaketh no more than edifieth, is undeservedly reprehended for much speaking. Hooker, b. v. f. 32.

Men are edified, when either their understanding is taught somewhat whereof, in such actions, it behoveth all men to consider, or when their hearts are moved with any affection suitable thereunto. Hooker, b. iv. f. 1.

Life is no life, without the blessing of a friendly and an edifying conversation. L'Estrange.

He gave, he taught; and edify'd the more,

Because he shew'd, by proof, 'twas easy to be poor. Dryd.

3. To teach; to persuade.

You shall hardly edify me, that those nations might not, by the law of nature, have been subdued by any nation that had only policy and moral virtue. Bacon's holy War.

EDILE. n. f. [edilis, Latin.] The title of a magistrate in old Rome, whose office seems in some particulars to have resembled that of our justices of peace.

The edile, ho! let him be apprehended. Shak. Coriolanus.

EDITION. n. f. [editio, Latin.]

1. Publication of any thing, particularly of a book.

These are of the second edition. Shak. Mer. Wiv. of Windsor.

This English edition is not so properly a translation, as a new composition upon the same ground. Burnet.

2. Republication; generally with some revisal or correcting.

The business of our redemption is to rub over the defaced copy of the creation, to reprint God's image upon the soul, and to set forth nature in a second and a fairer edition. South.

I cannot go so far as he who published the last edition of him. Dryden's Fables, Preface.

The Code, compos'd hastily, was forced to undergo an emendation, and to come forth in a second edition. Baker.

EDITOR. n. f. [editor, Latin.] Publisher; he that revises or prepares any work for publication.

When a different reading gives us a different sense, or a new elegance in an author, the editor does very well in taking notice of it. Addison's Spectator, N<sup>o</sup>. 450.

This nonsense got into all the editions by a mistake of the stage editors. Pope's Notes on Shakefp. Henry V.

To EDUCATE. v. a. [educare, Latin.] To breed; to bring up; to instruct youth.

Their young succession all their cares employ;

They breed, they brood, instruct and educate,

And make provision for the future state. Dryd. Virg. Georg.

Education is worse, in proportion to the grandeur of the parents: if the whole world were under one monarch, the heir of that monarch would be the worst educated mortal since the creation. Swift on Modern Education.

EDUCATION. n. f. [from educate.] Formation of manners in youth; the manner of breeding youth; nurture.

Education and instruction are the means, the one by use, the other by precept, to make our natural faculty of reason both the better and the sooner to judge rightly between truth and error, good and evil. Hooker, b. i. f. 6.

All nations have agreed in the necessity of a strict education, which consisted in the observance of moral duties. Swift.

To EDUCE. v. a. [educare, Latin.] To bring out; to extract; to produce from a state of occultation.

All that can be made of the power of matter, is a receptive capacity; and we may as well affirm, that the world was educ'd out of the power of space, and give that as a reason of its original: in this language, to grow rich, were to educ money out of the power of the pocket. Glanv. Sceps.

This matter must have lain eternally confined to its beds of earth, were there not this agent to educ it thence.

Woodward's Natural History, p. iii.

Th' eternal art *educ*es good from ill,

Grafts on this passion our best principle. Pope's Ess. on Man.

EDUCATION. n. f. [from educare.] The act of bringing any thing into view.

To EDULCORATE. v. n. [from dulcis, Latin.] To sweeten.

EDULCORATION. n. f. [from edulcorate.] The act of sweetening.

To EKE. v. a. [eacan, ecan, ican, Sax. eak, Scott. eck, Erse.]

1. To make bigger by the addition of another piece.

2. To supply any deficiency. See EKE.

Hence endless penance for our fault I pay;

But that redoubled crime, with vengeance new,

Thou biddest me to eke. Fairy Queen, b. i. c. 5. f. 42.

EEL. n. f. [eal, Saxon; aal, German.] A serpentine slimy fish, that lurks in mud.

Is the adder better than the eel,

Because his painted skin contents the eye? Shakespeare.

The Cockney put the eels i' th' pasty alive. Shak. K. Lear.

E'EN. adv. Contracted from even. See EVEN.

Says the satyr, if you have a trick of blowing hot and cold out of the same mouth, I have e'en done with ye. L'Estrange.

EFF. n. f. See EFT.

EFFABLE. adj. [effabilis, Latin.] Expressive; utterable. Dict.

To EFFACE. v. a. [effacer, French.]

1. To destroy any form painted, or carved.

2. To make no more legible or visible; to blot out; to strike out.

Characters drawn on dust, the first breath of wind effaces.

Locke.

It was ordered, that his name should be effaced out of all publick registers. Addison's Remarks on Italy.

Time, I said, may happily efface

That cruel image of the king's disgrace.

Prior.

Otway fail'd to polish or refine,

And fluent Shakespeare scarce effac'd a line.

Pope.

3. To destroy; to wear away.

Nor our admission shall your realm disgrace,

Nor length of time our gratitude efface. Dryden's Æn.

EFFE'CT. n. f. [effectus, Latin.]

1. That which is produced by an operating cause.

You may see by her example, in herself wise, and of others beloved, that neither folly is the cause of vehement love, nor reproach the effect. Sidney, b. ii.

Effect is the substance produced, or simple idea introduced into any subject, by the exerting of power? Locke.

We see the pernicious effects of luxury in the antient Romans, who immediately found themselves poor as soon as this vice got footing among them. Addison on Italy.

2. Consequence; event.

No man, in effect, doth accompany with others, but he learneth, ere he is aware, some gesture, or voice, or fashion. Bacon's Natural History, N<sup>o</sup>. 236.

To say of a celebrated piece that there are faults in it, is, in effect, to say that the author of it is a man. Addison's Guardian.

3. Purpose; intention; general intent.

They spake to her to that effect.

2 Chro. xxxiv. 22.

4. Consequence intended; success; advantage.

Christ is become of no effect unto you.

Gal. v. 4.

He should depart only with a title, the effect whereof he should not be possessed of, before he had very well deserved it. Clarendon, b. viii.

The custom or institution has hitherto proved without effect, and has neither extinguished the practice of such crimes, nor lessened the numbers of such criminals. Temple.

5. Completion; perfection.

Semblant art shall carve the fair effect,

And full atchievement of thy great designs.

Prior.

6. Reality; not mere appearance.

In shew, a marvellous indifferently compos'd senate ecclesiastical was to govern, but in effect one only man should, as the spirit and soul of the residue, do all in all. Hooker.

State and wealth, the business and the crowd,

Seems at this distance but a darker cloud;

And is to him, who rightly things esteems,

No other in effect than what it seems.

Denham.

7. [In the plural.] Goods; moveables.

What form of prayer

Can serve my turn? Forgive me my foul murder!

That cannot be, since I am still possess'd

Of those effects for which I did the murder,

My crown, mine own ambition, and my queen. Shakefp.

The emperor knew that they could not convey away many of their effects. Addison's Spectator, N<sup>o</sup>. 499.

To EFFE'CT. v. a. [efficio, Latin.]

1. To bring to pass; to attempt with success; to atchieve; to accomplish as an agent.

Being consul, I not doubt t' effect

All that you wish.

Ben. Johnf. Catil.

2. To produce as a cause.

The change made of that syrup into a purple colour, was effected by the vinegar.

Boyle on Colours.

EFFE'CTIBLE.

EFF

EFFE'CTIBLE. adj. [from effect.] Performable; practicable; feasible.

That a pot full of ashes will still contain as much water as it would without them, is not effe'tible upon the strictest experiment. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. ii. c. 3.

EFFE'CTIVE. adj. [from effect.]

1. Having the power to produce effects.

They are not effective of any thing, nor leave no work behind them. Bacon.

If any mystery, rite, or sacrament be effective of any spiritual blessings, then this much more, as having the prerogative and principality above every thing else. Taylor.

There is nothing in words and stiles but suitability, that makes them acceptable and effective. Glanv. Sceps. Preface.

2. Operative; active.

Nor do they speak properly who say that time consumeth all things; for time is not effective, nor are bodies destroyed by it. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. iv. c. 12.

3. Producing effects; efficient.

Whoever is an effective real cause of doing his neighbour wrong is criminal, by what instrument soever he does it. Taylor.

4. Having the power of operation; useful, as effective men in an army.

EFFE'CTIVELY. adv. [from effective.] Powerfully; with real operation.

This effectively resists the devil, and suffers us to receive no hurt from him. Taylor's Rule of living holy.

EFFE'CTLESS. adj. [from effect.] Without effect; impotent; useless; unmeaning.

I'll chop off my hands;

In bootless prayer have they been held up,

And they have serv'd me to effectless use. Shak. Tit. Andron.

EFFE'CTOR. n. s. [effector, Latin.]

1. He that produces any effect.

2. Maker; Creator.

We commemorate the creation, and pay worship to that infinite Being who was the effector of it. Derham's Phy. Theol.

EFFE'CTUAL. adj. [effe'tuel, French]

1. Productive of effects; powerful to a degree adequate to the occasion; operative; efficacious.

The reading of Scripture is effectual, as well to lay even the first foundation, as to add degrees of farther perfection, in the fear of God. Hooker, b. v. f. 22.

The communication of thy faith may become effectual, by the acknowledging of every good thing. Philem. 6.

2. Veracious; expressive of facts. A sense not in use.

Reprove my allegation, if you can;

Or else conclude my words effectual. Shakesp. Henry VI.

EFFE'CTUALLY. adv. [from effectual.] In a manner productive of the consequence intended; efficaciously.

Sometimes the sight of the altar, and decent preparations for devotion, may compose and recover the wandering mind more effectually than a sermon. South's Sermons.

This is a subject of that vast latitude, that the strength of one man will scarcely be sufficient effectually to carry it on. Woodward's Natural History.

TO EFFE'CTUATE. v. a. [effe'tuer, French.] To bring to pass; to fulfil.

He found means to acquaint himself with a nobleman, to whom discovering what he was, he found him a fit instrument to effe'tuate his desire. Sidney, b. ii.

EFFE'MINACY. n. s. [from effeminate.]

1. Admission of the qualities of a woman; softness; unmanly delicacy; mean submission.

But foul effeminacy held me yok'd

Her bond-slave: O indignity, O blot

To honour and religion!

2. Lasciviousness; loose pleasure.

So long as idleness is quite shut out from our lives, all the sins of wantonness, softness, and effeminacy are prevented. Tayl.

EFFE'MINATE. adj. [effeminatus, Latin.]

1. Having the qualities of a woman; womanish; soft to an unmanly degree; voluptuous; tender; luxurious.

After the slaughter of so many peers,

Shall we at last conclude effeminate peace? Shak. Henry VI.

The king, by his voluptuous life and mean marriage, became effeminate, and less sensible of honour. Bacon's Hen. VII.

From man's effeminate slackness it begins,

Who should better hold his place.

Milton.

The more effeminate and soft his life,

The more his fame to struggle to the field. Dryd. Don Seb.

2. Womanlike; soft without reproach: a sense not in use.

As well we know your tenderness of heart,

And gentle, kind, effeminate remorse. Shakespeare's R. III.

TO EFFE'MINATE. v. a. [effemino, Latin.] To make womanish; to weaken; to emasculate; to unman.

When one is sure it will not corrupt or effeminate childrens minds, and make them fond of trifles, I think all things should be contrived to their satisfaction. Locke.

TO EFFE'MINATE. v. n. To grow womanish; to soften; to melt into weakness.

EFF

In a slothful peace both courage will effeminate and manners corrupt. Pope.

EFFE'MINATION. n. s. [from effeminate.] The state of one grown womanish; the state of one emasculated or unmanned.

Vices it figured; not only feneration, or usury, from its fecundity and superfetation, but from this mixture of sexes, degenerate effemination. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. iii. c. 17.

TO EFFE'RVESCE. v. n. [effervesco, Latin.] To generate heat by intestine motion.

The compound spirit of nitre, put to oil of cloves, will effervesce even to a flame. Mead on Poisons.

EFFE'RVESCENCE. n. s. [from efferveo, Latin.] The act of growing hot; production of heat by intestine motion.

In the chymical sense, effervescence signifies an intestine motion, produced by mixing two bodies together that lay at rest before; attended sometimes with a hissing noise, frothing, and ebullition. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

Take chalk, ignite it in a crucible, and then powder it: put it into strong spirit of nitre, 'till it becomes sweetish, and makes no effervescence upon the injection of the chalk. Grew.

Hot springs do not owe their heat to any colluctation or effervescence of the minerals in them, but to subterranean heat or fire. Woodward's Natural History, p. iii.

EFFE'TE. adj. [effætus, Latin.]

1. Barren; disabled from generation.

It is probable that females have in them the seeds of all the young they will afterwards bring forth, which, all spent and exhausted, the animal becomes barren and effete. Ray.

In most countries the earth would be so parched and effete by the drought, that it would afford but one harvest. Bentley.

2. Worn out with age.

All that can be allowed him now, is to refresh his decrepit, effete sensuality with the history of his former life. South.

EFFICA'CIOUS. adj. [efficax, Latin.] Productive of effects; powerful to produce the consequence intended.

A glowing drop with hollow'd steel

He takes, and by one efficacious breath

Dilates to cube or square.

Phillips.

EFFICA'CIOUSLY. adv. [from efficacious.] Effectually; in such a manner as to produce the consequence desired.

If we find that any other body strikes efficaciously enough upon it, we cannot doubt but it will move that way which the striking body impels it. Digby on Bodies.

EFFICACY. n. s. [from efficax, Latin.] Power to produce effects; production of the consequence intended.

Whatsoever is spoken concerning the efficacy or necessity of God's word, the same they tie and restrain only unto sermons. Hooker, b. v. f. 21.

Whether if they had tasted the tree of life before that of good and evil, they had suffered the curse of mortality; or whether the efficacy of the one had not overpowered the penalty of the other, we leave it unto God. Brown's Vulg. Err.

Efficacy is a power of speech which represents a thing, by presenting to our minds the lively ideas or forms of things. Peacham on Drawing.

The apostle tells us of the success and efficacy of the Gospel upon the minds of men; and, for this reason, he calls it the power of God unto salvation. Tillotson's Sermons.

The arguments drawn from the goodness of God have a prevailing efficacy to induce men to repent. Rogers, Sermon 16.

EFFI'CIENCE. } n. s. [from efficio, Latin.] The act of pro-

EFFI'CIENCY. } ducing effects; agency.

The manner of this divine efficiency being far above us, we are no more able to conceive by our reason, than creatures unreasonable by their sense are able to apprehend after what manner we dispose and order the course of our affairs. Hooker, b. i.

That they are carried by the manuduction of a rule, is evident; but what that regulating efficiency should be, is not easily determined. Glanv. Sceps. c. iv.

Sinning against conscience has no special productive efficiency of this particular sort of sinning, more than of any other. South's Sermons.

A pious will is the means to enlighten the understanding in the truth of Christianity, upon the account of a natural efficiency: a will so disposed, will engage the mind in a severe search. South's Sermons.

Gravity does not proceed from the efficiency of any contingent and unstable agents; but stands on a basis more firm, being entirely owing to the direct concurrence of the power of the Author of nature. Woodward's Natural History.

EFFI'CIENT. n. s. [efficius, Latin.]

1. The cause which makes effects to be what they are.

God, which moveth meer natural agents as an efficient only, doth otherwise move intellectual creatures, and especially his holy angels. Hooker, b. i. f. 3.

2. He that makes; the effector.

Observations of the order of nature are of use to carry the mind up to the admiration of the great efficient of the world. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

EFFI'CIENT. adj. Causing effects; that which makes the effect to be what it is.

Your

Your answering in the final cause, makes me believe you are at a loss for the efficient. Collier on Thought.

TO EFFIGIATE. v. a. [effigio, Latin.] To form in semblance; to image.

EFFIGIATION. n. f. [from effigiate.] The act of imaging; or forming the resemblance of things or persons. Dict.

EFFIGIES. } n. f. [effigies, Latin.] Resemblance; image in EFFIGY. } painting or sculpture; representation; idea.

We behold the species of eloquence in our minds, the effigies or actual image of which we seek in the organs of our hearing. Dryden's Dufresnoy, Preface.

EFFLORESCENCE. } n. f. [effloresco, Latin.]
EFFLORESCENCY. }

1. Production of flowers.
Where there is less heat, there the spirit of the plant is digested, and seved from the grosser juice in efflorescence. Bac.
2. Excrescencies in the form of flowers.
Two white sparry incrustations, with efflorescencies in form of shrubs, formed by the trickling of water. Woodward.
3. [In physick.] The breaking out of some humours in the skin; as in the measles, and the like. Quincy.
A wart beginneth in the cutis, and seemeth to be an efflorescence of the serum of the blood. Wiseman's Surgery.

EFFLORESCENT. adj. [effloresco, Lat.] Shooting out in form of flowers.
Yellowish efflorescent sparry incrustations on stone. Woodw.

EFFLUENCE. n. f. [effluo, Latin.] That which issues from some other principle.
Bright effluence of bright essence increate. Milt. P. Lost.
From the bright effluence of his deed
They borrow that reflected light,
With which the lasting lamp they feed,
Whose beams dispel the damps of envious night. Prior.

EFFLUVIA. } n. f. [from effluo, Latin.] Those small particles
EFFLUVIUM. } which are continually flying off from bodies; the subtilty and fineness of which appears from their being able, a long time together, to produce very sensible effects, without any sensible diminution of the body from whence they arise. Quincy.
If the earth were an electric body, and the air but the effluvium thereof, we might perhaps believe that from attraction, and by effluxion, bodies tended to the earth. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. ii. c. 2.

Neither the earth's diurnal revolution upon its axis, nor any magnetick effluvia of the earth, nor the air, or atmosphere which environs the earth, can produce gravity. Woodward.
If these effluvia, which do upward tend,
Because less heavy than the air, ascend;
Why do they ever from their height retreat,
And why return to seek their central seat? Blackm. Creat.

EFFLUX. n. f. [effluxus, Latin.]

1. The act of flowing out.
Through the daily and copious efflux of matter through the orifice of a deep ulcer in his thigh, he was reduced to a skeleton. Harvey on Consumptions.
2. Effusion.
The first efflux of mens piety, after receiving of the faith, was the selling and consecrating their possessions. Hammond.
3. That which flows from something else; emanation.
Prime chearer, light!
Of all material beings, first and best!
Efflux divine! Thomson's Summer, l. 80.

TO EFFLU'X. v. n. [effluo, Latin.] To run out; to flow away.
Five thousand and some odd centuries of years are effluxed since the creation. Boyle's Seraphick Love.

EFFLU'XION. n. f. [effluxum, Latin.]

1. The act of flowing out
By effluxion and attraction bodies tend towards the earth. Brown.
2. That which flows out; effluvium; emanation.
There are some light effluxions from spirit to spirit, when men are one with another; as from body to body. Bacon.

TO EFFORCE. v. a. [efforcer, French.]

1. To force; to break through by violence.
In all that room was nothing to be seen,
But huge great iron chests and coffers strong,
All barr'd with double bonds, that ne'er could ween
Them to efforce by violence or wrong. Fairy Queen, b. ii.
2. To force; to ravish; to violate by force.
Then 'gan her beauty shine as brightest sky,
And burnt his beastly heart t' efforce her chastity. Fa. Qu.

TO EFFORM. n. f. [efformo, Latin.] To make in any certain manner; to shape; to fashion.
Merciful and gracious, thou gavest us being, raising us from nothing, and efforming us after thy own image. Taylor.

EFFORMATION. n. f. [from efform.] The act of fashioning or giving form to.
They pretend to solve phænomena, and to give an account of the production and efformation of the universe. Ray.
Nature begins to set upon her work of efformation. More.

EFFO'RT. n. f. [effort, French.] Struggle; laborious endeavour.
If, after having gained victories, we had made the same efforts as if we had lost them, France could not have withstood us. Addison on the State of the War.
Though the same sun, with all diffusive rays,
Blush in the rose, and in the diamond blaze,
We prize the stronger effort of his pow'r;
And always set the gem above the flow'r. Pope, Epist. 1.

EFFO'SSION. n. f. [effusio, Latin.] The act of digging up from the ground; deterration.
He set apart annual sums for the recovery of manuscripts, the effossion of coins, and the procuring of mummies. Arbutn.

EFFRA'IBLE. adj. [effroyable, French.] Dreadful; frightful; terrible. A word not used.
Pestilential symptoms declare nothing a proportionate efficient of their effraiable nature, but arsenical fumes. Harvey.

E'FFRONTERY. n. f. [effronterie, Fr.] Impudence; shamelessness; contempt of reproach.
They could hardly contain themselves within one unworthy act, who had effrontery enough to commit or countenance it. King Charles.
Others with ignorance and insufficiency have self-admiration and effrontery to set up themselves. Watts's Improv.
A bold man's effrontery, in company with women, must be owing to his low opinion of them, and his high one of himself. Clarissa.

EFFU'LGENCE. n. f. [effulgeo, Latin.] Lustre; brightness; clarity; splendor.
On thee
Impress'd, th' effulgence of his glory abides. Milt. Pa. Lost.
Thy lustre, blest effulgence, can dispel
The clouds of error, and the gloom of hell. Blackmore.

EFFU'LGENT. adj. [effulgens, Latin.] Shining; bright; luminous.
How soon th' effulgent emanations fly
Through the blue gulph of interposing sky! Blackmore.
The downward sun
Looks out effulgent, from amid' the flash
Of broken clouds. Thomson's Spring, l. 185.

EFFU'MABILITY. n. f. [fumus, Latin.] The quality of flying away, or vapouring in fumes.
They seem to define mercury by volatility, or, if I may coin such a word, effumability. Boyle's Scept. Chym.

TO EFFU'SE. v. a. [effusus, Latin.] To pour out; to spill; to shed.
He fell, and, deadly pale,
Groan'd out his soul, with gushing blood effus'd. Milton.
At last emerging from his nostrils wide,
And gushing mouth, effus'd the briny tide. Pope's Odyssey.

EFFU'SE. n. f. [from the verb.] WASTE; effusion.
The air hath got into my deadly wounds,
And much effuse of blood doth make me faint. Shak. H. VI.

EFFU'SION. n. f. [effusio, Latin.]

1. The act of pouring out.
My heart hath melted at a lady's tears,
Being an ordinary inundation;
But this effusion of such manly drops,
This show'r, blown up by tempest of the soul,
Startles mine eyes, and makes me more amaz'd. Shakesp.
Our blessed Lord commanded the representation of his death, and sacrifice on the cross, should be made by breaking bread and effusion of wine. Taylor's Worthy Communicant.
If the flood-gates of heaven were any thing distinct from the forty days rain, their effusion, 'tis likely, was at this same time when the abyfs was broken open. Burnet's The. of Earth.
2. WASTE; the act of spilling or shedding.
When there was but as yet one only family in the world, no means of instruction, human or divine, could prevent effusion of blood. Hooker, b. i. f. 10.
Stop effusion of our Christian blood,
And 'stablish quietness. Shakesp. Henry VI.
Yet shall she be restor'd, since publick good
For private int'rest ought not be withstood,
To save th' effusion of my people's blood. Dryd. Homer.
3. The act of pouring out words.
Endless and senseless effusions of indigested prayers, often times disgrace, in most unsufferable manner, the worthiest part of Christian duty towards God. Hooker, b. v. f. 26.
4. Bounteous donation.
Such great force the gospel of Christ had then upon mens souls, melting them into that liberal effusion of all that they had. Hammond on Fundamentals.
5. The thing poured out.
Purge me with the blood of my redeemer, and I shall be clean; wash me with that precious effusion, and I shall be whiter than snow. King Charles.

EFFU'SIVE. adj. [from effuse.] Pouring out; dispersing.
The North-east spends its rage; and now shut up Within its iron caves, th' effusive South
Warms the wide air. Thomson's Spring, l. 145.

EFT. n. f. [efeta, Saxon.] A newt; an evet; a small kind of lizard that lives generally in the water.

Peacocks are beneficial to the places where they are kept, by clearing of them from snakes, adders and efes, upon which they will live. Mortimer's Husbandry.

The crocodile of Egypt is the lizard of Italy, and the eft in our country. Nichols.

EFT. adv. [eft, Saxon.] Soon; quickly; speedily; shortly.

Eft through the thick they heard one rudely rush,

With noise whereof he from his lofty steed

Down fell to ground, and crept into a bush,

To hide his coward head from dying dread. Fairy Queen.

Quite consumed with flame,

The idol is of that eternal maid;

For so at least I have preserv'd the same,

With hands profane, from being eft betray'd. Fairfax, b. ii.

EFTSOONS. adv. [eft and soon.] Soon afterwards; in a short time; again. An obsolete word.

He in their stead eftsoons placed Englishmen, who possessed all their lands. Spenser's State of Ireland.

Eftsoons the nymphs, which now had flowers their fill,

Run all in haste to see that silver brood. Spenser's Epithalam.

The Germans deadly hated the Turks, whereof it was to be thought that new wars would eftsoons ensue. Knolles's History.

Eftsoons, O sweetheart kind, my love repay,

And all the year shall then be holiday. Gay's Pastorals.

E. G. [exempli gratia.] For the sake of an instance or example.

E'GER. n. f. [See EAGER.] An impetuous and irregular flood or tide.

From the peculiar disposition of the earth at the bottom, wherein quick excitations are made, may arise those egers and flows in some estuaries and rivers; as is observable about Trent and Humber in England. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

TO EGE'ST. v. a. [egero, Latin.] To throw out food at the natural vents.

Divers creatures sleep all the Winter; as the bear, the hedgehog, the bat, and the bee: these all wax fat when they sleep, and egest not. Bacon's Natural History, No. 899.

EGE'STION. n. f. [egestus, Latin.] The act of throwing out the digested food at the natural vents.

The animal soul or spirits manage as well their spontaneous actions as the natural or involuntary exertions of digestion, egestion, and circulation. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

EGG. n. f. [æg, Saxon; ough, Erse.]

1. That which is laid by feathered animals, from which their young is produced.

An egg was found, having lain many years at the bottom of a moat, where the earth had somewhat overgrown it; and this egg was come to the hardness of a stone, and the colours of the white and yolk perfect. Bacon's Natural Hist.

Eggs are perhaps the highest, most nourishing, and exalted of all animal food, and most indigestible. Arbuthnot on Diet.

2. The spawn or sperm of other creatures.

Therefore think him as the serpent's egg,

Which, hatch'd, would, as his kind, grow mischievous. Sh.

Ev'ry insect of each different kind,

In its own egg, chear'd by the solar rays,

Organs involv'd and latent life displays. Blackmore's Creation.

3. Any thing fashioned in the shape of an egg.

There was taken a great glass-bubble with a long neck, such as chemists are wont to call a philosophical egg. Boyle.

TO EGG. v. a. [eggia, to incite, Islandick; eggian, Saxon.] To incite; to instigate; to provoke to action.

Study becomes pleasant to him who is pursuing his genius, and whose ardour of inclination eggs him forward, and carrieth him through every obstacle. Derham's Physico-Theology.

E'GLANTINE. n. f. [eglantier, French.] A species of rose. See ROSE.

O'er canopied with luscious woodbine,

With sweet musk roses, and with eglantine. Shakespeare.

The leaf of eglantine, not to slander,

Outsweeten'd not thy breath. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

Sycamores with eglantine were spread,

A hedge about the sides, a covering over head. Dryden.

E'GOTISM. n. f. [from ego, Latin.] The fault committed in writing by the frequent repetition of the word ego, or I; too frequent mention of a man's self, in writing or conversation.

The most violent egotism which I have met with, in the course of my reading, is that of cardinal Wolfey's; ego & rex meus, I and my king. Spectator, No. 562.

E'GOTIST. n. f. [from ego.] One that is always repeating the word ego, I; a talker of himself.

A tribe of egotists, for whom I have always had a mortal aversion, are the authors of memoirs, who are never mentioned in any works but their own. Spectator, No. 562.

TO E'GOTIZE. v. n. [from ego.] To talk much of one's self.

EGRE'GIOUS. adj. [egregius, Latin.]

1. Eminent; remarkable; extraordinary.

He might be able to adorn this present age, and furnish history with the records of egregious exploits, both of art and valour. More's Antidote against Atheism.

One to empire born;

Egregious prince! whose manly childhood shew'd

His mingled parents, and portended joy

Unspeakable. Phillips.

2. Eminently bad; remarkably vicious. This is the usual sense.

We may be bold to conclude, that these last times, for insolence, pride and egregious contempt of all good order, are the worst. Hooker, Preface.

Ah me, most credulous fool!

Egregious murderer!

Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

And hence th' egregious wizzard shall foredoom

The fate of Louis, and the fall of Rome Pope.

EGRE'GIOUSLY. adv. [from egregious.] Eminently; shamefully.

Make the more thank me, love me, and reward me,

For making him egregiously an ass,

And practising upon his peace and quiet,

Even to madness. Shakespeare's Othello.

He discovered that, besides the extravagance of every article, he had been egregiously cheated. Arbuthnot's John Bull.

E'GRESS. n. f. [egressus, Latin.] The act of going out of any place; departure.

And gates of burning adamant,

Barr'd over us, prohibit all egress. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ii.

This water would have been locked up within the earth, and its egress utterly debarred, had the strata of stone and marble remained continuous. Woodward's Natural History.

EGRE'SSION. n. f. [egressio, Latin.] The act of going out.

The vast number of troops is expressed in the swarms; their tumultuous manner of issuing out of their ships, and the perpetual egression, which seemed without end, are imaged in the bees pouring out. Notes on the Iliads.

E'GRET. n. f. A fowl of the heron kind, with red legs. Bailey.

E'GRIOT. n. f. [aigret, French; perhaps from aigre, sour.] A species of cherry.

The cœur-cherry, which inclineth more to white, is sweeter than the red; but the egriot is more sour. Bacon.

TO EJA'ULATE. v. a. [ejaculor, Latin.] To throw; to shoot; to dart out.

Being rooted so little way in the skin, nothing near so deeply as the quills of fowls, they are the more easy ejaculated. Grew's Museum.

The mighty magnet from the center darts

This strong, though subtle force, through all the parts:

Its active rays, ejaculated thence,

Irradiate all the wide circumference. Blackmore's Creation.

EJA'CULATION. n. f. [from ejaculate.]

1. A short prayer darted out occasionally, without solemn retirement.

In your dressing let there be ejaculations fitted to the several actions of dressing; as at washing your hands, pray God to cleanse your soul from sin. Taylor's Guide to Devotion.

2. The act of darting or throwing out.

There seemeth to be acknowledged, in the act of envy, an ejaculation or irradiation of the eye. Bacon's Essays.

There is to be observed, in those dissolutions which will not easily incorporate, what the effects are; as the ebullition, the precipitation to the bottom, the ejaculation towards the top, the suspension in the midst, and the like. Bacon.

EJA'CATORY. adj. [from ejaculate.] Suddenly darted out; uttered in short sentences; sudden; hasty.

The continuance of this posture might incline to ease and drowsiness: they used it rather upon some short ejaculatory prayers, than in their larger devotions. Duppa's Devotion.

We are not to value ourselves upon the merit of ejaculatory repentances, that take us by fits and starts. L'Estrange.

TO EJE'CT. v. a. [ejicio ejectionem, Latin.]

1. To throw out; to cast forth; to void.

Infernal lightning sallies from his throat!

Ejected sparks upon the billows float!

Sandys.

The heart, as said, from its contracted cave,

On the left side ejects the bounding wave. Blackm. Creation.

Tears may spoil the eyes, but not wash away the affliction; sighs may exhaust the man, but not eject the burthen. South.

2. To throw out or expel from an office or possession.

It was the force of conquest; force with force

Is well ejected, when the conquer'd can. Milton's Agonistes.

The French king was again ejected when our king submitted to the church. Dryden's Preface to Rel. Laici.

3. To expel; to drive away; to dismiss with hatred.

We are peremptory to dispatch

This viperous traitor; to eject him hence,

Were but our danger; and to keep him here,

Our certain death; therefore it is decreed

He dies to-night. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

4. To cast away; to reject.

To have ejected whatsoever the church doth make account of, be it never so harmless in itself, and of never so ancient continuance, without any other crime to charge it with, than only that it hath been the hap thereof to be used by the church of Rome, and not to be commanded in the word of God, could not have been defended. Hooker.

Will any man say, that if the words whoring and drinking were by parliament ejected out of the English tongue, we should all awake next morning chaste and temperate? Swift.

EJECTION n. f. [ejectio, Latin.]

1. The act of casting out; expulsion.

These stories are founded on the ejection of the fallen angels from heaven.

2. [in phylick] The discharge of any thing by vomit, stool, or any other emunctory.

EJECTMENT n. f. [from eject.] A legal writ by which any inhabitant of a house, or tenant of an estate, is commanded to depart.

EIGH interj. An expression of sudden delight.

EIGHT adj. [eahtra, Saxon; alta, Gothick; acht, Scottish.] Twice four. A word of number.

This island contains eight score and eight miles in circuit.

EIGHTH adj. [from eight.] Next in order to the seventh; the ordinal of eight.

Another yet?—A seventh! I'll see no more;

And yet the eighth appears! Shakespeare's Macbeth.

In the eighth month should be the reign of Saturn. Bacon.

I stay reluctant seven continu'd years,

And water her ambrosial couch with tears;

The eighth, she voluntary moves to part,

Or urg'd by Jove, or her own changeful heart. Pope's Odyssey.

EIGHTEEN adj. [eight and ten.] Twice nine.

He can't take two from twenty, for his heart,

And leave eighteen. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

If men naturally lived but twenty years, we should be satisfied if they died about eighteen; and yet eighteen years now are as long as eighteen years would be then. Taylor.

EIGHTEENTH adj. [from eighteen.] The next in order to the seventeenth; twice nine.

In the eighteenth year of Jeroboam reigned Abijam. 1 Kings.

EIGHTFOLD adj. [eight and fold.] Eight times the number or quantity.

EIGHTHLY adv. [from eighth.] In the eighth place.

Eighthly, living creatures have voluntary motion, which plants have not.

Bacon's Natural History, N<sup>o</sup>. 607.

EIGHTIETH adj. [from eighty.] The next in order to the seventyninth; eighth tenth.

Some balances are so exact as to be sensibly turned with the eightieth part of a grain.

Wilkins's Math. Magic.

EIGHTSCORE adj. [eight and score.] Eight times twenty; an hundred and sixty.

What! keep a week away? Seven days and nights?

Eightscore eight hours? And lovers absent hours,

More tedious than the dial eightscore times?

Oh weary reckoning. Shakespeare's Othello.

EIGHTY adj. [eight and ten.] Eight times ten; fourscore.

Eighty odd years of sorrow have I seen,

And each hour's joy wreck'd with a week of teen. Shakespeare.

Among all other climactericks three are most remarkable;

that is, seven times seven, or fortynine; nine times nine, or eightyone; and seven times nine, or the year sixtythree, which is conceived to carry with it the most considerable fatality. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iv. c. 12.

EIGNE adj. [aïsne, Fr.] [In law.] Denotes the eldest or first born. Here it signifies unalienable, as being entailed.

Many assurances do also pass to godly and charitable uses alone; and it happeneth not seldom, that, to avoid the yearly oath, for averment of the continuance of some estate for life, which is eigne, and not subject to forfeiture for the alienation that cometh after it, the party will offer to sue a pardon un-compelled before the time; in all which, some mitigation of the uttermost value may well and worthily be offered. Bacon.

EISEL n. f. [eorul, Saxon.] Vinegar; verjuice; any acid.

Woo't drink up eisel, eat a crocodile?

I'll do't. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

EITHER pron. [æðen, Saxon; auter, Scottish.]

1. Which soever of the two; whether one or the other.

Lepidus flatters both,

Of both is flatter'd; but he neither loves,

Nor either cares for him. Shakespeare's Anthony and Cleopatra.

So like in arms these champions were,

As they had been a very pair;

So that a man would almost swear,

That either had been either. Drayton's Nymph.

Goring made a fast friendship with Digby, either of them believing he could deceive the other. Clarendon, b. viii.

I do not ask whether bodies do so exist, that the motion of one body cannot really be without the motion of another: to determine this either way, is to beg the question for or against a vacuum. Locke.

2. Each; both.

In the process of natural beings, there seem some to be creatures placed, as it were, in the confines of several provinces, and participating something of either. Hale.

Sev'n times the sun has either tropick view'd,

The Winter banish'd, and the Spring renew'd. Dryd. Virg.

EITHER adv. [from the noun.] A distributive adverb, answered by or; either the one or.

We never heard of any ship that had been seen to arrive upon any shore of Europe; no nor of either the East or West Indies.

Bacon's New Atlantis.

What perils shall we find,

If either place, or time, or other course,

Cause us to alter th' order now assign'd? Daniel's C. War.

Either your brethren have miserably deceived us, or power confers virtue.

Swift to Pope.

EJULATION n. f. [ejulatio, Latin.] Outcry; lamentation; moan; wailing.

Instead of hymns and praises, he breaks out into ejulations and effeminate wailings.

Government of the Tongue.

With dismal groans

And ejulation, in the pangs of death,

Some call for aid neglected; some, o'erturn'd

In the fierce shock, lie gasping.

Phillips.

EKE adv. [eac, Saxon; ook, Dutch.] Also; likewise; beside; moreover.

If any strength we have, it is to ill;

But all the good is God's, both power and eke will. Fa. Qu.

Now if 'tis chiefly in the heart

That courage does itself exert,

'Twill be prodigious hard to prove,

That this is eke the throne of love.

Prior.

To EKE v. a. [eacan, Saxon.]

1. To increase.

I dempt there much to have eked my store,

But such eking hath made my heart sore. Spenser's Pastorals.

The little strength that I have, I would it were with you.

—And mine to eke out her's. Shakespeare. As you like it.

2. To supply; to fill up deficiencies.

Still be kind,

And eke out our performance with your mind. Shak. H. V.

Your ornaments hung all,

On some patch'd doghole ek'd with ends of wall. Pope.

3. To protract; to lengthen.

I speak too long; but 'tis to piece the time,

To eke it, and to draw it out in length,

To stay you from election. Shakespeare. Merchant of Venice.

4. To spin out by useless additions. [In this sense it seems borrowed from the use of our old poets, who put eke into their lines, when they wanted a syllable.]

Eusden ekes out Blackmore's endless line. Pope's Dunciad.

To ELABORATE v. a. [elaboro, Latin.]

1. To produce with labour.

They in full joy elaborate a sigh.

Young.

2. To heighten and improve by successive endeavours or operations.

The sap is diversified, and still more and more elaborated and exalted, as it circulates through the vessels of the plant.

Arbuthnot on Aliments.

ELABORATE adj. [elaboratus, Latin.] Finished with great diligence; performed with great labour.

Formalities of extraordinary zeal and piety are never more studied and elaborate than when politicians most agitate desperate designs.

King Charles.

At least, on her bestow'd

Too much of ornament, of outward shew

Elaborate; of inward, less exact. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Man is thy theme, his virtue or his rage

Drawn to the life in each elab'rate page. Waller.

Consider the difference between elaborate discourses upon important occasions, delivered to parliaments, and a plain sermon intended for the lower people.

Swift.

ELABORATELY adv. [from elaborate.] Laboriously; diligently; with great study or labour.

Politick conceptions so elaborately formed and wrought, and grown at length ripe for delivery, do yet prove abortive South.

Some coloured powders, which painters use, may have their colours a little changed, by being very elaborately and finely ground. Newton's Opt.

I will venture once to incur the censure of some persons, for being elaborately trifling. Bentley's Sermons.

It is there elaborately shewn, that patents are good. Swift.

ELABORATION n. f. [from elaborate.] Improvement by successive operations.

To what purpose is there such an apparatus of vessels for the elaboration of the sperm and eggs; such a tedious process of generation and nutrition? This is but an idle pomp. Ray.

To ELA'NCE v. a. [elancer, French.] To throw out; to dart; to cast as a dart.

While thy unerring hand elanc'd

Another, and another dart, the people

Joyfully repeated Io!

Prior.

Harsh words, that, once elanc'd, must ever fly

Irrevocable.

Prior.

To ELAPSE v. n. [elapsus, Latin.] To pass away; to glide away; to run out without notice.

There is a docible season, a learning time in youth, which, suffered to elapse, and no foundation laid, seldom returns. Clariff.

ELASTICAL.

ELD

ELA'STICAL. } adj. [from elast.] Having the power of re-
ELA'STICK. } turning to the form from which it is distorted or withheld; springy; having the power of a spring.

By what elastick engines did she rear

The starry roof, and roll the orbs in air. Blackm. Creation.

If the body is compact, and bends or yields inward to pression, without any sliding of its parts, it is hard and elastick, returning to its figure with a force rising from the mutual attraction of its parts. Newton's Opt.

The most common diversities of human constitutions arise from the solids, as to their different degrees of strength and tension; in some being too lax and weak, in others too elastick and strong. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

A fermentation must be excited in some assignable place, which may expand itself by its elastical power, and break through, where it meets with the weakest resistance. Bentley.

ELASTICITY. n. f. [from elastick.] Force in bodies, by which they endeavour to restore themselves to the posture from whence they were displaced by any external force. Quincy.

A lute string will bear a hundred weight without rupture;
but, at the same time, cannot exert its elasticity: take away fifty, and immediately it raiseth the weight. Arbuthn. on Alim.

Me emptiness and dulness could inspire,

And were my elasticity and fire. Pope's Dunciad, b. i.

ELATE. adj. [elatus, Latin] Flushed with success; elevated with prosperity; lofty; haughty.

Oh, thoughtless mortals! ever blind to fate!

Too soon dejected, and too soon elate! Pope's Ra. of Lock.

I, of mind elate, and scorning fear,

Thus with new taunts insult the monster's ear. Pope's Odyss.

TO ELATE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To elevate with success; to puff up with prosperity.

2. To exult; to heighten. An unusual sense.

Or truth, divinely breaking on his mind,

Elates his being, and unfolds his power. Thomson's Autumn.

ELATERIUM. n. f. [Latin.] An inspissated juice, in fragments of flat and thin cakes, seldom thicker than a shilling.
It is light, of a friable texture; a pale, dead, whitish colour, and an acrid and pungent taste. It is procured from the fruit of the wild cucumber; the seeds of which swim in a large quantity of an acrid and almost caustick liquor. It is a very violent and rough purge. Hill.

ELATION. n. f. [from elate.] Haughtiness proceeding from success; pride of prosperity.

God began to punish this vain elation of mind, by withdrawing his favours. Atterbury's Sermons.

ELBOW. n. f. [elboga, Saxon.]

1. The next joint or curvature of the arm below the shoulder.

In some fair evening, on your elbow laid,

You dream of triumphs in the rural shade. Pope.

2. Any flexure, or angle.

Fruit-trees, or vines, set upon a wall between elbows or buttresses of stone, ripen more than upon a plain wall. Bacon.

3. To be at the ELBOW. To be near; to be at hand.

Here stand behind this bulk. Straight will he come:

Wear thy good rapier bare, and put it home:

Quick, quick; fear nothing, I'll be at thy elbow. Shak. Othel.

ELBOWCHAIR. n. f. [elbow and chair.] A chair with arms to support the elbows.

Swans and elbowchairs, in the opera of Dioclesian, have danced upon the English stage with good success. Gay.

ELBOWROOM. n. f. [elbow and room.] Room to stretch out the elbows on each side; perfect freedom from confinement.

Now my soul hath elbowroom;

It would not out at windows nor at doors. Shakespeare.

The natives are not so many, but that there may be elbow- room enough for them, and for the adventives also. Bacon.

A politician must put himself into a state of liberty, so to provide elbowroom for his conscience to have its full play in.

South's Sermons.

TO ELBOW. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To push with the elbow.

One elbows him, one jostles in the shole. Dryden's Juven.

2. To push; to drive to distance; to encroach upon.

It thrusts and stretches out,

And elbows all the kingdoms round about. Dryden.

If fortune takes not off this boy betimes,

He'll make mad work, and elbow all his neighbours. Dryden.

TO ELBOW. v. n. To jut out in angles. Dict.

ELD. n. f. [ealb, Saxon; eld, Scottish.]

1. Old age; decrepitude.

Her heart with joy unwonted inly swel'd,

As feeling wond'rous comfort in her weaker eld. Fa. Queen:

2. Old people; persons worn out with years.

Thy blazed youth

Becomes assuaged, and doth beg the alms

Of palsied eld. Shakespeare's Measure for Measure.

He thought it touch'd his deity full near,

If likewise he some fair one wedded not,

Thereby to wipe away th' infamous blot

Of long uncoupled bed and childless eld. Milton.

ELD

E'LDER. adj. The comparative of eld, now corrupted to eld.
ealb, ealbon, Saxon.] Surpassing another in years; survivor;
having the privileges of primogeniture.

They bring the comparison of younger daughters conforming themselves in attire to the example of their elder sisters.

Hooker, b. iv. f. 13.

Let still the woman take

An elder than herself; so wears she to him,

So sways she level in her husband's heart. Sh. Twelfth Night.

How I firmly am resolv'd, you know;

That is, not to bestow my youngest daughter,

Before I have a husband for the elder. Sh. Tam. of the Shrew.

The elder of his children comes to acquire a degree of authority among the younger, by the same means the father did among them. Temple.

Fame's high temple stands;

Stupendous pile! not rear'd by mortal hands!

Whate'er proud Rome, or artful Greece beheld,

Or elder Babylon, its frame excell'd. Pope's Temp. of Fame.

E'LDERS. n. f. [from elder.]

1. Persons whose age gives them a claim to credit and reverence.

Rebuke not an elder, but intreat him as a father, and the younger men as brethren. 1 Tim. v. 1.

Our elders say,

The barren, touched in this holy chafe,

Shake off their steril curse. Shakespeare's Julius Caesar.

Among the Lacedæmonians, the chief magistrates, as they were, so they are called, elder men. Raleigh's H. of the World.

The blushing youth their virtuous awe disclose,

And from their seats the reverend elders rose. Sandys.

2. Ancestors.

Says the goose, if it will be no better, e'en carry your head as your elders have done before ye. L'Estrange.

I lose my patience, and I own it too,

Where works are censur'd, not as bad, but new;

While, if our elders break all reason's laws,

Those fools demand not pardon, but applause. Pope.

3. Those who are older than others.

At the board, and in private, it very well becometh children's innocency to pray, and their elders to say amen. Hooker.

4. [Among the Jews.] Rulers of the people.

5. [In the New Testament.] Ecclesiasticks.

6. [Among presbyterians.] Laymen introduced into the kirk-polity in sessions, presbyteries, synods and assemblies.

Flea-bitten synod, an assembly brew'd

Of clerks and elders ana; like the rude

Chaos of presbytry, where laymen ride

With the tame woolpack clergy by their side. Cleaveland.

E'LDER. n. f. [ellara, Saxon.] The name of a tree.

The branches are full of pith, having but little wood: the flowers are monopetalous, divided into several segments, and expand in form of a rose: these are, for the most part, collected into an umbel, and are succeeded by soft succulent berries, having three seeds in each. It may be easily propagated from cuttings or seeds; but the former, being the most expeditious method, is generally practised. The season for planting their cuttings is any time from September to March, thrusting them six or eight inches into the ground. Dwarf elder is near London propagated for medicinal use. Miller.

Look for thy reward

Amongst the nettles at the elder tree,

Which overshades the mouth of that same pit. Sh. Tit. And.

Then seek the bank where flowering elders crowd. Thom.

E'LDERLY. adj. [from elder.] No longer young; bordering upon old age.

I have a race of orderly elderly people of both sexes at command, who can bawl when I am deaf, and tread softly when I am giddy. Swift to Pope.

E'LDERSHIP. n. f. [from elder.]

1. Seniority; primogeniture.

That all should Alibech adore, 'tis true;

But some respect is to my birthright due:

My claim to her by eldership I prove. Dryden's Ind. Emp.

Nor were the eldership

Of Artaxerxes worth our least of fears,

If Memnon's interest did not prop his cause. Rowe.

2. Presbytery; ecclesiastical senate; kirk-session.

Here were the seeds sown of that controversy which sprang up between Beza and Erastus, about the matter of excom-munications; whether there ought to be in all churches an eldership, having power to excommunicate, and a part of that eldership to be of necessity certain chosen out from amongst the laity for that purpose. Hooker, Preface.

E'LDDEST. adj. The superlative of eld, now changed to old.
[ealb, ealbon, ealbyrte, Saxon.]

1. The oldest; the child that has the right of primogeniture.

We will establish our estate upon

Our eldest Malcolm, whom we name hereafter

The prince of Cumberland. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

The mother's and her eldest daughter's grace,

It seems, had brib'd him to prolong their space. Dryden.

2. The

2. The person that has lived most years.
Eldest parents signifies either the oldest men and women that have had children, or those who have longest had issue. Locke.

ELECAMPANE. n. f. [belenium, Latin.] A plant, named also starwort.

It hath a radiated flower, whose florets are hermaphrodite; but the semi-florets are female: both these are yellow. The ovaries rest on a naked placenta, crowned with down: all these parts are included in a scaly cup. To these notes may be added, the leaves growing alternately on the stalks, and the flowers on the top of the branches. Botanists enumerate thirty species of this plant. The first is the true elecampane, used in medicines: it grows wild in most fields and meadows, and is cultivated in gardens, to furnish the shops with roots, which is the only part of the plant in use. Miller.

The Germans have a method of candying elecampane root like ginger, to which they prefer it, and call it German spice. Hill's Mat. Med.

To ELE'CT. v. a. [electus, Latin.]

1. To choose for any office or use; to take in preference to others.

Henry his son is chosen king, though young;
 And Lewis of France, elect first, beguil'd. Dan. C. War.
 This prince, in gratitude to the people, by whose consent he was chosen, *elect*ed a hundred senators out of the commons. Swift on the Dissensions in Athens and Rome.

2. [In theology.] To select as an object of eternal mercy.

Some I have chosen of peculiar grace,
Elect above the rest: so is my will. Milton's Paradise Lost.

ELE'CT. adj. [from the verb.]

1. Chosen; taken by preference from among others.

You have here, lady,
 And of your choice, these reverend fathers,
 Of singular integrity and learning;
 Yea, the elect of the land, who are assembl'd
 To plead your cause. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

2. Chosen to an office, not yet in possession.

The bishop elect takes the oaths of supremacy, canonical obedience, and against simony; and then the dean of the arches reads and subscribes the sentences. Ayliffe's Parergon.

3. [In theology.] Chosen as an object of eternal mercy.

A vicious liver, believing that Christ died for none but the elect, shall have attempts made upon him to reform and amend his life. Hammond.

ELE'CTION. n. f. [electio, Latin.]

1. The act of chusing; the act of selecting one or more from a greater number for any use or office; choice.

If the election of the minister should be committed to every several parish, do you think that they would chuse the meetest. Whitgift.

I was sorry to hear with what partiality, and popular heat, elections were carried in many places. King Charles.

Him, not thy election,
 But natural necessity, begot. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x.
 As charity is, nothing can more increase the lustre and beauty than a prudent election of objects, and a fit application of it to them. Spratt's Sermons.

2. The power of choice.

For what is man without a moving mind,
 Which hath a judging wit, and chusing will!
 Now, if God's pow'r should her election bind,
 Her motions then would cease, and stand all still. Davies.

3. Voluntary preference.

He calls upon the sinners to turn themselves and live; he tells us, that he has set before us life and death, and referred it to our own election which we will chuse. Rogers's Sermons.

4. [In theology.] The predetermination of God by which any were selected for eternal life.

The conceit about absolute election to eternal life, some enthusiasts entertaining, have been made remiss in the practice of virtue. Atterbury's Sermons.

5. The ceremony of a publick choice.

Since the late dissolution of the club, many persons put up for the next election. Addison's Spectator, N<sup>o</sup>. 550.

ELE'CTIVE. adj. [from elect.] Exerting the power of choice; regulated or bestowed by election or choice.

I will say positively and resolutely, that it is impossible an elective monarchy should be so free and absolute as an hereditary. Racon.

To talk of compelling a man to be good, is a contradiction; for where there is force, there can be no choice: whereas all moral goodness consisteth in the elective act of the understanding will. Grew's Cosmol. Sac. b. iii. c. 2.

The last change of their government, from elective to hereditary, has made it seem hitherto of less force, and unfitter for action abroad. Temple.

ELE'CTIVELY. adv. [from elect.] By choice; with preference of one to another.

How or why that should have such an influence upon the spirits, as to drive them into those muscles electively, I am not subtle enough to discern. Ray on the Creation.

They work not electively, or upon proposing to themselves an end of their operations. Grew's Cosm. Sac.

ELE'CTOR. n. f. [from elect.]

1. He that has a vote in the choice of any officer.

From the new world her silver and her gold
 Came, like a tempest, to confound the old;
 Feeding with these the brib'd electors' hopes,
 Alone she gave us emperors and popes. Waller.

2. A prince who has a voice in the choice of the German emperor.

ELE'CTORAL. adj. [from elector.] Having the dignity of an elector.

ELE'CTORATE. n. f. [from elector.] The territory of an elector.

He has a great and powerful king for his son-in-law; and can himself command, when he pleases, the whole strength of an electorate in the empire. Addison's Freeholder, N<sup>o</sup>. 24.

ELE'CTRE. n. f. [electrum, Latin.]

1. Amber; which, having the quality when warmed by friction of attracting bodies, gave to one species of attraction the name of electricity, and to the bodies that so attract the epithet electric.

2. A mixed metal.

Change silver plate or vessel into the compound stuff, being a kind of silver electre, and turn the rest into coin. Bacon.

ELE'CTRICAL. } adj. [from electrum. See ELECTRE.]

ELE'CTRICK. }

1. Attractive without magnetism; attractive by a peculiar property, supposed once to belong chiefly to amber.

By electric bodies do I conceive not such only as take up light bodies, in which number the ancients only placed jett and amber; but such as, conveniently placed, attract all bodies palpable. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. ii. c. 4.

An electric body can by friction emit an exhalation so subtle, and yet so potent, as by its emission to cause no sensible diminution of the weight of the electric body, and to be expanded through a sphere, whose diameter is above two feet, and yet to be able to carry up lead, copper, or leaf-gold, at the distance of above a foot from the electric body. Newton.

2. Produced by an electric body.

If that attraction were not rather electrical than magnetic, it was wonderous what Helmont delivereth concerning a glass, wherein the magistery of loadstone was prepared, which retained an attractive quality. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

If a piece of white paper, or a white cloath, or the end of one's finger, be held at about a quarter of an inch from the glass, the electric vapour, excited by friction, will, by dashing against the white paper, cloth, or finger, be put into such an agitation as to emit light. Newton's Opt.

ELECTRI'CITY. n. f. [from electric. See ELECTRE.] A property in some bodies, whereby, when rubbed so as to grow warm, they draw little bits of paper, or such like substances, to them. Quincy.

Such was the account given a few years ago of electricity; but the industry of the present age, first excited by the experiments of Gray, has discovered in electricity a multitude of philosophical wonders. Bodies electrified by a sphere of glass, turned nimbly round, not only emit flame, but may be fitted with such a quantity of the electrical vapour, as, if discharged at once upon a human body, would endanger life. The force of this vapour has hitherto appeared instantaneous, persons at both ends of a long chain seeming to be struck at once. The philosophers are now endeavouring to intercept the strokes of lightning.

ELE'CTUARY. n. f. [electarium, Collin's Aurel. which is now written electuary.] A form of medicine made of conserves, and powders, in the consistence of honey. The form is attended with considerable inconveniencies; for electuaries, generally made up with honey, or syrup, when the consistence is too thin, are apt to ferment; and when too thick, to candy. By both which the ingredients will either be entirely altered in their nature, or impaired in their virtues. Quincy.

We meet with divers electuaries, which have no ingredient, except sugar, common to any two of them. Boyle's Sc. Chym.

ELEEMO'SYNARY. adj. [ἐλεημοσύνη.]

1. Living upon alms; depending upon charity.

It is little better than an absurdity, that the cause should be an elemosynary for its subsistence to its effects, as a nature posterior to and dependent on itself. Glanv. Sceps. c. 18.

2. Given in charity.

ELEGA'NCE. } n. f. [el'gantia, Latin.] Beauty of art; ra-

ELEGA'NCY. } ther soothing than striking; beauty without grandeur.

St. Augustine, out of a kind of elegancy in writing, makes some difference. Raleigh's History of the World.

These questions have more propriety, and elegancy, understood of the old world. Burnet.

My compositions in gardening are altogether Pindarick, and run into the beautiful wildness of nature, without the nicer elegancies of art. Spectator, N<sup>o</sup>. 477.

ELEGAN'CY. adj. [elegans, Latin.]

1. Pleading with minuter beauties.

- Trifles themselves are elegant in him.
There may'st thou find some elegant retreat. Pope. London.
2. Nice; not coarse; not gross.
Polite with candour, elegant with ease. Pope.
- ELEGANTLY. adv. [from elegant.]
1. In such a manner as to please without elevation.
2. Neatly; nicely; with minute beauty.
Whoever would write elegantly, must have regard to the different turn and juncture of every period: there must be proper distances and pauses. Pope's Odyssey, Notes.
- ELEGIACK. adj. [elegiacus, Latin.]
1. Used in elegies.
2. Pertaining to elegies.
3. Mournful; sorrowful.
Let elegiack lay the woe relate,
Soft as the breath of distant flutes. Gay's Trivia.
- ELEGY. n. f. [elegus, Latin.]
1. A mournful song.
He hangs odes upon hawthorns, and elegies upon brambles, all forsooth deifying the name of Rosalind. Shak. As you like it.
2. A funeral song.
So on meanders banks, when death is nigh,
The mournful swan sings her own elegy. Dryden.
3. A short poem without points or turns.
- ELEMENT. n. f. [elementum, Latin.]
1. The first or constituent principle of any thing.
If nature should intermit her course, those principal and mother elements of the world, whereof all things in this lower world are made, should lose the qualities which now they have. Hooker, b. i. f. 3.
A man may rationally retain doubts concerning the number of those ingredients of bodies, which some call elements, and others principles. Boyle's Phys. Consider.
Simple substances are either spirits, which have no manner of composition, or the first principles of bodies, usually called elements, of which other bodies are compounded. Watts.
2. The four elements, usually so called, are earth, fire, air, water, of which our world is composed.
The king is but a man: the violet smells to him as it doth to me; and the element shews to him as it doth to me. Shakesf.
My dearest sister, fare thee well;
The elements be kind to thee, and make Thy spirits all of comfort. Shakesf. Anth. and Cleopatra.
The king,
Contending with the fretful elements,
Bids the wind blow the earth into the sea,
Or swell the curled waters. Shakespeare's King Lear.
The heavens and the earth will pass away, and the elements melt with fervent heat. Peter.
Here be four of you were able to make a good world; for you are as differing as the four elements. Bacon's Hol. War.
He from his flaming ship his children sent,
To perish in a milder element. Waller.
3. The proper habitation or sphere of any thing: as water of fish.
We are simple men; we do not know the works by charms, by spells, and such dawbry as is beyond our element. Shakesf.
Our torments may, in length of time,
Become our elements. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ii. l. 275.
They shew that they are out of their element, and that logick is none of their talent. Baker's Reflections on Learning.
4. An ingredient; a constituent part.
Who set the body and the limbs
Of this great sport together, as you guess?
—One sure that promises no element
In such a business. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.
5. The letters of any language.
6. The lowest or first rudiments of literature or science.
With religion it fareth as with other sciences; the first delivery of the elements thereof must, for like consideration, be framed according to the weak and slender capacity of young beginners. Hooker, b. v. f. 18.
Every parish should keep a petty schoolmaster, which should bring up children in the first elements of letters. Spenser on Irel.
We, when we were children, were in bondage under the elements of the world. Gal. iv. 3.
There is nothing more pernicious to a youth, in the elements of painting, than an ignorant master. Dryden's Dufresn.
- TO ELEMENT. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To compound of elements.
Whether any one such body be met with, in those said to be elemented bodies, I now question. Boyle's Scept. Chym.
2. To constitute; to make as a first principle.
Dull sublunary lover's love,
Whose soul is sense, cannot admit
Of absence, 'cause it doth remove
The thing which elemented it. Donne.
- ELEMENTAL. adj. [from element.]
1. Produced by some of the four elements.
If dusky spots are vary'd on his brow,
And streak'd with red, a troubl'd colour shew;

- That fullen mixture shall at once declare Winds, rain and storms, and elemental war. Dryden's Virg.
Soft yielding minds to water glide away,
And sip, with nymphs, their elemental tea. Pope.
2. Arising from first principles.
Leeches are by some accounted poison not properly, that is, by temperamental contrariety, occult form, or so much as elemental repugnancy; but inwardly taken, they fasten upon the veins, and occasion an effusion of blood. Brown's Vu. Err.
- ELEMENTARITY. n. f. [from elementary.] Containing the rudiments or first principles; simplicity of nature; absence of composition; being uncompounded.
A very large class of creatures in the earth, far above the condition of elementarity. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. ii. c. 1.
- ELEMENTARY. adj. [from elementary.] Uncompounded; having only one principle or constituent part.
All rain water contains in it a copious sediment of terrestrial matter, and is not a simple elementary water. Ray on the Creat.
The elementary salts of animals are not the same as they appear by distillation. Arbuthnot on Aliments.
- ELEMI. n. f.
This drug is improperly called gum elemi, being a resin. The genuine elemi is brought from Æthiopia in flattish masses, or in cylinders, of a yellowish colour. Its smell is acrid and refinous. It is very rare in Europe, and supposed to be produced by a tree of the olive kind. The spurious or American elemi, almost the only kind known, is of a whitish colour, with a greater or less tinge of a greenish or yellowish. It is of an agreeable smell, and of an acrid and bitterish taste. It proceeds from a tall tree, which the Brasilians wound at night, and in the morning collect the resin that has run out. Hill's Materia Medica.
- ELENCH. n. f. [elenchus, Latin.] An argument; a sophism.
The first delusion Satan put upon Eve, and his whole temptation might be the same elench continued, as when he said, Ye shall not die; that was, in his equivocation, you shall not incur present death. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. i. c. 4.
Discover the fallacies of our common adversary, that old sophister, who puts the most abusive elenchs on us. De. of Piety.
- ELEOTS. n. f. Some name the apples in request in the cyder countries so; not known by that name in several parts of England. Mortimer's Art of Husbandry.
- ELEPHANT. n. f. [elephas, Latin.] The largest of all quadrupeds, of whose sagacity, faithfulness, prudence, and even understanding, many surprising relations are given. This animal is not carnivorous, but feeds on hay, herbs, and all sorts of pulse; and it is said to be extremely long lived. It is naturally very gentle; but when enraged, no creature is more terrible. He is supplied with a trunk, or long hollow cartilage, like a large trumpet, which hangs between his teeth, and serves him for hands: by one blow with his trunk he will kill a camel or a horse, and will raise a prodigious weight with it. His teeth are the ivory so well known in Europe, some of which have been seen as large as a man's thigh, and a fathom in length. Wild elephants are taken with the help of a female ready for the male: she is confined to a narrow place, round which pits are dug; and these being covered with a little earth scattered over hurdles, the male elephants easily fall into the snare. In copulation the female receives the male lying upon her back; and such is his pudicity, that he never covers the female so long as any one appears in sight. Calmet.
He loves to hear,
That unicorns may be betray'd with trees,
And bears with glasses, elephants with holes. Sh. Jul. Caf.
The elephant hath joints, but not for courtesy;
His legs are for necessity, not flexure. Sh. Troil. and Cressida.
2. Ivory; the teeth of elephants.
High o'er the gate, in elephant and gold,
The crowd shall Cæsar's Indian war behold. Dryden's Virg.
- ELEPHANTIASIS. n. f. [elephantiasis, Latin.] A species of leprosy, so called from covering the skin with incrustations like those on the hide of an elephant.
- ELEPHANTINE. adj. [elephantinus, Latin.] Pertaining to the elephant.
- TO ELEVATE. v. a. [elevo, Latin.]
1. To raise up aloft.
This subterranean heat or fire, which elevates the water out of the abyfs. Woodward.
2. To exalt; to dignify.
3. To raise the mind with great conceptions.
Others apart sat on a hill retired,
In thoughts more elevate, and reason'd high
Of providence, foreknowledge, will and fate. Milt. P. L.
In all that great extent, wherein the mind wanders, in those remote speculations it may seem to be elevated with; it stirs not beyond sense or reflection. Locke.
Now rising fortune elevates his mind,
He shines unclouded, and adorns mankind. Savage.
4. To elate the mind with vicious pride.
5. To

5. To lessen by detraction. This sense, though legitimately deduced from the Latin, is not now in use.

When the judgments of learned men are alledged against you, what do they but either elevate their credit, or oppose unto them the judgments of others as learned? Hooker, b. ii.

E'LEVATE. part. adj. [from elevatus.] Exalted; raised aloft.

On each side an imperial city stood,

With tow'rs and temples proudly elevate

On seven small hills. Milton's Paradise Regain'd, b. ii.

ELEVA'TION. n. f. [elevatio, Latin.]

1. The act of raising aloft.

The disruption of the strata, the elevation of some, and depression of others, did not fall out by chance, but were directed by a discerning principle. Woodward's Nat. History.

2. Exaltation; dignity.

Angels, in their several degrees of elevation above us, may be endowed with more comprehensive faculties. Locke.

3. Exaltation of the mind by noble conceptions.

We are therefore to love him with all possible application and elevation of spirit, with all the heart, soul and mind. Norris.

4. Attention to objects above us.

All which different elevations of spirit unto God, are contained in the name of prayer. Hooker, b. v. f. 48.

5. The height of any heavenly body with respect to the horizon.

Some latitudes have no canicular days, as those which have more than seventy-three degrees of northern elevation, as Nova Zembla. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. iv. c. 12.

ELEVA'TOR. n. f. [from elevatus.] A raiser or lifter up, applied to some chirurgical instruments put to such uses. Quincy.

ELEVEN. adj. [ænbleren, Saxon.] Ten and one; one more than ten.

Had I a dozen sons, each in my love alike, and none less dear than thine and my good Marcius, I had rather eleven die nobly for their country, than one voluptuously surfeit out of action. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

ELEVENTH. adj. [from eleven.] The next in order to the tenth.

In the eleventh chapter he returns to speak of the building of Babel. Raleigh's History of the World.

ELF. n. f. plural elves. [elf, Welsh. Baxter's Gloss.]

1. A wandering spirit, supposed to be seen in wild unfrequented places.

Through this house give glimmering light,

By the dead and drowie fire;

Every elf, and fairy sprite,

Hop as light as bird from briar. Shak. Midf. Night's Dream.

The king of elfs and little fairy queen

Gambol'd on heaths, and danc'd on ev'ry green. Dryden.

If e'er one vision touch'd thy infant thought,

Of all the nurse and all the priest have taught;

Of airy elves by moon-light shadow seen,

The silver token, and the circled green. Pope's R. of the L.

2. A devil.

That we may angels seem, we paint them elves;

And are but satires to set up ourselves. Dryden's Eff. on Sat.

However it was civil, an angel or elf;

For he ne'er could have fill'd it so well of himself. Swift.

TO ELF. v. a. [from the noun.] To entangle hair in so intricate a manner, that it is not to be unravelled. This the vulgar have supposed to be the work of fairies in the night; and all hair so matted together, hath had the name of elf-locks. Hammer.

My face I'll grime with filth,

Blanket my loins, elf all my hair in knots. Shakesf. K. Lear.

E'LFLOCK. n. f. [elf and lock.] Knots of hair twisted by elves.

This is that very Mab,

That plats the manes of horses in the night,

And cakes the elflocks in foul sluttish hairs,

Which, once untangl'd, much misfortune bodes. Shakesf.

TO ELYCITE. v. a. [elicio, Latin.] To strike out; to fetch out by labour or art.

Although the same truths may be elicited, and explicated by the contemplation of animals, yet they are more clearly evidenced in the contemplation of man. Hale's Origin of Mank.

He elicits those acts out of the meer lapsed state of human nature. Cheyne's Phil. Princ.

ELICIT. adj. [elicitus, Latin.] Brought into act; brought from possibility to real existence.

It is the virtue of humility and obedience, and not the formal elicit act of meekness; meekness being ordinarily annexed to these virtues. Hammond's Pract. Catech.

The schools dispute whether, in morals, the external action superadds any thing of good or evil to the internal elicit act of the will. South's Sermons.

ELICITA'TION. n. f. [from elicio, Latin.]

That elicitation which the schools intend, is a deducing of the power of the will into act: that drawing which they mention, is merely from the appetibility of the object. Bramb.

TO ELIDE. v. a. [elido, Latin.] To cut in pieces.

We are to cut off that whereunto they, from whom these objections proceed, fly for defence, when the force and strength of the argument is elided. Hooker, b. iv. f. 4.

E'LGIBILITY. n. f. [from eligible.] Worthiness to be chosen.

The business of the will is not to judge concerning the nature of things, but to chuse them in consequence of the report made by the understanding, as to their eligibility or goodness. Fiddes's Sermons.

E'LGIBLE. adj. [eligibilis, Latin] Fit to be chosen; worthy of choice; preferable.

A British ministry ought to be satisfied, if, allowing to every particular man that his private scheme is wisest, they can persuade him that next to his own plan, that of the government is the most eligible. Addison's Freeholder, N<sup>o</sup>. 48.

Did they really think, that going on with the war was more eligible for their country than the least abatement of those conditions? Swift.

That the most plain, short, and lawful way to any good end, is more eligible than one directly contrary in some or all of these qualities. Swift.

Certainty, in a deep distress, is more eligible than suspense. Clarissa.

E'LGIBLENESS. n. f. [from eligible.] Worthiness to be chosen; preferableness.

ELIMINA'TION. n. f. [elimino, Latin.] The act of banishing; the act of turning out of doors; rejection. Dict.

ELISION. n. f. [elisia, Latin.]

1. The act of cutting off: as, th' attempt, there is an elision of a syllable.

You will observe the abbreviations and elisions, by which consonants of most obdurate sounds are joined together, without any softening vowel to intervene. Swift.

2. Division; separation of parts.

The cause given of sound, that it would be an elision of the air, whereby, if they mean any thing, they mean a cutting or dividing, or else an attenuating of the air, is but a term of ignorance. Bacon's Natural History, N<sup>o</sup>. 124.

ELIXA'TION. n. f. [elixus, Latin.] The act of boiling or stewing any thing.

Even to ourselves, and more perfect animals, water performs no substantial nutrition; serving for refrigeration, dilution of solid aliment, and its elixation in the stomach. Brown.

ELIXIR. n. f. [Arabick.]

1. A medicine made by strong infusion, where the ingredients are almost dissolved in the menstruum, and give it a thicker consistence than a tincture. Quincy.

For when no healing art prevail'd,

When cordials and elixirs fail'd,

On your pale cheek he dropp'd the show'r,

Reviv'd you like a dying flow'r. Waller.

2. The liquor, or whatever it be, with which chymists hope to transmute metals to gold.

No chymist yet the elixir got,

But glorifies his pregnant pot,

If by the way to him befall

Some odoriferous thing, or medicinal. Donne.

3. The extract or quintessence of any thing.

In the soul, when the supreme faculties move regularly, the inferior passions and affections following, there arises a serenity infinitely beyond the highest quintessence and elixir of worldly delight. South's Sermons.

4. Any cordial; or invigorating substance.

What wonder then, if fields and regions here

Breathe forth elixir pure! Milton's Paradise Lost, b. iii.

ELK. n. f. [ælc, Saxon]

The elk is a large and stately animal of the stag kind. The neck is short and slender; the ears nine inches in length, and four in breadth. The colour of its coat in Winter is greyish, in Summer it is paler; generally three inches in length, and equalling horsehair in thickness. The upper lip of the elk is large. The articulations of its legs are close, and the ligaments hard, so that its joints are less pliable than those of other animals. The horns of the male elk are short and thick near the head, where it by degrees expands into a great breadth, with several prominences in its edges. Elks live in herds, and are very timorous. The hoof of the left hinder foot only, has been famous for the cure of epilepsies; but it is probable, that the hoof of any other animal will do as well. Hill's Mat. Med.

And, scarce his head

Rais'd o'er the heapy wreath, the branching elk

Lies slumb'ring fullen in the white abyss. Thomson's Winter.

ELL. n. f. [eln, Saxon.]

1. A measure containing forty-five inches, or a yard and a quarter.

They are said to make yearly forty thousand pieces of linnen cloth, reckoning two hundred ells to the piece. Addison.

2. It is taken proverbially for a long measure.

Acquit thee bravely, play the man;

Look not on pleasures as they come, but go:

Defer not the last virtue; life's poor span

Make not an ell by trifling in thy woe. Herbert.

ELLIPSIS.

ELLIPSIS. n. f. [ἑλλῑψις.]

1. A figure of rhetoric, by which something is left out necessary to be supplied by the hearer.

The words are delivered by way of ellipsis, Rom. iv. 18. Hamm.

2. [In geometry.] An oval figure, being generated from the section of a cone, by a plane cutting both sides of the cone, but not parallel to the base, which produces a circle, and meeting with the base when produced. Harris.

On the cylinder inclined, describe an ellipsis parallel to the horizon. Wilkins's Dædalus.

The planets could not possibly acquire such revolutions in circular orbs, or in ellipses very little eccentric. Bentley.

ELLIPTICAL. } adj. [from ellipsis.] Having the form of an ELLIPTICK. } ellipsis; oval.

Since the planets move in elliptick orbits, in one of whose foci the sun is, and by a radius from the sun describe equal areas in equal times, which no other law of a circulating fluid, but the harmonical circulation, can account for; we must find out a law for the paracentric motion, that may make the orbits elliptick. Cheyne's Phil. Prin.

In animals, that gather food from the ground, the pupil is oval or elliptical; the greatest diameter going transversely from side to side. Cheyne's Phil. Prin.

ELM. n. f. [ulmus, Latin; elm, Saxon.]

1. The name of a tree. The flower consists of one leaf, striped like a bell, having many stamina in the center: from the bottom arises the pointal, which becomes a membranaceous or leafy fruit, almost heart-shaped; in the middle of which is placed a pear-shaped seed-vessel, containing one seed of the same shape. The species are, the common rough-leaved elm; the witch hazel, or broad-leaved elm, by some called the British elm; the smooth-leaved or witch elm. It is generally believed neither of them were originally natives of this country; but they have propagated themselves by seeds and suckers in such plenty as hardly to be rooted out, where they have had long possession; especially in hedgerows, where there is harbour for their roots, which will send forth various twigs. They are very proper to place in hedgerows upon the borders of fields, where they will thrive better than when planted in a wood or close plantation, and their shade will not be very injurious to whatever grows under them. They are also proper to plant at a distance from a garden, or building, to break the violence of winds; for they may be trained up in form of an hedge, keeping them cut every year, to the height of forty or fifty feet: but they should not be planted too near a garden where fruit-trees or other plants are placed, because the roots of the elm run superficially near the top of the ground, and will intermix with the roots of other trees, and deprive them of nourishment. Miller.

The rural seat,

Whose lofty elms and venerable oaks

Invite the rook, who high amid' the boughs,

In early Spring, his airy city builds. Thomson's Spring.

2. It was used to support vines, to which the poets allude.

Thou art an elm, my husband; I a vine,

Whose weakness married to thy stronger state,

Makes me with thy strength to communicate. Shakespeare.

ELOCUTION. n. f. [elocutio, Latin.]

1. The power of fluent speech.
A travelled doctor of physick, of bold, and of able elocution. Wotton.

2. Eloquence; flow of language.

Whose taste, too long forborne, at first essay

Gave elocution to the mute, and taught

The tongue not made for speech to speak thy praise. Milton.

As I have endeavoured to adorn it with noble thoughts, so much more to express those thoughts with elocution. Dryden.

3. The power of expression or diction.

The third happiness of this poet's imagination is elocution, or the art of cloathing or adorning that thought so found, and varied, in apt, significant, and sounding words. Dryden.

E'LOGY. n. f. [elogé, French.] Praise; panegyrick.

Buckingham lay under millions of maledictions, which at the prince's arrival did vanish into praises and elogies. Wotton.

If I durst say all I know of the elogies received from abroad concerning him, I should offend the modesty of our author. Boyle.

Some excellent persons, above my approbation or elogy, have considered this subject. Holder's Elements of Speech.

To ELO'IGNE. v. a. [éloigner, French.] To put at a distance; to remove one far from another. Now disused.

From worldly cares himself he did eloin,

And greatly shunned many exercise. Fairy Queen, b. i. c. 4.

I'll tell thee now, dear love! what thou shalt do

To anger destiny, as she doth us;

How I shall stay, though she eloigne me thus,

And how posterity shall know it too. Donne.

To ELONGATE. v. a. [from longus, Latin.] To lengthen; to draw out; to protract; to stretch.

To ELO'NGATE. v. u. To go off to a distance from any thing.

About Cape Frio in Brasilia, the South point of the compass varyeth twelve degrees unto the West; but elongating from the coast of Brasilia, towards the shore of Africa, it varyeth eastward. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. ii. c. 2.

ELONGATION. n. f. [from elongate.]

1. The act of stretching or lengthening itself.

To this motion of elongation of the fibres, is owing the union or conglutination of the parts of the body, when they are separated by a wound. Arbutnot on Aliments.

2. The state of being stretched.

3. [In medicine.] An imperfect luxation, when the ligament of any joint is so extended or relaxed as to lengthen the limb, but yet not let the bone go quite out of its place. Quincy.

Elongations are the effect of an humour soaking upon a ligament, thereby making it liable to be stretched, and to be thrust quite out upon every little force. W'seman's Surgery.

4. Distance; space at which one thing is distant from another.

The distant points in the celestial expanse appear to the eye in so small a degree of elongation from another, as bears no proportion to what is real. Glanv. Sceps. c. 11.

5. Departure; removal.

Nor then had it been placed in a middle point, but that of descent, or elongation. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. vi. c. 2.

To ELO'PE. v. a. [loopen, to run, Dutch.] To run away; to break loose; to escape from law or restraint.

It is necessary to treat women as members of the body politic, since great numbers of them have eloped from their allegiance. Addison's Freeholder, N<sup>o</sup>. 32.

What from the dame can Paris hope?

She may as well from him elope. Prior.

The fool whose wife elopes some thrice a quarter,

For matrimonial solace dies a martyr. Pope's Ep. of Horace.

ELO'PEMENT. n. f. [from elope.] Departure from just restraint; rejection of lawful power.

An elopement is the voluntary departure of a wife from her husband to live with an adulterer, and with whom she lives in breach of the matrimonial vow. Ayliffe's Parergon.

The negligent husband, trusting to the efficacy of this principle, was undone by his wife's elopement from him. Arbutnot.

ELOPS. n. f. [ἑλψ.] A fish; reckoned however by Milton among the serpents.

Scorpion and asp, and amphibena dire,

Cerafies horn'd, hydrus, and elops drear,

And dipfas. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x. l. 525.

ELOQUE'NCE. n. f. [eloquentia, Latin.]

1. The power of speaking with fluency and elegance; oratory.

Action is eloquence, and the eyes of th' ignorant

More learned than the ears. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

2. Elegant language uttered with fluency.

Say she be mute, and will not speak a word;

Then I'll commend her volubility,

And say she uttereth piercing eloquence. Shakespeare.

Fit words attended on his weighty sense,

And mild persuasion flow'd in eloquence. Pope's Odyssey, b. vii.

E'LOQUENT. adj. [eloquens, Latin.] Having the power of oratory; having the power of fluent and elegant speech.

The Lord of hosts doth take away the captain of fifty, and the honourable man, and the counsellor, and the cunning artificer, and the eloquent orator. If. iii. 3.

O death! all eloquent, you only prove

What dust we dote on, when 'tis man we love. Pope.

ELSE. pronoun. [elley, Saxon] Other; one besides: it is applied both to persons and things.

To stand stained with travel, and sweating with desire to see him; thinking of nothing else, putting all affairs else in oblivion, as if there were nothing else to be done but to see him. Shakesp. Henry IV. p. ii.

Should he or any else search, he will find evidence of the Divine Wisdom. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

He says, 'twas then with him, as now with you;

He did it when he had nothing else to do. Denham.

ELSE. adv. Otherwise.

Dare not, on thy life,

Touch ought of mine beside, by lot my due,

But stand aloof, and think profane to view:

This faulchion, else, not hitherto withstood,

These hostile fields shall fatten with thy blood. Dryden.

What ways are there whereby we should be assured, but either by an internal impression of the notion of a God upon our minds, or else by such external and visible effects as our reason tells us must be attributed to some cause. Tillotson's Sermon.

2. Beside; except that mentioned.

Pleasures which no where else were to be found,

And all Elysium in a spot of ground. Dryden.

E'LSWHERE. adv. [else and where.]

1. In any other place.

There are here divers trees, which are not to be found elsewhere. Abbot's Description of the World.

As he proved that Pison was not Ganges, or Gehon, Nilus; so where to find them elsewhere he knew not. Raleigh's Hist.

For, if we chance to fix our thoughts elsewhere,
Though our eyes open be, we cannot see. Davies.

Henceforth oracles are ceas'd,
And thou no more with pomp and sacrifice
Shalt be enquir'd at Delphos, or elsewhere. Paradise Reg.
Although seasoned bodies may and do live near as long in London as elsewhere, yet new-comers and children do not.

Graunt's Bills of Mortality.

2. In other places; in some other place.

They which elsewhere complain, that disgrace and injury is offered to the meanest minister, when the magistrate ap-pointeth him what to wear, think the gravest prelates no competent judges to appoint where it is fit for the minister to stand.

Hooker, b. v. f. 29.

Let us no more contend, nor blame

Each other, blam'd enough elsewhere. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Bestow, base man, thy idle threats elsewhere;

My mother's daughter knows not how to fear. Dryden.

If it contradict what he says elsewhere, it is no new or strange thing. Tillotson, Preface.

To ELUCIDATE. v. a. [elucido, Latin.] To explain; to clear;
to make plain.

To elucidate a little the matter, let us consider it. Boyle.

ELUCIDA'TION. n. f. [from elucidate.] Explanation; exposition.

We shall, in order to the elucidation of this matter, subjoin the following experiment. Boyle.

ELUCIDA'TOR. n. f. [from elucidate.] Explainer; expositor; commentator.

Obscurity is brought over them by the course of ignorance and age, and yet more by their pedantical elucidators. Abbt.

To ELUDE. v. a. [eludo, Latin.]

1. To escape by stratagem; to avoid any mischief or danger by artifice.

Several pernicious vices, notorious among us, escape or elude the punishment of any law yet invented. Swift.

He who looks no higher for the motives of his conduct than the resentments of human justice, whenever he can presume himself cunning enough to elude, rich enough to bribe, or strong enough to resist it, will be under no restraint. Rogers.

2. To mock by an unexpected escape.

Me gentle Delia beckons from the plain,

Then, hid in shades, eludes her eager swain;

But feigns a laugh to see me search around,

And by that laugh the willing fair is found. Pope's Spring.

ELUDIBLE. adj. [from elude.] Possible to be defeated.

There is not any common place more insisted on than the happiness of trials by juries; yet if this blessed part of our law be eludible by power and artifice, we shall have little reason to boast. Swift.

ELVES. The plural of elf. See ELF.

Ye sylphs and sylphids to your chief give ear;

Fays, fairies, genii, elves and demons hear. Pope.

ELVELO'CK. n. f. [from elves and lock.] Knots in the hair superstitiously supposed to be tangled by the fairies.

From the like might proceed the fears of polling elvelocks, or complicated hairs of the head. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. v.

ELVISH. adj. [from elves, the plural of elf: it had been written more properly elfish.] Relating to elves, or wandering spirits.

Thou elvish markt, abortive, rioting hog!

The slave of nature, and the son of hell! Shakesp. R. III.

No muse hath been so bold,

Or of the latter, or the old,

Those elvish secrets to unfold,

Which lie from others reading. Drayton.

ELUMBEATED. adj. [elumbis, Lat.] Weakened in the loins. Dict.

ELUSION. n. f. [elusio, Latin.] An escape from enquiry or examination; a fraud; an artifice.

An appendix, relating to the transmutation of metals, detects the impostures and elusions of those who have pretended to it. Woodward's Natural History.

ELUSIVE. adj. [from elude.] Practising elusion; using arts to escape.

Elusive of the bridal day, she gives

Fond hopes to all, and all with hopes deceives. Pope's Odyss.

ELUSORY. adj. [from elude.] Tending to elude; tending to deceive; fraudulent; deceitful; fallacious.

It may be feared they are but Parthian flights, ambuscade retreats, and elusory tergiversation. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

To ELUTE. v. a. [eluo, Latin.] To wash off.

The more oily any spirit is, the more pernicious; because it is harder to be eluted by the blood. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

To ELUTRIATE. v. a. [elutrio, Latin.] To decant; or strain out.

The pressure of the air upon the lungs is much less than it has been computed by some; but still it is something, and the alteration of one tenth of its force upon the lungs must produce some difference in elutriating the blood as it passes through the lungs. Arbuthnot on Air.

ELYSIAN. adj. [elysius, Latin.] Pertaining to Elysium; pleasant; deliciously soft and soothing; exceedingly delightful.

VOL. I.

The river of life, through midst of heaven,

Rolls o'er elysian flowers her amber stream. Milton.

ELY'SIUM. n. f. [Latin] The place assigned by the heathens to happy souls; any place exquisitely pleasant.

To have thee with thy lips to stop my mouth,

So should'st thou either turn my flying soul,

Or I should breathe it so into thy body,

And then it liv'd in sweet Elysium. Shakespeare's Henry VI.

EM. A contraction of them.

For he could coin and counterfeit

New words with little or no wit;

And when with hasty noise he spoke 'em,

The ignorant for current took 'em. Hudibras.

To EMACIATE. v. a. [emacio, Latin.] To waste; to deprive of flesh.

All dying of the consumption, die emaciated and lean.

Graunt's Bills of Mortality.

To EMACIATE. v. n. To lose flesh; to pine; to grow lean.

He emaciated and pined away in the too anxious enquiry of the sea's reciprocation, although not drowned therein. Brown.

EMACIA'TION. n. f. [emaciatus, Latin.]

1. The act of making lean.

2. The state of one grown lean.

Searchers cannot tell whether this emaciation or leanness were from a phthisis, or from an hectic fever. Graunt.

EMACULA'TION. n. f. [emaculo, Latin] The act of freeing any thing from spots or foulness. Dict.

EMANANT. adj. [emanans, Latin.] Issuing from something else.

The first act of the divine nature, relating to the world and his administration thereof, is an emanant act: the most wise counsel and purpose of Almighty God terminate in those two great transient or emanant acts or works, the work of creation and providence. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

EMANA'TION. n. f. [emanatio, Latin.]

1. The act of issuing or proceeding from any other substance.

Aristotle said, that it streamed by connatural result and emanation from God, the infinite and eternal Mind, as the light issues from the sun. South's Sermons.

2. That which issues from another substance; an effluence;
effluvium.

The experience of those profitable and excellent emanations from God, may be, and commonly are, the first motive of our love. Taylor.

Another way of attraction is delivered by a tenuous emanation, or continued effluvium, which, after some distance, retracteth unto itself; as in syrups, oils, and viscosities, which, spun, at length retire into their former dimensions. Brown.

Such were the features of her heav'nly face;

Her limbs were form'd with such harmonious grace;

So faultless was the frame, as if the whole

Had been an emanation of the soul. Dryden.

The letters, every judge will see, were by no means efforts of the genius, but emanations of the heart. Pope.

Each emanation of his fires

That beams on earth, each virtue he inspires;

Each art he prompts, each charm he can create;

Whate'er he gives, are giv'n for you to hate. Pope's Dunciad.

EMA'NATIVE. adj. [from emano, Latin.] Issuing from another. Dict.

To EMA'NCIPATE. v. a. [emancipo, Latin.] To set free from servitude; to restore to liberty.

Having received the probable inducements of truth, we become emancipated from testimonial engagements. Brown.

By the twelve tables, only those were called unto the intestate succession of their parents that were in the parents power, excluding all emancipated children. Ayliffe's Parergon.

They soon emancipated themselves from that dependance.

Arbuthnot on Coins.

EMANCIPA'TION. n. f. [from emancipate.] The act of setting free; deliverance from slavery.

Obstinacy in opinions holds the dogmatist in the chains of error, without hope of emancipation. Glanv. Sceps. c. 27.

To EMA'RGINATE. v. a. [margo, Latin.] To take away the margin or edge of any thing. Dict.

To EMA'SCULATE. v. a. [emasculo, Latin.]

1. To castrate; to deprive of virility.

When it is found how many ewes, suppose twenty, one ram will serve, we may geld nineteen, or thereabouts; for if you emasculate but ten, you shall, by promiscuous copulation, hinder the increase. Graunt's Bills of Mortality.

2. To effeminate; to weaken; to vitiate by unmanly softness.

From wars and from affairs of state abstain;

Women emasculate a monarch's reign. Dryden's Aurengzebe.

Dangerous principles not only impose upon our understandings, but emasculate our spirits, and spoil our temper.

Cohier on Pride.

EMA'SCULATION. n. f. [from emasculate.]

1. Castration.

2. Effeminacy; womanish qualities; unmanly softness.

To EMBA'LE. v. a. [emballer, French.]

1. To make up into a bundle.
  2. To bind up; to inclose.

Below her ham her weed did somewhat train,
And her straight legs most bravely were embal'd
In golden buskins of costly cordwain. Fairy Queen, b. ii.
I would not be a queen
For all the world.
—In faith, for little England
You'd venture an embaling. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.
- To EMBA'LM. v. a. [embaumer, French; embalsamar, Span.]
To impregnate a body with aromatics, that it may resist putrefaction.
- Embalm me,*
Then lay me forth; although unqueen'd, yet like
A queen, and daughter to a king, inter me. Shak. H. VIII.
I would shew future times
What you were, and teach them t' urge towards such:
Verse embalms virtue, and tombs or thrones of rhymes,
Preserve frail transitory fame as much
As spice doth bodies from corrupt air's touch. Donne.
Muse! at that name thy sacred sorrows shed;
Those tears eternal, that embalm the dead. Pope.
- EMBA'LMER. n. f. [from embalm.] One that practises the art of embalming and preserving bodies.
The Romans were not so good embalmers as the Egyptians, so the body was utterly consumed. Bacon's Natural History.
- To EMBA'R. v. a. [from bar.]
1. To shut; to enclose.

Themselves for fear into his jaws to fall,
He forc'd to castle strong to take their flight;
Where fast embar'd in mighty brazen wall,
He has them now four years besieg'd to make them thrall.
Fairy Queen, b. i. cant. 7. stanza. 44.
In form of airy members fair embar'd,
His spirits pure were subject to our fight. Fairfax, b. i.
  2. To stop; to hinder by prohibition; to block up.

Translating the mart, which commonly followed the English cloth, unto Calis, he embared all further trade for the future. Bacon's Henry VII.
If this commerce 'twixt heav'n and earth were not
Embar'd, and all this traffick quite forgot,
She, for whose loss we have lamented thus,
Would work more fully and pow'rfully on us. Donne.
- EMBA'RCATION. n. f. [from embark.]
1. The act of putting on shipboard.

The French gentlemen were very solicitous for the embarcation of the army, and for the departure of the fleet. Clarendon.
  2. The act of going on shipboard.
- EMBA'RGO. n. f. [embargar, Spanish.] A prohibition to pass; in commerce, a stop put to trade.
He knew that the subjects of Flanders drew so great commodity from the trade of England, as by embargo they would soon wax weary of Perkin. Bacon's Henry VII.
After an embargo of our trading ships in the river of Bourdeaux, and other points of sovereign affront, there did succeed the action of Rheez. Wotton.
I was not much concerned, in my own particular, for the embargo which was laid upon it. Dryden's Preface to Cleomenes.
- To EMBA'RK. v. a. [embarquer, French.]
1. To put on shipboard.

Of mankind, so numerous late,
All left, in one small bottom swam embark'd. Milt. P. Lost.

- To EMBA'SE. v. a. [from basse.]
1. To vitiate; to depauperate; to lower; to deprave; to impair.

Grains are annual, so that the virtue of the seed is not worn out; whereas in a tree it is embased by the ground. Bac.
I have no service or ignoble end in my present labour, which may, on either side, restrain or embase the freedom of my poor judgment. Wotton.
I will rather chuse to wear a crown of thorns, than to exchange that of gold for one of lead, whose embased flexibleness shall be forced to bend. King Charles.

E M B

- A pleasure high, rational, and angelical; a pleasure embased with no appendant sting; but such a one as being honey in the mouth, never turns to gall or gravel in the belly. South.
2. To degrade; to vilify.

Joy of my life, full oft for loving you
I blest my lot, that was so lucky plac'd;
But then the more your own mishap I rue,
That are so much by so mean love embas'd. Spenser's Sonn.
- EMBA'SSADOR. n. f. [See AMBASSADOUR.] One sent on a publick message.
Mighty Jove's embassador appear'd
With the same message. Denham.
Myself, my king's embassador, will go. Dryd. Ind. Emp.
- EMBA'SSADDRESS. n. f. A woman sent on a publick message.
With fear the modest matron lifts her eyes,
And to the bright embassadors replies. Garth's Ovid.
- E'MBASSAGE. } n. f. [It may be observed, that though our E'MBASSY. } authors write almost indiscriminately embassa-
dor or ambassador, embassage or ambassage; yet there is scarcely an example of ambassy, all concurring to write embassy.]
1. A publick message; a message concerning business between princes or states.

Fresh embassy and suits,
Nor from the state nor private friends, hereafter,
Will I lend ear to. Shakesp. Coriolanus.
When he was at Newcastle he sent a solemn embassage unto James III. king of Scotland, to treat and conclude a peace with him. Bacon's Henry VII.
The peace polluted thus, a chosen band
He first commissions to the Latian land,
In threat'ning embassy. Dryden's Æn.
  2. Any solemn message.

He sends the angels on embassies with his decrees. Taylor.
  3. An errand in an ironical sense.

A bird was made fly with such art to carry a written embassage among the ladies, that one might say, if a live bird, how taught? If dead, how made? Sidney, b. ii.
Nimble mischance, that art so light of foot,
Doth not thy embassage belong to me?
And am I last that know it. Shakespeare's Richard II.
- To EMBA'TTLE. v. a. [from battle.] To range in order or array of battle.
The English are embattled;
To horse! you gallant princes, strait to horse! Shakespeare.
I could drive her then from the ward of her purity, her reputation, her marriage-vow, and a thousand other her defences, which now are too strongly embattled against me. Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.
On their embattl'd ranks the waves return,
And overwhelm the war! Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xii.
Embattl'd nations strive in vain
The hero's glory to restrain:
Streams arm'd with rocks, and mountains red with fire,
In vain against his force conspire. Prior.
- To EMBA'Y. v. a. [from baigner, to bathe, French.]
1. To bathe; to wet; to wash.

In her lap a little babe did play;
His cruel sport;
For in her streaming blood he did embay
His little hands, and tender joints embrew. Fairy Queen.
Every sense the humour sweet embay'd,
And, slumb'ring soft, my heart did steal away. Fai. Queen.
  2. [From bay] To inclose in a bay; to land-lock.

If that the Turkish fleet
Be not inselter'd and embay'd, they're drown'd. Shakesp.
- To EMBE'LLISH. v. a. [embellir, French.] To adorn; to beautify; to grace with ornaments; to decorate.
How much more beauteous had the fountain been,
Embellish'd with her first created green;
Where crystal streams through living turf had run,
Contented with an urn of native stone. Dryden's Juvenal.
The names of the figures that embellished the discourses of those who understood the art of speaking, are not the art and skill of speaking well. Locke.
That which was once the most beautiful spot of Italy, covered with palaces, embellished by emperors, and celebrated by poets, has now nothing to shew but ruins. Addison on Italy.
- EMBE'LLISHMENT. n. f. [from embellish.] Ornament; adventitious beauty; decoration; adscitious grace; any thing that confers the power of pleasing.
Cultivate the wild licentious savage
With wisdom, discipline, and liberal arts,
The embellishments of life. Addison's Cato.
Apparitions, visions, and intercourses of all kinds between the dead and the living, are the frequent and familiar embellishments of those pious romances, the legends of the Romish church. Atterbury's Sermons.
- E'MBERING. n. f. The ember days. A word used by old authors, now obsolete.
For causes good so many ways,
Keep embring well, and fasting days;
What

What law commands we ought to obey,
For Friday, Saturn, and Wednesday. Tuss. Hus. for June.
E'MBERS. n. f. without a singular. [æmýria, Saxon, ashes; einmyria, Islandick, hot ashes or cinders.] Hot cinders; ashes not yet extinguished.

Take hot embers, and put them about a bottle filled with new beer, almost to the very neck: let the bottle be well stopped, left it fly out; and continue it, renewing the embers every day for the space of ten days. Bacon's Natural History.

Or if the air will not permit,
Some still removed place will fit,
While glowing embers through the room
Teach light to counterfeit a gloom. Milton.

While thus heav'n's highest counsels, by the low Footsteps of their effects, he trac'd too well,
He toft his troubled eyes, embers that glow
Now with new rage, and wax too hot for hell. Crafhaw.
He said, and rose, as holy zeal inspires;

He rakes hot embers, and renews the fires. Dryden's Virgil.
E'MBERWEEK. n. f. [The original of this word has been much controverted: some derive it from embers or ashes strewed by penitents on their heads; but Nelson decides in favour of Mareschal, who derives it from ymbren or embren, a course or circumvolution.] A week in which an ember day falls.

The ember days at the four seasons are the Wednesday,
Friday, and Saturday after the first Sunday in Lent, the feast of Pentecost, September 14, December 13. Comm. Prayer.

Stated times appointed for fasting are Lent, and the four seasons of the year called emberweeks. Ayliffe's Parergon.
To EMBEZZLE. v. a. [This word seems corrupted by an ignorant pronunciation from imbecil.]

1. To appropriate by breach of trust; to turn what is intrusted in his hands to his own use.

He had embezzled the king's treasure, and extorted money by way of loan from all men. Hayward.

2. To waste; to swallow up in riot.
When thou hast embezzl'd all thy store,

EMBEZZLEMENT. n. f. [from embezzle.]
1. The act of appropriating to himself that which is received in trust for another.

2. The thing appropriated.
To EMBLAZE. v. a. [blasonner, French.]
1. To adorn with glittering embellishments.

Th' unfought diamonds
Would so emblaze the forehead of the deep,
And so bestud with stars, that they below
Would grow inur'd to light. Milton.

No weeping orphan saw his father's stores
Our shrines irradiate, or emblaze the floors. Pope.

2. To blason; to paint with ensigns armorial.
Nor shall this blood be wiped from thy point,
But thou shalt wear it as a herald's coat,
T' emblaze the honour which thy master got. Shak. H. VI.

He from the glittering staff unfurl'd
Th' imperial ensign, streaming to the wind,
With gems and golden lustre rich emblaz'd,
Seraphick arms and trophies. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. i.

To EMBLAZON. v. a. [blasonner, French.]
1. To adorn with figures of heraldry; to grace with ensigns armorial.

2. To deck in glaring colours; to set out pompously to shew.

EMBLEMA'TICK. }
1. Comprising an emblem; allusive; occultly representative.

In the well fram'd models,
With emblematick skill and mystick order,
Thou shew'dst where tow'rs on battlements should rise,
Where gates should open, or where walls should compass. Prior.

The poets contribute to the explication of reverses purely emblematical, or when the persons are allegorical. Addison.

2. Dealing in emblems; using emblems.

By tongue and pudding to our friends explain
What does your emblematick worship mean. Prior.

EMBLEMA'TICALLY. adv. [from emblematic] In the manner of emblems; allusively; with occult representation.

Others have spoken emblematically and hieroglyphically, as to the Egyptians; and the phoenix was the hieroglyphick of the sun. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. iii. c. 10.

He took a great stone, and put it up under the oak, emble-matically joining the two great elements of masonry. Swift.

EMBLEMATIST. n. f. [from emblem.] Writers or inventors of emblems.

These fables are still maintained by symbolical writers, emblematicists, and heralds. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. i. c. 9.

EMBOLISM. n. f. [ἐμβολισμός.]

1. Intercalation; insertion of days or years to produce regularity and equation of time.

The civil constitutions of the year were after different manners in several nations; some using the sun's year, but in divers fashions; and some following the moon, finding out embolisms or equations, even to the addition of whole months, to make all as even as they could. Holder on Time.

2. The time inserted; intercalatory time.

EMBOLUS. n. f. [ἐμβολος.] Any thing inserted and acting in another, as the sucker in a pump.

Our members make a sort of an hydraulick engine, in which a chemical liquor, resembling blood, is driven through elastick channels by the force of an embolus, like the heart.

Arbutnot and Pope's Mart. Scriblerus.

To EMBOSS. v. a. [from bosse, a protuberance, French.]

1. To form with protuberances; to cover with something rising into lumps or bunches.

Timon hath made his everlasting mansion
Upon the beached verge of the salt flood;
Which once a day, with his embossed froth,
The turbulent surge shall cover. Shakespeare's Timon.
Thou art a bile,

A plague sore, or embossed carbuncle,
In my corrupted blood. Shakespeare's King Lear.

Botches and blains must all his flesh emboss,
And all his people. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xii.

All croud in heaps, as at a night-alarm
The bees drive out upon each others backs,
T' emboss their hives in clusters. Dryden's Don Sebastian.

2. To engrave with relief, or rising work.

Then o'er the lofty gate his art emboss'd Androgeo's death, and off'rings to his ghost. Dryden's Virg.

3. [from emboïster, French, to inclose in a box.] To inclose;
to include; to cover.

And in the way, as she did weep and wail,
A knight her met, in mighty arms emboss'd. Fairy Queen.

4. [emboïscare, Italian.] To inclose in a thicket.
Like that self-begotten bird
In th' Arabian woods emboss. Milton's Agonistes.

5. To hunt hard.

When a deer is hard run, and foams at the mouth, he is said to be emboss: a dog also, when he is strained with hard running, especially upon hard ground, will have his knees swelled, and then he is said to be emboss, from bosse, French, a tumour. Hanmer.

Oh, he is more mad

Than Telamon for his shield; the boar of Theffaly
Was never so emboss. Shakespeare's Ant. and Cleopatra.

We have almost emboss him: you shall see his fall tonight. Shakespeare's All's well that ends well.

EMBOSSMENT. n. f. [from emboss.]

1. Any thing standing out from the rest; jut; eminence.

I wish also, in the very middle, a fair mount, with three ascents and alleys, enough for four to walk a-breast; which I would have to be perfect circles, without any bulwarks or embossments. Bacon's Essays, Civ. and Moral.

2. Relief; rising work.

They are at a loss about the word pendentis; some fancy it expresses only the great embossment of the figure, others believe it hung off the helmet in alto relievo. Addison on Italy.

To EMBO'TTLE. v. a. [bouteille, French.] To include in bottles; to bottle.

Stirom, firmest fruit

Embottled, long as Priamean Troy
Withstood the Greeks, endures. Phillips.

To EMBO'WEL. v. a. [from bowel] To eviscerate; to deprive of the entrails; to exenterate.

The schools,

Embowelled of their doctrine, have left off
The danger to itself. Shakespeare's All's well that ends well.

The essence and the relation of every thing in being, is fitted, beyond any emendation, for its action and use; and shews it to proceed from a mind of the highest understanding. Grew.

2. An alteration made in the text by verbal criticism.

EMENDA'TOR. n. f. [emendo, Latin.] A corrector; an improver; an alterer for the better.

E'MERALD. n. f. [émeraude, French; smaragdus, Latin.] A green precious stone.

The emerald is evidently the same with the antient smaragdus; and, in its most perfect state, is perhaps the most beautiful of all the gems: it is found from the sixteenth of an inch in diameter, to the size of a walnut. The rough emerald is usually of a very bright and naturally polished surface, and is ever of a pure and beautiful green, without the admixture of any other colour. It is of all the various shades of green, from the deepest to the palest, and doubtless is found at times wholly colourless; but then it is esteemed, by our jewellers, a white sapphire. The oriental emerald is of the hardness of the sapphire and ruby, and is second only to the diamond in lustre and brightness: they are only found in the kingdom of Cambay. The American, called by our jewellers oriental emeralds, are found in Peru, of the hardness of the garnet: the European are somewhat softer, but harder than crystal, and found in Silesia. The coloured crystals, sold as occidental emeralds, are from the mines of Germany. Hill on Fossils.

Do you not see the grass how in colour they excel the emerald? Sidney.

The emerald is a bright grass green: it is found in fissures of rocks, along with copper ores. Woodward's Fossils.

TO EMERGE. v. n. [emergo, Latin.]

- To rise out of any thing in which it is covered.
They emerged, to the upper part of the spirit of wine, as much of them as lay immersed in the spirit. Boyle.
The mountains emerged, and became dry land again, when the waters, after their violent agitation was abated, retired into the lower places. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
Thetis, not unmindful of her son,
Emerging from the deep, to beg her boon, Pursu'd their track. Dryden's Homer.
- To issue; to proceed.
If the prism was turned about its axis that way, which made the rays emerge more obliquely out of the second refracting surface of the prism, the image soon became an inch or two longer or more. Newton's Opt.
- To rise; to mount from a state of depression or obscurity; to rise into view.
Darkness, we see, emerges into light;
And shining suns descend to fable night. Dryden's Fables.
When, from dewy shade emerging bright,
Aurora streaks the sky with orient light,
Let each deplore his dead. Pope's Odyssey, b. iv. l. 470.
Then from ancient gloom emerg'd
A rising world. Thomson's Summer, l. 995.

EMERGENCE. } n. f. [from emerge.]
EMERGENCY. }

We have read of a tyrant, who tried to prevent the emergence of murdered bodies. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iv. c. 1.
- The act of rising into view.
The emergency of colours, upon coalition of the particles of such bodies, as were neither of them of the colour of that mixture whereof they are ingredients, is very well worth our attentive observation. Boyle on Colours.
The white colour of all refracted light, at its very first emergence, where it appears as white as before its incidence, is compounded of various colours. Newton's Opt.
- Any sudden occasion; unexpected casualty.
Most of our rarities have been found out by casual emergency, and have been the works of time and chance rather than of philosophy. Glanv. Sceps. c. 21.
- Pressing necessity. A sense not proper.
In any case of emergency, he would employ the whole wealth of his empire, which he had thus amassed together in his subterraneous exchequer. Addison's Freeholder.

EMERGENT. adj. [from emerge.]

- Rising out of that which overwhelms or obscures it.
Love made my emergent fortune once more look
Above the main, which now shall hit the stars. Ben. Johnson.
The man that is once hated, both his good and his evil deeds oppress him; he is not easily emergent. Ben. Johnson.
- Rising into view, or notice.
Immediately the mountains huge appear
Emergent, and their broad bare backs unheave
Into the clouds, their tops ascend the sky. Milt. Par. Lost.
- Proceeding or issuing from any thing.
The stoicks held a fatality, and a fixed unalterable course of events; but then they held also, that they fell out by a necessity emergent from and inherent in the things themselves, which God himself could not alter. South's Sermons.
- Sudden; unexpectedly casual.
All the lords declared, that, upon any emergent occasion, they would mount their servants upon their horses. Clarendon.

EMERODS. } n. f. [corrupted by ignorant pronunciation from

EMERSION. n. f. [from emerge.] The time when a star, having been obscured by its too near approach to the sun, appears again.
The time was in the heliacal emersion, when it becomes at greatest distance from the sun. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iv.

EMERY. n. f. [smiris, Latin; esmeril, French.]
Emery is an iron ore, considerably rich. It is usually of a dusky brownish red on the surface; but, when broken, of a fine bright iron grey, but not without some tinge of redness, and is spangled all over with shining specks. It is also sometimes very red, and then contains veins of gold. It is found in the island of Guernsey, in Tuscany, and many parts of Germany. It has a near relation to the magnet. Emery has been recommended by the ancients as an abstergent, but it must be used with great caution. It is prepared by grinding in mills; and the lapidaries cut the ordinary gems on their wheels by sprinkling the wetted powder over them; but it will not cut diamonds. It is useful in cleaning and polishing steel. Hill's Mat. Med.

ENCO'UNTER. n. f. [encontre, French.]

1. Duel; single fight; conflict.

Thou hast beat me out

Twelve several times, and I have nightly since

Dreamt of encounters 'twixt thyself and me. Shakespeare.

Let's leave this keen encounter of our wits,

And fall something into a slower method. Shakesf. Rich. III.

Pallas th' encounter seeks; but e're he throws,

To Tuscan Tiber thus address'd his vows:

O sacred stream, direct my flying dart,

And give to pass the proud Halesus' heart. Dryden's Æn.

2. Battle; fight in which enemies rush against each other.

Two black clouds

With heav'n's artillery fraught, come rattling on

Over the Caspian; then stand front to front,

Hov'ring a space, 'till winds the signal blow

To join their dark encounter in mid air. Milt. Parad. Lost.

3. Eager and warm conversation, either of love or anger.

The peaking cornuto comes to me in the instant of our encounter, after we had spoke the prologue of our comedy. Shak.

4. Accidental congress; sudden meeting.

Around him spread a veil of thicken'd air,

To shun th' encounter of the vulgar crowd. Pope's Odyssey.

5. Accosting.

But in what habit will you go along?

—Not like a woman; for I would prevent the loose encounters of lascivious men. Shakespeare's Two Gentlemen of Verona.

Three parts of Brutus

Is ours already; and the man entire,

Upon the next encounter, yields him ours. Shakesf. Jul. Cæs.

6. Casual incident; occasion. This sense is scarcely English.

An equality is not sufficient for the unity of character: 'tis further necessary, that the same spirit appear in all sort of encounters.

Pope's View of Epick Poetry.

TO ENCO'UNTER. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To meet face to face.

If I must die,

I will encounter darkness as a bride,

And hug it in mine arms. Shakesf. Measure for Measure.

The fashion of the world is to avoid cost, and you encounter it.

Shakespeare's Much Ado about Nothing.

Thole

- Thou stronger may'st endure the flood of light;
And, while in shades I chear my fainting fight,
Encounter the descending excellence. Dryd. State of Innocence.
2. To meet in a hostile manner; to rush against in conflict.
Putting themselves in order of battle, they encountered their enemies. Knolles's History of the Turks.
  3. To meet with reciprocal kindness.
See, they encounter thee with their hearts thanks;
Both sides are even. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
  4. To attack; to meet in the front.
Which way soever we turn ourselves, we are encountered with clear evidences and sensible demonstrations of a Deity.
Tillotson, Sermon 1.
  5. To oppose; to oppugn.
Jurors are not bound to believe two witnesses, if the probability of the fact does reasonably encounter them. Hale.
  6. To meet by accident.
I am most fortunate thus to encounter you:
You have ended my business, and I will merrily Accompany you home. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
- To ENCO'UNTER. v. n.
1. To rush together in a hostile manner; to conflict.
And let belief and life encounter so,
As doth the fury of two desperate men,
Which, in the very meeting, fall and die. Shakef. K. John.
Five times, Marcius,
Have I fought with thee; so often hast thou beat me:
And wouldst do so, I think, should we encounter
As often as we eat. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
  2. To engage; to fight.
Our wars
Will turn into a peaceful comick sport,
When ladies crave to be encounter'd with. Shakef. H. VI.
Both the wings of his fleet had begun to encounter with the Christians. Knolles's History of the Turks.
Those who have the most dread of death, must in a little time be content to encounter with it, whether they will or no.
Wake's Preparation for Death.
  3. To meet face to face.
  4. To come together by chance.
- ENCO'UNTERER. n. f. [from encounter.]
1. Opponent; antagonist; enemy.
The lion will not kick with his feet, but he will strike such a stroke with his tail, that he will break the back of his en- counterer with it. More's Antidote against Atheism.
The doctrines of the reformation have kept the field against all encounterers, and does he think they may be foiled by two or three remarks? Atterbury's Pref. to Ans. on Confid. on Luther.
  2. One that loves to accost others. An old term.
Oh, these encounterers! so gilt of tongue,
They give a coasting welcome ere it comes;
And wide unclasp the tables of their thoughts
To every ticklish reader. Shakef. Troilus and Cressida.
- To ENCO'URAGE. v. a. [encourager, French.]
1. To animate; to incite to any thing.
They encourage themselves in an evil matter. Pf. lxiv. 5.
  2. To give courage to; to support the spirits; to inspirit; to embolden.
I would neither encourage the rebels, nor discourage the protestants loyalty. King Charles.
  3. To raise confidence; to make confident.
I doubt not but there are ways to be found, to assist our reason in this most useful part; and this the judicious Hooker encourages me to say. Locke.
- ENCO'URAGEMENT. n. f. [from encourage.]
1. Incitement to any action or practice; incentive.
Such strength of heart
Thy conduct and example gives; nor small
Encouragement, Godolphin, wife and just. Phillips.
  2. Favour; countenance; support.
For when he dies, farewell all honour, bounty,
All generous encouragement of arts. Otway's Orphan.
The reproach of immorality will lie heaviest against an established religion, because those who have no religion will profess themselves of that which has the encouragement of the law. Rogers, Sermon 9.
- ENCO'URAGER. n. f. [from encourage.] One that supplies in-citements to any thing; a favourer.
Live then, thou great encourager of arts,
Live ever in our thankful hearts. Dryden.
As the pope is himself a master of polite learning, and a great encourager of arts; so at Rome any of those arts immediately thrives, under the encouragement of the prince.
Addison's Remarks on Italy.
- To ENCRO'ACH. v. n. [accrocher, from croc, a hook, Fr.]
1. To make invasions upon the right of another; to put a hook into another man's possessions to draw them away.
Those Irish captains of countries have encroached upon the queen's freeholders and tenants. Spenser on Ireland.
  2. To advance gradually and by stealth upon that to which one has no right.
The superstition that riseth voluntarily, and by degrees

- mingleth itself with the rites, even of every divine service, done to the only true God, must be considered of as a creeping and encroaching evil. Hooker, b. v. f. 3.
- This hour is mine; if for the next I care, I grow too wide,
And do encroach upon death's side. Herbert.
- They fabled how the serpent, whom they call'd
Ophion, with Eurynome, the wide
Encroaching Eve perhaps, had first the rule
Of high Olympus. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x. l. 582.
Th' encroaching ill you early should oppose;
Flatter'd, 'tis worse, and by indulgence grows. Dryden.
Next, fenc'd with hedges and deep ditches round,
Exclude th' encroaching cattle from thy ground. Dryden.
Tisiphone, let loose from under ground,
Before her drives diseases and affright;
And every moment rises to the fight,
Aspiring to the skies, encroaching on the light. Dryden.
- ENCRO'ACHER. n. f. [from encroach.]
1. One who seizes the possession of another by gradual and silent means.
The bold encroachers on the deep,
Gain by degrees huge tracts of land,
'Till Neptune, with one gen'ral sweep,
Turns all again to barren strand. Swift.
  2. One who makes slow and gradual advances beyond his rights.
Full dress creates dignity, augments consciousness, and keeps at distance an encroacher. Clarissa.
- ENCRO'ACHMENT. n. f. [from encroach.]
1. An unlawful gathering in upon another man. For example:
if two mens grounds lying together, the one presses too far upon the other; or if a tenant owe two shillings rent-service to the lord, and the lord takes three: so the Spencers en- croached to themselves royal power and authority. Cowel.
But this usurper his encroachment proud
Stays not on man: to God his tow'r intends Siege, and defiance. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xii. l. 72.
As a man had a right to all he could employ his labour upon, so he had no temptation to labour for more than he could make use of: this left no room for controversy about the title, nor for encroachment on the right of others. Locke.
If it be a man's known principle to depart from his right, ill men will make unjust encroachments upon him. Atterbury.
The people, since the death of Solon, had already made great encroachments. Swift on the Dissent. in Athens and Rome.
  2. Advance into the territories or rights of another.
It gave the ancient Romans an opportunity of making so many encroachments on the sea, and of laying the foundations of their palaces within the very borders of it. Addison on Italy.
- To ENCUMBER. v. a. [encombrer, French.]
1. To clog; to load; to impede.
We have, by this many years experience, found that exceeding great good, not encumbered with any notable inconvenience. Hooker, b. v. f. 20.
Encumber'd with his vest, without defence. Dryden.
  2. To entangle; to embarrass; to obstruct.
The verbal copier is encumbered with so many difficulties at once, that he can never disentangle himself. Dryden.
The god awak'd,
And thrice in vain he shook his wing,
Encumber'd in the filken string. Prior.
  3. To load with debts: as, his estate is encumbered with mortgages.
- ENCUMBRANCE. n. f. [from encumber.]
1. Clog; load; impediment.
Philosophers agreed in despising riches, at best, confidering them as unnecessary encumbrances of life. Temple.
Dead limbs are an encumbrance to the body, instead of being of use to it. Addison's Freeholder, N<sup>o</sup>. 13.
  2. Excrescence; useless addition.
Strip from the branching Alps their piny load,
The huge encumbrance of horridick woods. Thomf. Autumn.
  3. Burthen upon an estate.
In respect of the encumbrances of a living, consider whether it be sufficient for his family, and to maintain hospitality. Ayl.
- ENCYCLICAL. adj. [ἐγκυκλιος] Circular; sent round through a large region.
This council was not received in patriarchal sees, which is evident from Photius's encyclical epistle to the patriarch of Alexandria. Stillingfleet's Def. of Disc. on Rom. Idol.
- ENCYCLOPEDIA. n. f. [ἐγκυκλοπαιδία.] The circle of ENCYCLOPEDIA } sciences; the round of learning.
Every science borrows from all the rest, and we cannot attain any single one without the encyclopaedy. Glanv. Scops. c. 25.
This art may justly claim a place in the encyclopaedia, especially such as serves for a model of education for an able politician. Arbutnot's History of John Bull.
- ENCYSTED. adj. [ἐνστυς.] Enclosed in a vesicle or bag.
Encysted tumours borrow their names from a cyst or bag in which they are contained, and are farther distinguished by the nature of their contents. Sharp's Surgery.

END

END. n. f. [end, Saxon.]

1. The extremity of any thing materially extended.
Jonathan put forth the end of the rod that was in his hand, and dipt it in a honeycomb. 1 Sam. xiv. 27.
The extremity and bounds of all bodies we have no difficulty to arrive at; but, when the mind is there, it finds nothing to hinder its progress into this endless expansion: of that it can neither find, nor conceive any end. Locke.
2. The last particle of any assignable duration.
If the world's age and death be argu'd well
By the sun's fall, which now tow'rd's earth doth bend,
Then we might fear that virtue, since she fell
So low as woman, should be near her end. Donne.
3. The conclusion or cessation of any action.
Jacob had made an end of commanding his sons. Gen. xlix.
Yet vainly most their age in study spend;
No end of writing books, and to no end. Denham.
The causes and designs of an action are the beginning: the effects of these causes, and the difficulties that are met with in the execution of these designs, are the middle; and the unravelling and resolution of these difficulties, are the end. Pope's View of Epic Poem.
4. The conclusion or last part of any thing; as, the end of a chapter; the end of a discourse.
5. Ultimate state; final doom.
6. The point beyond which no progression can be made.
They reel to and fro, and stagger like a drunken man, and are at their wits end. Pf. cvii. 27.
7. Final determination; conclusion of debate or deliberation.
My guilt be on my head, and there's, an end! Shakesp.
8. Death; fate; decease.
I determine to write the life and the end, the nature and the fortunes of George Villiers. Wotton.
The soul receives intelligence,
By her near genius, of the body's end,
And so imparts a sadness to the sense. Daniel's Civil War.
'Tis the great business of life to fit ourselves for our end, and no man can live well that has not death in his eye. L'Estr.
Remember Milo's end,
Wedg'd in that timber which he strove to rend. Roscommon.
My God, my father, and my friend,
Do not forsake me in my end. Roscommon.
Unblam'd through life, lamented in thy end. Pope.
9. Abolition; total loss.
There would be an end of all civil government, if the assignment of civil power were by such institution. Locke.
10. Cause of death; destroyer.
Take heed you dally not before your king,
Left he that is the supreme king of kings,
Confound your hidden falshood, and award
Either of you to be the other's end. Shakesp. Richard III.
11. Consequence; event.
O, that a man might know
The end of this day's business ere it come!
But it sufficeth that the day will end. Shakesp. Jul. Cesar.
The end of these things is death. Rom. vi. 21.
12. Fragment; broken piece.
Thus I cloathe my naked villany
With old odd ends, stol'n forth of Holy Writ,
And seem a saint. Shakespeare's Richard III.
13. Purpose; intention
There was a purpose to reduce the monarchy to a republic, which was far from the end and purpose of that nation. Claren.
I have lov'd!
What can thy ends, malicious beauty, be?
Can he who kill'd thy brother, live for thee? Dryd. Ind. Em.
Heav'n, as its instrument, my courage sends;
Heav'n ne'er sent those who fight for private ends. Dryden.
Others are apt to attribute them to some false end or intention. Addison's Spectator, N<sup>o</sup>. 255.
14. Thing intended; final design.
Wisdom may have framed one and the same thing to serve commodiously for divers ends, and of those ends any one may be sufficient cause for continuance, though the rest have ceased. Hooker, b. v. f. 42.
All those things which are done by him, have some end for which they are done; and the end for which they are done, is a reason of his will to do them. Hooker, b. i. f. 2.
Her only end is never-ending bliss;
Which is, the eternal face of God to see,
Who last of ends, and first of causes is;
And to do this, she must eternal be. Davies.
The end of the commandment is charity. 1 Tim. i. 5.
Two things I shall propound to you, as ends; since the wise men of this world have made them theirs. Suckling.
Such conditions did fully comply with all those ends, for which the parliament had first taken up arms. Clarendon.
Hear and mark
To what end I have brought thee hither, and shewn
All this fair fight. Milton's Paradise Regained, b. iii.
Life, with my Indamora, I would chuse;
But, losing her, the end of living lose. Dryden's Aurengz.

END

- For when success a lover's toil attends;
Few ask if fraud or force attain'd his ends. Pope.
The end of our fast is to please God, and make him propitious. Smalridge's Sermons.
15. An END. [Probably corrupted from on end.] Upright; erect: as, his hair stands an end.
  16. An END has a signification in low language not easily explained; as, most an end, commonly: perhaps it is properly on end, at the conclusion; or corrupted from some old word not easily recoverable.
Stay'st thou to vex me here?
Slave, that, still an end, turns me to shame. Shakespeare.
- To END. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To terminate; to conclude; to finish.
That but this blow
Might be the be-all, and the end-all. Shakesp. Macbeth.
He would in one battle end quarrel with them, either win or lose the empire. Knolles's History of the Turks.
That expensive war under which we have so long groaned, is not yet ended. Smalridge's Sermons.
  2. To destroy; to put to death.
The lord of Stafford dear to-day hath bought Thy likeness; for instead of thee, king Harry,
This sword hath ended him. Shakespeare's Henry IV.
- To END. v. n.
1. To come to an end; to be finished.
Yet happy were my death, mine ending blest,
If this I could obtain, that, breast to breast,
Thy bosom might receive my yielded spright. Fairfax, b. ii.
Then ease your weary Trojans will attend,
And the long labours of your voyage end. Dryden's Æn.
  2. To terminate; to conclude; to cease; to fail.
Our laughing, if it be loud and high, commonly ends in a deep sigh; and all the instances of pleasure have a sting in the tail. Taylor's Rule of living holy.
His sovereignty, built upon either of these titles, could not have descended to his heir, but must have ended with him. Loc.
- To ENDA'MAGE. v. a. [from damage.] To mischief; to prejudice; to harm.
Nor ought he car'd whom he endamaged
By tortous wrong, or whom bereav'd of right. Fa. Queen.
And it cometh sometime to pass, that a thing unnecessary in itself, touching the whole direct purpose, doth notwithstanding appear convenient to be still held, even without use, left, by reason of that coherence which it hath with somewhat most necessary, the removal of the one should endamage the other. Hooker, b. v. f. 42.
Where your good word cannot advantage him,
Your slander never can endamage him. Shakespeare.
Gather our soldiers, scatter'd and dispers'd,
And lay new platforms to endamage them. Shak. Hen. VI.
The trial hath endamage'd thee no way;
Rather more honour left, and more esteem. Milton.
When an erroneous opinion is published, the publick is endamaged, and therefore it becomes punishable by the magistrature. South's Sermons.
A great alteration doth seldom any wise endamage or disorder the globe. Woodward's Natural History.
- To ENDA'NGER. v. a. [from danger.]
1. To put into hazard; to bring into peril.
Every one desires his own preservation and happiness, and therefore hath a natural dread of every thing that can destroy his being, or endanger his happiness. Tillotson, Sermon 4.
He rais'd the rest,
To force the foes from the Lavinian shore,
And Italy's endanger'd peace restore. Dryden's Æn. b. vii.
My kingdom claims your birth; my late defence,
Of our endanger'd fleet, may claim your confidence. Dryden.
Volatile salts never exist in an animal body; the heat required to make them volatile, endangers the animal. Arbuthnot on Aliments.
The interest endangered is no less than our title to heaven. Rogers, Sermon 4.
  2. To incur the danger of; to hazard.
He that turneth the humours back, and maketh the wound bleed inwards, endangereth malign ulcers. Bacon's Essays.
- To ENDE'AR. v. a. [from dear.] To make dear; to make beloved.
All those instances of charity which usually endear each other, sweetness of conversation, frequent admonition, all significations of love must be expressed towards children. Tayl.
And in the mixture of all these appears
Variety, which all the rest endears. Denham.
The only thing that can endear religion to your practice, will be to raise your affections above this world. Wake.
- ENDE'ARMENT*. n. f. [from endear.]
1. The cause of love; means by which any thing is endeared.
Her first endearment, twining round the soul. Thomson.
  2. The state of being endeared; the state of being loved.
Is not the separate property of a thing the great cause of its endearment amongst all mankind? South's Sermons.

When a man shall have done all that he can to make one his friend, and emptied his purse to create endearment between them, he may, in the end, be forced to write vanity and frustration.

South's Sermons.

ENDEAVOUR. n. f. [devoir, French; endevoir.] Labour directed to some certain end; effort to obtain or avoid.

My studied purposes went

Beyond all man's endeavours. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

Heav'n doth divide

The state of man in divers functions,
Setting endeavour in continual motion. Shakefp. Henry V.

Here their appointment we may best discover,

And look on their endeavour. Shakefp. Ant. and Cleopatra.

I take imitation of an author, in their sense, to be an endeavour of a later poet to write like one, who has written before him on the same subject. Dryden.

The bold and sufficient pursue their game with more passion, endeavour, and application, and therefore often succeed. Temple.

She could not make the least endeavour towards the producing of any thing that hath vital and organical parts. Ray.

Such an assurance as will quicken mens endeavours for the obtaining of a lesser good, ought to animate men more powerfully in the pursuit of that which is infinitely greater. Tillotf.

This is the hinge on which turns the liberty of intellectual beings, in their constant endeavours after, and steady prosecution of true felicity. Locke.

TO ENDEAVOUR. v. n. [from the noun.] To labour to a certain purpose; to work for a certain end.

I could wish that more of our country-clergy would endeavour after a handsome elocution. Addison's Spectator, N<sup>o</sup>. 106.

Of old, those met rewards who could excel;

And those were prais'd, who but endeavour'd well. Pope.

TO ENDEAVOUR. v. a. To attempt; to try.

To pray'r, repentance, and obedience due,

Though but endeavour'd with sincere intent,

Mine ear shall not be slow, mine ear not shut. Milt. P. L.

ENDEAVOURER. n. f. [from endeavour.] One who labours to a certain end.

He appears an humble endeavourer, and speaks honestly to no purpose. Rymer's Tragedies of the last Age.

Your battles they hereafter shall indite,

And draw the image of our Mars in fight. Waller.

How shall Filbert unto me indite,

When neither I can read, nor he can write. Gay.

Hear how learn'd Greece her useful rules indites,

When to repress, and when indulge our flights! Pope.

ENDICTMENT. } n. f. [from endite.] A bill or declaration made

ENDITEMENT. } in form of law, for the benefit of the commonwealth; or an accusation for some offence exhibited unto jurors, and by their verdict found and presented to be true, before an officer can have power to punish the same offence. Cowel.

'Tis necessary that the species of the crime be described in the libel or articles, which our English lawyers call an indictment or information. Ayliffe's Parergon.

We never draw any indictment at all against them, but think commendably even of them. Hooker.

The hand-writing against him may be cancelled in the court of heaven, and yet the indictment run on in the court of conscience. South's Sermons.

Attend the court, and thou shalt briefly find

In that one place the manners of mankind;

Hear the endictments, then return again,

Call thyself wretch, and, if thou dar'st, complain. Dryden.

ENDIVE. n. f. [endive, French; intybum, Latin.]

Endive, or succory, is of several sorts; as the white, the green, and the curled, which are only propagated by seed, that is longish, of a white-grey colour, flat at one end, and roundish at the other. It grows upon the stocks or stems of the preceding year's growth. Mortimer's Husbandry.

ENDLESS. adj. [from end.]

1. Without end; without conclusion or termination.

Nothing was more endless than the common method of comparing eminent writers by an opposition of particular passages in them. Pope's Preface to the Iliad.

2. Infinite in longitudinal extent.

As it is pleasant to the eye to have an endless prospect, so it is some pleasure to a finite understanding to view unlimited excellencies. Tillotson.

3. Infinite in duration; perpetual.

None of the heathens, how curious soever in searching out all kinds of outward ceremonies, could ever once endeavour to resemble herein the church's care for the endless good of her children. Hooker, b. v. f. 18.

But after labours long, and sad delay,

Brings them to joyous rest, and endless bliss. Fairy Queen.

ENERGY. n. f. [ἐνέργεια.]

1. Power not exerted in action.

They are not effective of any thing, nor leave no work behind them, but are energies merely; for their working upon mirrors, and places of echo, doth not alter any thing in those bodies. Bacon.

2. Force; vigour; efficacy; influence.

Whether with particles of heav'nly fire

The God of nature did his soul inspire;

Or earth, but new divided from the sky,

And pliant still, retain'd th' ethereal energy.

Dryden.

God thinketh with operation infinitely perfect, with an omnipotent as well as an eternal energy. Grew's Cosmol. Sac.

Beg the blessed Jesus to give an energy to your imperfect prayers, by his most powerful intercession. Smalridge's Sermon.

What but God!

Inspiring God! who, boundless spirit all,

And unremitting energy, pervades,

Adjusts, sustains, and agitates the whole. Thomson's Spring.

3. Faculty; operation.

Matter, though divided into the subtlest parts, moved swiftly, is senseless and stupid, and makes no approach to vital energy. Ray on the Creation.

How can concussion of atoms beget self-consciousness, and other powers and energies that we feel in our minds? Bentley.

4. Strength of expression; force of signification; spirit; life.

Who did ever, in French authors, see

The comprehensive English energy.

Roscommon.

Swift and ready, and familiar communication is made by speech; and, when animated by elocution, it acquires a greater life and energy, ravishing and captivating the hearers. Holder.

Many words deserve to be thrown out of our language, and not a few antiquated to be restored, on account of their energy and sound. Swift.

To ENERVATE. v. a. [enervo, Latin.] To weaken; to deprive of force; to emasculate.

Great empires, while they stand, do enervate and destroy the forces of the natives which they have subdued, resting upon their own protecting forces. Bacon, Essay 59.

The rewards and puniſhments of another life, which the Almighty has eſta bliſhed as the enforcements of his law, are of weight enough to determine the choice. Locke.
3. Motive of conviction; urgent evidence.
The perſonal deſcent of God himſelf, and his aſſumption of our fleſh to his divinity, was an enforcement beyond all the methods of wiſdom that were ever made uſe of in the world. Hammond on Fundamentals.
4. Preſſing exigence.
More than I have ſaid,
The leiſure and enforcement of the time
Forbids to dwell on. Shakeſpeare's Richard III.
ENFO/RCE. n. ſ. [from enforce.] Compeller; one who effects by violence.
When a man tumbles a cylinder or roller down an hill,
'tis certain that the man is the violent enforcer of the firſt motion of it. Hammond's Fundamentals.
ENFO/ULDRED. adj. [from foudre, French.] Mixed with lightning.
Heart cannot think what outrage and what cries,
With foul enfouldred ſmoak and flaſhing fire,
The hell-bred beaſt threw forth unto the ſkies. Fairy Queen.
TO ENFRA/NCHISE. v. a. [from franchise.]
1. To admit to the privileges of a freeman.
The Engliſh colonies, and ſome ſepts of the Irifhry, en-franchiſed by ſpecial charters, were admitted to the benefit of the laws. Davies on Ireland.
Romulus was the natural parent of all thoſe people that were the firſt inhabitants of Rome, or of thoſe that were after incorporated and enfranchiſed into that name, city, or government. Hale's Origin of Mankind.
2. To ſet free from ſlavery.
Men, forbearing wine, come from drinking healths to a draught at a meal; and, laſtly, to diſcontinue altogether: but if a man have the fortitude and reſolution to enfranchiſe himſelf at once, that is the beſt. Bacon's Eſſays.
If they won a battle, priſoners became ſlaves, and continued ſo in their generations, unleſs enfranchiſed by their maſters. Temple.
3. To free or releaſe from cuſtody.
The gentleman, I told your ladyſhip,
Had come along with me, but that his miſtreſs
Did hold his eyes lockt in her cryſtal looks.
—Belike, that now ſhe hath enfranchiſed them,
Upon ſome other pawn for fealty. Shakeſpeare.
4. To deniſen; to endeniſen.
Theſe words have been enfranchiſed amongſt us. Watts.
ENFRA/NCHISEMENT. n. ſ. [from enfranchise.]
1. Inveſtiture of the privileges of a deniſen.
The incorporating a man into any ſociety, or body politick.
For example, he that is by charter made denizen of England, is ſaid to be enfranchiſed; and ſo is he that is made a citizen of London, or other city, or burgeſs of any town corporate, becauſe he is made partaker of thoſe liberties that appertain to the corporation. Cowel.
His coming hither hath no farther ſcope,
Than for his lineal royalties, and to beg
Enfranchiſement immediate on his knees. Shakeſp. Rich. II.
2. Releafe from priſon or from ſlavery.
Never did captive with a freer heart
Caſt off his chains of bondage, and embrace
His golden uncontroll'd enfranchiſement. Shakeſp. Richard II.
ENFRO/ZEN. particip. [from frozen.] Congealed with cold.
Yet to augment the anguiſh of my ſmart,
Thou haſt enfrozen her diſdainful breaſt,
That no one drop of pity there doth reſt. Spencer on Love.
TO ENGA/GE. v. a. [engager, French.]
1. To make liable for a debt to a creditor.
I have engag'd myſelf to a dear friend,
Engag'd my friend to his meer enemy,
To feed my means. Shakeſp. Merchant of Venice.
2. To impawn; to ſtake.
They moſt perfidiouſly condemn
Thoſe that engag'd their lives for them. Hudibras, p. ii.
3. To enliſt; to bring into a party.
All wicked men are of a party againſt religion: ſome luſt or intereſt engageth them againſt it. Willſon's Sermons.
4. To embark in an affair; to enter in an undertaking.
So far had we engaged ourſelves, unfortunate ſouls, that we liſted not to complain, ſince our complaints could not but carry the greateſt accuſation to ourſelves. Sidney, b. ii.
Before I engage myſelf in giving any answer to this objection of inconſumptible lights, I would ſee the effect certainly averred. Digby on Bodies.
5. To unite; to attach; to make adherent.
This humanity and good-nature engages every body to him, ſo that when he is pleaſant upon any of them, all his family are in good humour. Addiſon's Spectator, N<sup>o</sup>. 106.

6. To induce; to win by pleasing means; to gain.
To ev'ry duty he cou'd minds engage,
Provoke their courage, and command their rage. Waller.
His beauty these, and those his blooming age,
The rest his house and his own fame engage. Dryden's Æn.
So shall I court thy dearest truth,
When beauty ceases to engage;
So thinking on thy charming youth,
I'll love it o'er again in age. Prior.
7. To bind by any appointment or contract.
We have been firm to our allies, without declining any expençe to which we had engaged ourselves, and we have even exceeded our engagement. Atterbury's Sermons.
8. To seize by the attention.
9. To employ; to hold in business.
For I shall sing of battles, blood and rage,
Which princes and their people did engage. Dryden.
10. To encounter; to fight.
The rebel knave, who dares his prince engage,
Proves the just victim of his royal rage. Pope.
- TO ENGA'GE. v. n.
1. To conflict; to fight.
Upon advertisement of the Scots army, the earl of Holland was sent with a body to meet and engage with it. Clarendon.
2. To embark in any business; to enlist in any party.
'Tis not, indeed, my talent to engage
In lofty trifles, or to swell my page
With wind and noise. Dryden's Pers. Sat. 5.
- ENGA'GEMENT. n. f. [from engage; engagement, French.]
1. The act of engaging, impawning, or making liable to a debt.
2. Obligation by contract.
We have, in expence of blood, exceeded our engagements.
Atterbury's Sermons.
3. Adherence to a party or cause; partiality.
This practice may be obvious to any who impartially, and without engagement, is at the pains to examine. Swift.
4. Employment of the attention.
Play, either by our too constant or too long engagement in it, becomes like an employment or profession. Rogers's Sermon.
5. Fight; conflict; battle.
Our army, led by valiant Torrismond,
Is now in hot engagement with the Moors. Dryden.
Encourag'd by despair, or obstinate
To fall like men in arms, some dare renew Feeble engagement, meeting glorious fate
On the firm land. Phillips.
6. Obligation; motive.
This is the greatest engagement not to forfeit an opportunity. Hammond's Fundamentals.
- TO ENGA'OL. v. a. [from gaol.] To imprison; to confine.
Within my mouth you have engaol'd my tongue,
Doubly portcullis'd with my teeth and lips. Shakesp. R. II.
- TO ENGA'RRISON. v. a. [from garrison.] To protect by a garrison.
Neptune with a flying guard doth engarrison her strongly.
Howell's Vocal Forrest.
- TO ENGE'NDER. v. a. [engendrer, French.]
1. To beget between different sexes.
This bastard love is engendered betwixt lust and idleness. Sid.
2. To produce; to form.
Oh nature! thou, who of the self-same mettle,
Whereof thy proud child, arrogant man, is pufft,
Engender'st the black toad and adder blue. Shakesp. Timon.
Again, if souls do other souls beget,
'Tis by themselves, or by the body's pow'r:
If by themselves, what doth their working let,
But they might souls engender ev'ry hour? Davies.
3. To excite; to cause; to produce.
Say, can you fast? Your stomachs are too young,
And abstinence engenders maladies. Shakesp. Love's Lab. Lost.
The presence of a king engenders love
Amongst his subjects and his loyal friends. Shakesp. Henry VI.
That engenders thunder in his breast,
And makes him roar these accusations forth. Shakesp. H. VI.
It unloads the mind, engenders thoughts, and animates virtue. Addison's Spectator, N<sup>o</sup>. 93.
4. To bring forth.
Vice engenders shame, and folly broods o'er grief. Prior.
- TO ENGE'NDER. v. n. To be caused; to be produced.
Thick clouds are spread, and storms engender there. Dryd.
- ENGINE. n. f. [engin, French; ingegn, Italian.]
1. Any mechanical complication, in which various movements and parts concur to one effect.
2. A military machine.
This is our engine, towers that overthrows;
Our spear that hurts, our sword that wounds our foes. Fairf.
3. Any instrument.
The sword, the arrow, the gun, with many terrible en- gines of death, will be well employed. Raleigh's Essays.
He takes the scissars, and extends
The little engine on his fingers ends. Pope's Rape of the Lock.

4. Any instrument to throw water upon burning houses.
Some cut the pipes, and some the engines play;
And some, more bold, mount ladders to the fire. Dryden.
5. Any means used to bring to pass, or to effect. Usually in an ill sense.
Prayer must be divine and heavenly, which the devil with all his engines so violently opposeth. Duppa's Rules for Devotion.
6. An agent for another. In contempt.
They had th' especial engines been, to rear
His fortunes up into the state they were.
- ENGINE'ER. n. f. [engingnier, French.] One who manages engines; one who directs the artillery of an army.
For 'tis the sport to have the engineer
Hoist with his own petard. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
Him thus enrag'd,
Descrying from afar, some engineer,
Dext'rous to guide th' unerring charge, design'd
By one nice shot to terminate the war. Phillips.
An author, who points his satire at a great man, is like the engineer who signalized himself by this ungenerous practice.
Addison's Freeholder, N<sup>o</sup>. 19.
- ENGINE'RY. n. f. [from engine.]
1. The act of managing artillery:
They may descend in mathematicks to fortification, architecture, enginery, or navigation. Milton on Education.
2. Engines of war; artillery.
We saw the foe
Approaching, gross and huge, in hollow cube Training his dev'lish enginery. Milton.
- TO ENGI'RD. v. a. [from gird.] To encircle; to surround;
to environ; to encompass.
My heart is drown'd with grief,
My body round engirt with misery;
For what's more miserable than discontent? Shak. Hen. VI.
That gold must round engirt these brows of mine. Shakesp.
- EN'GLE. n. f. [derived from the French engluer, to catch with birdlime.] A gull; a put; a bubble. Hammer.
I spied
An ancient engle going down the hill,
Will serve our turn. Shakesp. Taming of the Shrew.
An alteration of Theobald's for angel.
- ENGLISH. adj. [engler, Saxon.] Belonging to England;
thence English is the language of England.
He hath neither Latin, French, nor Italian; and you may come into the court, and swear that I have a poor pennyworth in the English. Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.
Of English talc, the coarser sort is called plaister, or parget;
the finer, spoad. Woodward.
- TO ENGLISH. v. a. [from the noun.] To translate into English.
We find not a word in the text can properly be rendered anise, which is what the Latins call anethum, and properly Englished dill. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. vii. c. 7.
- TO ENGLU'T. v. a. [engloutir, French.]
1. To swallow up.
Neither my place, nor ought I heard of business,
Hath rais'd me from my bed; nor doth the general
Take hold on me: for my particular grief
Engluts and swallows other sorrows. Shakespeare's Othello.
Certainly, thou art so near the gulf,
Thou needs must be englutted. Shakespeare's Henry V.
How many prodigal bits have slaves and peasants
This night englutted! Shakespeare's Timon.
2. To glut; to pamper.
Whose grieved minds, which choler did englut,
Against themselves turning their wrathful spight. Fai. Qu.
Being once englutted with vanity, he will straightway loath all learning. Ascham's Schoolmaster.
- TO ENGO'RE. v. a. [from gore.] To pierce; to prick.
As savage bull, whom two fierce mastiffs bait,
When rancour doth with rage him once engore,
Forgets with wary ward them to await,
But with his dreadful horns them drives afore. Fairy Queen.
- TO ENGO'RGE. v. a. [from gorge, French, a throat.] To swallow; to devour; to gorge.
Then fraught with rancour and engorged ire,
He cast at once him to avenge for all. Fairy Queen, b. i.
That is the gulf of greediness, they say,
That deep engorgeth all this world is prey. Spenser's Fa. Qu.
- TO ENGO'RGE. v. n. To devour; to feed with eagerness and voracity; to riot.
Greedily she engorg'd without restraint,
And knew not eating death! Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ix.
- TO ENGRA'IL. v. a. [from grele, French, hail.] To batter; to bruise as with hail. A word now used only in heraldry, for, to indent in curve lines.
Æacides then shews
A long lance, and a caldron, new, engrail'd with twenty hues. Chapman's Iliads.
Polwheel beareth a faultier engrailed. Carew's Survey.
- TO ENGRA'IN. v. a. [from grain.] To die deep; to die in grain.

Sees thou how fresh my flowers being spread,
Dyed in lilie white and crimson red,
With leaves engrain'd in lussy green. Spenser's Pastorals.
To ENGRA'PPLE v. n. [from grapple.] To close with; to contend with hold on each other.
There shall young Hotspur, with a fury led,
Engrapple with thy son, as fierce as he. Daniel's Civ. War.
To ENGRA'SP v. a. [from grasp.] To seize; to hold fast in the hand; to gripe.
Now 'gan Pyrrocles wax as wood as he,
And him affronted with impatient might;
And both together fierce engrasped he,
Whiles Guyon standing by, their uncouth strife does see. Fairy Queen, b. ii. cant. 5. stan. 20.
To ENGRA'VE v. a. preter. engraved; part. pass. engraved or engraven. [engraver, French.]
1. To picture by incisions in any matter.
Her ivory forehead, full of bounty brave,
Like a broad table, did itself dispread,
For love his lofty triumphs to engrave,
And write the battles of his great godhead. Fairy Queen.
O'er all, the heav'n's refulgent image shines;
On either gate were six engraven signs. Addison's Ovid's Met.
Names fresh engrav'd appear'd of wits renown'd;
I look'd again, nor could their trace be found. Pope.
2. To mark wood or stone.
Engrave the two stones with the names. Ex. xxviii. 11.
3. To impress deeply; to imprint.
It will scarce seem possible, that God should engrave principles, in men's minds, in words of uncertain signification. Locke.
Our Saviour makes this return, fit to be engraven in the hearts of all promoters of charity. Atterbury's Sermons.
IV Sounds which address the ear, are lost and die
In one short hour; but that which strikes the eye,
Lives long upon the mind: the faithful sight
Engraves the knowledge with a beam of light. Watts.
4. [from grave.] To bury; to inhume; to inter.
The son had charge of them now being dead,
In seemly sort their corse to engrave,
And deck with dainty flowers their bridal bed. Fai. Queen.
ENGRA'YER n. f. [from engrave] A cutter in stone or other matter.
Images are not made in the brain itself, as the pencil of a painter or engraver makes the images in the table or metal, but are imprinted in a wonderful method in the very soul itself. Hale's Origin of Mankind.
To ENGRI'EVE v. a. [from grieve.] To pain; to vex; to afflict; to disconsolate.
The gnawing anguish, and sharp jealousy,
Which his sad speech infixed in my breast,
Rankled so sore, and fester'd inwardly,
That my engrieved mind could find no rest. Fairy Queen.
Aches, and hurts, and corns, do engrieve either towards rain, or towards frost. Bacon's Natural History, N<sup>o</sup>. 828.
To ENGRO'SS v. a. [grossir, French.]
1. To thicken; to make thick.
But more happy he than wise,
Of that sea's nature did him not avise;
The waves thereof so slow and sluggish were,
Engross'd with mud, which did them foul agrieve,
That every weighty thing they did upbear. Fairy Queen.
2. To encrease in bulk.
Though pillars, by channeling, be seemingly engrossed to our sight, yet they are truly weakened in themselves. Wotton.
3. To fatten; to plump up.
Not sleeping, to engross his idle body;
But praying, to enrich his watchful soul. Shakesf. Rich. III.
4. To seize in the gross; to seize the whole of any thing.
If thou engrossest all the griefs as thine,
Thou robbst me of a moiety. Shak. All's well that ends well.
Those two great things that so engross the desires and designs of both the nobler and ignobler sort of mankind, are to be found in religion; namely, wisdom and pleasure. South's Sermon.
A dog, a parrot, or an ape,
Or some worse brute in human shape,
Engross the fancies of the fair. Swift.
5. To purchase the whole of any commodity for the sake of selling at a high price.
6. To copy in a large hand.
Here is th' indictment of the good lord Hastings,
Which in a fet hand fairly is engross'd. Shakesf. Rich. III.
A clerk, foredoom'd his father's soul to cross,
Who pens a stanza when he should engross. Pope's Epistles.
ENGRO'SSER n. f. [from engross.] He that purchases large quantities of any commodity, in order to sell it at a high price.
A new sort of engrossers, or forestallers, having the feeding and supplying this numerous body of workmen in the woollen manufactures, out of their warehouses, set the price upon the poor landholder. Locke.

ENGRO'SSMENT n. f. [from engross.] Appropriation of things in the gross; exorbitant acquisition.
Our thighs are packt with wax, our mouths with honey:
We bring it to the hive; and, like the bees,
Are murder'd for our pains! This bitter taste Yield his engrossments to the dying father. Shakesf. Henry IV.
Those held their immoderate engrossments of power and favour by no other tenure than presumption. Swift.
To ENGUA'RD v. a. [from guard.] To protect; to defend; to surround as guards.
A hundred knights! yes, that on ev'ry dream
He may enguard his dotage with their pow'rs,
And hold our lives at mercy. Shakespeare's King Lear.
To ENHA'NCE v. a. [hauffer, enhauffer, French.]
1. To lift up; to raise on high. A sense now obsolete.
Both of them high at once their hands enhanc'd,
And both at once their huge blows down did sway. Fa. Qu.
2. To raise; to advance; to heighten in price.
The desire of money is every where the same; its vent varies very little, but as its greater scarcity enhances its price, and increases the scramble. Locke.
3. To raise in esteem.
What is it but the experience of want that enhances the value of plenty. L'Estrange.
The remembrance of the difficulties we now undergo, will contribute to enhance our pleasure. Atterbury's Sermons.
4. To aggravate; to increase from bad to worse.
To believe or pretend that whatever our hearts incite is the will of God 'within us, is the principle of villainy that hath acted in the children of disobedience, enhanced and improved with circumstances of greater impudence than the most abominable heathens were guilty of. Hammond.
The relation which those children bore to the priesthood, contributed to enhance their guilt, and increase their punishment. Atterbury's Sermons.
ENHA'NCEMENT n. f. [from enhance.]
1. Encrease; augmentation of value.
Their yearly rents are not improved, the landlords making no less gain by fines than by enhancement of rents. Bacon.
2. Aggravation; encrease of ill.
Jocular slanders have, from the slightness of the temptation, an enhancement of guilt. Government of the Tongue, f. 5.
ENIGMA n. f. [ænigma, Latin; αἰνigma.] A riddle; an obscure question; a position expressed in remote and ambiguous terms.
The dark enigma will allow
A meaning; which, if well I understand,
From sacrilege will free the god's command. Dryden.
A custom was amongst the ancients of proposing an enigma at festivals, and adjudging a reward to him that solved it. Pope.
ENIGMA'TICAL adj. [from enigma.]
1. Obscure; ambiguously or darkly expressed.
Your answer, sir, is enigmatical. Sh. Much Ado about Nothing.
Enigmatical deliveries comprehend useful verities; but being mistaken by liberal expositors at first, they have been misunderstood by most since. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
2. Cloudy; obscurely conceived or apprehended.
Faith here is the assent to those things which come to us by hearing, and are so believed by adherence, or dark enigmatical knowledge, but hereafter are seen or known demonstratively. Hammond's Practical Catechism.
ENIGMA'TICALLY adv. [from enigma.] In a sense different from that which the words in their familiar acceptation imply.
Homer speaks enigmatically, and intends that these monsters are merely the creation of poetry. Notes on the Odyssey.
ENIGMATIST n. f. [from enigma.] One who deals in obscure and ambiguous matters; maker of riddles.
That I may deal more ingenuously with my reader than the abovementioned enigmatist has done, I shall present him with a key to my riddle; which, upon application, he will find exactly fitted to all the words of it. Addison's Whig Exam.
To ENJOIN v. a. [enjoindre, French.] To direct; to order; to prescribe. It is more authoritative than direct, and less imperious than command.
To satisfy the good old man,
I would bend under any heavy weight
That he'll enjoin me to. Shakesf. Much Ado about Nothing.
Monks and philosophers, and such as do continually enjoin themselves. Bacon's Natural History, N<sup>o</sup>. 292.
It endeavours to secure every man's interest, by enjoining that truth and fidelity be inviolably preserved. Tillot's Sermons.
ENJO'INER n. f. [from enjoin.] One who gives injunctions. Diët.
ENJO'INMENT n. f. [from enjoin.] Direction; command.
Critical trial should be made by publick enjoinment, whereby determination might be settled beyond debate. Brown's V. Err.
To ENJO'Y v. a. [jouir, enjouir, French.]
1. To feel or perceive with pleasure; to have a pleasing sense of; to be delighted with.
I could enjoy the pangs of death,
And smile in agony. Addison's Cato.

E N L

2. To obtain possession or fruition of.
Edward the faint, in whom it pleased God, righteous and just, to let England see what a blessing sin and iniquity would not suffer it to enjoy. Hooker, b. iv. f. 14.
He, who to enjoy
Plato's elysium, leap'd into the sea,
Cleombrotus. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. iii. l. 471.
3. To please; to gladden; to exhilarate; to glad; to delight.
This sense is usual with the reciprocal pronoun, and is derived from enjoûir.
Creatures are made to enjoy themselves, as well as to serve us. More's Antidote against Atheism.
When a man shall, with a sober, sedate, diabolical rancour, look upon and enjoy himself in the sight of his neighbour's sin and shame, can he plead the instigation of any appetite in nature? South's Sermons.
- To ENJOY. v. n. To live in happiness.
Then I shall be no more!
And Adam, wedded to another Eve, Shall live with her enjoying, I extinct. Milton's Parad. Lost.
- ENJOYER. n. f. [from enjoy.] One that has fruition or possession. DiA.
- ENJOYMENT. n. f. [from enjoy.] Pleasure; happiness; fruition.
His hopes and expectations are bigger than his enjoyments. Tillotson, Sermon 1.
- To ENKINDLE. v. a. [from kindle.]
1. To set on fire; to inflame; to put in a flame.
Edmund, enkindle all the sparks of nature
To quit this horrid act. Shakesp. King Lear.
2. To rouse passions; to set the soul into a flame.
Your hand
Gave sign for me to leave you: so I did,
Fearing to strengthen that impatience,
Which seem'd too much enkindled. Shak. Jul. Caesar.
3. To incite to any act or hope.
Do you not hope your children shall be kings?
When those that gave the thane of Cawder to me,
Promis'd no less to them?
—That, trusted home,
Might yet enkindle you unto the crown. Shakesp. Macbeth.
- To ENLARGE. v. a. [elargir, French.]
1. To make greater in quantity or appearance.
The wall, in lustre and effect like glass,
Which o'er each object casting various dyes,
Enlarges some, and others multiplies. Pope's Temp. of Fame.
2. To encrease any thing in magnitude; to extend.
Where there is something both lasting and scarce, and so valuable to be hoarded up, there men will not be apt to enlarge their possessions of land. Locke.
3. To encrease by representation; to magnify; to exaggerate.
4. To dilate; to expand.
O ye Corinthians, our mouth is open unto you, our heart is enlarged. 2 Cor. vi. 11.
5. To set free from limitation.
Though she appear honest to me, yet at other places she enlargeth her mirth so far, that there is shrewd construction made of her. Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.
6. To extend to more purposes or uses.
It hath grown from no other root than only a desire to enlarge the necessary use of the word of God, which desire hath begotten an error, enlarging it farther than soundness of truth will bear. Hooker, b. ii. f. 1.
7. To amplify; to aggrandise.
This is that science which would truly enlarge mens minds, were it studied. Locke.
Could the mind, as in number, come to so small a part of extension or duration as excluded divisibility, that would be the indivisible unit, or idea; by repetition of which it would make its more enlarged ideas of extension and duration. Locke.
8. To release from confinement.
Enlarge the man committed yesterday,
That rail'd against our person. Shakespeare's Henry V.
9. To diffuse in eloquence.
They enlarged themselves upon this subject with all the invidious insinuations they could devise. Clarendon, b. viii.
- To ENLARGE. v. n. To expatiate; to speak in many words.
They appointed the chancellor of the Exchequer to enlarge upon any of those particulars. Clarendon, b. viii.
This is a theme so unpleasant, I delight not to enlarge on it; rather with the memory of it were extinct. Decay of Piety.
- ENLARGEMENT. n. f. [from enlarge.]
1. Encrease; augmentation; farther extension.
The king afterwards enlarged the constant obedience of the city with enlargement both of liberties and of revenues. Hayw.
The ocean, which so long our hopes confin'd,
Could give no limits to his vaster mind:
Our bounds enlargement was his latest toil,
Nor hath he left us prisoners to our isle. Waller.
There never were any islands, or other considerable parcels of land, amassed or heaped up; nor any enlargement, or

E N M

- addition of earth, made to the continent by the mud that is carried down into the sea by rivers. Woodward's Nat. Hist.
The commons in Rome generally pursued the enlargement of their power by more set quarrels of one entire assembly against another. Swift on the Dissent. in Athens and Rome.
The Greek tongue received many enlargements between the time of Homer and that of Plutarch. Swift.
2. Release from confinement or servitude.
Lieutenant,
At our enlargement what are thy due fees? Shak. Henry VI.
If thou holdest thy peace at the time, then shall there enlargement and deliverance arise to the Jews from another place. Esther iv. 14.
  3. Magnifying representation.
And all who told it, added something new;
And all who heard it, made enlargements too. Pope.
  4. Expatiating speech; copious discourse.
He concluded with an enlargement upon the vices and corruptions which were got into the army. Clarendon, b. viii.
  - ENLARGER. n. f. [from enlarge.] Amplifier; one that encreases or dilates any thing.
We shall not contentiously rejoin, but confer what is in us unto his name and honour, ready to be swallowed in any worthy enlarger. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
  - To ENLIGHT. v. a. [from light.] To illuminate; to supply with light; to enlighten.
Wit from the first has shone on ages past,
Enlights the present, and shall warm the last. Pope.
  - To ENLIGHTEN. v. a. [from light.]
  1. To illuminate; to supply with light.
As one sun shineth to the whole world, so there is no faith but this one published, the brightness whereof must enlighten all that come to the knowledge of the truth. Hooker, b. v. f. 46.
  2. To instruct; to furnish with encrease of knowledge.
This doctrine is so agreeable to reason, that we meet with it in the writings of the enlightened heathens. Spectator.
'Tis he who enlightens our understanding, corrects our wills, and enables us to subdue our affections to the law of God. Rog.
  3. To cheer; to exhilarate; to gladden.
  4. To supply with sight; to quicken in the faculty of vision.
Love never fails to master what he finds;
The fool enlightens, and the wise he blinds. Dryden.
  - ENLIGHTENER. n. f. [from enlighten.]
  1. Illuminator; one that gives light.
O, sent from heav'n,
Enlight'ner of my darkness! gracious things
Thou hast reveal'd. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xii. l. 271.
  2. Instructor.
  - To ENLINK. v. a. [from link.] To chain to; to bind.
What is it then to me, if impious war,
Array'd in flames like to the prince of fiends,
Do with his smirch'd complexion all fell feats,
Enlinkt to waste and desolation. Shakesp. Henry V.
  - To ENLIVEN. v. a. [from life, live.]
  1. To make quick; to make alive; to animate.
  2. To make vigorous or active.
In a glass-house the workmen often fling in a small quantity of fresh coals, which seems to disturb the fire, but very much enlivens it. Swift's Thoughts on various Subjects.
  3. To make sprightly or vivacious.
  4. To make gay or cheerful in appearance.
  - ENLIVENER. n. f. [from enliven.] That which animates; that which puts in motion; that which invigorates.
But fire, th' enlivener of the general frame,
Is one, its operation still the same:
Its principle is in itself; while ours
Works, as confederates war, with mingled pow'rs. Dryden.
  - To ENLUMINE. v. a. [enluminer, French.] To illumine; to illuminate; to enlighten. See ILLUMINE.
For having yet, in his deducted spright,
Some sparks remaining of that heav'nly fire,
He is enlumin'd with that goodly light,
Unto like goodly semblance to aspire. Spens. Hymn on Love.
  - ENMITY. n. f. [from enemy; as if enemity, inamity.]
  1. Unfriendly disposition; malevolence; aversion.
Their being forced to their books, in an age at enmity with all restraint, has been the reason why many have hated books. Locke.
  2. Contrariety of interests or inclinations; mutual malignity.
They shall within this hour,
On a dissension of a doit, break out
In bitterest enmity. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
Between thee and the woman I will put
Enmity; and between thine and her seed:
Her seed shall bruise thy head, thou bruise his heel. Milton.
How far these controversies, and appearing enmities of those glorious creatures, may be carried, is not my business to shew or determine. Dryden's Juven. Dedication.
  3. State of opposition.
Know ye not that the friendship of the world is enmity with God? Jam. iv. 4.
You must firmly be convinced, that every sin you commit sets sets you at enmity with heaven, and will, if not forsaken, render you incapable of it. Wake's Preparation for Death.

4. Malice; mischievous attempts.

I abjure all roofs, and chuse

To wage against the enmity o' th' air. Shakesf. King Lear.

He who performs his duty in a station of great power, must needs incur the utter enmity of many, and the high displeasure of more. Atterbury's Sermons.

To ENMA'RBLE. v. a. [from marble.] To turn to marble; to harden.

Their dying to delay,

Thou do'st enmarble the proud heart of her,

Whose love before their life they do prefer. Spenser.

To ENME'SH. v. a. [from mesh.] To net; to intangle; to intrap.

So will I turn her virtue into pitch;

And out of her own goodness make the net

That shall enmesh them all. Shakespeare's Othello.

ENNE'AGON. n. f. [ἐννεα and γωνία.] A figure of nine angles.

ENNEA'TICAL. adj. [ἐννεα.] Enneatical days, are every ninth day of a sickness; and enneatical years, every ninth year of one's life.

To ENNO'BLE. v. a. [ennobler, French.]

1. To raise from commonalty to nobility.

Many fair promotions

Are given daily to ennoble those,

That scarce some two days since were worth a noble. Shak.

2. To dignify; to aggrandise; to exalt; to raise.

God raised up the spirit of this great person, and ennobled his courage and conduct with the entire overthrow of this mighty host. South's Sermons.

What can ennoble fots, or slaves, or cowards!

Alas! not all the blood of all the Howards. Pope's Essays.

3. To elevate; to magnify.

None so lovely, sweet and fair,

Or do more ennoble love.

Ennobled, yet unchang'd, if nature shine.

Waller.

Anon.

4. To make famous or illustrious.

The breath of Scotland the Spaniards could not endure; neither durst they as invaders land in Ireland, but only ennobled some of the coasts thereof with shipwrecks. Bacon.

ENNO'BLEMENT. n. f. [from ennoble.]

1. The act of raising to the rank of nobility.

He added during parliament, to his former creations, the ennoblement or advancement in nobility of a few others. Bacon.

2. Exaltation; elevation; dignity.

The eternal wisdom enriched us with all ennoblements, suitable to the measures of an unstraitned goodness. Glanv. Scepsf.

ENODA'TION. n. f. [enodatio, Latin.]

1. The act of untying a knot.

2. Solution of a difficulty.

Dict.

ENO'RMITY. n. f. [from enormous.]

1. Deviation from rule; irregularity.

2. Deviation from right; depravity; corruption.

We shall speak of the particular abuses and enormities of the government. Spenser's State of Ireland.

That the mean, which this law provideth, will be always sufficient to bridle or restrain enormity, no man can warrant. Hooker, b. iii. f. 10.

There are many little enormities in the world, which our preachers would be very glad to see removed; but at the same time dare not meddle with them, for fear of betraying the dignity of the pulpit. Addison's Guardian, N<sup>o</sup>. 116.

3. Atrocious crimes; flagitious villanies; crimes exceeding the common measure.

It is not a bare speculation that kings may run into enormities; the practice may be proved by examples. Swift.

ENO'RMOUS. adj. [enormis, Latin.]

1. Irregular; out of rule; not regulated by any stated measures; excursive beyond the limits of a regular figure.

Nature here

Wanton'd, as in her prime; and plaid at will

Her virgin fancies, pouring forth more sweets,

Wild above rule, or art, enormous blifs! Milton's Par. Lost.

The enormous part of the light in the circumference of every lucid point, ought to be less discernible in shorter telescopes than in longer, because the shorter transmit less light to the eye. Newton's Opt.

2. Disordered; confused.

I shall find time

From this enormous state, and seek to give

Losses their remedies. Shakespeare's King Lear.

3. Wicked beyond the common measure.

4. Exceeding in bulk the common measures: always used with some degree of dislike, or horror, or wonder.

A giant-shepherd here his flock maintains,

Far from the rest, and solitary reigns,

A form enormous! far unlike the race

Of human birth, in stature, or in face. Pope's Odyssey.

ENO'RMOUSLY. adv. [from enormous.] Beyond measure.

One who could ever espouse a notion so enormously absurd and senseless, as that the world was framed by chance. Woodw.

ENO'RMOUSNESS. n. f. [from enormous.] Immeasurable wickedness.

When those who have no opportunity to examine our faith, see the enormousness of our works, what should hinder them from measuring the master by the disciples? Dec. of Piety.

ENO'UGH. adj. [zenoh, Saxon; ganah, Gothick; genoeg, Dut. It is not easy to determine whether this word be an adjective or adverb; perhaps, when it is joined with a substantive, it is an adjective, of which enow is the plural. In other situations it seems an adverb; except that after the verb to have, or to be, either expressed or understood, it may be accounted a substantive. It is pronounced as if it were written enuf.] In a sufficient measure; so as may satisfy; so as may suffice.

Why wou'dst thou go, with one consent they cry,

When thou hadst gold enough, and Emily. Dryden.

When there was not room enough for their herds, they by consent separated, and enlarged their pasture. Locke.

ENO'UGH. n. f.

1. Something sufficient in greatness or excellence.

'Tis enough for me to have endeavoured the union of my country, whilst I continued in publick employments. Temple.

The indolency and enjoyment we have, sufficing for our present happiness, we desire not to venture the change, being content, and that is enough. Locke.

Enough for me that to the list'ning swains,

First in those fields I sung the silvan strains. Pope.

I will not quarrel with the present age: it has done enough for me, in making and keeping you two my friends. Pope.

2. Something equal to a man's powers or faculties.

He could not have been without some great defects and main errors in his nature, customs, and proceedings, which he had enough to do to save and help, with a thousand little industries and watches. Bacon's Henry VII.

ENO'UGH. adv.

1. In a sufficient degree; in a degree that gives satisfaction.

2. It notes a slight augmentation of the positive degree: as, I am ready enough to quarrel; that is, I am rather quarrelsome than peaceable.

I am apt enough to think, that this same binarium of a stronger and a weaker, like unto masculine and feminine, doth hold in all living bodies. Bacon.

It is sometimes pleasant enough to consider the different notions which different persons have of the same thing. Addison.

They are now in prison at Florence; and, as it is said, treated hardly enough. Addison on Italy.

3. Sometimes it notes diminution; as, the song is well enough; that is, not quite well, though not much amiss.

4. An exclamation noting fulness or satiety.

Macbeth, beware Macduff!

Beware the thane of Fife! Dismiss me.—Enough. Shakesp.

Henceforth I'll bear

Affliction, 'till it do cry out itself,

Enough, enough, and die.

Shakespeare's King Lear.

ENO'w. The plural of enough. In a sufficient number.

The earth hath since born enow bleeding witnesses, that it was no want of true courage. Sidney, b. ii.

The walls of the church there are enow contented to build, and to underfet it with goodly pillars: the marbles are polished, the roofs shine with gold, the altar hath precious stones to adorn it, and of Christ's ministers no choice at all. Hooker, b. v. f. 15.

As if

Man had not selfish foes enow besides,

That, day and night, for his destruction wait. Milt. P. Lost.

My conquering brother will have slaves enow,

To pay his cruel vows for victory. Dryden's Don Sebastian.

There are at Rome enow modern works of architecture to employ any reasonable man. Addison on ancient Medals.

EN PASSANT. adv. [French.] By the way.

To ENRA'GE. v. a. [enrager, French.] To irritate; to provoke; to make furious; to exasperate.

The justice of their quarrel should not so much encourage as enrage them, being to revenge the dishonour done to their king, and to chastise the deceitful dealings of their enemies. Hayward.

Enrag'd at this, upon the bawd I flew;

And that which most enrag'd me was, 'twas true. Walsh.

To ENRA'NGE. v. a. [from range.] To place regularly; to put into order.

In their jaw

Three ranks of iron teeth enranged were. Fairy Queen, b. i.

1. To insert in a roll or register.

There be enrolled amongst the king's forces about thirty thousand men of the Jews.

1 Mac. x. 36.

We find ourselves enrolled in this heavenly family as servants, and as sons.

Spratt's Sermons.

The champions, all of high degree,

Who knighthood lov'd, and deeds of chivalry,

Throng'd to the lists, and envy'd to behold

The names of others, not their own, enroll'd.

Dryden.

Mentes, an ever-honour'd name of old,

High in Ulysses' social list enroll'd.

Pope's Odyssey, b. i.

Heroes and heroines of old,

By honour only were enroll'd

Among their brethren of the skies;

To which, though late, shall Stella rise.

Swift.

2. To record; to leave in writing.

He swore consent to your succession;

His oath enrolled in the parliament. Shakespeare's Henry VI.

Laws, which none shall find

Left them enroll'd; or what the spirit within

Shall on the heart engrave. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xii.

3. To involve; to inwrap.

From his infernal furnace forth he threw

Huge flames, that dimmed all the heaven's light,

Enroll'd in dusky smok and brimstone blue. Fairy Queen.

Flee evil, and do good; seek peace, and ensue it. Com. Pray.

But now these Epicures begin to smile,

And say, my doctrine is more safe than true;

And that I fondly do myself beguile,

While these receiv'd opinions I ensue. Davies.

TO ENSU'E. v. n.

1. To follow as a consequence to premises.

Let this be granted, and it shall hereupon plainly ensue, that the light of Scripture once shining in the world, all other light of nature is therewith in such sort drowned, that now we need it not. Hooker, b. ii. f. 4.

2. To succeed in a train of events, or course of time.

The man was noble;

But with his last attempt he wip'd it out,

Destroy'd his country, and his name remains

To the ensuing age abhorr'd. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

Bishops are placed by collation of the king, without any precedent election or confirmation ensuing. Hayward.

Of worse deeds worse sufferings must ensue. Milt. P. L.

With mortal heat each other shall pursue;

What wars, what wounds, what slaughter shall ensue! Dryd.

Impute not then those ills which may ensue

To me, but those who with incessant hate

Pursue my life. Rowe's Ambitious Stepmother.

Then grave Clarissa graceful wav'd her fan;

Silence ensu'd, and thus the nymph began. Pope.

They, within the beast's vast womb,

The choice and flow'r of all their troops entomb. Denham.

E'NTRAILS. n. f. without a singular. [entrailles, Fr. irreg.]

1. The intestines; the bowels; the inward parts; the guts.

What, hath thy fiery heart so parch'd thine entrails,

That not a tear can fall? Shak. H. VI.

As for the entrails, they are all without bones; save that a bone is sometimes found in the heart of a stag, and it may be in some other creature. Bacon's Natural History, N<sup>o</sup>. 749.

The earth hath lost

Most of her ribs, as entrails; being now

Wounded no less for marble than for gold. Ben. Johnf. Catil.

I tear that harden'd heart from out her breast,

Which with her entrails makes my hungry hounds a feast. Dr.

2. The internal parts; recess; caverns.

A precious ring that lightens all the hole,

And shews the ragged entrails of this pit. Shakesp. Tit. Andr.

He had brought to light but little of that treasure, that lay so long hid in the dark entrails of America. Locke.

TO ENTRA'IL. v. a. To mingle; to interweave; to diversify.

Over him, art striving to compare

With nature, did an arbor green dispreed,

Framed of wanton ivy, flow'ring fair,

Through which the fragrant eglantine did spread,

His pricking arms entail'd with roses red. Fairy Queen.

A little wicker basket,

Made of fine twigs, entrail'd curiously,

In which they gather'd flowers. Spenser's Prothal.

ENTRANCE. n. f. [entrant, French.]

1. The power of entering into a place.

Whence are you, sir? Has the porter his eyes in his head, that he gives entrance to such companions? Pray, get you out. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

Where diligence opens the door of the understanding, and impartially keeps it, truth is sure to find both an entrance and a welcome too. South's Sermons.

2. The act of entering.

The reason, that I gather, he is mad,

Is a mad tale he told to-day at dinner,

Of his own door being shut against his entrance. Shakespeare.

Better far, I guess,

That we do make our entrance several ways. Shak. Hen. VI.

All the world's a stage,

And all the men and women merely players;

They have their exits and their entrances. Shak. As you like it.

3. The passage by which a place is entered; avenue.

He charged them to keep the passages of the hilly country; for by them there was an entrance into Judea. Judith iv. 7.

Palladio did conclude, that the principal entrance was never to be regulated by any certain dimensions, but by the dignity of the matter. Watson's Architecture.

Many are the ways that lead

To his grim cave, all dismal! yet to sense

More terrible at th' entrance than within. Milt. Parad. Lost.

Let this, and every other anxious thought,

At th' entrance of my threshold be forgot. Dryden's Juven.

4. Initiation; commencement.

This is that which, at first entrance, balks and cools them: they want their liberty. Locke.

5. Intellectual ingrefs; knowledge.

He that travelleth into a country before he hath some entrance into the language, goeth to school, and not to travel. Bacon's Essays.

6. The act of taking possession of an office or dignity.

From the first entrance of this king to his reign, never was king either more loving, or better beloved. Hayw. Edw. VI.

7. The beginning of any thing.

St. Augustine, in the entrance of one of his sermons, makes a kind of apology. Hakewill on Providence.

The earl of Holland we have had occasion to mention before in the first entrance upon this discourse. Clarendon.

TO ENTRA'NCE. v. n. [from trance; transe, French, from transse, Latin, to pass over; to pass for a time from one region to another.]

1. To put into a trance; to withdraw the soul wholly to other regions, while the body appears to lye in dead sleep.

2. To put into an extasy; to make insensible of present objects.

With delight I was all the while entranced, and carried so far from myself, as that I am right sorry that you ended so soon. Spenser's Ireland.

Adam, now enforc'd to close his eyes,

Sunk down, and all his spirits became entranc'd. Milton.

And I so ravish'd with her heav'nly note,

I stood entranc'd, and had no room for thought;

But all o'erpower'd with ecstasy of bliss,

Was in a pleasing dream of paradise. Dryden.

TO ENTRA'P. v. a. [from trap.]

1. To ensnare; to catch in a trap or snare.

Take heed, mine eyes, how ye do stare

Henceforth too rashly on that guileful net;

In which, if ever eyes entrapped are,

Out of her bands ye by no means shall get. Spenser.

2. To involve unexpectedly in difficulties or distresses; to entangle.

Misfortune waits advantage to entrap

The man most wary, in her whelming lap. Fairy Queen.

The fraud of England, not the force of France,

Hath now entrapt the noble minded Talbot. Shak. Hen. VI.

He sought to entrap me by intelligence. Shakesp. Hen. IV.

3. To take advantage of.

An injurious person lies in wait to entrap thee in thy words. Ecclus. viii. 11.

TO ENTRE'AT. v. a. [traiter, French.]

1. To petition; to solicit; to importune.

Isaac entreated the Lord for his wife. Gen. xxv. 21.

2. To prevail upon by solicitation.

I have a wife, whom, I protect, I love;

I would she were in heaven, so she could

Entreat some pow'r to change this curriish Jew. Shakespeare.

The Lord was entreated of him, and Rebecah his wife conceived. Gen. xxv. 21.

It were a fruitless attempt to appease a power, whom no prayers could entreat, no repentance reconcile. Rogers's Sermon.

3. To treat or use well or ill.

Whereas thy servant worketh truly, entreat him not evil. Ecclus. vii. 20.

Must you, sir John, protect my lady here?

Entreat her not the worse in that I pray

You use her well. Shakespeare's Henry VI. p. ii.

Well I entreated her, who well deserv'd:

I call'd her often; for she always serv'd:

Use made her person easy to my sight,

And ease insensibly produc'd delight. Prior.

4. To entertain; to amuse.

My lord, I must entreat the time alone.

—God shield I should disturb devotion. Sh. Rom. and Juliet.

5. To entertain; to receive.

The garden of Proserpina this night,

And in the midst thereof a silver seat,

With a thick arbour goodly overlight,

In which she often us'd, from open heat,

Herself to shroud, and pleasures to entreat. Fairy Queen.

TO ENTRE'AT. v. n.

1. To offer a treaty or compact.

Alexander was the first that entreated peace with them.

1 Mac. xvi. 47.

2. To treat; to discourse.

The most admirable mystery of nature is the turning of iron, touched with the loadstone, toward the North pole, of which I shall have farther occasion to entreat Hakewill.

3. To make a petition.

They charged me, on pain of perpetual displeasure, neither to speak of him, entreat for him, or any way sustain him. Shak.

The Janizaries entreated for them, as valiant men. Knolles.

ENTRE'ATANCE. n. f. [from entreat.] Petition; entreaty; solicitation.

These two entreatance made they might be heard,

Nor was their just petition long deny'd. Fairfax, b. ii.

ENTRE'ATY. n. f. [from entr. at.] Petition; prayer; solicitation; supplication; request.

If my weak orator

Can from his mother win the duke of York,

Anon expect him here; but if she be

Obdurate to entreaties, God forbid

We should infringe the holy privilege

Of sanctuary.

Shakespeare's Richard III.

ENTREME'ITS. n. f. [French.] Small plates set between the main dishes.

Chards of beet are plants of white beet transplanted, producing great tops, which, in the midst, have a large white main shoot, which is the true chard used in pottages and entremets.

Mortimer's Art of Hu. bandry.

ENTRY. n. f. [from enter; entree, French.]

1. The passage by which any one enters a house.

Some there are that know the resorts and falls of business, that cannot sink into the main of it; like a house that hath convenient stairs and entries, but never a fair room.

Bacon's Essays.

A strait long entry to the temple led,

Blind with high walls, and horror over head.

Dryden.

Is all this hurry made

On this account, because thou art afraid

A dirty hall or entry should offend

The curious eyes of thy invited friend?

Dryden's Juven.

We proceeded through the entry, and were necessarily kept in order by the situation.

2. The act of entrance; ingress.

Bathing and anointing give a relaxation or emolliation; and the mixture of oil and water is better than either of them alone, because water entereth better into the pores, and oil after entry softeneth better. Bacon's Natural History. N<sup>o</sup>. 730.

I took horse to the lake of Constance, which lies at two leagues distance from it, and is formed by the entry of the Rhine.

Addison on Italy.

By the entry of the chyle and air into the blood, by the lacteals, the animal may again revive. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

3. The act of taking possession of any estate.

4. The act of registering or setting down in writing.

A notary made an entry of this act. Bacon's New Atlantis.

5. The act of entering publickly into any city.

The day being come, he made his entry: he was a man of middle stature and age, and comely.

Bacon.

TO ENU'BILATE. v. a. [e and nubile, Latin.] To clear from clouds.

Diſt.

TO ENU'CLEATE. v. a. [enucleo, Latin.] To solve; to clear; to disentangle.

Diſt.

TO ENVELOP. v. a. [envelop, French.]

1. To inwrap; to cover; to invest with some integument.

2. To cover; to hide; to surround.

The best and wholesom'st spirits of the night envelop you, good provost.

Shakespeare's Measure for Measure.

A cloud of smoke envelops either host,

And all at once the combatants are lost:

Darkling they join adverse, and shock unseen,

Courfers with courfers justing, men with men.

Dryden.

It is but to approach nearer, and that mist that enveloped them will remove.

Locke.

Nocturnal shades

This world envelop, and th' inclement air

Persuades men to repel benumbing frosts.

Phillips.

3. To line; to cover on the inside.

His iron coat, all over grown with rust,

Was underneath enveloped with gold,

Darkned with filthy dust.

Fairy Queen.

ENVELO'PE. n. f. [French.] A wrapper; an outward case; an integument; a cover.

Send these to paper-sparing Pope;

And, when he sits to write,

No letter with an envelope

Could give him more delight

Swift.

TO ENVENOM. v. a. [from venom.]

1. To tinge with poison; to poison; to impregnate with venom.

It is never used of the person to whom poison is given, but of the draught, meat, or instrument by which it is conveyed.

The treacherous instrument is in thy hand,

Unbated and envenom'd.

Shak.peare.

Alcides, from Oechalia, crown'd

With conquest, felt th' envenom'd robe, and tore,

Through pain, up by the roots Thessalian pines.

Milton.

Nor with envenom'd tongue to blast the fame

Of harmless men.

Phillips.

2. To make odious.

Oh, what a world is this, when what is comely

Envenoms him that bears it!

Shakesp. As you like it.

3. To enrage.

With her full force she threw the pois'nous dart,

And fix'd it deep within Amata's heart;

That thus envenom'd she might kindle rage,

And sacrifice to strife her house and husband's age.

Dryden.

ENVIABLE. adj. [from envy.] Deserving envy; such as may excite envy.

They, in an enviable mediocrity of fortune, do happily possess themselves.

Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

ENVIER. n. f. [from envy.] One that envies another; a maligner; one that desires the downfall of another.

Men had need beware how they be too perfect in compliments; for that enviers will give them that attribute, to the disadvantage of their virtues.

Bacon's Essays, Civ. and Mor.

They ween'd

That self-same day, by fight or by surprize,

To win the mount of God, and on his throne

To set the envier of his state, the proud

Aspirer; but their thoughts prov'd fond and vain.

Milton.

All preferments in church and state were given by him, all his kindred and friends promoted, and all his enemies and enviers discountenanced.

Clarendon.

ENVIOUS. adj. [from envy.] Infected with envy; pained by the excellence or happiness of another.

A man of the most envious disposition that ever infected the air with his breath, whose eyes could not look right upon any happy man, nor ears bear the burden of any man's praise.

Sidn.

Still in thy right hand carry gentle peace,

To silence envious tongues.

Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

Be not thou envious against evil men.

Prov. xxiv. 19.

Neither be thou envious at the wicked.

Prov. xxiv. 19.

Sure you mistake the precept, or the tree;

Heav'n cannot envious of his blessings be.

Dryden.

ENVIOUSLY. adj. [from envious.] With envy; with malignity; with ill will.

Damned spirits, being fallen from heaven, endeavour enviously to obstruct the ways that may lead us thither.

Duppa.

How enviously the ladies look,

When they surprize me at my book!

And sure as they're alive at night,

As soon as gone, will shew their spight.

Swift.

TO ENVI'RON. v. a. [environner, French.]

1. To surround; to encompass; to encircle.

I stand as one upon a rock,

Environ'd with a wilderness of sea. Shakesp. Tit. Andronicus.

The country near unto the city of Sultania is on every side environed with huge mountains.

Knolles's History.

The manifold streams of goodly navigable rivers, as so many chains, environed the same site and temple.

Bacon.

On a plain, within the environing rocks, stood the city.

Sandys's Journey.

A wand'ring

Compact of unctuous vapour, which the night

Condenses, and the cold environs round. Milt. Parad. Lost.

Thought following thought, and step by step led on,

He enter'd now the bordering desert wild,

And with dark shades and rocks environ'd round,

His holy meditation thus pursu'd. Milton's Par. Regain'd.

God hath scattered several degrees of pleasure and pain in all the things that environ and affect us, and blended them together in almost all that our thoughts.

Locke.

2. To involve; to envelope.

May never glorious sun reflect his beams

Upon the country where you make abode!

But darkness and the gloomy shade of death

Environ you, 'till mischief and despair

Drive you to break your necks. Shakespeare's Henry VI.

Since she must go, and I must mourn, come, night,

Environ me with darkness whilst I write.

Donne.

3. To surround in a hostile manner; to besiege; to hem in.

Methought a legion of foul fiends

Environ'd me, and howled in mine ears

Such hideous cries, that with the very thought

I trembling wak'd.

Shakespeare's Richard III.

In thy danger,

If ever danger do environ thee,

Commend thy grievance to my holy prayer. Shakespeare.

I did but prompt the age to quit their clogs,

By the known rules of ancient liberty,

When straight a barbarous noise environs me.

Milton.

4. To inclose; to invest.

The

- The foldier, that man of iron,
Whom ribs of horror all environ. Cleave and.
- ENVIRONS. n. f. [environs, French.] The neighbourhood or neighbouring places round about the country.
- TO ENUMERATE. v. a. [enumero, Latin.] To reckon up singly; to count over distinctly; to number.
- You must not only acknowledge to God that you are a sinner, but must particularly enumerate the kinds of sin whereof you know yourself guilty. Wake's Preparation for Death.
- Besides enumerating the gross defect of duty to the queen; I shew how all things were managed wrong. Swift.
- ENUMERATION. n. f. [enumeratio, Latin.] The act of numbering or counting over; number told out.
- Whosoever reads St. Paul's enumeration of duties incumbent upon it, must conclude, that well nigh the business of Christianity is laid on charity. Sprat's Sermons.
- The chemists make spirit, salt, sulphur, water, and earth their five elements, though they are not all agreed in this enumeration of elements. Watts's Logick.
- TO ENUNCIATE. v. a. [enuncio, Latin.] To declare; to proclaim; to relate; to express.
- ENUNCIATION. n. f. [enunciatio, Latin.]
1. Declaration; publick attestation; open proclamation.
This preaching is to strangers and infants in Christ, to produce faith; but this sacramental enunciation is the declaration and confession of it by men in Christ, declaring it to be done, and owned, and accepted, and prevailing. Taylor.
  2. Intelligence; information.
It remembers and retains such things as were never at all in the sense; as the conceptions, enunciations, and actions of the intellect and will. Hale's Origin of Mankind.
- ENUNCIATIVE. adj. [from enunciate.] Declarative; expressive.
- This presumption only proceeds in respect of the dispositive words, and not in regard of the enunciative terms thereof. Ayl.
- ENUNCIATIVELY. adv. [from enunciative.] Declaratively.
- ENVOY. n. f. [envoye, French.]
1. A publick minister sent from one power to another.
Now the Lycian lots conspire
With Phœbus; now Jove's envoy through the air Brings dismal tydings. Denham.
Perseus sent envoys to Carthage, to kindle their hatred against the Romans. Arbuthnot on Coins.
  2. A publick messenger, in dignity below an ambassador.
  3. A messenger.
The watchful sentinels at ev'ry gate,
At ev'ry passage to the senses wait;
Still travel to and fro' the nervous way,
And their impressions to the brain convey;
Where their report the vital envoys make,
And with new orders are commanded back. Blackm. Creat.
- TO ENVY. v. a. [envier, French; invidere, Latin.]
1. To hate another for excellence, happiness, or success.
Envy thou not the oppressor, and chuse none of his ways. Prov. iii. 31.
A woman does not envy a man for fighting courage, nor a man a woman for her beauty. Collier of Envy.
  2. To grieve at any qualities of excellence in another.
I have seen the fight,
When I have envied thy behaviour. Shakesp. Ant. and Cleop.
You cannot envy your neighbour's wisdom, if he gives you good counsel; nor his riches, if he supplies you in your wants; nor his greatness, if he employs it to your protection. Swift.
  3. To grudge; to impart unwillingly; to withhold maliciously.
Johnson, who, by studying Horace, had been acquainted with the rules, seemed to envy others that knowledge. Dryden.
- TO ENVY. v. n. To feel envy; to feel pain at the sight of excellence or felicity.
- In seeking tales and informations
Against this man, whose honesty the devil
And his disciples only envy at,
Ye blew the fire that burns ye. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.
He that loves God is not displeased at accidents which God chuses, nor envies at those gifts he bestows. Taylor.
Who would envy at the prosperity of the wicked, and the success of persecutors? Taylor's Rule of living holy.
- ENVY. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Pain felt and malignity conceived at the sight of excellence or happiness.
Envy is a repining at the prosperity or good of another, or anger and displeasure at any good of another which we want, or any advantage another hath above us. Ray on the Creation.
All the conspirators, save only he,
Did that they did in envy of great Cæsar. Shak. Jul. Cæsar.
Many suffered death merely in envy to their virtues and superiour genius. Swift.
Envy, to which th' ignoble mind's a slave,
Is emulation in the learn'd or brave. Pope's Essay on Man.
  2. Rivalry; competition.
You may see the parliament of women, the little envies of them to one another. Dryden on Dramatick Poesy.
  3. Malice; malignity.

E P H

- Madam, this is a meer distraction;
You turn the good we offer into envy. Shakesp. Henry VIII.
4. Publick odium; ill repute.
Edward Plantagenet should be, in the most publick and notorious manner, shewed unto the people; to discharge the king of the envy of that opinion and bruit, how he had been put to death privily. Bacon's Henry VII.
- TO ENWHEEL. v. a. [from wheel.] To encompass; to encircle. A word probably peculiar to Shakespeare.
Hail to thee, lady! and the grace of heav'n,
Before, behind thee, and on ev'ry hand
Enwheel thee round. Shakespeare's Othello.
- TO ENWOMB. v. a. [from womb.]
1. To make pregnant.
Me then he left enwomb'd of this child,
This luckless child, whom thus ye see with blood. Fa. Qu.
I'm your mother;
And put you in the catalogue of those
That were enwomb'd mine. Shak. All's well that ends well.
  2. To bury; to hide as in a womb.
Or as the Africk niger stream enwombs
Itself into the earth, and after comes,
Having first made a natural bridge to pass,
For many leagus, far greater than it was;
May't not be said, that her grave shall restore
Her greater, purer, finer than before. Donne.
- EO'LIPILE. n. f. [from Æolus and pila.] A hollow ball of metal with a long pipe; which ball, filled with water, and exposed to the fire, sends out, as the water heats, at intervals, blasts of cold wind through the pipe.
- Considering the structure of that globe, the exterior crust, and the waters lying round under it, both exposed to the sun, we may fitly compare it to an eo'lipile, or an hollow sphere with water in it, which the heat of the fire rarefies, and turns into vapours and wind. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
- ΕΠΑΚΤ. n. f. [επακτη.] A number, whereby we note the excess of the common solar year above the lunar, and thereby may find out the age of the moon every year. For the solar year consisting of 365 days, the lunar but of 354, the lunations every year get eleven days before the solar year; and thereby, in 19 years, the moon completes 20 times 12 lunations, or gets up one whole solar year; and having finished that circuit, begins again with the sun, and so from 19 to 19 years. For the first year afterwards the moon will go before the sun but 11 days; the second year 22 days; the third 33 days: but 30 being an entire lunation, cast that away, and the remainder 3 shall be that year's epact; and so on, adding yearly 11 days. To find the epact, having the prime or golden number given, you have this rule:
Divide by three; for each one left add ten;
Thirty reject: the prime makes epact then. Harris.
As the cycle of the moon seems to shew the epacts, and that of the sun the dominical letter, throughout all their variations; so this Dionysian period serves to shew these two cycles both together, and how they proceed or vary all along, 'till at last they accomplish their period, and both together take their beginning again, after every 532d year. Holder on Time.
- ΕΠΑΥΛΜΕΝΤ. n. f. [French, from epaule, a shoulder.] In fortification, a sidework made either of earth thrown up, of bags of earth, gabions, or of fascines and earth; of which latter are made the epaulments of the places of arms for the cavalry behind the trenches. It sometimes denotes a semibastion and a square orillion, or mafs of earth faced and lined with a wall, designed to cover the cannon of a cazemate. Harr.
- ΕΠΕΝΘΗΣΙΣ. n. f. [επενθεσις.] [In grammar.] The addition of a vowel or consonant in the middle of a word. Harris.
- Ε'ΡΡΗΑ. n. f. [Hebrew.] A measure among the Jews, containing fifteen solid inches.
The epha and the bath shall be of one measure; that the bath may contain the tenth part of an homer, and the epha the tenth part of an homer. Ezek. xlv. 11
- ΕΡΡΗΜΕΡΑ. n. f. [εφημερα.]
1. A fever that terminates in one day.
  2. An insect that lives only one day.
- ΕΡΡΗΜΕΡΑΛ. n. f. [εφημερολογος.] Diurnal; beginning and ending in a day.
- This was no more than a meer bubble or blast, and like an ephemeral fit of applause. Wotton.
- ΕΡΡΗΜΕΡΙΣ. n. f. [εφημερις.]
1. A journal; an account of daily transactions.
  2. An account of the daily motions and situations of the planets.
When casting up his eyes against the light,
Both month, and day, and hour he measur'd right;
And told more truly than the ephemeris;
For art may err, but nature cannot miss. Dryd. Nun's Tale.
- ΕΡΡΗΜΕΡΙΣΤ. n. f. [from ephemeris.] One who consults the planets; one who studies or practises astrology.
The night immediately before, he was discoursing of and slighting the art of those foolish astrologers, and genethiacal ephemerists, that use to pry into the horoscope of nivities. Howel's Vocal Forrest.
- ΕΡΡΗΜΕΡΟΝ.

EPHEMERON-WORM. n. f. [from ἐφήμερον and worm.] A sort of worm that lives but a day.

Swammerdam observes of the ephemeron-worms, that their food is clay, and that they make their cells of the same. Derb.
EPHOD. n. f. [עֶפְדֹּד] A sort of ornament worn by the Hebrew priests. That worn by the high priest was richly composed of gold, blue, purple, crimson, and twisted cotton; and upon the part which came over his two shoulders, were two large precious stones, upon which were engraven the names of the twelve tribes of Israel, upon each stone six names. Where the ephod crossed the high priest's breast, was a square ornament, called the breast-plate; in which twelve precious stones were set, with the names of the twelve tribes of Israel engraved on them, one on each stone. The ephods worn by the other priests were only of plain linen.

Calmet.
 He made the ephod of gold, blue, and purple, and scarlet, and fine twined linen. Ex. xxxix. 2.

Array'd in ephods; nor so few
 As are those pearls of morning dew,

Which hang on herbs and flowers. Sandys's Paraphr.

EPIC. adj. [epicus, Latin; ἑπικός] Narrative; comprising narrations, not acted, but rehearsed. It is usually supposed to be heroic, or to contain one great action atchieved by a hero.

Holmes, whose name shall live in epic song,
 While music numbers, or while verse has feet. Dryden.

The epic poem is more for the manners, and the tragedy for the passions. Dryden.

From morality they formed that kind of poem and fable which we call epic. Pope's View of Epic Poems.

EPICEDIUM. n. f. [ἐπικήδειον.] An elegy; a poem upon a funeral.

You from above shall hear each day

One dirge dispatch'd unto your clay;

These, your own anthems, shall become

Your lasting epicedium.

Sandys's Paraphrase.

EPICURE. n. f. [epicureus, Latin.] A follower of Epicurus; a man given wholly to luxury.

Then fly false thanes,

And mingle with the English epicures. Shakesp. Macbeth.

The epicure buckles to study, when shame, or the desire to recommend himself to his mistress, shall make him uneasy in the want of any sort of knowledge. Locke.

EPICUREAN. n. f. [epicureus, Latin.] One who holds the physiological principles of Epicurus.

The Platonists have their soul of the world, and the Epicureans their soul of the world, and the Epicureans their endeavour towards motion in their atoms when at rest. Locke.

EPICUREAN. adj. Luxurious; contributing to luxury.

Tie up the libertine in a field of feasts,

Keep his brain fuming; epicurean cooks,

Sharpen with cloyless sauce his appetite. Shak. Ant. and Cleop.

What a damn'd epicurean rascal is this! Shakespeare.

EPICURISM. n. f. [from epicure.] Luxury; sensual enjoyment; gross pleasure.

Here you do keep a hundred knights and squires;

Men so disorder'd, so debauch'd and bold,

That this our court, infected with their manners,

Shews like a riotous inn; epicurism and lust

Make it a tavern or a brothel. Shakespeare's King Lear.

There is not half so much epicurism in any of their most studied luxuries; as a bleeding fame at their mercy.

Government of the Tongue, f. 6.

Some good men have ventured to call munificence, the greatest sensuality, a piece of epicurism. Calamy's Sermons.

EPICYCLE. n. f. [ἐπί and κύκλος.] A little circle whose center is in the circumference of a greater; or a small orb, which, being fixed in the deferent of a planet, is carried along with its motion; and yet, with its own peculiar motion, carries the body of the planet fastened to it round about its proper center. Harris.

In regard of the epicycle, or lesser orb, wherein it moveth, the motion of the moon is various and unequal. Brown.

Gird the sphere

With centric and eccentric; scribbld o'er;

Cycle and epicycle, orb in orb. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. viii.

EPICYCLOID. n. f. [ἐπικυκλοειδής.] A curve generated by the revolution of the periphery of a circle along the convex or concave part of another circle. Harris.

EPIDEMICAL. } n. f. [ἐπί and δῆμος.]

EPIDEMICK. } n. f. [ἐπί and δῆμος.]

1. That which falls at once upon great numbers of people, as a plague.

It was conceived not to be an epidemick disease, but to proceed from a malignity in the constitution of the air, gathered by the predispositions of seasons. Bacon's Henry VII.

As the proportion of acute and epidemic diseases shews the aptness of the air to sudden and vehement impressions, so the chronic diseases shew the ordinary temper of the place.

Graunt's Bills of Mortality.

2. Generally prevailing; affecting great numbers.

The more epidemic and prevailing this evil is, the more honourable are those who shine as exceptions. South's Sermons.

He ought to have been busied in losing his money, or in other amusements equally laudable and epidemic among persons of honour. Swift.

3. General; universal.

They're citizens o' th' world, they're all in all;

Scotland's a nation epidemic.

Cleaveland.

EPIDERMIS. n. f. [ἐπιδέρμις.] The scarf-skin of a man's body.

EPIGRAM. n. f. [epigramma, Latin.] A short poem terminating in a point.

A college of witcrackers cannot flout me out of my humour: dost thou think I care for a satire or an epigram? Shak.

What can be more witty than the epigram of Moore upon the name of Nicolaus, an ignorant phylician, that had been the death of thousands? Peacham of Poetry.

I writ

An epigram that boasts more truth than wit.

Gay.

EPIGRAMMATICAL. } adj. [epigrammaticus, Latin.]

EPIGRAMMATICK. } adj. [epigrammaticus, Latin.]

1. Dealing in epigrams; writing epigrams.

Our good epigrammatical poet, old Godfrey of Winchester, thinketh no ominous fore-speaking to lie in names. Camden.

2. Suitable to epigrams; belonging to epigrams.

He is every where above conceits of epigrammatick wit and gross hyperboles: he maintains majesty in the midst of plain-ness; he shines, but glares not; and is stately, without ambition. Addison.

He has none of those little points and puerilities that are so often to be met with in Ovid; none of the epigrammatick turns of Lucan; none of those swelling sentiments which are so frequent in Statius and Claudian; none of those mixt embellishments of Tasso. Addison's Spectator, No. 279.

EPIGRAMMATIST. n. f. [from epigram.] One who writes or deals in epigrams.

A jest upon a poor wit, at first might have had an epi-grammatist for its father; and been afterwards gravely understood by some painful collector. Pope.

Such a customer the epigrammatist Martial meets withal, one who, after he had walked through the fairest street twice or thrice, cheapening jewels, plate, rich hangings, came away with a wooden dish. Peacham on Blazoning.

EPIGRAPHE. n. f. [ἐπιγραφή.] An inscription on a statue. Diët.

EPILEPSY. n. f. [ἐπιληψία.] An convulsion, or convulsive motion of the whole body, or of some of its parts, with a loss of sense. A convulsive motion happens when the blood, or nervous fluid, runs into any parts with so great violence, that the mind cannot restrain them from attraction. Quincy.

My lord is fell into an epilepsy:

This is the second fit.

Shak. Othello.

Melancholy distempers are deduced from spirits drawn from that cacochymia; the phrenitis from cholerick spirits, and the epilepsy from fumes. Fleyer on the Humours.

EPILEPTICK. adj. [from epilepsy.] Convulsed; diseased with an epilepsy.

A plague upon your epileptick visage!

Smile you my speeches, as I were a fool? Shakesp. K. Lear.

Epilepticks ought to breathe a pure air, unaffected with any steams, even such as are very fragrant. Arbuthnot on Diët.

EPILOGUE. n. f. [epilogus, Latin.] The poem or speech at the end of a play.

If it be true that good wine needs no bush, 'tis true that a good play needs no epilogue; yet to good wine they do use good bushes, and good plays prove the better by the help of good epilogues. Shakespeare's As you like it.

Are you mad, you dog;

I am to rise and speak the epilogue. Dryden's Tyrant. Love.

EPINYCTIS. n. f. [ἐπινυκτίς.] A sore at the corner of the eye.

The epinyctis is of the bigness of a lupin, of a dusky red, and sometimes of a livid and pale colour, with great inflammation and pain: it dischargeth first a sanies of bloody matter. Wiseman's Surgery.

EPIPHANY. n. f. [ἐπιφάνεια.] A church festival, celebrated on the twelfth day after Christmas, in commemoration of our Saviour's being manifested to the world, by the appearance of a miraculous blazing star, which conducted the magi to the place where he was. Diët.

EPIPHONEMA. n. f. [ἐπιφώνημα.] An exclamation; a conclusive sentence not closely connected with the words forgoing.

I know a gentleman, who made it a rule in reading to skip over all sentences where he spied a note of admiration at the end. I believe, if those preachers who abound in epiphonemas would but look about them, they would find one part of their congregation out of countenance, and the other asleep, except perhaps an old female beggar or two in the isles; who, if they be sincere, may probably groan at the sound. Swift.

EPIPHORA. n. f. [ἐπιφορά.] An inflammation of any part, but more especially a defluxion of humours on the eyes.

Harris.

EPIPHYILLO'SPHERMOUS.

EPHYPHYLLOSPE'RMOS. adj. [from ἐπὶ, φύλλον and σπέρμα.] Is applied to plants that bear their seed on the back part of their leaves, being the same with capillaries. Harris.

EPHYSIS. n. f. [ἐπίφυσις.] Accretion; the part added by accretion; one bone growing to another by simple contiguity, without any proper articulation. Quincy.

The epiphysis of the os femoris is a distinct bone from it in a child, whereas in a man they do entirely unite. Wifeman.

EP'PLOC. n. f. [ἐπιπλοκή.] A figure of rhetorick, by which one aggravation, or striking circumstance, is added in due gradation to another; as, he not only spared his enemies, but continued them in employment; not only continued, but advanced them.

EPISCOPACY. n. f. [episcopatus, Latin.] The government of bishops; the government of the church established by the apostles.

They durst not contest with the assembly in jurisdiction; so that there was little more than the name of episcopacy preserved. Clarendon.

Prelacy itself cannot be proved by prescription, since episcopacy is not prescribed by any time whatsoever. Ayliffe's Par.

EPISCOPAL. adj. [from episcopus, Latin.]

1. Belonging to a bishop.

The apostle commands Titus not only to be a pattern of good works himself, but to use his episcopal authority in exhorting every rank and order of men. Rogers's Sermons.

2. Vested in a bishop.

The plot of discipline sought to erect a popular authority of elders, and to take away episcopal jurisdiction. Hooker.

EPISCOPATE. n. f. [episcopatus, Latin.] A bishoprick; the office and dignity of a bishop.

EPISODE. n. f. [ἐπίσῳδη.] An incidental narrative, or digression in a poem; separable from the main subject, yet rising naturally from it.

The poem, which we have now under our consideration, hath no other episodes than such as naturally arise from the subject. Addison's Spectator.

EPISODICAL. } adj. [from episode.] Contained in an episode;
EPISODICK. } pertaining to an episode.

Episodical ornaments, such as descriptions and narrations, were delivered to us from the observations of Aristotle. Dryd.

I discover the difference between the episodick and principal action, as well as the nature of episodes. Notes on the Odyssey.

EPISPASTICK. n. f. [ἐπί and σπάω.]

1. Drawing.

2. Blistering. This is now the more frequent, though less proper sense.

The matter ought to be solicited, by all possible methods, to the lower parts, by fomentations, bathing, epispasticks, and blistering. Arbuthnot on Diet.

EPISTLE. n. f. [ἐπιστολή.] A letter. This word is seldom used but in poetry, or on occasions of dignity and solemnity.

When loose epistles violate chaste eyes,
She half consents, who silently denies. Dryden.

EPISTOLARY. adj. [from epistle.]

1. Relating to letters; suitable to letters.

2. Transacted by letters.

I shall carry on an epistolary correspondence between the two heads. Addison's Guardian, N<sup>o</sup>. 114.

EPISTLER. n. f. [from epistle.] A scribbler of letters.

EPITAPH. n. f. [ἐπίταφος.] An inscription upon a tomb.

Live still, and write mine epitaph. Shakespeare.

Some thy lov'd dust in Parian stones enshrine,
Others immortal epitaphs design;
With wit, and strength, that only yields to thine. Smith.

EPITHALAM'NIUM. n. f. [ἐπὶ θάλαμῳ.] A nuptial song; a compliment upon marriage.

I presume to invite you to these sacred nuptials: the epithalamium sung by a crowned muse. Sandys's Paraphrase.

The forty-fifth psalm is an epithalamium to Christ and the church, or to the lamb and his spouse. Burnet.

EPITHEM. n. f. [ἐπίθεμα.] A liquid medicament externally applied.

Epithems, or cordial applications, are justly applied unto the left breast. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. iv. c. 1.

Cordials and epithems are also necessary, to resist the putrefaction and strengthen the vitals. Wifeman's Surgery.

EPITHET. n. f. [ἐπίθετον.]

1. An adjective denoting any quality good or bad: as, the verdant grove, the craggy mountain's lofty head,
I affirm with phlegm, leaving the epithets of false, scandalous and villainous to the author. Swift.

2. It is used by some writers improperly for title, name.
The epithet of shades belonged more properly to the darkness than the refreshment. Decay of Piety.

3. It is used improperly for phrase, expression.
For which of my good parts did you first suffer love for me?
—Suffer love! a good epithet: I do suffer love indeed; for I love thee against my will. Shakespeare.

EPITOME. n. f. [ἐπιτομή.] Abridgment; abbreviature; compendious abstract; compendium.

This is a poor epitome of your's,

Which, by th' interpretation of full time,
May shew like all yourself. Shakepeare's Coriolanus.

Epitomes are helpful to the memory, and of good private use; but set forth for publick monuments, accuse the induttrious writers of delivering much impertinency. Wotton.

I think it would be well, if there were a short and plain epitome made, containing the chief and most material heads.

Locke on Education.

Such abstracts and epitomes may be reviewed in their proper places. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

To EPITOMISE. v. a. [from epitome.]

1. To abstract; to contract into a narrow space.

Who did the whole world's soul contract, and drove
Into the glasses of your eyes;
So made such mirrours and such spies,
That they did all to you epitomise. Donne.

2. Less properly, to diminish; to curtail.

We have epitomised many particular words, to the detriment of our tongue. Addison's Spectator, N<sup>o</sup>. 135.

EPITOMISER. } n. f. [from epitomise.] An abridger; an ab-

EPITOMIST. } trafter; a writer of epitomes.

EPOCH. } n. f. [ἐποχή.] The time at which a new compu-

EPOCHA. } tation is begun; the time from which dates are numbered.

Moses distinctly sets down this account, computing by certain intervals, memorable æras and epochas, or terms of time. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. vi. c. 1.

These are the practices of the world, since the year sixty; the grand epoch of falshood, as well as debauchery. South.

Some lazy ages, lost in sleep and ease,
No action leave to busy chronicles;
Such whose supine felicity but makes
In story chafms, in epochas mistakes. Dryden.

Their several epochas or beginnings, as from the creation of the world, from the flood, from the first olympiad, from the building of Rome, or from any remarkable passage or accident, give us a pleasant prospect into the histories of antiquity and of former ages. Holder on Time.

Time is always reckoned from some known parts of this sensible world, and from some certain epochs marked out to us by the motions observeable in it. Locke.

Time, by necessity compel'd, shall go Through scenes of war, and epochas of woe. Prior.

EPO'DE. n. f. [ἐπῳδή.] The stanza following the strophe and antistrophe.

EPOPEE. n. f. [ἐποποιία.] An epick or heroick poem.

Tragedy borrows from the epopee, and that which borrows is of less dignity, because it has not of its own. Dryd. Virgil.

EPULA'TION. n. f. [epulatio, Latin.] Banquet; feast.

Contented with bread and water, when he would dine with Jove, and pretended to epulation, he desired no other addition than a piece of cheese. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. vii. c. 17.

EPULO'TICK. n. f. [ἐπουλώτικῳ.] A cicatrising medicament.

The ulcer, incarned with common farcoticks, and the ulcerations about it, were cured by ointment of tuty, and such like epuloticks. Wifeman of Inflammation.

EQUABI'LITY. n. f. [from equable.] Equality to itself; evenness; uniformity.

For the celestial bodies, the equability and constancy of their motions argue them ordained by Wisdom. Ray.

The equability of the temperature of the air rendered the Asiaticks lazy. Arbuthnot on Air.

EQUABLE. adj. [æquabilis, Latin.] Equal to itself; even; uniform in respect to form, motion, or temperature.

He would have the vast body of a planet to be as elegant and round as a factitious globe represents it; to be every where smooth and equable, and as plain as elysian fields. Bentley.

Nothing abates acrimony of the blood more than an equable motion of it, neither too swift nor too slow; for too quick a motion produceth an alkaline, and too slow an acid acrimony. Arbuthnot on Diet.

EQUABLY. adv. [from equable.] Uniformly; in the same tenour; evenly; equally to itself.

If bodies move equably in concentrick circles, and the squares of their periodical times be as the cubes of their distances from the common center, their centripetal forces will be reciprocally as the squares of the distances. Cheyne.

EQUAL. adj. [æqualis, Latin.]

1. Like another in bulk, excellence, or any other quality that admits comparifon; neither greater nor less; neither worse nor better.

If thou be among great men, make not thyself equal with them. Ecclus. xxxii. 9.

Equal lot
May join us; equal joy, as equal love. Milton's Par. Lost.

Although there were no man in the world to take notice of it, every triangle would contain three angles equal to two right angles. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

2. Adequate to any purpose.

The Scots trusted not their own numbers, as equal to fight with the English. Clarendon, b. viii.

3. Even; uniform.

He laughs at all the vulgar cares and fears,
At their vain triumphs, and their vainer tears;
An equal temper in his mind he found,
When fortune flatter'd him, and when she frown'd. Dryden.

Think not of me: perhaps my equal mind
May learn to bear the fate the gods allot me. Smith.

4. In just proportion.

It is not permitted me to make my commendations equal to your merit. Dryden's Fab. Dedication.

5. Impartial; neutral.

Each to his proper fortune stand or fall;
Equal and unconcern'd I look on all:
Rutilians, Trojans, are the same to me,
And both shall draw the lots their fates decree. Dryd. Æn.

6. Indifferent.

They who are not disposed to receive them, may let them alone, or reject them; it is equal to me. Cheyne's Phil. Prin.

7. Equitable; advantageous alike to both parties.

He submitted himself, and swore to all equal conditions.
2 Mac. xiii. 23.

8. Upon the same terms.

They made the married, orphans, widows, yea and the aged also, equal in spoils with themselves. 2 Mac. viii. 30.

E'QUAL. n. f. [from the adjective.]

1. One not inferior or superior to another.

He is enamoured on Hero: I pray you, dissuade him from her; she is no equal for his birth. Sh. Much Ado about Nothing.
He would make them all equals to the citizens of Rome.
2 Mac. ix. 15.

Those who were once his equals, envy and defame him, because they now see him their superior; and those who were once his superiors, because they look upon him as their equal. Addison's Spectator, N<sup>o</sup>. 256.

To my dear equal, in my native land,
My plighted vow I gave: I his receiv'd:
Each swore with truth; with pleasure each believ'd:
The mutual contract was to heav'n convey'd. Prior.

2. One of the same age.

I profited in the Jews religion above many my equals in mine own nation. Gal. i. 14.

To E'QUAL. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To make one thing or person equal to another.

2. To rise to the same state with another person.

I know no body so like to equal him, even at the age he wrote most of them, as yourself. Trumbull to Pope.

3. To be equal to.

One whose all not equals Edward's moiety. Shakespeare.

4. To recompense fully.

Then fought Sicheus through the shady grove,
Who answer'd all her cares, and equal'd all her love. Dryd.
Nor you, great queen, these offices repent,
Which he will equal, and perhaps augment. Dryden's Virg.

To E'QUALISE. v. a. [from equal.]

1. To make even.

To equalise accounts we will allow three hundred years, and so long a time as we can manifest from the Scripture. Bro.

2. To be equal to: a sense not used.

That would make the moved body, remaining what it is, in regard of its bigness, to equalise and fit a thing bigger than it is. Digby on Bodies.

Ye lofty beeches, tell this matchless dame,
That if together ye fed all one flame,
It could not equalise the hundredth part
Of what her eyes have kindled in my heart. Waller.

E'QUALITY. n. f. [from equal.]

1. Likeness with regard to any quantities compared.

Equality of two domestick powers,
Breeds scrupulous faction: the hated, grown to strength,
Are newly grown to love. Shakesp. Anthony and Cleopatra.

2. The same degree of dignity.

One shall rise,
Of proud ambition; who, not content
With fair equality, fraternal state,
Will arrogate dominion undeserv'd,
Over his brethren. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xii. l. 26.

According to this equality wherein God hath placed all mankind, with relation to himself, in all the relations between man and man there is a mutual dependance. Swift.

3. Evenness; uniformity; constant tenour; equability.

Measure out the lives of men, and periodically define the alterations of their tempers, conceive a regularity in mutations, with an equality in constitutions, and forget that variety which physicians therein discover. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

E'QUALLY. adv. [from equal.]

1. In the same degree with another person or thing; alike.

To reconcile mens vices to their fears is the aim of all the various schemes and projects of sin, and is equally intended by atheism and immorality. Rogers, Sermon 15.

They are equally impatient of their condition, equally tempted with the wages of unrighteousness, as if they were indeed poor. Rogers, Sermon 2.

2. Evenly; equably; uniformly.

If the motion of the sun were as unequal as of a ship, sometimes slow, and at others swift; or, if being constantly equally swift, it yet was not circular, and produced not the same appearances, it would not help us to measure time more than the motion of a comet does. Locke.

3. Impartially.

We shall use them,

As we shall find their merits and our safety
May equally determine. Shakespeare's King Lear.

EQU'ANGULAR. adj. [from equus and angulus, Latin.] Consisting of equal angles.

EQUANIMITY. n. f. [æquanimitas, Latin.] Evenness of mind neither elated nor depressed.

EQUANIMOUS. adj. [æquanimis, Latin.] Even; not dejected;
not elated.

EQUATION. n. f. [æquare, Latin.] The investigation of a mean proportion collected from the extremities of excess and defect, to be applied to the whole.

We are to find out the extremities on both sides, and from and between them the middle daily motions of the sun along the Ecliptick; and to frame tables of equation of natural days, to be applied to the mean motion by addition or subtraction, as the case shall require. Holder on Time.

By an argument taken from the equations of the times of the eclipses of Jupiter's satellites, it seems that light is propagated in time, spending in its passage from the sun to us about seven minutes of time. Newton's Opt.

EQUATION. [In algebra.] Is an expression of the same quantity in two dissimilar terms, but of equal value; as  $3s = 36d$ .
Dict.

EQUATION. [In astronomy.] The difference between the time marked out by the sun's apparent motion, and the time that is measured by its real or middle motion; according to which clocks and watches ought to be adjusted. Dict.

EQUATOR. n. f. [æquator, Latin.] On the earth, or equi-noctial in the heavens, is a great circle, whose poles are the poles of the world. It divides the globe into two equal parts, the northern and southern hemispheres. It passes through the east and west points of the horizon; and at the meridian is raised as much above the horizon as is the complement of the latitude of the place. Whenever the sun comes to this circle, it makes equal days and nights all round the globe, because he then rises due east and sets due west, which he doth at no other time of the year. Harris.

By reason of the convexity of the earth, the eye of man, under the equator, cannot discover both the poles; neither would the eye, under the poles, discover the sun in the equator. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. vi. c. 5.

On the other side the equator there is much land still remaining undiscovered. Ray on the Creation.

Rocks rich in gems, and mountains big with mines,

That on the high equator ridgy rise,
Whence many a bursting stream auriferous plays. Thomson.

EQUATORIAL. adj. [from equator.] Pertaining to the equator;
taken at the equator.

The planets have spheroidal figures, and obliquities of their equatorial to their ecliptick planes. Cheyne.

EQUESTRIAN. adj. [equestris, Latin.]

1. Appearing on horseback.

An equestrian lady appeared upon the plains. Spectator.

2. Skilled in horsemanship.

3. Belonging to the second rank in Rome.

EQUE'RRY. n. f. [ecurie, Dutch.] Master of the horse.

EQUICRU'RAL. } adj. [æquus and crus, Latin.]

EQUICRU'RE. }

1. Having the legs of an equal length.

2. Having the legs of an equal length, and longer than the base; isosceles.

An equicrural triangle goes upon a certain proportion of length and breadth. Digby on the Soul.

We begin with Saturn, and successively draw lines from angle to angle, until seven equicrural triangles be described.

Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. v. c. 22.

EQUIDISTANT. adj. [æquus and distans, Latin.] At the same distance.

The fixt stars are not all placed in the same concave spherical superficies, and equidistant from us, as they seem to be.

Ray on the Creation.

EQUIDISTANTLY. adv. [from equidistant.] At the same distance.

The liver, though seated on the right side, yet by the sub-clavian division equidistantly communicates unto either arm.

Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iv. c. 4.

EQUIFORMITY. n. f. [æquus and forma, Latin.] Uniform equality.

No diversity or difference, but a simplicity of parts and equiformity of motion. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iv. c. 5.

EQUILA'TERAL. adj. [æquus and latus, Latin.] Having all sides equal.

Circles or squares, or triangles equilateral, which are all figures of equal lines, can differ but in greater or lesser. Bacon.

Trifling futility appears in their twelve signs of the zodiack

diack and their aspects: why no more aspects than diametrically opposite, and such as make equilateral figures? Bentley.
To EQUILIBRATE. v. a. [from equilibrium.] To balance equally; to keep even with equal weight on each side.

If the point of the knife, drawn over the loadstone, have in this affriction been drawn from the equator of the loadstone towards the pole, it will attract one of the extremes of an equilibrated magnetick needle. Boyle's Experiments.

The bodies of fishes are equilibrated with the water in which they swim. Arbutnot on Air.

EQUILIBRATION. n. f. [from equilibrate.] Equipoise; the act of keeping the balance even.

The accession of bodies upon, or secession thereof from the earth's surface, perturb not the equilibration of either hemisphere. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. i. c. 2.

In so great a variety of motions, as running, leaping, and dancing, nature's laws of equilibration are always observed. Derham's Physico-Theology.

EQUILIBRIUM. n. f. [Latin.]

1. Equipoise; equality of weight.

2. Equality of evidence, motives, or powers of any kind.

Things are not left to an equilibrium, to hover under an indifference whether they shall come to pass, or not come to pass. South's Sermons.

It is in equilibrio

If deities descend or no;

Then let th' affirmative prevail,

As requisite to form my tale. Prior.

Health consists in the equilibrium between those two powers, when the fluids move so equally that they don't press upon the solids with a greater force than they can bear. Arbutnot on Alim.

EQUINECESSARY. adj. [æquus and neccessarius, Latin.] Needful in the same degree.

For both to give blows and to carry,

In fights, are equinecessary. Hudibras, p. i. cant. 3.

EQUINOCTIAL. n. f. [æquus and nox, Latin.] The line that encompasses the world at an equal distance from either pole, to which circle when the sun comes, he makes equal days and nights all over the globe.

EQUINOCTIAL. adj. [from equinox.]

1. Pertaining to the equinox.

Thrice th' equinoctial line

He circled; four times cross'd the car of night

From pole to pole, traversing each colure. Milton's Pa. Lost.

Some say the sun

Was bid turn reins from th' equinoctial road,

Like distant breadth. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x.

2. Happening about the time of the equinoxes.

3. Being near the equinoctial line; having the properties of things near the equator.

In vain they covet shades, and Thracia's gales,

Pining with equinoctial heat. Phillips.

EQUINOCTIALLY. adv. [from equinoctial.] In the direction of the equinoctial.

They may be refrigerated inclanaterly, or somewhat equinoctially; that is, towards the eastern and western points. Brown.

EQUINOX. n. f. [æquus and nox, Latin.]

1. Equinoxes are the precise times in which the sun enters into the first point of Aries and Libra; for then, moving exactly under the equinoctial, he makes our days and nights equal. This he doth twice a year, about the 21st of March and 23d of September, which therefore are called the vernal and autumnal equinoxes. Harris.

It ariseth not unto Biarmia, and heliacally about the autumnal equinox. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. iv. c. 13.

The time when this kid was taken out of the womb was about the vernal equinox. Ray on the Creation.

'Twas now the month in which the world began,

If March beheld the first created man;

And since the vernal equinox, the sun

In Aries twelve degrees or more had run. Dryden.

2. Equality; even measure. Improper.

Do but see his vice;

'Tis to his virtues a just equinox,

The one as long as th' other. Shakespeare's Othello.

3. Equinoctial wind: a poetical use.

The passage yet was good; the wind, 'tis true,

Was somewhat high, but that was nothing new,

No more than usual equinoxes blew. Dryden.

EQUINUMERANT. adj. [æquus and numerus, Latin.] Having the same number; consisting of the same number.

This talent of gold, though not equinumerant, nor yet equiponderant, as to any other; yet was equivalent to some correspondent talent in brads. Arbutnot on Coins.

To EQUIP. v. a. [equipper, French.]

1. To furnish for a horseman or cavalier.

2. To furnish; to accoutre; to dress out.

The country are led astray in following the town; and equipped in a ridiculous habit, when they fancy themselves in the height of the mode. Addison's Spectator, N<sup>o</sup>. 129.

EQUIPAGE. n. f. [equipage, French.]

1. Furniture for a horseman.

EQU

2. Carriage of state; vehicle.

Winged spirits, and chariots wing'd,
From th' armory of God; where stand of old
Myriads, between two brazen mountains lodg'd
Against a solemn day, harness'd at hand,
Celestial equipage! Milton's Paradise Lost, l. vii. l. 203.

3. Attendance; retinue.

Think what an equipage thou hast in air,
And view with scorn two pages and a chair. Pope.

4. Accoutrements; furniture.

Soon as thy dreadful trump begins to sound,
The god of war, with his fierce equipage,
Thou do'st awake, sleep never he so found. Fairy Queen.
I will not lend thee a penny.—
I will retort the sum in equipage.
Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

EQUIPAGED. adj. [from equipage.] Accoutred; attended; with fine habits; with splendid retinue.

She forth issued with a goodly train
Of squires and ladies, equipaged well,
And entertained them right fairly, as befell. Fairy Queen.

EQUIPENDENCY. n. f. [æquus and pendeo, Latin.] The act of hanging in equipoise; not determined either way.

Doubtless the will of man, in the state of innocence, had an entire freedom, a perfect equipendency and indifference to either part of the contradiction, to stand or not to stand. South.

EQUIPMENT. n. f. [from equip.]

1. The act of equipping or accoutering.

2. Accoutrement; equipage.

EQUIPOISE. n. f. [æquus, Latin, and poids, French.] Equality of weight; equilibration; equality of force.

In the temperate zone of our life there are few bodies at such an equipoise of humours; but that the prevalency of some one indispofeth the spirits. Glanv. Sceps, c. 14.

EQUIPOLLENCE. n. f. [æquus and pollentia, Latin.] Equality of force or power.

EQUIPOLLENT. adj. [æquipollens, Lat.] Having equal power or force; equivalent.

And equity exil'd your highness' land. Shakesp. Henry VI.

Christianity secures both the private interests of men and the publick peace, enforcing all justice and equity. Tillotson.

2. Impartiality.

Liking their own somewhat better than other mens, even because they are their own, they must in equity allow us to be like unto them in this affection. Hooker, b. iv. f. 13.

3. [In law.] The rules of decision observed by the court of Chancery.

EQUIVALENCE. } n. f. [æquus and valeo, Latin.] Equality of

EQUIVALENCY. } power or worth.

Must the servant of God be assured that which he nightly prays for shall be granted? Yes, either formally or by way of equivalence, either that or something better. Hamm. Pract. Cat.

That there is any equivalence or parity of worth betwixt the good we do to our brother, and the good we hope for from God, all good Protestants do deny. Smalridge.

Civil causes are equivalent unto criminal causes, and of as great importance; but that this equivalency only respects the careful and diligent admission of proofs. Ayliffe's Parergon.

To EQUIVALENCE. v. a. [from the noun.] To equiponderate; to be equal to.

Whether the transgression of Eve seducing did not exceed Adam seduced, or whether the resistibility of his reason did not

not equivalence the facility of her seduction, we shall refer to schoolmen. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. i. c. 1.

EQUIVALENT. adj. [aquus and valens, Latin.]

1. Equal in value.

Things

Well nigh equivalent, and neighb'ring value,
By lot are parted; but the value, high heav'n, thy share,
In equal balance laid with earth and hell,
Flings up the adverse scale, and shuns proportion. Prior.

2. Equal in value, or in any excellence.

No fair to thine

Equivalent, or second! which compell'd
Me thus, though importune perhaps, to come
And gaze, and worship thee. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ix.

3. Equal in force or power.

The dread of Israel's foes, who, with a strength
Equivalent to angels, walk'd their streets,
None offering fight. Milton's Agonistes, l. 342.

4. Of the same cogency or weight.

The consideration of publick utility is, by very good advice, judged at the least equivalent with the easier kind of necessity. Hooker, b. v. f. 9.

5. Of the same import or meaning.

The use of the word minister is brought down to the literal signification of it, a servant; for now to serve and to minister, servile and ministerial, are terms equivalent. South's Sermons.

EQUIVALENT. n. f. A thing of the same weight, dignity, or value.

The slave without a ransom shall be sent;

It rests for you to make th' equivalent. Dryden's Homer.

Fancy a regular obedience to one law will be a full equivalent for their breach of another. Rogers, Sermon 13.

EQUIVOCAL. adj. [equivocus, Latin.]

1. Of doubtful signification; meaning different things; standing for different notions.

These sentences to sugar, or to gall,
Being strong on both sides, are equivocal. Shakesp. Othello.
Words of different significations, taken in general, are of an equivocal sense; but being considered with all their particular circumstances, they have their sense restrained. Stillingsfleet.

The greater number of those who held this were misguided by equivocal terms. Swift.

2. Uncertain; doubtful; happening different ways.

Equivocal generation is the production of plants without seed, or of insects or animals without parents in the natural way of coition between male and female; which is now believed never to happen, but that all bodies are univocally produced. Harr.

My affirmation is, that there is no such thing as equivocal or spontaneous generation; but that all animals are generated by animal parents of the same species with themselves. Ray.

Those half-learn'd wittlings, num'rous in our isle

As half-form'd insects on the banks of Nile;

Unfinish'd things, one knows not what to call,

Their generation's so equivocal. Pope's Essay on Criticism.

EQUIVOCAL. n. f. Ambiguity; word of doubtful meaning.

Shall two or three wretched equivocals have the force to corrupt us. Dennis.

EQUIVOCALLY. adv. [from equivocal.]

1. Ambiguously; in a doubtful or double sense.

Words abstracted from their proper sense and signification, lose the nature of words, and are only equivocally so called. South.

2. By uncertain or irregular birth; by equivocal generation; by generation out of the stated order.

No insect or animal did ever proceed equivocally from putrefaction, unless in miraculous cases; as in Egypt by the Divine judgments. Bentley's Sermons.

EQUIVOCALNESS. n. f. [from equivocal.] Ambiguity; double meaning

Distinguish the equivocalness or latitude of the word, and then point out that determinate part which is the ground of my demonstration. Norris.

TO EQUIVOCATE. v. n. [equivocatio, Latin.] To use words of double meaning; to use ambiguous expressions; to mean one thing and express another.

Not only Jesuits can equivocate. Dryden's Hind and Panther.

My soul disdain'd a promise;

But yet your false equivocating tongue,

Your looks, your eyes, your ev'ry motion promis'd:

But you are ripe in frauds, and learn'd in falsehoods. Smith.

EQUIVOCATION. n. f. [equivocatio, Latin.] Ambiguity of speech; double meaning.

Reproof is easily misapplied, and, through equivocation, wrested. Hooker, b. ii. f. 8.

I pull in resolution, and begin

To doubt the equivocation of the fiend,

That lies like truth. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

EQUIVOCATOR. n. f. [from equivocate.] One who uses ambiguous language; one who uses mental reservation.

Here's an equivocator, that could swear in both the scales against either scale; who committed treason, yet could not equivocate to heaven. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Ere he would have hang'd a man for the getting a hundred bastards, he would have paid for the nursing a thousand. Shak.

The lions brake all their bones in pieces or ever they came to the bottom of the den. Daniel.

Just trial, ere I merit

My exaltation without change or end. Milt. Par. Regain'd.

The mountain trees in distant prospect please,

Ere yet the pine descended to the seas;

Ere sails were spread new oceans to explore. Dryden's Ovid.

Our fruitful Nile

Flow'd ere the wonted season. Dryden's All for Love.

The birds shall cease to tune their ev'ning song,

The winds to breathe, the waving woods to move,

And streams to murmur, ere I cease to love. Pope's Autumn.

ERELONG. adv. [from ere and long.] Before a long time had elapsed. Nec longum tempus.

The wild horse having enmity with the stag, came to a man to desire aid, who mounted upon his back, and, following the stag, erelong slew him. Spenser on Ireland.

The anger already began to paint revenge in many colours, erelong he had not only gotten pity but pardon. Sidney.

Nothing is lasting that is feigned: it will have another face than it had erelong. Ben. Johnson's Discoveries.

They swim in joy,

*Ere*long to swim at large, and laugh, for which

The world erelong a world of tears must weep. Milt. P. Lost.

I saw two stock-doves billing, and erelong

Will take the nest. Dryden's Virgil, Paet. 3.

It pleases me to think, that I who know so small a portion of the works of the Creator, and with slow and painful steps creep up and down on the surface of this globe, shall erelong shoot away with the swiftness of imagination, and trace the springs of nature's operations. Spectator, N<sup>o</sup>. 635.

ERENOW. adv. [from ere and now.] Before this time.

Ah, gentle soldiers, some short time allow;

My father has repented him erenow. Dryd. Conq. of Granad.

Had the world eternally been, science had been brought to perfection long erenow. Cheyne's Phil. Prin.

EREWHI'LE. } adv. [from ere and while.] Some time ago;

EREWHI'LES. } before a little while.

I am as fair now as I was erewhile:

Since night you lov'd me, yet since night you left me. Shak.

We sit down to our meals, suspect not the intrusion of armed uninvited guests, who erewhiles, we know, were wont to surprise us. Decay of Piety.

TO ERECT. v. a. [erectus, Latin.]

1. To raise in a strait line; to place perpendicularly to the horizon.

2. To ERECT a Perpendicular. To cross one line by another at right angles.

2. To miss the right way; to stray.

We have erred and strayed like lost sheep. Common Prayer.

3. To deviate from any purpose.

But errs not nature from this gracious end,

From burning suns when livid deaths descend. Pope's Essays.

4. To commit errors; to mistake.

It is a judgment maim'd and most imperfect,

That will confess perfection so could err,

Against all rules of nature. *Shakespeare's Othello.*Do they not err that devise evil? *Prov. xiv. 22.*Possibly the man may err in his judgment of circumstances, and therefore let him fear; but because it is not certain he is mistaken, let him not despair. *Taylor's Rule of living holy.*Nor has it only been the heat of erring persons that has been thus mischievous, but sometimes men of right judgments have too much contributed to the breach. Decay of Piety.

The muses' friend, unto himself severe,

With silent pity looks on all that err. *Waller.*He who from the reflected image of the sun in water would conclude of light and heat, could not err more grossly. Gheyne.

E'RRAND. n. f. [ærend, Saxon; arend, Danish.] A message; something to be told or done by a messenger; a mandate; a commission. It is generally used now only in familiar language.

Servants being commanded to go, shall stand still, 'till they have their errand warranted unto them. Hooker, b. ii. f. 8.

But hast thou done thy errand to Baptista?

—I told him that your father was in Venice. *Shakespeare.*A quean! have I not forbid her my house? She comes of errands, does she? *Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.*When he came, behold the captains of the host were sitting, and he said, I have an errand to thee, O captain. 2 Kings ix. 5.

From them I go

This uncouth errand sole. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ii.

His eyes,

That run through all the heav'ns, or down to th' earth,

Bear his swift errands, over moist and dry,

O'er sea and land. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. iii. l. 652.

Well thou do'st to hide from common sight

Thy close intrigues, too bad to bear the light;

Nor doubt I, but the silver-footed dame,

Tripping from sea, on such an errand came. Dryd. Homer.

E'RRABLE. adj. [from err.] Liable to err; liable to mistake.

E'RRABLENESS. n. f. [from errable.] Liableness to error; liableness to mistake.

1. Wandering; roving; rambling. Particularly applied to an order of knights much celebrated in romances, who roved about the world in search of adventures.

There are just seven planets, or errant stars, in the lower orbs of heaven; but it is now demonstrable unto sense, that there are many more. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. iv. c. 12.

Chief of domestick knights and errant,

Either for chartel or for warrant.

Hudibras.

2. Vile; abandoned; completely bad. See ARRANT.

Any way, so thou wilt do it, good impertinence:

Thy company, if I slept not very well

A-nights, would make me an errant fool with questions.

Johnson's Catiline.

ERRANTRY. n. f. [from errant]

1. An errant state; the condition of a wanderer.

After a short space of errantry upon the seas, he got safe back to Dunkirk. Addison's Freeholder, N<sup>o</sup>. 36.

2. The employment of a knight errant.

ERRA'TA. n. f. [Latin.] The faults of the printer inserted in the beginning or end of the book.

If he meet with faults, besides those that the errata take notice of, he will consider the weakness of the author's eyes. Boyle.

ERRA'TICK. adj. [erraticus, Latin.]

1. Wandering; uncertain; keeping no certain order; holding no established course.

The earth, and each erratick world,

Around the sun their proper center whirl'd,

Compose but one extended vast machine. Blackm. Creation.

Through the vast waves the dreadful wonders move,

Hence nam'd erratick.

Pope's Odyssey, b. xii. l. 75.

2. Irregular; changeable.

They are incommoded with a slimy mattery cough, stink of breath, and an erratick fever. Harvey on Consumptions.

ERRA'TICALLY. adv. [from erratick or erratick.] Without rule; without any established method or order.

They come not forth in generations erratick, or different from each other; but in specifical and regular shapes.

Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. ii. c. 6.

ERRHINE. n. f. [ἐρρῖνα.] Snuffed up the nose; occasioning sneezing.

We see sage or betony bruised, sneezing powder, and other powders or liquors, which the physicians call errhines, put into the nose to draw phlegm and water from the head.

ERRO'NEOUS. adj. [from erro, Latin.]

1. Wandering; unsettled.

They roam

Erroneous and disconsolate, themselves

Accusing, and their chiefs improvident

Of military chance.

Phillips.

This circle, by being placed here, stopped much of the erroneous light, which otherwise would have disturbed the vision.

Newton's Opt.

Unblam'd abundance crown'd the royal board,

What time this done rever'd her prudent lord;

Who now, so heav'n decrees, is doom'd to mourn,

Bitter constraint! erroneous and forlorn. Pope's Odyssey, b. i.

2. Irregular; wandering from the right road.

If the vessels, instead of breaking, yield, it subjects the person to all the inconveniencies of erroneous circulation; that is, when the blood strays into the vessels destined to carry serum or lymph.

Arbuthnot on Aliments.

3. Mistaking; misled by error.

Thou art far from destroying the innocent with the guilty, and the erroneous with the malicious.

King Charles.

There is the erroneous as well as the rightly informed conscience.

South's Sermons.

4. Mistaken; not conformable to truth.

Their whole counsel is in this point utterly condemned, as having either proceeded from the blindness of those times, or from negligence, or from desire of honour and glory, or from an erroneous opinion that such things might be for a while.

Hooker, b. iv. f. 14.

A wonderful erroneous observation that walketh about, is commonly received, contrary to all the true account of time and experience.

Bacon's War with Spain.

The phænomena of light have been hitherto explained by supposing that they arise from new modifications of the rays, which is an erroneous supposition.

Newton's Opt.

ERRO'NEOUSLY. adv. [from erroneous.] By mistake; not rightly.

The minds of men are erroneously persuaded, that it is the will of God to have those things done which they fancy. Hook.

I could not discover the lenity and favour of this sentence; but conceived it, perhaps erroneously, rather to be rigorous than gentle.

Gulliver's Travels.

ERRO'NEOUSNESS. n. f. [from erroneous.] Physical falsehood; inconformity to truth.

The phænomena may be explained by his hypothesis, whereof he demonstrates the truth, together with the erroneousness of ours.

Boyle's Spring of the Air.

ERROUR. n. f. [error, Latin.]

1. Mistake; involuntary deviation from truth.

Errour is a mistake of our judgment giving assent to that which is not true. Locke.

Oh, hateful errour, melancholy's child!

Why do'st thou shew to the apt thoughts of men,

The things that are not?

Shakespeare's Jul. Caesar.

2. A blunder; an act or assertion in which a mistake is committed.

In religion,

What damned errour, but some sober brow

Will bless it.

Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.

He look'd like nature's errour, as the mind

And body were not of a piece design'd,

But made for two, and by mistake in one were join'd. Dryd.

3. Roving excursion; irregular course.

What brought you living to the Stygian state?

Driv'n by the winds and errours of the sea,

Or did you heav'n's superiour doom obey? Dryden's Æn.

4. [In theology.] Sin.

Blood he offered for himself, and for the errours of the people. Heb. ix. 7.

5. [In law, more especially in our common law.] An errour in pleading, or in the process; and the writ, which is brought for remedy of this oversight, is called a writ of errour, which lies to redress false judgment given in any court of record. Cowel.

ERST. adv. [erst, German; ærsta, Saxon.]

1. First.

Sir knight, if knight thou be,

Abandon this forestalled place at erst,

For fear of further harm, I counsel thee. Spens. Fai. Queen.

2. At first; in the beginning.

Fame that her high worth to raise,

Seem'd erst so lavish and profuse,

We may justly now accuse

Of detraction from her praise.

Milton.

3. Once; when time was.

He taught us erst the heifer's tail to view.

Gay.

The future few or more, howe'er they be,

Were destin'd erst, nor can by fate's decree

Be now cut off.

Prior.

4. Formerly; long ago.

5. Before; till then; till now.

As signal now in low dejected state,

As erst in highest, behold him. Milton's Agonistes, l. 338.

Opener mine eyes,

Dim erst; dilated spirits, ampler heart. Milton's Par. Lost.

The Rhodians, who erst thought themselves at great quiet, were now overtaken with a sudden and unexpected mischief.

Knolles's History of the Turks.

ERUBE'SCENCE. } n. f. [erubescencia, Latin.] The act of grow-
ERUBE'SCENCY. } ing red; redness.

ERUBESCENT. adj. [erubescens, Latin.] Reddish; somewhat red; inclining to redness.

TO ERU'CT. v. a. [eructo, Latin.] To belch; to break wind from the stomach.

ERUCTA'TION. n. f. [from eruct.]

1. The act of belching.

2. Belch; the matter vented from the stomach.

The signs of the functions of the stomach being depraved, are eructations, either with the taste of the aliment, acid, inodorous, or fetid. Arbuthnot.

3. Any sudden burst of wind or matter.

Thermæ, are hot springs, or fiery eructations; such as burst forth of the earth during earthquakes. Woodward's Nat. Hist.

ERUDITION. n. f. [eruditio, Latin.] Learning; knowledge obtained by study and instruction.

Fam'd be thy tutor, and thy parts of nature;

Thrice fam'd beyond all erudition.

Shakespeare.

The earl was of good erudition, having been placed at study in Cambridge very young.

Wotton.

To your experience in state affairs you have also joined no vulgar erudition, which all your modesty is not able to conceal; for to understand critically the delicacies of Horace, is a height to which few of our noblemen have arrived. Dryden.

Some gentlemen, abounding in their university erudition, are apt to fill their sermons with philosophical terms and notions, metaphysical. Swift.

ERU'GINOUS. adj. [æruginosus, Latin.] Partaking of the substance and nature of copper.

Agues depend upon a corrupt incinerated melancholy, or upon an adust stibial or eruginous sulphur. Harvey on Consumpt.

Copperas is a rough and acrimonious kind of salt, drawn out of ferreous and eruginous earths, partaking chiefly of iron and copper; the blue of copper, the green of iron. Browne.

ERUPTION. n. f. [eruptio, Latin.]

1. The act of breaking or bursting forth from any confinement.

In part of Media there are eruptions of flames out of plains. Bacon's Natural History, N<sup>o</sup>. 361.

Finding themselves pent in by the exterior earth, they pressed with violence against that arch, to make it yield and give way to their dilatation and eruption. Burnet's Theory.

2. Burst; emission.

Upon a signal given the eruption began; fire and smok, mixed with several unusual prodigies and figures, made their appearance. Addison's Guardian, N<sup>o</sup>. 103.

3. Sudden excursion of an hostile kind.

Thither, if but to pry, shall be perhaps
Our first eruption, thither or elsewhere;
For this infernal pit shall never hold Celestial spirits in bondage. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. i.

Such command we had,

To see that none thence issu'd forth a spy,
Or enemy, while God was in his work;
Left he, incens'd at such eruption bold,
Destruction with creation might have mix'd. Milt. P. Lost

4. Violent exclamation.

It did not run out in voice or indecent eruptions, but filled the soul, as God does the universe, silently and without noise. South's Sermons.

5. Efflorescence; pustules.

Diseased nature oftentimes breaks forth
In strange eruptions. Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. i.
An eruption of humours, in any part, is not cured merely by outward applications, but by alterative medicines. Government of the Tongue, f. 6.

Unripe fruits are apt to occasion foul eruptions on the skin. Arbutnot on Aliments.

ERUPTIVE. adj. [eruptus, Latin.] Bursting forth.

'Tis lillening fear, and dumb amazement all,
When to the startled eye the sudden glance
Appears far south eruptive through the cloud. Thomson.

ERYSIPELAS. n. f. [έρυσιπelas.]

An erysipelas is generated by a hot serum in the blood, and affects the superficie of the skin with a shining pale red, or citron colour, without pulsation or circumscribed tumour, spreading from one place to another. Wiseman's Surgery.

ESCALADE. n. f. [French.] The act of scaling the walls of a fortification.

In Geneva one meets with the ladders, petard, and other utensils, which were made use of in their famous escalade. Add.

E'SCALOP. n. f. A shellfish, whose shell is regularly indented.

The shells of those cockles, escalops, and periwinkles, which have greater gravity, were enclosed in the strata of stone. Woodward's Natural History.

To ESCAPE. v. a. [echaper, French.]

1. To obtain exemption from; to obtain security from; to fly; to avoid.

Since we cannot escape the pursuit of passions, and perplexity of thoughts, there is no way left but to endeavour all we can either to subdue or divert them. Temple.

Had David died sooner, how much trouble had he escaped, which by living he endured in the rebellion of his son. Wake.

2. To pass unobserved.

Men are blinded with ignorance and error: many things may escape them, and in many things they may be deceived. Hooker, b. ii. f. 7.

'Tis still the same, although their airy shape

All but a quick poetick fight escape. Denham.

The reader finds out those beauties of propriety in thought and writing, which escaped him in the tumult and hurry of representing. Dryden's Don Sebastian, Pref.

To ESCAPE. v. n. To fly; to get out of danger.

Benhadad, the king of Syria, escaped on horse. Chronicles.

They escaped all safe to land. Acts xxvii. 44.

The sinner shall not escape with his spoil, and the patience of the godly shall not be frustrated. Ecclus. xvi. 13.

Escape for thy life; look not behind thee, neither stay thou in all the plain: escape to the mountain, lest thou be consumed. Gen. xix. 17.

Whoso pleaseth God shall escape from her, but the sinner shall be taken by her. Eccl. vii. 26.

There is no woman's gown big enough for him; otherwise he might put on a hat, a muffler, and a kerchief, and so escape. Shakesf. Merry Wives of Windsor.

To convince us that there was no way to escape by climbing up to the mountains, he assures us that the highest were all covered. Woodward's Natural History.

Laws are not executed, men of virtue are disgraced, and murderers escape. Watts's Logick.

ESCAPE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Flight; the act of getting out of danger.

I would hasten my escape from the windy storm and tempest. Pf. lv. 7.

He enjoyed neither his escape nor his honour long; for he was hewn in pieces. Hayward.

Men of virtue have had extraordinary escapes out of such dangers as have enclosed them, and which have seemed inevitable. Addison's Guardian, N<sup>o</sup>. 117.

2. Excursion; sally.

We made an escape, not so much to seek our own, As to be instruments of your safety. Denham's Sophy.

3. [In law.] Violent or privy evasion out of some lawful restraint. For example, if the sheriff, upon a capias directed unto him, takes a person, and endeavours to carry him to gaol, and he in the way, either by violence or by flight, breaks from him, this is called an escape. Cowel.

4. Excuse; subterfuge; evasion.

St. Paul himself did not despise to remember whatsoever he found agreeable to the word of God among the heathen, that he might take from them all escape by way of ignorance. Ral.

5. Sally; flight; irregularity.

Thousand escapes of wit,
Make thee the father of their idle dreams;
And rack thee in their fancies. Shakesf. Meas. for Measure.
Loose escapes of love. Milton.

6. Oversight; mistake.

In transcribing there would be less care taken, as the language was less understood, and so the escapes less subject to observation. Brerewood on Languages.

ESCARGATOIRE. n. f. [French.] A nursery of snails.

At the Capuchins I saw escargatoires, which I took the more notice of, because I do not remember to have met with any thing of the same kind in other countries. It is a square place boarded in, and filled with a vast quantity of large snails that are esteemed excellent food, when they are well dressed. Add.

ESCHALOT. n. f. [French.] Pronounced shallot.

Eschalots are now from France become an English plant, being increased and managed after the same manner as garlick; only they are to be set earlier, because they spring sooner, and taken up as soon as the leaves begin to wither, lest either they rot there, or the Winter kills them. They give a fine relish to most sauces, and the breath of those that eat them is not offensive to others. Mortimer's Husbandry.

E'SCHAR. n. f. [εσχάρα.] A hard crust or scar made by hot applications.

When issues are made, or bones exposed, the eschar should be cut out immediately. Sharp's Surgery.

ESCHAROTICK. adj. [from eschar.] Caustick; having the power to sear or burn the flesh.

An eschar was made by the catharetick, which we thrust off, and continued the use of escharoticks. Wiseman's Surgery.

Escharoticks applied of ash-ashes, or blistering plaister. Floyer.

ESCHEAT. n. f. [from the French eschevir.] Any lands, or other profits, that fall to a lord within his manor by forfeiture, or the death of his tenant, dying without heir general or especial. Escheat is also used sometimes for the place in which the king, or other lord, has escheats of his tenants. Thirdly, escheat is used for a writ, which lies where the tenant, having estate of fee-simple in any lands or tenements holden of a superiour lord, dies seised, without heir general or especial; for, in this case, the lord brings this writ against him that possesses the lands after the death of his tenant, and shall thereby recover them. Cowel.

If the king's ordinary courts of justice do not extend to protect the people, if he have no certain revenue or escheats, I cannot justly say that such a country is wholly conquered. Davies on Ireland.

To ESCHEAT. v. a. [from the noun.] To fall to the lord of the manor by forfeiture, or for want of heirs.

In the last general wars there, I knew many good freeholders executed by martial law, whose lands were thereby saved to their heirs, which should have otherwise escheated to her majesty. Spenser on Ireland.

He would forbear to alienate any of the forfeited escheated lands in Ireland, which should accrue to the crown by reason of this rebellion. Clarendon.

ESCHEATOR. n. f. [from escheat.] An officer that observes the escheats of the king in the county whereof he is escheator, and certifies them into the Exchequer. Cowel.

At a Bartholomew fair at London an escheator of the city arrested a clothier, and seised his goods. Camden's Remains.

To ESCHEW. v. a. [eschew, old French.] To fly; to avoid; to shun; to decline. A word almost obsolete.

She was like a young fawn, who, coming in the wind of the hunters, doth not know whether it be a thing or no to be eschewed. Sidney, b. ii.

So let us, which this change of weather view,
Change eke our minds, and former lives amend;

The old year's sins forepast let us eschew,
And fly the faults with which we did offend. Spenser.

He who obeys, destruction shall eschew;
A wise man knows both when and what to do. Sandys.

Of virtue and vice the obligations are such, that men are universally to practise the one and eschew the other. Atterbury's Sermons, Preface.

ESCHUTCHEON. n. f. The shield of the family; the picture of the ensigns armorial.

Eschutcheon is a French word, from the Latin scutum, leather; and hence cometh our English word buckler, lepe in the old Saxon signifying leather, and buck or bock a buck or stag; of whose skins, quilted close together with horn or hard wood, the ancient Britons made their shields. Peacham.

There be now, for martial encouragement, some degrees and orders of chivalry, and some remembrance perhaps upon the eschutcheon. Bacon's Essays.

We will pass over the eschutcheons of the tribes of Israel, as they are usually described in the maps of Canaan. Brown.

ESCO'RT. n. f. [escort, French.] Convoy; guard from place to place.

To ESCO'RT. v. a. [escorter, French.] To convoy; to guard from place to place.

ESCO'T. n. f. [French.] A tax paid in boroughs and corporations towards the support of the community, which is called scot and lot.

To ESCO'T. v. a. [from the noun.] To pay a man's reckoning; to support.

What, are they children? Who maintains them? How are they escoted? Shakespeare's Hamlet.

ESCO'UT. n. f. [escouter, French.] Listeners or spies; persons sent for intelligence.

They were well entrenched, having good escout abroad, and sure watch within. Hayward.

ESCRIT'VOIR. n. f. [French.] A box with all the implements necessary for writing.

ESCU'AGE. n. f. [from escu, French, a shield.]

Escuage, that is service of the shield, is either uncertain or certain. Escuage uncertain is likewise twofold: first, where the tenant by his tenure is bound to follow his lord, going in person to the king's wars against his enemies, either himself, or to send a sufficient man in his place, at his cost, so many days as were agreed upon between the lord and his first tenant at the granting of the fee; and the days of such service seem to have been rated by the quantity of the land so holden: as, if it extend to a whole knight's fee, then the tenant was bound thus to follow his lord forty days. A knight's fee was so much land as, in those days, was accounted a sufficient living for a knight; and that was six hundred and eighty acres as some think, or eight hundred as others, or 15 l. per Annum. Sir Thomas Smith saith that census equestris is 40 l. revenue in free lands. If the law extend but to half a knight's fee, then the tenant is bound to follow his lord, as above is said, but twenty days. The other kind of this escuage uncertain is called castleward, where the tenant by his land is bound, either by himself or by some other, to defend a castle as often as it shall come to his course. Escuage certain is where the tenant is set at a certain sum of money, to be paid in lieu of such uncertain services: as that a man yearly pay for a knight's fee twenty shillings; for half his fee, ten shillings, or some like rate. Cowel.

ES'CULENT. adj. [esculentus, Latin.] Good for food; eatable.

I knew a man that would fast five days; but the same man used to have continually a great wisp of herbs that he smelled on, and some esculent herbs of strong scent, as garlick. Bacon.

ES'CULENT. n. f. Something fit for food.

This cutting off the leaves in plants, where the root is the esculent, as radish and parsnips, it will make the root the greater, and so it will do to the heads of onions; and where the fruit is the esculent, by strengthening the root, it will make the fruit also the greater. Bacon's Natural History, N<sup>o</sup>. 474.

ESPA'LIER. n. f. Trees planted and cut so as to join.

Plant your fairest tulips in places of shelter, and under espaliers. Evelyn's Kalendar.

Behold Villario's ten years toil complete;

His arbours darken, his espaliers meet. Pope, Epistle iv.

ESPA'RCET. n. f. A kind of faint-foin, and by some judged to be the same. Mortimer's Husbandry.

ESPE'CIAL. adj. [specialis, Latin.] Principal; chief.

They had th' especial engines been, to rear

His fortunes up. Daniel's Civil War.

ESPE'CIALLY. adv. [from especial.] Principally; chiefly; particularly; in an uncommon degree above any other.

I somewhat marvel, that they especially should think it absurd to oppose church government, a plain matter of action, unto matter of faith, who know that themselves divide the gospel into doctrine and discipline. Hooker, b. iii. f. 3.

Would you proceed especially against Caius Marcius? Shak.

This delight they take in doing of mischief, whereby I mean spoiling of any thing to no purpose; but more especially the pleasure they take to put any thing to pain that is capable of it, I cannot persuade myself to be any other than a foreign and introduced disposition. Locke.

Providence hath planted in all men a natural desire and curiosity of knowing things to come; and such things especially as concern our particular happiness, or the general fate of mankind. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

ESPE'RANCE. n. f. [French.] Hope.

To be worst,

The lowest, most dejected things of fortune,
Stands still in esperance, lives not in fear. Shakesp. K. Lear.

Yet there is a credence in my heart,

An esperance so obstinately strong,

That doth invert th' attest of eyes and ears. Shakespeare.

ESPI'AL. n. f. [French, from espier.] A spy; a scout; one sent to bring intelligence.

Those four garisons, issuing forth at such convenient times as they shall have intelligence, or espial upon the enemy, will drive him from one side to another. Spenser on Ireland.

As he march'd along,

By your espials were discovered

Two mightier troops. Shakesp.

'Spials have informed me,

The English in the suburbs close entrench'd,

Went through a secret grate. Shakesp. Hen. VI.

She had some secret espials to look abroad for graceful youths, to make Plantagenets. Bac. H. VII.

ESPLANADE. n. f. [French.] In fortification, the same with the glacis of the counterscarpe originally; but now it is taken for the empty space between the glacis of a citadel and the first houses of the town. Harris.

ESPO'USALS. n. f. without a singul. [sponsalia, Latin; espous, French.] The act of contracting or affiancing a man and woman to each other; the act or ceremony of betrothing.

ESPO'USAL. adj. Used in the act of espousing or betrothing.

The ambassador put his leg, stript naked to the knee, between the espousal sheets; that the ceremony might amount to a consummation. Bacon's Henry VII.

To ESPO'USE. v. a. [espouser, French.]

1. To contract or betroth to another.

Deliver me my wife Michal, which I espoused to me. 2 Sa.

He had received him as a suppliant, protected him as a person fled for refuge, and espoused him with his kinswoman. Bac.

2. To marry; to wed.

Lavinia will I make my emperess,

And in the sacred Pantheon her espouse. Shakesp. Tit. Andr.

Here, in close recess,

With flow'rs, garlands, and sweet smelling herbs,

Espoused Eve deck'd first her nuptial bed. Milton's Par. Lost.

They soon espous'd; for they with ease were join'd,

Who were before contracted in the mind. Dryden.

If her fire approves,

Let him espouse her to the peer she loves. Pope's Odyssey, b. ii.

3. To adopt; to take to himself.

In gratitude unto the duke of Bretagne, for his former favours, he espoused that quarrel, and declared himself in aid of the duke. Bacon's Henry VII.

4. To maintain; to defend.

Their gods did not only interest themselves in the event of wars, but also espoused the several parties in a visible corporeal descent. Dryden's Juvenal, Dedication.

The city, army, court, espouse my cause. Dryd. Sp. Fry.

Men espouse the well-endowed opinions in fashion, and then seek arguments either to make good their beauty, or varnish over their deformity. Locke.

The righteousness of the best cause may be over balanced by the iniquities of those that espouse it. Smalridge's Sermons.

The cause of religion and goodness, which is the cause of God, is ours by descent, and we are doubly bound to espouse it. Atterbury's Sermons.

To E'SPY. v. a. [espier, French.]

1. To see a thing at a distance.

2. To discover a thing intended to be hid.

He who before he was espied was afraid, after being perceived was ashamed, now being hardly rubbed upon, left both fear and shame, and was moved to anger. Sidney.

Few there are of so weak capacity but publick evils they easily espy; fewer so patient as not to complain, when the grievous inconveniencies thereof doth work sensible smart. Hook.

3. To see unexpectedly.

And as one of them opened his sack, he espied his money.

Gen. xl. 27.

4. To discover as a spy.

Moses sent me to espy out the land, and I brought him word again. Jos. xiv. 7.

To E'SPY'. v. n. To watch; to look about.

Stand by the way and espy; ask him that fleeth what is done. Jer. xlvii. 19.

ESQU'IRE. n. f. [escuer, French.] See SQUIRE.

1. The armour-bearer or attendant on a knight.

2. A title of dignity, and next in degree below a knight. Those to whom this title is now of right due, are all the younger sons of noblemen, and their heirs male for ever; the four esquires of the king's body; the eldest sons of all baronets; so also of all knights of the Bath, and knights batchlors, and their heirs male in the right line; those that serve the king in any worshipful calling, as the serjeant chirurgeon, serjeant of the ewry, master cook, &c. such as are created esquires by the king with a collar of S. S. of silver, as the heralds and serjeants at arms. The chief of some ancient families are likewise esquires by prescription; those that bear any superior office in the commonwealth, as high sheriff of any county, who retains the title of esquire during his life, in respect of the great trust he has had of the posse comitatus. He who is a justice of the peace has it during the time he is in commission, and no longer, if not otherwise qualified to bear it. Utter barristers, in the acts of parliament for poll-money, were ranked among esquires. Blount.

Where

What are our English dead?

—Sir Richard Ketley, Davy Gam esquire. Shakesf. Hen. V.
To ESSAY. v. a. [essayer, French.]

1. To attempt; to try; to endeavour.
While I this unexampled task essay,
Pass awful gulphs, and beat my painful way,
Celestial dove, divine assistance bring. Blackmore's Creation.
No conquest she, but o'er herself desir'd;
No arts essay'd, but not to be admir'd. Pope, Epistle 5.

2. To make experiment of.
3. To try the value and purity of metals.
The standard in our mint being now settled, the rules and methods of essaying suited to it should remain unvariable. Locke.
ESSAY. n. f. [from the verb. The accent is used on either syllable.]

1. Attempt; endeavour.
Fruitless our hopes, though pious our essays;
Your's to preserve a friend, and mine to praise. Smith.
2. A loose fally of the mind; an irregular indigested piece; not a regular and orderly composition.
My essays, of all my other works, have been most current. Bac.
Yet modestly he does his work survey,
And calls his finish'd poem an essay. Poem to Roscommon.
3. A trial; an experiment.
He wrote this but as an essay, or taste of my virtue. Shak.
Repetitions wear us into a liking of what possibly, in the first essay, displeased us. Locke.

4. First taste of any thing; first experiment.
Translating the first of Homer's Iliads, I intended as an essay to the whole work. Dryden's Fables, Preface.

ESSENCE. n. f. [essentia, Latin.]
1. Essence is but the very nature of any being, whether it be actually existing or no: a rose in Winter has an essence; in Summer it has existence also. Watts's Logick.

- One thinks the soul is air; another, fire;
Another, blood diffus'd about the Heart;
Another faith, the elements conspire,
And to her essence each doth give a part. Davies.
I could wish the nature of a spirit were more unknown to me than it is, that I might believe its existence, without meddling at all with its essence. More's Divine Dialogues.
He wrote the nature of things upon their names: he could view essences in themselves, and read forms without the comment of their respective properties. South's Sermons.

2. Formal existence; that which makes any thing to be what it is.

The visible church of Jesus is one in outward profession of those things, which supernaturally appertain to the very essence of Christianity, and are necessarily required in every particular Christian man. Hooker, b. iii. f. 1.

3. Existence; the quality of being.
In such cogitations have I flood, with such a darkness and heaviness of mind, that I might have been persuaded to have resigned my very essence. Sidney.

4. Being; existent person.
As far as gods, and heav'nly essences
Can perish. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. i. l. 138.

5. Species of existent being.
Here be four of you, as differing as the four elements; and yet you are friends: as for Eupolis, because he is temperate, and without passion, he may be the fifth essence. Bacon.

6. Constituent substance.
For spirits, when they please,
Can either sex assume, or both; so soft
And uncompounded is their essence pure;
Not ty'd or manacled with joint or limb. Milton's Pa. Lost.

7. The cause of existence. This sense is not proper.
She is my essence; and I leave to be,
If I be not by her fair influence
Foster'd, illumin'd, cherish'd, kept alive. Shakespeare.

8. [In medicine.] The chief properties or virtues of any simple, or composition collected in a narrow compass.
9. Perfume; odour; scent.

Our humble province is to 'tend the fair;
To save the powder from too rude a gale,
Nor let th' imprison'd essences exhale. Pope's Rape of the Lock.
To ESSENCE. v. a. [from essence.] To perfume; to scent.

The husband rails, from morning to night, at essenced fops and tawdry courtiers. Addison's Spectator, N°. 128.
ESSENTIAL. adj. [essentialis, Latin.]

1. Necessary to the constitution or existence of any thing.
The discipline of our church, although it be not an essential part of our religion, should not be rashly altered, as the very substance of our religion will be interested in it. Bacon.

From that original of doing good, that is essential to the infinite being of our Creator, we have an excellent copy transcribed. Spratt's Sermon.

This power cannot be innate and essential to matter; and if it be not essential, it is consequently most manifest it could never supervene to it, unless impressed and infused into it by an immaterial and divine power. Bentley's Sermons.

A great minister puts you a case, and asks your opinion;

but conceals an essential circumstance, upon which the whole weight of the matter turns. Swift.

And if each system in gradation roll,
Alike essential to th' amazing whole,
The least confusion but in one, not all
That system only, but the whole must fall. Pope.

2. Important in the highest degree; principal.
Judgment's more essential to a general,
Than courage. Denham's Sophy.

3. Pure; highly rectified; subtilly elaborated; extracted so as to contain all the virtues of its elemental parts contracted into a narrow compass.

The juice of the seed is an essential oil or balm, designed by nature to preserve the seed from corruption. Arbuthnot.

ESSENTIAL. n. f.
1. Existence; being.

His utmost ire to the height enrag'd,
Will either quite consume us, or reduce
To nothing this essential. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ii.

2. Nature; first or constituent principles.
The plague of sin has even altered his nature, and eaten into his very essentials. South's Sermons.

3. The chief point; that which is in any respect of great importance.

ESSENTIALLY. adv. [essentialiter, Latin.] By the constitution of nature.

He that loves himself,
Hath not essentially, but by circumstance,
The name of valour. Shakespeare's Henry VI. p. ii.
Body and spirit are essentially divided, though not locally distant. Glanville.

All sin essentially is, and must be, mortal. South's Sermons.
Knowledge is that which, next to virtue, truly and essentially raises one man above another. Addison's Guardian.

ESSOINE. n. f. [of the French essonié, or exonnié.]

1. He that has his presence forborn or excused upon any just cause; as sickness.
2. Allegment of an excuse for him that is summoned, or fought for, to appear and answer to an action real, or to perform suit to a court-baron, upon just cause of absence. Cowel.
3. Excuse; exemption.
From every work he challenged essoin,
For contemplation sake; yet otherwise
His life he led in lawless riotise. Fairy Queen, b. i. c. 4.

To ESTABLISH. v. a. [etablis, French.]
1. To settle firmly; to fix unalterably.

He may establish thee to-day for a people unto himself. Deut.
Upon the throne of David, and upon his kingdom, to order it, and to establish it with judgment and with justice. Is. ix.

I will establish my covenant with him for an everlasting covenant, Gen. xvii. 19.

The Normans never obtained this kingdom by such a right of conquest, as did or might alter the established laws of the kingdom. Hale's Common Law of England.

2. To settle in any privilege or possession; to confirm.
Soon after the rebellion broke out, the Presbyterian sect was established in all its forms by an ordinance of the lords and commons. Swift.

3. To make firm; to ratify.
Every vow, and every binding oath to afflict the soul, her husband may establish it, or her husband may make it void. Num.

4. To fix or settle in an opinion.
So were the churches established in the faith. Acts xvi. 5.
5. To form or model.

He appointed in what manner his family should be esta- blished. Clarendon, b. viii.

6. To found; to build firmly; to fix immoveably. A sense not in use.

For he hath founded it upon the seas, and established it upon the floods. Pf. xxiv. 12.

7. To make a settlement of any inheritance. A sense not in use.

We will establish our estate upon
Our eldest Malcolm, whom we name hereafter
The prince of Cumberland. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

ESTABLISHMENT. n. f. [from establish; établissement, French.]

1. Settlement; fixed state.
All happy peace, and goodly government,
Is settled there in sure establishment. Fairy Queen, b. ii. c. 11.

2. Confirmation of something already done; ratification.
He had not the act penned by way of recognition of right; as, on the other side, he avoided to have it by new law; but chose rather a kind of middle way, by way of establish-

3. Settled regulation; form; model of a government or family.
Now come unto that general reformation, and bring in that establishment by which all men should be contained in duty. Spenser's State of Ireland.

4. Foundation; fundamental principle; settled law.
The sacred order to which you belong, and even the esta- blishment on which it subsists, have often been struck at; but in vain. Atterbury's Sermons.

5. Allowance;

5. Allowance; income; salary.

His excellency, who had the sole disposal of the emperor's revenue, might easily provide against that evil, by gradually lessening your establishment. Gulliver's Travels.

ESTATE. n. f. [estat, French.]

1. The general interest; the business of the government; the publick. In this sense it is now commonly written state.

Many times the things adduced to judgment may be meum & tuum, when the reason and consequence thereof may reach to point of estate: I call matters of estate not only the parts of sovereignty, but whatsoever introduceth any great alteration, or dangerous precedent, or concerneth manifestly any great portion of people. Bacon's Essays.

2. Condition of life, with regard to prosperity or adversity.

Thanks to giddy chance,

She cast us headlong from our high estate. Dryden.

3. Condition; circumstances in general.

Truth and certainty are not at all secured by innate principles; but men are in the same uncertain, floating estate with as without them. Locke.

4. Fortune; possession: generally meant of possessions in land, or realities.

She accused us to the king, as though we went about to overthrow him in his own estate. Sidney, b. ii.

Go, miser! go; for lucre sell thy soul;

Truck wares for wares, and trudge from pole to pole,

That men may say, when thou art dead and gone,

See what a vast estate he left his son! Dryden's Pers. Sat.

5. Rank; quality.

Who hath not heard of the greatness of your estate? Who seeth not that your estate is much excelled with that sweet uniting of all beauties. Sidney, b. ii.

6. A person of high rank. This sense is disused.

She is a dutchess, a great estate. Latimer.

Herod, on his birthday, made a supper to his lords, high captains, and chief estates of Galilee. Mar. vi. 21.

To ESTATE. v. a. [from the noun.] To settle as a fortune.

Why hath thy queen

Summon'd me hither?

—A contract of true love to celebrate,

And some donation freely to estate

On the blest'd lovers. Shakespeare's Tempest.

To ESTEEM. v. a. [estimer, French; estimo, Latin.]

1. To set a value whether high or low upon any thing.

The worth of all men by their end esteem,

And then due praise, or due reproach them yield. Fa. Queen.

I preferred her before sceptres and thrones, and esteemed riches nothing in comparison of her. Wisd. vii. 8.

2. To compare; to estimate by proportion.

Besides, those single forms she doth esteem,

And in her balance doth their values try. Davies.

3. To prize; to rate high; to regard with reverence.

Who would not be loved more, though he were esteemed less? Dryden.

4. To hold in opinion; to think; to imagine.

One man esteemeth one day above another: another esteemeth every day alike. Rom. xiv. 5.

ESTEEM. n. f. [from the verb.] High value; reverential regard.

Who can see,

Without esteem for virtuous poverty,

Severe Fabritius, or can cease to admire

The ploughman consul in his coarse attire. Dryden's Æn.

Both those poets lived in much esteem with good and holy men in orders. Dryden's Fables, Preface.

I am not uneasy that many, whom I never had any esteem for, are likely to enjoy this world after me. Pope.

ESTEEMER. n. f. [from esteem.] One that highly values; one that sets an high rate upon any thing.

This might instruct the proudest esteemer of his own parts, how useful it is to talk and consult with others. Locke.

ESTIMABLE. adj. [French.]

1. Valuable; worth a large price.

A pound of man's flesh, taken from a man,

Is not so estimable or profitable

As flesh of muttons, beefs, or goats, Shak. Mer. of Venice.

2. Worthy of esteem; worthy of some degree of honour and respect.

A lady said of her two companions, that one was more amiable, the other more estimable.

You lost one who gave hopes of being, in time, every thing that was estimable and good. Temple.

ESTIMABLENESS. n. f. [from estimable.] The quality of deserving regard.

To ESTIMATE. v. a. [estimo, Latin.]

1. To rate; to adjust the value of; to judge of any thing by its proportion to something else.

When a man shall sanctify his house to the Lord, then the priest shall estimate it whether it be good or bad: as the priest shall estimate it, so shall it stand. Lev. xxvii. 14.

It is by the weight of silver, and not the name of the piece, that men estimate commodities and exchange them. Locke.

2. To calculate; to compute.

ESTIMATE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Computation; calculation.

Upon a moderate estimate and calculation of the quantity of water now actually contained in the abyss, I found that this alone was full enough to cover the whole globe to the height assigned by Moses. Woodward.

2. Value.

I'd love

My country's good, with a respect more tender,

More holy and profound than mine own life,

My dear wife's estimate, her womb's increase,

The treasure of my loins. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

3. Valuation; assignment of proportional value; comparative judgment.

The only way to come to a true estimate upon the odds betwixt a publick and a private life, is to try both. L'Estrange.

Outward actions can never give a just estimate of us, since there are many perfections of a man which are not capable of appearing in actions. Addison's Spectator, N<sup>o</sup>. 257.

ESTIMATION. n. f. [from estimate.]

1. The act of adjusting proportional value.

If a man shall sanctify unto the Lord some part of a field, the estimation shall be according to the seed, and homer of barley. Levit.

2. Calculation; computation.

3. Opinion; judgment.

In our own estimation we account such particulars more worthy than those that are already tried and known. Bacon.

4. Esteem; regard; honour.

Crimes there were laid to his charge many, the least whereof being just, had bereaved him of estimation and credit with men. Hooker, b. v. f. 42.

Of your brace of unprizeable estimations, the one is but frail, and the other casual. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

I know the gentleman

To be of worth and worthy estimation,

And not without desert so well reputed. Shakespeare.

I shall have estimation among the multitude, and honour with the elders. Wisd. viii. 10.

A plain reason of the publick honours due to the magistrate is, that he may be in due estimation and reverence. Atterbury.

ESTIMATIVE. adj. [from estimate.] Having the power of comparing, and adjusting the preference.

We find in animals an estimative or judicial faculty, an appetite or aversion, and loco-motive faculty answering the will. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

ESTIMATOR. n. f. [from estimate.] A setter of rates; a computer.

ESTIVAL. adj. [æstivus, Latin.]

1. Pertaining to the Summer.

2. Continuing for the Summer.

ESTIVATION. n. f. [æstivatio, Latin.] The act of passing the Summer.

A grotto is a place of shade, or estivation. Bacon's Essays.

ESTRADE. n. f. [French; stratum, Latin.] An even or level space. Dict.

To ESTRANGE. v. a. [estranger, French.]

1. To keep at a distance; to withdraw.

Had we not only cut off their corruptions, but also estranged ourselves from them in things indifferent, who seeth not how greatly prejudicial this might have been to so good a cause? Hooker, b. iv. f. 7.

They know it is our custom of simple reading, not for conversion of infidels estranged from the house of God, but for instruction of men baptized, bred, and brought up in the bosom of the church. Hooker, b. v. f. 22.

See, she weeps;

Thinks me unkind, or false, and knows not why

I thus estrangle my person from her bed. Dryden.

2. To alienate; to divert from its original use or possessor.

They have estranged this place, and have burnt incense in it to other gods. Jer. xix. 4.

3. To alienate from affection; to turn from kindness to malevolence or indifference.

How comes it now, my husband, oh, how comes it,

That thou art thus estranged from thyself?

Thyself I call it, being strange to me. Shakesf. Com. of Err.

Adam, estrang'd in look, and alter'd style,

Speech intermitted, thus to Eve renew'd. Milton's Par. Lost.

I came to grieve a father's heart estrang'd;

But little thought to find a mistress chang'd. Dryd. Aurengz.

I do not know, to this hour, what it is that has estranged him from me. Pope.

4. To withdraw or withhold.

We must endeavour to estrangle our belief from every thing which is not clearly and distinctly evidenced to our faculties. Glanv. Sceps. c. 14.

ESTRANGEMENT. n. f. [from estrangle.] Alienation; distance; removal; voluntary abstraction.

Desires, by a long estrangement from better things, come at length perfectly to loath, and fly off from them. South.

ESTRAPADE. n. f. [French.] The defence of a horse that will not obey, who, to get rid of his rider, rises mightily before; and while his forehead is yet in the air, yerks furiously with his hind legs. Fairier's Dict.

ESTRE'ATE. n. f. [extractum, Latin.] The true copy of an original writing: for example, of amerciaments or penalties, set down in the rolls of a court, to be levied by the bailiff, or other officer, of every man for his offence. A law term. Cowel.

ESTRE'PEMENT. n. f. [of the French word estrepier.] Spoil made by the tenant for term of life upon any lands or woods, to the prejudice of him in the reversion. Cowel.

E'STRICH. n. f. [commonly written ostrich.] The largest of birds.

To be furious,

Is to be frightened out of fear; and, in that mood,
The dove will peck the estridge. Shak. Anth. and Cleopatra.

The peacock, not at thy command, assumes
His glorious train; nor estrich her rare plumes. Sandys.

E'STUARY. n. f. [æstuarium, Latin.] An arm of the sea; the mouth of a lake or river in which the tide reciprocates; a frith.

To E'STUATE. v. a. [æstuo, Latin.] To swell and fall reciprocally; to boil; to be in a state of violent commotion. Dict.

ESTUA'TION. n. f. [from æstuo, Latin.] The state of boiling; reciprocation of rise and fall; agitation; commotion.

Rivers and lakes, that want fermenting parts at the bottom, are not excited unto estuations; therefore some seas flow higher than others. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. vii. c. 13.

The motion of the will is accompanied with a sensible commotion of the spirits, and an estuation of the blood. Norris.

E'STURE. n. f. [æstus, Latin.] Violence; commotion.

The seas retain

Not only their outrageous esture there,
But supernatural mischief they expire. Chapman's Odyssey.

E'SURIENT. adj. [esuriens, Latin.] Hungry; voracious. Dict.

E'SURINE. adj. [esurio, Latin.] Corroding; eating.

Over much piercing is the air of Hampstead, in which sort of air there is always something esurine and acid. Wiseman.

ETC. A contraction of the two Latin words et cætera, which signifies and so on; and the rest; and others of the like kind.

To ETCH. v. a. [etizen, German.]

1. A way used in making of prints, by drawing with a proper needle upon a copper-plate, covered over with a ground of wax, &c. and well blacked with the smoke of a link, in order to take off the figure of the drawing or print; which having its backside tintured with white lead, will, by running over the stricken out lines with a stiff, impress the exact figure on the black or red ground; which figure is afterwards with needles drawn deeper quite through the ground, and all the shadows and hatchings put in; and then a wax border being made all round the plate, there is poured on a sufficient quantity of well tempered aqua fortis, which, insinuating into the strokes made by the needles, usually eats, in about half an hour, into the figure of the print or drawing on the copper plate. Harris.

2. To scetch; to draw; to delineate [unless this word be mistaken by Locke for eke.]

There are many empty terms to be found in some learned writers, to which they had recourse to etch out their systems. Locke.

3. [This word is evidently mistaken by Ray for edge.] To move forwards towards one side.

When we lie long awake in the night, we are not able to rest one quarter of an hour without shifting of sides, or at least etching this way and that way, more or less. Ray.

ETCH. n. f. A country word, of which I know not the meaning.

When they sow their etch crops, they sprinkle a pound or two of clover on an acre. Mortimer's Husbandry.

Where you find dunging of land makes it rank, lay dung upon the etch, and sow it with barley. Mortimer's Husbandry.

ETERNAL. adj. [æternus, Latin.]

1. Without beginning or end.

The eternal God is thy refuge. Deut. xxxiii. 27.

2. Without beginning.

It is a question quite different from our having an idea of eternity, to know whether there were any real being, whose duration has been eternal. Locke.

3. Without end; endless; immortal.

Thou know'st that Banquo and his Fleance lives.

—But in them nature's copy's not eternal. Shakesf. Macbeth.

4. Perpetual; constant; unintermitting.

Burnt off'rings morn and ev'ning shall be thine,

And fires eternal in thy temple shine. Dryd. Knight's Tale.

5. Unchangeable.

Hobbes believed the eternal truths which he opposed. Dryd.

ETERNAL. n. f. [eternel, French.] One of the appellations of the Godhead.

That law whereby the eternal himself doth work. Hooker.

The eternal, to prevent such horrid fray,

Hung out of heav'n his golden scales. Milton.

ETERNALIST. n. f. [aternus, Latin.] One that holds the past existence of the world infinite.

E T H

I would ask the eternalists what mark is there that they could expect or desire of the novelty of a world, that is not found in this? Or what mark is there of eternity that is found in this? Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

To ETE'RNALISE. v. a. [from eternal.] To make eternal. Dict.

ETE'RNALLY. adv. [from eternal.]

1. Without beginning or end.

2. Unchangeably; invar ably.

That which is morally good, or evil, at any time, or in any case, must be also eternally and unchangeably so, with relation to that time and to that case. South's Sermons.

3. Perpetually; without intermission.

Bear me, some god, to Baja's gentle seats,
Or cover me in Umbria's green retreats,
Where western gales eternally reside,
And all the seasons lavish all their pride. Addison.

ETE'RNE. adj. [aternus, Latin.] Eternal; perpetual; endless.

The Cyclops hammers fall

On Mars his armour, forg'd for proof eterne. Shak. Hamlet.

ETE'RNITY. n. f. [aternitas, Latin.]

1. Duration without beginning or end.

In this ground his precious root
Still lives, which, when weak time shall be pour'd out
Into eternity, and circular joys
Dancing an endless round, again shall rise. Crashaw.

Thy immortal rhyme
Makes this one short point of time,
To fill up half the orb of round eternity. Cowley.

By repeating the idea of any length of duration which we have in our minds, with all the endless addition of number, we come by the idea of eternity. Locke.

2. Duration without end.

Beyond is all abyss,
Eternity, whose end no eye can reach! Milt. Parad. Lost.
Eternity, thou pleasing, dreadful thought!
Through what variety of untried being,
Through what new scenes and changes must we pass. Add.

To ETE'RNIZE. v. a. [aterno, Latin.]

1. To make endless; to perpetuate.

I with two fair gifts
Created him endow'd; with happiness,
And immortality: that fondly lost,
This other serv'd but to eternize woe. Milton's Parad. Lost.

2. To make for ever famous; to immortalize.

Mankind by all means seeking to eternize himself, so much the more as he is near his end, doth it by speeches and writings. Sidney.

And well beseems all knights of noble name,
That covet in th' immortal book of fame
To be eternized, that same to haunt. Fairy Queen, b. i.

I might relate of thousands, and their names
Eternize here on earth; but those elect
Angels, contented with their fame in heav'n,

Seek not the praise of men. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vi.
The four great monarchies have been celebrated by the writings of many famous men, who have eternized their fame, and thereby their own. Temple.

Both of them are set on fire by the great actions of heroes, and both endeavour to eternize them. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

Hence came its name, in that the grateful Jove Hath eterniz'd the glory of his love. Creech's Manilius.

E'THER. n. f. [ather, Latin; ἄῠρ.]

1. An element more fine and subtle than air; air refined or sublimed.

If any one should suppose that ether, like our air, may contain particles which endeavour to recede from one another; for I do not know what this ether is; and that its particles are exceedingly smaller than those of air, or even than those of light, the exceeding smallness of its particles may contribute to the greatness of the force, by which those particles may recede from one another. Newton's Opt.

The parts of other bodies are held together by the eternal pressure of the ether, and can have no other conceivable cause of their cohesion and union. Locke.

2. The matter of the highest regions above.

There fields of light and liquid ether flow,
Purg'd from the pond'rous dregs of earth below. Dryden.

ETHE'REAL. adj. [from ether.]

1. Formed of ether.

Man feels me, when I press th' ethereal plains. Dryden.

2. Celestial; heavenly.

Go, heav'nly guest, ethereal messenger,
Sent from whose sov'reign goodness I adore. Milton.

Thrones and imperial pow'rs, offspring of heav'n,
Ethereal virtues! Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ii. l. 311.

Such as these, being in good part freed from the entanglements of sense and body, are employed, like the spirits above, in contemplating the Divine Wisdom in the works of nature; a kind of anticipation of the ethereal happiness and employment. Glanv. Apol.

Vast

Vast chain of being, which from God began,
Natures ethereal, human; angel, man. Pope.
ETHEREOUS. adj. [from ether] Formed of ether; heavenly.
Behold the bright surface

Of this ethereous mould, whereon we stand. Milt. Pa. Lost.
ETHICAL. adj. [ἠθικός.] Moral; treating on morality.
ETHICALLY. adv. [from ethical.] According to the doctrines of morality.

My subject leads me not to discourse ethically, but christianly of the faults of the tongue. Government of the Tongue.
ETHICK. adj. [ἠθικός.] Moral; delivering precepts of morality. Whence Pope entitled part of his works Ethick Epistles.
ETHICKS. n. f. without the singular. [ἠθικῶν.] The doctrine of morality; a system of morality.

For of all moral virtues, she was all
That ethicks speak of virtues cardinal. Donne.

The subject of my scorn and cruelty. Dryden's Ind. Emp.
Mankind is ever the same, and nothing lost out of nature, though every thing is altered. Dryden's Fables, Pref.
Ever since that time Lisander has been at the house. Tatler.
Immortal Vida! on whose honour'd brow
The poet's bays and critick's ivy grow,
Cremona now shall ever boast thy name,
As next in place to Mantua, next in fame. Pope's Essays.
3. For ever; eternally; to perpetuity.
Men are like a company of poor insects, whereof some are bees, delighted with flowers and their sweetness; others beetles, delighted with other kinds of viands; which, having enjoyed for a season, they cease to be, and exist no more for ever. Loc.
We'll to the temple: there you'll find your son;
And there be crown'd, or give him up for ever. A. Phillips.
4. It is sometimes reduplicated.
For ever, and for ever, farewell, Cassius. Shakespeare.
I know a lord who values no lease, though for a thousand years, nor any estate that is not for ever and ever. Temple.
The meeting points the fatal lock dissolve
From the fair head, for ever and for ever. Pope.
5. At one time, as, ever and anon: that is, at one time and another; now and then.
So long as Guyon with her communed,
Unto the ground she cast her modest eye;
And ever and anon, with rosy red,
The bashful blood her snowy cheeks did dye. Fairy Queen.
The fat ones would be ever and anon making sport with the lean, and calling them starvelings. L'Estrange.
He lay stretch'd along,
And ever and anon a silent tear
Stole down and trickled from his hoary beard. Dryden.
6. In any degree.
Let no man fear that harmful creature ever the less, because he sees the apostle safe from that poison. Hall.
For a mine undiscovered, neither the owner of the ground or any body else are ever the richer. Collier on Pride.
It suffices to the unity of any idea, that it be considered as one representation or picture, though made up of ever so many particulars. Locke.
There must be somewhere such a rank as man;
And all the question, wrangle e'er so long,
Is only this, if God has plac'd him wrong. Pope's Essays.
7. A word of enforcement, or aggravation. As soon as ever he had done it; that is, immediately after he had done it. In this sense it is scarcely used but in familiar language.
That ever this fellow should have fewer words than a parrot, and yet the son of a woman. Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. 1.
They brake all their bones in pieces, or ever they came at the bottom of the den. Dan. iv. 24.
That purse in your hand, as a twin brother, is as like him as ever he can look. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.
As soon as e'er the bird is dead,
Opening again, he lays his claim
To half the profit, half the fame. Prior.
The title of duke had been sunk in the family ever since the attainder of the great duke of Suffolk. Addison on Italy.
8. EVER A. Any: [as every, that is, every ich or ever each is each one, all.] This word is still retained in the Scottish dialect.
I am old, I am old.
—I love thee better than I love e'er a scurvy young boy of them all. Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. ii.
9. It is often contracted into e'er.
10. It is much used in composition in the sense of always: as, evergreen, green throughout the year; everduring, enduring without end. It is added almost arbitrarily to neutral participles and adjectives, and will be sufficiently explained by the following instances.
- EVERBUBBLING. adj. [ever and bubbling.] Boiling up with perpetual murmurs.
Panting murmurs, still'd out of her breast,
That everbubbling spring. Crashaw.
- EVERBURNING. adj. [ever and burning.] Unextinguished.
His tail was stretched out in wond'rous length,
That to the house of heavenly gods it raught;
And with extorted power and borrow'd strength,
The everburning lamps from thence it brought. Fai. Queen.
Torture without end
Still urges, and a fiery deluge, fed
With everburning sulphur unconsum'd! Milton's Par. Lost.
- EVERDURING. adj. [ever and during.] Eternal; enduring without end.
Our souls, piercing through the impurity of flesh, behold the highest heavens, and thence bring knowledge to contemplate the everduring glory and termless joy. Raleigh.
Heav'n open'd wide
Her everduring gates, harmonious sound!
On golden hinges moving. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vii.
- EVERGREEN. adj. [ever and green.] Verdant throughout the year.
There will I build him
A monument, and plant it round with shade

E V E

- Of laurel, evergreen, and branching palm. Milton's Agonist.
The juice, when in greater plenty than can be exhaled by the sun, renders the plant evergreen. Arbutnot on Aliments.
- EVERGREEN. n. f. A plant that retains its verdure through all the seasons.
Some of the hardiest evergreens may be transplanted, especially if the weather be moist and temperate. Evelyn's Kalend.
I find you are against filling an English garden with ever- greens. Addison's Spectator, N<sup>o</sup>. 477.
- EVERHO'NOURED. adj. [ever and honoured.] Always held in honour or esteem.
Mentes, an everhonour'd name, of old
High in Ulysses' social list enroll'd. Pope's Odyssey, b. i.
- EVERLASTING. adj. [ever and lasting.]
1. Lasting or enduring without end; perpetual; immortal;
eternal.
Whether we shall meet again, I know not;
Therefore our everlasting farewell take:
For ever, and for ever, farewell, Cassius. Shak. Jul. Cæsar.
The everlasting life, both of body and soul, in that future state, whether in bliss or woe, hath been added. Hammond.
And what a trifle is a moment's breath,
Laid in the scale with everlasting death! Denham.
2. It is used of past as well as future eternity, though not so properly.
EVERLASTING. n. f. Eternity; eternal duration whether past or future.
From everlasting to everlasting thou art God. Pf. xc. 2.
We are in God through the knowledge which is had of us, and the love which is born towards us, from everlasting. Hooker.
- EVERLASTINGLY. adv. [from everlasting.] Eternally; without end.
I'll hate him everlastingly,
That bids me be of comfort any more. Shakesf. Rich. II.
Many have made themselves everlastingly ridiculous. Swift.
- EVERLASTINGNESS. n. f. [from everlasting.] Eternity; perpetuity; an indefinite duration.
Nothing could make me sooner to confess,
That this world had an everlastingness,
Than to consider that a year is run
Since both this lower world's, and the sun's sun,
The lustre and the vigour of this all,
Did set. Dorthe.
- EVERLIVING. adj. [ever and living.] Living without end;
immortal; eternal; incessant.
Is not from hence the way, that leadeth right
To that most glorious house, that glist'eth bright
With burning stars and everliving fires. Fairy Queen, b. i.
In that he is man, he received life from the Father, as from the fountain of that everliving Deity. Hooker, b. v. f. 56.
God's justice in the one, and his goodness in the other, is exercised for evermore, as the everliving subjects of his reward and punishment. Raleigh's History of the World.
- The instinct of brutes and insects can be the effect of nothing else than the wisdom and skill of a powerful everliving Agent. Newton's Opt.
- EVERMORE. adv. [ever and more.] Always; eternally. More seems an expletive accidentally added, unless it signified originally from this time: as, evermore, always henceforward; but this sense has not been strictly preserved.
It govern'd was, and guided evermore,
Through wisdom of a matron grave and hoare. Fa. Queen.
Sparks by nature evermore aspire,
Which makes them now to such a highness flee. Davies.
Religion prefers those pleasures which flow from the presence of God for evermore, infinitely before the transitory pleasures of this world. Tillotson, Sermon i.
- EVEROPEN. adv. [ever and open.] Never closed; not at any time shut.
God is the great eye of the world, always watching over our actions, and has an everopen ear to hear all our words.
Taylor's Rule of living holy.
- EVERPLEASING. adj. [ever and pleasing.] Delighting at all times; never ceasing to give pleasure.
The everpleasing Pamela was content to urge a little farther for me. Sidney.
Forsaking Scheria's everpleasing shore,
The winds to Marathon the virgin bore. Pope's Odyssey.
- TO EVERSE. v. a. [eversus, Latin.] To overthrow; to subvert; to destroy.
The foundation of this principle is totally *everse*d by the ingenious commentator upon immaterial beings. Glanv. Sceps.
- TO EVERT. v. a. [everso, Latin.] To destroy; to overthrow.
A process is valid, if the jurisdiction of the judge is not yet everted and overthrown. Ayliffe's Parergon.
- EVERWATCHFUL. adj. [ever and watchful.] Always vigilant.
Plac'd at the helm he sat, and mark'd the skies,
Nor clos'd in sleep his everwatchful eyes. Pope's Odyssey, b. iv.
- EVERY. adj. [in old language everich, that is, ever each;
æfen ealc, Saxon.]
1. Each one of all. Every has therefore no plural signification.
He

He propoſeth unto God their neceſſities, and they their own requeſts for relief in every of them. Hooker, b. v. f. 39.

All the congregation are holy, every one of them. Num. xvi.

The king made this ordonance, that every twelve years there ſhould be ſet forth two ſhips. Bacon's New Atlantis.

The virtue and force of every of theſe three is ſhrewdly allayed. Hammond's Fundamentals.

Ariſtotle has long ſince obſerved, how unreaſonable it is to expect the ſame kind of proof for every thing, which we have for ſome things. Tillotſon's Sermons.

Every one, that has any idea of a foot, finds that he can repeat that idea, and, joining it to the former, make the idea of two feet. Locke.

From pole to pole the thunder roars aloud,

And broken lightnings flaſh from ev'ry cloud. Pope's Statius.

2. EVERY-WHERE. In all places; in each place.

The ſubſtance of the body of Chriſt was not every-where ſeen, nor did it every-where ſuffer death; every-where it could not be entombed: it is not every-where now, being exalted into heaven. Hooker, b. v. f. 55.

If I ſend my ſon abroad, how is it poſſible to keep him from vice, which is every-where ſo in faſhion? Locke.

'Tis no-where to be found, or every-where. Pope.

EVERYOUNG. adj. [ever and young.] Not ſubject to old age, or decay; undecaying.

Joys everyyoung, unmix'd with pain or fear,

Fill the wide circle of th' eternal year. Pope's Odyssey, b. iv.

E'VESDROPPER. n. f. [eves and dropper.] Some mean fellow that ſkulks about a houſe in the night.

What makes you liſtning there? Get farther off; I preach not to thee, thou wicked evesdropper. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

Do but think how decent a habit you have on, and how becoming your function it is to be diſguiſed like a ſlave, and an evesdropper, under the women's windows. Dryd. Don Sebaſt.

TO EVE-STIGATE. v. a. [eveſtigo, Lat.] To ſearch out. Dict.
EUGH. n. f. [This word is ſo written by moſt writers; but ſince the original is, Saxon, or Welch ywen, more favours the eaſier orthography of yew, I have referred it thither.] A tree.

At the firſt ſtretch of both his hands he drew,

And almoſt join'd the horns of the tough eugh. Dryd. Æn.

TO EVICT. v. a. [evinco, Latin.]

1. To diſpoſſeſs of by a judicial courſe.

The law of England would ſpeedily evict them out of their poſſeſſion, and therefore they held it the beſt policy to caſt off the yoke of Engliſh law. Davies on Ireland.

2. To take away by a ſentence of law.

His lands were evicted from him. K. James's Declaration.

3. To prove; to evince. Little uſed.

This nervous fluid has never been diſcovered in live animals by the ſenſes, however aſſiſted; nor its neceſſity evicted by any cogent experiment. Cheyne's Phil. Princ.

EVICTIION. n. f. [from evict.]

1. Diſpoſſeſſion or deprivation by a definitive ſentence of a court of judicature.

If any of the parties be laid aſleep, under pretence of arbitrement, and the other party doth cautiously get the ſtart at common law, yet the pretorian court will ſet back all things, and no reſpect had to eviction or diſpoſſeſſion. Bacon.

2. Proof; evidence; certain teſtimony.

A plurality of voices carries the queſtion, in all our debates, but rather as an expedient for peace than an eviction of the right. L'Eſtrange's Fables.

EVIDENCE. n. f. [French.]

1. The ſtate of being evident; clearneſs; indubitable certainty; notoriety.

2. Teſtimony; proof.

I had delivered the evidence of the purchaſe unto Baruch. Jer. xxxii. 16.

Unreaſonable it is to expect the ſame kind of proof and evidence for every thing, which we have for ſome things. Tillot.

Cato major, who had borne all the great offices, has left us an evidence, under his own hand, how much he was verſed in country affairs. Locke.

They bear evidence to a hiſtory in defence of Chriſtianity, the truth of which hiſtory was their motive to embrace Chriſtianity. Addiſon on the Chriſtian Religion.

3. Witneſs; one that gives evidence. In this ſenſe it is ſometimes plural; as, the evidence were ſworn: but ſometimes regularly augmented, as evidences.

To ſwear he ſaw three inches through a door,

As Aſiatick evidences ſwore. Dryden's Juvenal, Sat. vii.

There are books extant, which they muſt needs allow of as proper evidence; even the mighty volumes of viſible nature, and the everlaſting tables of right reaſon. Bentley.

TO EVIDENCE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To prove; to evince.

If they be principles evident of themſelves, they need nothing to evidence them. Tillotſon's Sermons, Preface.

Theſe things the Chriſtian religion require, as might be evidenced from texts. Tillotſon, Sermon v.

2. To ſhew; to make diſcovery of.

Thou on earth had'ſt proſper'd, which thy looks

Now alſo evidence. Milton's Paradise Loſt, b. x. l. 361.

EVIDENT. adj. [French.] Plain; apparent; notorious.

It is evident, in the general frame of nature, that things moſt manifeſt unto ſenſe have proved obſcure unto the underſtanding. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. vi. c. 10.

In this ſtate they are incapable of making conqueſts upon their neighbours, which is evident to all that know their conſtitutions. Temple.

Children minded not what was ſaid, when it was evident to them that no attention was ſufficient. Locke.

EVIDENTLY. adv. [from evident.] Apparently; certainly; undeniably.

Laying their eggs, they evidently prove

The genial pow'r and full effects of love. Prior.

The printing private letters is the worſt ſort of betraying converſation, as it has evidently the moſt extenſive ill conſequences. Pope.

E'VIL. adj. [ÿpel, Saxon; euvel, Dutch.]

1. Having bad qualities of any kind; not good.

He hath brought up an evil name upon a virgin of Iſrael. Deut. xxii. 19.

EVOLU'TION. n. f. [evolutus, Latin.]

1. The act of unrolling or unfolding.

2. The series of things unrolled or unfolded.

The whole evolution of ages, from everlasting to everlasting, is so collectedly and presentifickly represented to God at once, as if all things which ever were, are, or shall be, were at this very instant, and so always, really present and existent before him. Mere's Divine Dialogues.

3. [In geometry.] The equable evolution of the periphery of a circle, or any other curve, is such a gradual approach of the circumference to rectitude, as that all its parts do meet together, and equally evolve or unbend; so that the same line becomes successively a less arch of a reciprocally greater circle, 'till at last they turn into a strait line. In the Philos. Transactions, N<sup>o</sup>. 260. you have a new quadratrix to the circle, found by this means. Harris.

4. [In tactics.] The motion made by a body of men in changing their posture, or form of drawing up, either to make good the ground they are upon, or to possess themselves of another; that so they may attack the enemy, or receive his onset more advantageously. And these evolutions are doubling of ranks or files, countermarches, and wheelings. Harris.

This spontaneous coagulation of the little saline bodies was preceded by almost innumerable evolutions, which were so various, that the little bodies came to obvert to each other those parts by which they might be best fastened together. Boyle.

5. EVOLUTION of Powers [in algebra]. Extracting of roots from any given power, being the reverse of involution. Harris.

It hath flowers and fruit like the spurge, and is also full of an hot sharp milky juice. The plants are angular, and shaped somewhat like the cereus or torch-thistle. It is commonly beset with spines, and for the most part hath no leaves. Miller.

2. A gum resin, brought to us always in drops or grains, of a bright yellow, between a straw and a gold colour, and a smooth glossy surface. It has no great smell, but its taste is violently acrid and nauseous. It is produced in the remoter parts of Africa, whence it is sent to Saltee, and thence transported into Europe. The plant is also common on the coast of Malabar; but the Africans only know the secret of collecting the gum. It is used medicinally in sinapisms. Hill.

EUPHRASY. n. f. [euphrasia, Latin.] The herb eyebright; a plant supposed to clear the sight.

Then purg'd with euphrasy, and rue,
 The visual nerve; for he had much to see;

And from the well of life three drops instill'd. Milt. P. Lost.

EURO'CLYDON. n. f. [εὐροκλύδων.] A wind which blows between the East and North, and is very dangerous in the Mediterranean. It is of the nature of a whirlwind, which falls suddenly on ships, makes them tack about, and sometimes causes them to founder, as Pliny observes. Calmet.

There arose against it a tempestuous wind called euroclydon. Acts xxvii. 14.

EUROPE'AN. adj. [europæus, Latin.] Belonging to Europe.

Mean while the Spaniards in America,
 Near to the line the sun approaching saw,
 And hop'd their European coasts to find Clear'd from our ships by the autumnal wind. Waller.

What was the waste of war, what fierce alarms
 Shook Asia's crown with European arms! Dryden's Æn.

He alone defy'd
 The European thrones combin'd, and still Had set at nought their machinations vain. Phillips.

Sev'n bullocks yet upyok'd, for Phœbus chuse;

And for Diana seven unspotted ewes. Dryden's Æn. b. viii.

E'WER n. f. [from eau, perhaps anciently eu, water.] A vessel in which water is brought for washing the hands.

I dreamt of a silver basin and ewer to-night. Shakesf. Timon.

Let one attend him with a silver basin

Full of rosewater, and bestrew'd with flowers;

Another bear the ewer; a third a diaper;

And say, wilt please your lordship cool your hands? Shak.

The golden ewer a maid obsequious brings,

Replenish'd from the cool, translucent springs;

With copious water the bright vase supplies

A silver laver, of capacious size:

They wash.

Pope's Odyssey, b. i. l. 179.

E'WRY n. f. [from ewer.] An office in the king's household, where they take care of the linen for the king's table, lay the cloth, and serve up water in silver ewers after dinner. Dict.

Pf. lxxx. 22.

EXA'CTER n. f. [from exact.]

1. Extortioner; one who claims more than his due, or claims his due with outrage and severity.

The poller and exacter of fees justifies the common resemblance of the courts of justice to the bush, whereunto while the sheep flies for defence in weather, he is sure to lose part of the fleece.

Bacon's Essays, Civ. and Mor.

I will also make thy officers peace, and thine exacters righteousness.

Jf. lx. 17.

2. He that demands by authority.

Light and lewd persons, especially that the exacter of the oath did neither use exhortation, nor examining of them for taking thereof, were easily suborned to make an affidavit for money.

Bacon's Office of Alienation.

3. One who is severe in his injunctions or his demands.

No men are prone to be greater tyrants, and more rigorous exacters upon others, than such whose pride was formerly least disposed to the obedience of lawful constitutions. K. Charles.

The grateful person being still the most severe exacter of himself, not only confesses, but proclaims his debts. South.

There is no way to deal with this man of reason, this rigid exacter of strict demonstration for things which are not capable of it.

Tillotson.

EXA'CTION n. f. [from exact.]

1. The act of making an authoritative demand, or levying by force.

If he should break his day, what should I gain

By the exaction of the forfeiture? Shak. Merch. of Venice.

2. Extortion; unjust demand.

They vent reproaches

Most bitterly on you, for putter-on

Of these exactions.

Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

Remove violence and spoil, and execute judgment and justice; take away your exactions from my people. Ez. xlv. 9.

As the first earl did first raise the greatness of that house, by Irish exactions and oppressions; so Girald the last earl did at last ruin and reduce it to nothing, by using the like extortions.

Davies's State of Ireland.

3. A toll; a tribute severely levied.

They have not made bridges over the rivers for the convenience of their subjects as well as strangers, who pay an unreasonable exaction at every ferry upon the least using of the waters.

Addison's Remarks on Italy.

EXA'CTLY adv. [from exact.] Accurately; nicely; thoroughly.

Both of 'em knew mankind exactly well; for both of 'em began that study in themselves.

Dryden's Don Sebastian.

The religion they profess is such, that the more exactly it is sifted by pure unbiassed reason, the more reasonable still it will be found.

Atterbury's Sermons.

EXA'CTNESS n. f. [from exact.]

1. Accuracy; nicety; strict conformity to rule or symmetry.

The experiments were all made with the utmost exactness and circumspection.

Woodward on Fossils.

In wit, as nature, what affects our hearts

Is not th' exactness of peculiar parts;

'Tis not a lip, or eye, we beauty call,

But the joint force and full result of all. Pope's Ess. on Crit.

The balance must be held by a third hand, who is to deal power with the utmost exactness into the several scales. Swift.

2. Regularity of conduct; strictness of manners; care not to deviate.

I preferred not the outward peace of my kingdoms with men, before that inward exactness of conscience before God.

King Charles.

They think that their exactness in one duty will atone for their neglect of another.

Rogers.

To EXA'GGERATE v. a. [exaggero, Latin.] To heighten by representation; to enlarge by hyperbolical expressions.

He had exaggerated, as pathetically as he could, the sense the people generally had, even despair of ever seeing an end of the calamities.

Clarendon, b. viii.

A friend exaggerates a man's virtues, an enemy inflames his crimes.

Addison's Spectator, N<sup>o</sup>. 399.

EXAGGERA'TION n. f. [from exaggerate.]

1. The act of heaping together; an heap; an accumulation.

Some towns, that were anciently havens and ports, are now, by exaggeration of sand between those towns and the sea, converted into firm land.

Hale's Origin of Mankind.

2. Hyperbolical amplification.

Exaggerations of the prodigious condescensions in the prince to pass good laws, would have an odd sound at Westminster.

Swift.

Nor let thy conquests only be her choice. Prior.

7. To heighten; to improve; to refine by fire, as in chemistry.

The wild animals have more exercise, have their juices more elaborated and exalted; but, for the same reason, the fibres are harder, especially when old. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

With chymick art exalts the min'ral pow'rs,

And draws the aromack souls of flow'rs. Pope.

They meditate what will be the effect of their composition, and whether the virtues of the one will exalt or diminish the force of the other, or correct any of its nocent qualities. Watts.

8. To elevate in diction or sentiment.

But hear, oh hear, in what exalted strains,

Sicilian muses, through these happy plains,

Proclaim Saturnian times, our own Apollo reigns. Rosc. }

EXALTA'TION. n. f. [from exalt.]

1. The act of raising on high.

2. Elevation to power, or dignity.

She put off the garments of widowhood, for the exaltation of those that were oppressed. Judith xvi. 8.

The former was an humiliation of Deity, the latter an humiliation of manhood; for which cause there followed, upon the latter, an exaltation of that which was humbled; for with power he created the world, but restored it by obedience. Hooker, b. v. f. 54.

3. Most elevated state; state of greatness or dignity.

I wonder'd at my flight and change

To this high exaltation. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. v. l. 90.

In God all perfections, in their highest degree and exaltation, meet together. Tillotson, Sermon i.

You are as much esteemed, and as much beloved, perhaps more dreaded, than ever you were in your highest exaltation. Swift.

4. [In pharmacy.] Raising a medicine to a higher degree of virtue, or an increase of the most remarkable property of any body. Quincy.

5. Dignity of a planet in which its powers are increased.

Astrologers tell us, that the sun receives his exaltation in the sign Aries. Dryden.

EXA'MEN. n. f. [Latin.] Examination; disquisition; enquiry.

To EXCAVATE. v. a. [excavo, Latin.] To hollow; to cut into hollows.

The cups, gilt with a golden border about the brim, were of that wonderful smallness, that Faber put a thousand of them into an excavated pepper-corn. Ray on the Creation.

Though nitrous tempests, and clandestine death,
Fill'd the deep caves, and num'rous vaults beneath,
Which form'd with art, and wrought with endless toil,
Ran through the faithless excavated soil,
See the unwearied Briton delves his way,
And to the caverns lets in war and day. Blackm. Creation.
Flat thecæ, some like hats, some like buttons, excavated in the middle. Derham's Physico-Theology.

EXCAVA'TION. n. f. [from excavate.]

1. The act of cutting into hollows.

2. The hollow formed; the cavity.

While our eye measures the eminent and the hollowed parts of pillars, the total object appeareth the bigger; and so, as much as those excavations do subtract, is supplied by a fallacy of the sight. Wotton's Architecture.

Excelling others, these were great;

Thou, greater still, must these excel. Prior.

To EXCEL. v. n. To have good qualities in a great degree; to be eminent; to be excellent.

Then to Silvia let us sing,
That Silvia is excelling. Shakesp. Two Gent. of Verona.

Reuben, unstable as water, thou shalt not excel. Gen. xlix.

It is not only in order of nature for him to govern, that is, the more intelligent; but there is no less required, courage to protect, and, above all, honesty and probity to abstain from injury: so fitness to govern is a perplexed business. Some men, some nations, excel in the one ability, some in the other. Bacon's Holy War.

Company are to be avoided that are good for nothing; those to be sought and frequented that excel in some quality or other. Temple.

He match'd their beauties where they most excel;
Of love sung better, and of arms as well. Dryden.

Let those teach others, who themselves excel;

And censure freely, who have written well. Pope.

EXCELLENCE. } n. f. [excellence, French; excellencia, Latin.]

EXCELLENCY. } n. f. [excellence, French; excellencia, Latin.]

1. The state of abounding in any good quality.

2. Dignity; high rank in existence.

Is it not wonderful, that base desires should so extinguish in men the sense of their own excellency, as to make them willing that their souls should be like to the souls of beasts, mortal and corruptible with their bodies? Hooker, b. v. f. 2.

I know not why a fiend may not deceive a creature of more excellency than himself, but yet a creature. Dryden's Juv. Dedic.

3. The state of excelling in any thing.

I have, amongst men of parts and business, seldom heard any one commended for having an excellency in musick. Locke.

4. That in which one excels.

The criticisms have been made rather to discover beauties and excellencies than their faults and imperfections. Addis. Spect.

5. Purity; goodness.

She loves him with that excellence,

That angels love good men with. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

6. A title of honour. It is now usually applied to generals of an army, ambassadors, and governors.

They humbly sue unto your excellence,

To have a goodly peace concluded of. Shakesp. Henry VI.

EXCELLENT. adj. [excellens, Latin.]

1. Of great virtue; of great worth; of great dignity.

Arts and sciences are excellent, in order to certain ends. Taylor.

2. Eminent in any good quality.

He is excellent in power and in judgment. Job xxxvii. 23.

EXCELLENTLY. adv. [from excellent.]

1. Well; in a high degree.

He determines that man was erect, because he was made with hands, as he excellently declareth. Brown's Vulg. Errors.

That was excellently observed, says I, when I read a passage in an author, where his opinion agrees with mine. Swift.

2. To an eminent degree.

Comedy is both excellently instructive and extremely pleasant; satyr lashes vice into reformation; and humour represents folly, so as to render it ridiculous. Dryd. St. of Inn. Pref.

To EXCEPT. v. a. [excipio, Latin.]

1. To leave out, and specify as left out of a general precept, or position.

But when he saith, all things are put under him, it is manifest, that he is excepted which did put all things under him. 1 Cor. xv. 27.

Adam, behold

Th' effects, which thy original crime hath wrought

In

In some to spring from thee, who never touch'd
Th' excepted tree. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xi. l. 426.

To EXCEPT. v. n. To object; to make objections.
A succession which our author could not except against. Locke.

EXCEPT. preposit. [from the verb. This word, long taken as a preposition or conjunction, is originally the participle passive of the verb; which, like most others, had for its participle two terminations, except or excepted. All except one, is all, one excepted. Except may be, according to the Teutonic idiom, the imperative mood: all, except one; that is, all but one, which you must except.]

1. Exclusively of; without inclusion of.
Richard except, those, whom we fight against,
Had rather have us win than him they follow. Shak. R. III.
God and his son except,
Nought valued he nor fear'd. Milton.
2. Unless.
It is necessary to know our duty, because 'tis necessary for us to do it; and it is impossible to do it, except we know it. Till.

EXCEPTING. preposit. [from except. See EXCEPT.] Without inclusion of; with exception of. An improper word.
What, since the pretor did my fetters loose,
May I not live without controul and awe,
Excepting still the letter of the law. Dryden's Pers. Sat. 5:
People come into the world in Turkey the same way they do here; and yet, excepting the royal family, they get but little by it. Collier on Duelling.

EXCEPTION. n. f. [from except; exceptio, Latin.]

1. Exclusion from the things comprehended in a precept, or position; exclusion of any person from a general law.
When God renewed this charter of man's sovereignty over the creatures to Noah and his family, we find no exception at all; but that Cham stood as fully invested with this right as any of his brethren. South's Sermons.
2. It should have from before the rule or law to which the exception refers; but it is sometimes inaccurately used with to.
Let the money be raised on land; with an exception to some of the more barren parts, that might be tax-free. Addison.
Pleads, in exception to all general rules,
Your taste of follies with our scorn of fools. Pope's Epistles.
3. Thing excepted or specified in exception.
Every act of parliament was not previous to what it enacted; unless those two, by which the earl of Strafford and sir John Fenwick lost their heads may pass for exceptions. Swift.
Who first taught souls enslav'd, and realms undone,
Th' enormous faith of many made for one;
That proud exception to all nature's laws,
T' invert the world and counterwork its cause. Pope's Essays.
4. Objection; cavil. With against or to.
Your assertion hath drawn us to make search whether these be just exceptions against the customs of our church, when ye plead that they are the same which the church of Rome hath, or that they are not the same which some other reformed churches have devised. Hooker, Preface.
He may have exceptions peremptory against the jurors, of which he then shall shew cause. Spenser.
Revelations will soon be discerned to be extremely conducive to reforming men's lives, such as will answer all objections and exceptions of flesh and blood against it. Hammond.
I will answer what exceptions they can have against our account, and confute all the reasons and explications they can give of their own. Bentley's Sermons.
5. Peevish dislike; offence taken.
I fear'd to shew my father Julia's letter,
Lest he should take exceptions to my love. Shakespeare.
He first took exception at this badge,
Pronouncing, that the paleness of this flow'r
Bewray'd the faintness of my master's heart. Shak. Hen. VI.
Rodrigo, thou hast taken against me an exception; but I protest I have dealt most directly in thy affair. Sh. Othello.
He gave sir James Tirrel great thanks; but took exception to the place of their burial, being too base for them that were king's children. Bacon's Henry VII.

EXCEPTIONABLE. adj. [from exception.] Liable to objection.
The only piece of pleasantry is where the evil spirits rally the angels upon the success of their artillery: this passage I look upon to be the most exceptionable in the whole poem. Add.

EXCEPTIONOUS. adj. [from except.] Peevish; froward; full of objections; quarrelsome.
They are so supercilious, sharp, troublesome, fierce, and exceptionous, that they are not only short of the true character of friendship, but become the very sores and burdens of society. South's Sermons.

EXCEPTIVE. adj. [from except.] Including an exception.
Exceptive propositions will make complex syllogisms, as none but physicians came to the consultation: the nurse is no physician, therefore the nurse came not to the consultation. Watts's Logick.

EXCEPTLESS. adj. [from except.] Omitting or neglecting all exception; general; universal.
Forgive my general and exceptless rashness,
Perpetual sober gods! I do proclaim

One honest man. Shakespeare's Timon.

EXCEPTOR. n. f. [from except] Objecter; one that makes exceptions.
The exceptor makes a reflection upon the impropriety of those expressions. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

To EXCERN. v. a. [excerno, Latin.] To strain out; to separate or emit by strainers; to send out by excretion.
That which is dead, or corrupted, or excerned, hath antipathy with the same thing when it is alive and sound, and with those parts which do excern. Bacon's Natural History.
Exercise first sendeth nourishment into the parts; and secondly, helpeth to excern by sweat, and so maketh the parts assimilate. Bacon's Natural History, N. 199.
An unguent or pap prepared, with an open vessel to excern it into. Ray on the Creation.

EXCEPTION. n. f. [exceptio, Latin.]

1. The act of gleanng; selecting.
2. The thing gleaned or selected.
Times have consumed his works, saving some few exceptions. Raleigh.

EXCESS. n. f. [excessus, Latin.]

1. More than enough; superfluity.
Amongst the heaps of these excesses and superfluities, there is espied the want of a principal part of duty. Hooker, b. v. f. 43.
Goodness answers to the theological virtue charity; and admits no excess but error: the desire of power in excess caused the angels to fall; the desire of knowledge in excess caused man to fall; but in charity there is no excess, neither can angel or man come in danger by it. Bacon's Essays.
Members are crooked or distorted, or disproportionate to the rest, either in excess or defect. Ray on the Creation.
2. Exuberance; act of exceeding; comparative exuberance.
Let the superfluous and lust dieted man,
That braves your ordinance, feel your power quickly;
So distribution shall undo excess,
And each man have enough. Shakespeare's King Lear.
The several rays in that white light retain their colorifick qualities, by which those of any sort, whenever they become more copious than the rest, do by their excess and predominance cause their proper colour to appear. Newton's Opt.
3. Intemperance; unreasonable indulgence in meat and drink.
It was excess of wine that set him on;
And on his more advice we pardon him. Shakesp. Hen. V.
There will be need first of temperance in diet; for the body, once heavy with excess and surfeits, hangs plummets on the nobler parts. Duppa's Rules for Devotion.
4. Violence of passion.
5. Transgression of due limits.
A popular sway, by forcing kings to give
More than was fit for subjects to receive,
Ran to the same extremes; and one excess
Made both, by striving to be greater, less. Denham.
Hospitality sometimes degenerates into profuseness: even parsimony itself, which fits but ill upon a publick figure, is yet the more pardonable excess of the two. Atterbury's Sermons.

EXCESSIVE. adj. [excessif, French; from excess.]

1. Beyond the common proportion of quantity or bulk.
If panicum be laid below and about the bottom of a root, it will cause the root to grow to an excessive bigness. Bacon.
2. Vehement beyond measure in kindness or dislike.
Be not excessive toward any. Ecclus. xxxiii. 29.
The people whose property it is, by excessive favour, to bring great men to misery, and then to be excessive in pity, departed away grieved and afraid. Hayward.

EXCESSIVELY. adv. [from excessive.] Exceedingly; eminently; in a great degree.
A man must be excessively stupid, as well as uncharitable; who believes there is no virtue but on his own side. Addison.

To EXCHANGE. v. a. [exchanger, French; excambiare, low Latin.]

1. To give or quit one thing for the sake of gaining another.
They shall not sell of it, neither exchange nor alienate the first fruits. Ezek. xlviii. 14.
Exchange his sheep for shells, or wool for a sparkling pebble, or a diamond. Locke.
Take delight in the good things of this world, so as to remember that we are to part with them, and to exchange them for more excellent and durable enjoyments. Atterbury's Sermon.
2. To give and take reciprocally.
Exchange forgiveness with me, noble Hamlet;
Mine and my father's blood, be not upon thee,
Nor thine on me. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
Words having naturally no signification, the idea must be learned by those who would exchange thoughts, and hold intelligible discourse with others. Locke.
Here then exchange we mutually forgiveness,
So may the guilt of all my broken vows,
My perjuries to thee, be all forgotten. Rowe's Jane Shore.
3. It has with before the person with whom the exchange is made, and for before the thing taken in exchange.
The king called in the old money, and erected exchanges where the weight of old money was exchanged for new. Camd.
Being

Being acquainted with the laws and fashions of his own country, he has something to exchange with those abroad. Locke.

EXCHA'NGE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. The act of giving and receiving reciprocally.
And thus they parted with exchange of harms;
Much blood the monsters lost, and they their arms. Waller.
They lend their corn, they make exchanges; they are always ready to serve one another. Addison.
2. Traffick by permutation.

The world is maintained by intercourse; and the whole course of nature is a great exchange, in which one good turn is, and ought to be, the stated price of another. South's Sermon.

3. The form or act of transferring, properly by bills or notes.
I have bills for money by exchange
From Florence, and must here deliver them. Shakespeare.
4. The balance of the money of different nations.

He was skilful in the exchange beyond seas, and in all the circumstances and practices thereof. Hayward on Edward VI.

5. The thing given in return for something received.
Thou art arm'd, Glo'ster; let the trumpet sound:
If none appear to prove upon thy person
Thy heinous, manifest, and many treasons,
There is my pledge: I'll prove it on thy heart.
—There's my exchange; what in the world he is
That names me traitor, villain-like he lies. Shak. K. Lear.
Spend all I have, only give me so much time in exchange of it. Shakesp. Merry Wives of Windsor.

It made not the silver coined go for more than its value in all things to be bought; but just so much as the denomination was raised, just so much less of commodity had the buyer in exchange for it. Locke.

6. The thing received in return for something given.
If blood you seek, I will my own resign:
O spare her life, and in exchange take mine. Dryd. Ind. Emp.

The respect and love which was paid you by all, who had the happiness to know you, was a wise exchange for the honours of the court. Dryden.

7. The place where the merchants meet to negotiate their affairs; place of sale.

He that uses the same words sometimes in one, and sometimes in another signification, ought to pass, in the schools, for as fair a man, as he does, in the market and exchange, who sells several things under the same name. Locke.

No thing, no place is strange,
While his fair bosom is the world's exchange. Denham.

EXCHA'NGER. n. f. [from exchange.] One who practises exchange.

Whilst bullion may be had for a small price more than the weight of our current cash, these exchangers generally chuse rather to buy bullion than run the risk of melting down our coin, which is criminal by the law. Locke.

EXCHE'AT. n. f. See ESCHSAT.

The sons of day he favoureth, I see,
And by my ruins thinks to make them great:
To make one great by others loss, is bad excheat. Fai. Qu.

EXCHE'ATOR. n. f. See ESCHSATOR.

These earls and dukes appointed their special officers; as sheriff, admiral, receiver, havener, customer, butler, searcher, comptroller, gager, excheator, feodary, auditor, and clerk of the market. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

EXCHE'QUER. n. f. [eschqueir, Norman French; schaccharium, low Latin, from schatz, a treasure, German.] The court to which are brought all the revenues belonging to the crown. It consists of two parts; whereof one dealeth specially in the hearing and deciding of all causes appertaining to the king's coffers: the other is called the receipt of the exchequer, which is properly employed in the receiving and paying of money. It is also a court of record, wherein all causes touching the revenues of the crown are handled. Harris.

I will be cheater to them both, and they shall be exchequers to me: they shall be my East and West Indies. Shakespeare.

Your treasures
Are quite exhausted, the exchequer's empty. Denham's Sophy.
Clipped money will pass whilst the king's bankers and at last the exchequer takes it. Locke.

EXCI'SE. n. f. [accijs, Dutch; excisum, Latin.] A hateful tax levied upon commodities, and adjudged not by the common judges of property, but wretches hired by those to whom excise is paid.

The people should pay a ratable tax for their sheep, and an excise for every thing which they should eat. Hayward.
Ambitious now to take excise
Of a more fragrant paradise. Cleaveland.

Excise,
With hundred rows of teeth, the shark exceeds,
And on all trades like Cassawar she feeds. Marvel.

Can hire large houses, and oppresses the poor,
By farm'd excise. Dryden's Juvenal, Sat. 3.

To EXCI'SE. v. a. [from the noun.] To levy excise upon a person or thing.

In South-sea days, not happier when surmis'd
The lord of thousands, than if now excis'd. Pope's Horace.

EXCI'SEMAN. n. f. [excise and man.] An officer who inspects commodities, and rates their excise.

EXCI'SION. n. f. [excisio, Latin.] Extirpation; destruction; ruin; the act of cutting off; the state of being cut off.
Pride is one of the fatallest instruments of excision. Decay of Piety.

Such conquerors are the instruments of vengeance on those nations that have filled up the measure of iniquities, and are grown ripe for excision. Atterbury's Sermons.

EXCITA'TION. n. f. [from excito, to excite, Latin.]

1. The act of exciting, or putting into motion.
All putrefactions come from the ambient body, either by ingress of the ambient body into the body putrefied, or by excitation and solicitation of the body putrefied by the body ambient. Bacon's Natural History, N<sup>o</sup>. 836.
2. The act of rousing or awakening.

The original of sensible and spiritual ideas may be owing to sensation and reflection, the recollection and fresh excitation of them to other occasions. Watts's Logick.

To EXCITE. v. a. [excito, Latin.]

1. To rouse; to animate; to stir up; to encourage.

The Lacedemonians were more excited to desire of honour with the excellent verses of the poet Tirtæus, than with all the exhortations of their captains, or authority of their rulers and magistrates. Spenser's State of Ireland.

That kind of poesy which excites to virtue the greatest men, is of greatest use to human kind. Dryden.

2. To put into motion; to awaken; to raise.

EXCI'TEMENT. n. f. [from excite.] The motive by which one is stirred up, animated, or put in action.

How stand I then,
That have a father kill'd, a mother stain'd,
Excitements of my reason and my blood,
And let all sleep? Shakespeare's Tempest.

EXCI'TER. n. f. [from excite.]

1. One that stirs up others, or puts them in motion.

They never punished the delinquency of the tumults and their exciters. King Charles.

Hope is the grand exciter of industry. Decay of Piety.

To EXCLA'IM. v. n. [exclamo, Latin.]

1. To cry out with vehemence; to make an outcry; to cry out querulously and outrageously.

This ring,
Which, when you part from, lose, or give away,
Let it preface the ruin of your love,
And be my vantage to exclaim on you. Sh. Merch. of Venice.
Those who exclaim against all foreign tyranny, do, to this intestine usurper, make an entire deduction of themselves. Decay of Piety.

The most insupportable of tyrants exclaim against the exercise of arbitrary power. L'Estrange.

2. To declare with loud vociferation.

Is Cade the son of Henry the fifth,
That thus you do exclaim you'll go with him? Shak. H. VI.

EXCLA'IM. n. f. [from the verb.] Clamour; outcry. Now diffused.

Alas, the part I had in Glo'ster's blood
Doth more solicit me than your exclaims,
To stir against the butchers of his life. Shakesp. Richard II.

EXCLAMA'TION. n. f. [exclamatio, Latin.]

1. Vehement outcry; clamour; outrageous vociferation.

The ears of the people are continually beaten with exclamations against abuses in the church. Hooker, Dedication.

Either be patient, and intreat me fair,
Or with the clamorous report of war
Thus will I drown your exclamations. Shakesp. Richard III.

2. An emphatical utterance; a pathological sentence.

O Musidorus! Musidorus! but what serve exclamations, where there are no ears to receive the sound? Sidney, b. ii.

3. A note by which a pathological sentence is marked thus!

EXCLA'MER. n. f. [from exclaim.] One that makes vehement outcries; one that speaks with great heat and passion.

I must tell this exclaimer, that, if that were his real aim, his manner of proceeding is very strange and unaccountable. Atterbury's Sermons, Preface.

EXCLA'MATORY. adj. [from exclaim.]

1. Practising exclamation.
2. Containing exclamation.

To EXCLU'DE. v. a. [excludo, Latin.]

Fenc'd with hedges and deep ditches round,
Exclude th' incroaching cattle from thy ground. Dryd. Virg.

Sure I am, unless I win in arms,
To stand excluded from Emilia's charms. Dryd Knight's Tale.

Bodies do each singly possess its proper portion, according to the extent of its solid parts, and thereby exclude all other bodies from that space. Locke.

Though these three sorts of substances do not exclude one another out of the same place, yet we cannot conceive but that they must necessarily each of them exclude any of the same kind out of the same place. Locke.

If

If the church be so unhappily contrived as to exclude from its communion such persons likeliest to have great abilities, it should be altered. Swift.

2. To debar; to hinder from participation; to prohibit.

Justice, that sits and frowns where publick laws
Exclude soft mercy from a private cause,
In your tribunal most herself does please;
There only smiles, because she lives at ease. Dryden.
This is Dutch partnership, to share in all our beneficial bargains, and exclude us wholly from theirs. Swift.

3. To except in any position.

4. Not to comprehend in any grant or privilege.

They separate from all apparent hope of life and salvation, thousands whom the goodness of Almighty God doth not ex- clude. Hooker, b. v. f. 22.

EXCLU'SION. n. f. [from exclude]

1. The act of shutting out or denying admission.

In bodies that need detention of spirits, the exclusion of the air doth good; but in bodies that need emission of spirits, it doth hurt. Bacon's Natural History, N<sup>o</sup>. 343.

2. Rejection; not reception in any manner.

If he is for an entire exclusion of fear, which is supposed to have some influence in every law, he opposes himself to every government. Addison's Freeholder, N<sup>o</sup>. 31.

3. The act of debarring from any privilege, or participation.

4. Exception.

There was a question also asked at the table, whether the French king would agree to have the disposing of the marriage of Bretagne, with an exception and exclusion that he should not marry her himself. Bacon's Henry VII.

5. The dismissal of the young from the egg or womb.

How were it possible the womb should contain the child, nay sometimes twins, 'till they come to their due perfection and maturity for exclusion? Ray on the Creation.

EXCLU'SIVE. adj. [from exclude.]

1. Having the power of excluding or denying admission.

They obstacle find none

Of membrane, joint, or limb, exclusive bars:

Easier than air with air, if spirits embrace,

Total they mix. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. viii. l. 625.

2. Debarring from participation.

In Scripture there is no such thing as an heir that was, by right of nature, to inherit all, exclusive of his brethren. Locke.

3. Not taking into an account or number; opposed to inclusive.

I know not whether he reckons the drops exclusive or inclusive with his three hundred and sixty tons of copper. Swift.

4. Excepting.

EXCLUSIVELY. adv. [from exclusive.]

1. Without admission of another to participation.

It is not so easy to discern, among the many differing substances that may be obtained from the same portion of matter, which ought to be esteemed, exclusively to all the rest, its inexistent elementary ingredients; much less what primogeneal and simple bodies, convened together, compose it. Boyle.

Ulysses addresses himself to the queen chiefly or primarily,
but not exclusively of the king. Notes to Pope's Odyssey.

2. Without comprehension in an account or number.

The first part lasts from the date of the citation to the joining of issue, exclusively: the second continues to a conclusion in the cause, inclusively. Ayliffe's Parergon.

To EXCO'CT. v. a. [excoctus, Latin.] To boil up; to make by boiling.

Salt and sugar, excocted by heat, are dissolved by cold and moisture. Bacon's Natural History, N<sup>o</sup>. 843.

To EXCO'GITATE. v. a. [excogito, Latin.] To invent; to strike out by thinking.

If the wit of man had been to contrive this organ for himself, what could he have possibly excogitated more accurate?
More's Antidote against Atheism.

The tradition of the origination of mankind seems to be universal; but the particular methods of that origination, ex- cogitated by the heathen, were particular. Hale's Orig. of Mank.

We shall find them to be little else than excogitated and invented models, not much arising from the true image of the things themselves. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

To EXCO'MMUNICATE. v. a. [excommunico, low Latin.] To eject from the communion of the visible church by an ecclesiastical censure; to interdict from the participation of holy mysteries.

Thou shalt stand curst and excommunicate;
And blessed shall he be, that doth revolt
From his allegiance to an heretick. Shakesp. King John.

What if they shall excommunicate me, hath the doctrine of meekness any salve for me then? Hammond's Pract. Catech.

The office is performed by the parish-priest at interment, but not unto persons excommunicated. Ayliffe's Parergon.

EXCOMMUNICA'TION. n. f. [from excommunicate.] An ecclesiastical interdict; exclusion from the fellowship of the church.

As for excommunication, it neither shutteth out from the mystical, nor clean from the visible church; but only from fellowship with the visible in holy duties. Hooker, b. iii. f. 1.

To EXCORIATE. v. a. To flay; to strip off the skin.

An hyperfarcosis arises upon the excortiated eyelid, and turneth it outward. Wise's Surgery.

A looseness proves often a fatal symptom in fevers; for it weakens, excortiates, and inflames the bowels. Arbuthnot.

EXCORIATION. n. f. [from excortiate.]

1. Loss of skin; privation of skin; the act of flaying.

The pituite secreted in the nose, mouth, and intestines, is not an excrementitious, but a laudable humour, necessary for defending those parts from excortiations. Arbuthn. on Aliments.

2. Plunder; spoil; the act of stripping of possessions.

It hath marvellously enhanced the revenues of the crown to many millions more than it was, though with a pitiful exco- riation of the poorer sort. Howell's Vocal Forrest.

EXCORTICA'TION. n. f. [from cortex and ex, Latin.] Pulling the bark off any thing. Quincy.

To EX'CREATE. v. a. [excreo, Latin.] To eject at the mouth by hawking, or forcing matter from the throat.

EX'CREMENT. n. f. [excrementum, Latin.] That which is thrown out as useless, noxious, or corrupted from the natural passages of the body.

We see that those excrements, that are of the first digestion, smell the worst; as the excrements from the belly. Bacon.

It fares with politick bodies as with the physical; each would convert all into their own proper substance, and cast forth as excrement what will not so be changed. Raleigh's Essays.

Their sordid avarice rakes

In excrements, and hires the very jakes. Dryden's Juv. Sat. 3.

Farce, in itself, is of a nasty scent;

But the gain smells not of the excrement. Dryden.

You may find, by dissection, not only their stomachs full of meat, but their intestines full of excrement. Bentley's Sermons.

The excrements of horses are nothing but hay, and, as such, combustible. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

EXCREMENTAL. adj. [from excrement.] That which is voided as excrement.

God hath given virtues to springs, fountains, earth, plants, and the excremental parts of the basest living creatures. Raleigh.

EXCREMENTITIOUS. adj. [from excrement.] Containing excrements; consisting of matter excreted from the body; offensive or useless to the body.

The excrementitious moisture of living creatures passeth in birds through a fairer and more delicate strainer than in beasts.
Bacon's Natural History, N<sup>o</sup>. 5.

Toil of the mind destroys health, by attracting the spirits from their task of concoction to the brain; whither they carry along with them clouds of vapours and excrementitious humours. Harvey on Consumptions.

The lungs are the grand emunctory of the body; and the main end of respiration is continually to discharge and expel an excrementitious fluid out of the mass of blood. Woodward.

An animal fluid no ways excrementitious, mild, elaborated, and nutritious. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

EXCRE'SCENCE. } n. f. [excreasco, Latin.] Somewhat growing

EXCRE'SCENCY. } out of another without use, and contrary to the common order of production; preternatural production.

All beyond this is monstrous, 'tis out of nature, 'tis an ex-
crecence, and not a living part of poetry. Dryden.

We have little more than the excrecencies of the Spanish monarchy. Addison on the State of the War.

They are the excrecences of our souls; which, like our hair and beards, look horrid or becoming, as we cut or let them grow. Tatler, N<sup>o</sup>. 54.

Tumours and excrecences of plants, out of which generally issues a fly or a worm, are at first made by such insects which wound the tender buds. Bentley.

EXCRE'SCENT. adj. [excrescens, Latin.] That which grows out of another with preternatural superfluity.

Expunge the whole, or lop the excrecent parts

Of all, our vices have created arts:

Then see how little the remaining sum,

Which serv'd the past, and must the times to come. Pope.

EXCRE'TION. n. f. [excretio, Latin.] Separation of animal substance; ejecting somewhat quite out of the body, as of no further use, which is called excrement. Quincy.

The symptoms of the excretion of the bile vitiated, are a yellowish skin, white hard fæces, loss of appetite, and lixivial urine. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

EXCRE'TIVE. adj. [excretus, Latin.] Having the power of separating and ejecting excrements.

A diminution of the body happens by some fault in the ex- cretive faculty, excerning or evacuating more than necessary.
Harvey on Consumptions.

EX'CRETORY. adj. [from excretion.] Having the quality of separating and ejecting superfluous parts.

Excretories of the body are nothing but slender slips of the arteries, deriving an appropriated juice from the blood. Cheyne.

Abalom pronounced sentence of death against his brother, and had it executed too. Locke.

3. To put to death according to form of justice; to punish capitally.

Sir William Breminham was executed for treason. Davies.

Fitzosborn was executed under him, or discarded into foreign service for a pretty shadow of exilement. Spenser.

O Tyburn, cou'dst thou reason and dispute,

Cou'dst thou but judge as well as execute,

How often wou'dst thou change the felon's doom,

And trust some stern chief justice in his room. Dryden.

4. To put to death; to kill.

The treacherous Fastolfe wounds my peace,

Whom with my bare fists I would execute,

If I now had him. Shakespeare's Henry VI. p. i.

EXECUTION.

EXECUTION. n. f. [from execute]

1. Performance; practice.

When things are come to the execution, there is no secrecy comparable to celerity. Bacon's Essays:

I wish no better

Than have him hold that purpose, and to put it

In execution.

Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

I like thy counsel; and how well I like it,

The execution of it shall make known.

Shakespeare.

The excellency of the subject contributed much to the happiness of the execution.

Dryden.

2. The last act of the law in civil causes, by which possession is given of body or goods.

Sir Richard was committed to the Fleet in execution for the whole six thousand pounds.

Clarendon, b. viii.

3. Capital punishment; death inflicted by forms of law.

Good rest.

—As wretches have o'er night,

That wait for execution in the morn. Shak. Two Gent. of Ver.

I have seen,

When, after execution, judgment hath

Repented o'er his doom.

Shakesf. Measure for Measure.

Laws support those crimes they checkt before,

And executions now affright no more.

Creech's Manilius.

4. Destruction; slaughter.

Brave Macbeth, with his brandish'd steel,

Which smok'd with bloody execution, carv'd out his passage:

Shakespeare's Macbeth.

The execution had been too cruel, and far exceeding the bounds of ordinary hostility.

Hayward.

When the tongue is the weapon, a man may strike where he cannot reach, and a word shall do execution both further and deeper than the mightiest blow.

South's Sermons.

Ships of such height and strength, that his vessels could do no execution upon them.

Arbuthnot on Coins.

EXECUTIONER. n. f. [from execution.]

1. He that puts in act, or executes.

Is not the causer of the timeless deaths,

As blameful as the executioner?

Shakesf. Richard III.

It is a singular comfort to the executioners of this office, when they consider that they cannot be guilty of oppression.

Bacon's Office of Alienation.

The heart of every man was in the hand of God, and he could have made them executioners of his wrath upon one another.

Woodward's Natural History.

In this case every man hath a right to punish the offender, and be the executioner of the law of nature.

Locke.

2. He that inflicts capital punishment; he that puts to death according to the sentence of the law.

He, born to the greatest expectation, and of the greatest blood, submitted himself to be servant to the executioner that should put to death Musidorus.

Sidney, b. ii.

The deluge was not sent only as an executioner to mankind, but its prime errand was to reform the earth.

Woodward.

3. He that kills; he that murders.

I would not be thy executioner:

I fly thee, for I would not injure thee;

Thou tell'st me, there is murder in mine eyes. Shakespeare.

4. The instrument by which any thing is performed.

All along

The walls, abominable ornaments!

Are tools of wrath, anvils of torments hung,

Fell executioners of foul intents.

Crashaw.

The Roman emperors were possessed of the whole legislative as well as executive power.

Addison's Freeholder, N<sup>o</sup>. 51.

Hobbes confounds the executive with the legislative power, though all well instituted states have ever placed them in different hands.

Swift.

EXECUTER. n. f. [from execute.]

1. He that performs or executes any thing.

My sweet mistress

Weeps when she sees me work, and says such baseness

Had ne'er like executer.

Shakespeare's Tempest.

Sophocles and Euripides, in their most beautiful pieces, are impartial executers of poetick justice.

Dennis.

2. He that is intrusted to perform the will of a testator. In this sense the accent is on the second syllable.

Let's chuse executers, and talk of wills;

And yet not so; for what can we bequeath? Shak. R. II.

3. An executioner; one who puts others to death. Disused.

The sad-ey'd justice, with his surly hum,

Delivers o'er to executers pale

The lazy yawning drone.

Shakespeare's Henry V.

EXECUTERSHIP. n. f. [from executer.] The office of him that is appointed to perform the will of the defunct.

For fishing for testaments and executorships it is worse, by how much men submit themselves to mean persons, than in service.

Bacon's Essays, Civil and Moral.

EXECUTRIX. n. f. [from execute.] A woman intrusted to perform the will of the testator.

He did, after the death of the earl, buy of his executrix the remnant of the term.

Walker's Pref. to Ex. of the Lat. Synt.

EXEMPLAR. n. f. [exemplar, Latin.] A pattern; an example to be imitated.

The idea and exemplar of the world was first in God. Raleigh.

They began at a known body, a barleycorn; the weight whereof is therefore called a grain; which ariseth, being multiplied to scruples, drachms, ounces, and pounds, and then those weights, as they happen to take them, are fixed by authority, and exemplars of them publicly kept.

Holder.

If he intends to murder his prince, as Cromwel did; he must persuade him that he resolves nothing but his safety; as the same grand exemplar of hypocrisy did before.

South.

Best poet! fit exemplar for the tribe

Of Phœbus.

Phillips.

EXEMPLARILY. adv. [from exemplary.]

1. In such a manner as deserves imitation.

She is exemplarily loyal in a high exact obedience.

Howel.

2. In such a manner as may warn others.

If he had shut the commons house to have been quiet, whilst their champions were exemplarily punished, their jurisdiction would probably in a short time have been brought within the due limits.

Clarendon.

EXEMPLARINESS. n. f. [from exemplary.] State of standing as a pattern to be copied.

In Scripture we find several titles given to Christ, which import his exemplariness as of a prince and a captain, a master and a guide.

Tillotson's Sermons.

EXEMPLARY. adj. [from exemplar.]

1. Such as may deserve to be proposed to imitation, whether persons or things.

The archbishops and bishops have the government of the church: be not you the mean to prefer any to those places, but only for their learning, gravity, and worth: their lives and doctrine ought to be exemplary.

Bacon's Advice to Villiers.

If all these were exemplary in the conduct of their lives, religion would receive a mighty encouragement.

Swift.

2. Such as may give warning to others.

Had the tumults been repressed by exemplary justice, I had obtained all that I designed.

King Charles.

3. Such as may attract notice and imitation.

Awaking therefore, as who long had dream'd,

Much of my women and their gods asham'd,

From this abyfs of exemplary vice

Resolv'd, as time might aid my thought, to rise.

Prior.

When any duty is fallen under a general disuse and neglect, in such a case the most visible and exemplary performance is required.

Rogers, Sermon 18.

EXEMPLIFICATION. n. f. [from exemplify.] A copy; a transcript.

An ambassador of Scotland demanded an exemplification of the articles of peace.

Hayward.

A love of vice as such, a delighting in sin for its own sake, is an imitation, or rather an exemplification of the malice of the devil.

South's Sermons.

TO EXEMPLIFY. v. a. [from exemplar.]

1. To illustrate by example.

This might be exemplified even by heaps of rites and customs, now superstitious in the greatest part of the Christian world.

Hooker, b. v. f. 3.

Our author has exemplified his precepts in the very precepts themselves.

Spectator, N<sup>o</sup>. 253.

A satire may be exemplified by pictures, characters, and examples.

Pope to Swift.

2. To transcribe; to copy.

TO EXEMPT. v. a. [exemptus, Latin.] To privilege; to grant immunity from.

Things done well,

And with a care, exempt themselves from fear:

Things done without example, in their issue

Are to be fear'd.

Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

The religious were not exempted, but fought among the other soldiers.

Knolles's History of the Turks.

The emperors exempted them from all taxes, to which they subjected merchants without exception.

Arbuthnot on Coins.

EXEMPT. adj. [from the verb.]

1. Free by privilege.

Be it my wrong you are from me exempt;

But wrong not that wrong with a mere contempt.

Shakesf.

An abbot cannot, without the advice of his convent, subject a monastery to any, from whose jurisdiction such monastery was exempted.

Ayliffe's Parergon.

2. Not subject; not liable to.
Do not once hope, that thou canst tempt
A spirit so resolved to tread
Upon thy throat, and live exempt
From all the nets that thou canst spread. Ben. Johnson.
No man, not even the most wealthy and powerful among the sons of men, is exempt from the chances of human life.
Atterbury's Sermons.

The god constrains the Greek to roam,
A hopeless exile from his native home,
From death alone exempt. Pope's Odyssey, b. i. l. 96.

3. Clear; not included.
His dreadful imprecation hear;
'Tis laid on all, not any one exempt. Lee's Oedipus.

4. Cut off from. Disused.
Was not thy father for treason 'headed?
And by his treason stand'st not thou attainted,
Corrupted, and exempt from ancient gentry? Shak. Hen. VI.
EXE'MPTION. n. f. [from exempt.] Immunity; privilege; freedom from imposts or burdensome employments.

The like exemption hath the writ to enquire of a man's death, which also must be granted freely. Bacon's Off. of Alien.

The Roman laws gave particular exemptions to such as built ships, or traded in corn. Arbutnot on Coins.
EXEMPTIOUS. adj. [from exemptus, Latin.] Separable; that which may be taken from another.

If motion were loose or exemptitious from matter, I could be convinced that it had extension of its own. More.

TO EXE'NTERATE. v. a. [exentero, Latin.] To embowel; to deprive of the entrails.

A toad contains not those urinary parts which are found in other animals to avoid that serous excretion, which may appear unto any that exenterates or dissects them. Brown.

EXENTERATION. n. f. [exenteratio, Lat.] The act of taking out the bowels; embowelling.

Belonius not only affirms that chamelions feed on flies, caterpillars, beetles, and other insects; but upon exenteration
he found these animals in their bellies. Brown's Vulg. Errours.

EXE'QUIAL. adj. [from exequia, Latin.] Funeral; relating to funerals. Dict.

EXE'QUIES. n. f. without a singular. [exequia, Lat.] Funeral rites; the ceremony of burial; the procession of burial. For this word obsequies is often used, but not so properly.

Let's not forget

The noble duke of Bedford late deceas'd,
But see his exequies fulfill'd in Roan. Shakespeare's Hen. VI.

The tragical end of the two brothers, whose exequies the next successor had leisure to perform. Dryden's Dedic. to Æn.

EXERCENT. adj. [exercens, Latin.] Practising; following any calling or vocation.

The judge may oblige every exercer advocate to give his patronage and assistance unto a litigant in distress for want of an advocate. Ayliffe's Parergon.

EXERCISE. n. f. [exercitium, Latin.]

1. Labour of the body; labour considered as conducive to the cure or prevention of diseases.

Men ought to beware that they use not exercise and a spare diet both; but if much exercise, a plentiful diet; if sparing diet, little exercise. Bacon's Natural History, N<sup>o</sup>. 298.

The wife for cure on exercise depend;

God never made his work for man to mend. Dryden.

He is exact in prescribing the exercises of his patients, ordering some of them to walk eighty stadia in a day, which is about nine English miles. Arbutnot on Coins.

The purest exercise of health,

The kind refresher of the Summer heats. Thomson's Summer.

2. Something done for amusement.
As a watchful king, he would not neglect his safety, thinking nevertheless to perform all things rather as an exercise than as a labour. Bacon's Henry VII.

3. Habitual action by which the body is formed to gracefulness, air, and agility.

He was strong of body, and so much the stronger as he, by a well disciplined exercise, taught it both to do and to suffer.

Sidney, b. ii.

The French apply themselves more universally to their exercises than any nation: one seldom sees a young gentleman that does not fence, dance, and ride. Addison.

4. Preparatory practice in order to skill: as, the exercise of soldiers.

5. Use; actual application of any thing.

The sceptre of spiritual regimen over us in this present world, is at the length to be yielded up into the hands of the Father which gave it; that is, the use and exercise thereof shall cease, there being no longer on earth any militant church to govern. Hooker, b. v. f. 54.

6. Practice; outward performance.

The same prince refused even those of the church of England, who followed their master to St. Germain's, the publick exercise of their religion. Addison on Italy.

7. Employment.

The learning of the situation and boundaries of kingdoms, being only an exercise of the eyes and memory, a child with pleasure will learn them. Locke.

Children, by the exercise of their senses about objects that affect them in the womb, receive some few ideas before they are born. Locke.

Exercise is very alluring and entertaining to the understanding, while its reasoning powers are employed without labour. Watts.

8. Task; that which one is appointed to perform.

Patience is more oft the exercise

Of faints, the trial of their fortitude

Making them each his own deliverer,

And victor over all

That tyranny or fortune can inflict. Milton's Agonistes.

9. Act of divine worship whether publick or private.

Good sir John,

I'm in your debt for your last exercise;

Come the next Sabbath, and I will content you. Shakesp.

TO EXERCISE. n. a. [exercer, Latin.]

1. To employ; to engage in employment.

This faculty of the mind, when it is exercised immediately about things, is called judgment. Locke.

2. To train by use to any act.

The Roman tongue was the study of their youth: it was their own language they were instructed and exercised in. Locke.

3. To make skilful or dexterous by practice; to habituate.

Strong meat belongeth to them who, by reason of use, have their senses exercised to discern both good and evil. Hebr.

Reason, by its own penetration, where it is strong and exercised, usually sees quicker and clearer without syllogism. Locke.

And now the goddess, exercis'd in ill,

Who watch'd an hour to work her impious will,

Ascends the roof. Dryden's Æn. b. vii. l. 713.

4. To busy; to keep busy.

He will exercise himself with pleasure, and without weariness, in that godlike employment of doing good which is assigned him. Atterbury's Sermons.

5. To task; to keep employed as a penal injunction.

Sore travel hath God given to the sons of man, to be exer- cised therewith. Ecl. i. 13.

Where pain of unextinguishable fire

Must exercise us, without hope of end. Milton's Par. Lost.

6. To practise; to perform.

A man's body is confined to a place; but where friendship is, all offices are granted to him and his deputy: for he may exercise them by his friend. Bacon's Essays.

Age's chief arts, and arms, are to grow wise;

Virtue to know, and, known, to exercise. Denham.

7. To exert; to put in use.

The princes of the Gentiles exercise dominion over them, and they that are great exercise authority upon them. Mat. xx.

Their consciences oblige them to submit to that dominion which their governours had a right to exercise over them. Locke.

8. To practise or use in order to habitual skill.

Mean while I'll draw up my Numidian troop

Within the square, to exercise their arms. Addison's Cato.

TO EXERCISE. v. n. To use exercise; to labour for health or for amusement.

The Lacedemonians were remarkable for the use of this sport, and Alexander the Great frequently exercised at it.

Notes to the Odyssey.

EXERCISER. n. f. [from exercise.] He that directs or uses exercise. Dict.

EXERCITATION. n. f. [exercitatio, Latin.]

1. Exercise.

It were some extenuation of the curse, if insudore vultus tui were confinable unto corporal exercitations. Brown's Vulg. Err.

2. Practice; use.

By frequent exercitations we form them within us. Felton.

TO EXERT. v. a. [exero, Latin.]

1. To use with an effort; to use with ardour and vehemence.

When the service of Britain requires your courage and conduct, you may exert them both. Dryden's Fables, Dedicat.

Whate'er I am, each faculty,

The utmost power of my exerted soul,

Preserves a being only for your service. Rowe.

2. To put forth; to perform.

When the will has exerted an act of command upon any faculty of the soul, or member of the body, it has done all that the whole man, as a moral agent, can do for the actual exercise or employment of such a faculty or member. South.

3. To enforce; to push to an effort. With the reciprocal pronoun.

Strong virtue, like strong nature, struggles still;

Exerts itself, and then throws off the ill. Dryd. Aurengzele.

EXERTION. n. f. [from exert.] The act of exerting; effort.

EXESION. n. f. [exesus, Latin.] The act of eating through.

Theophrastus denieth the exesion or forcing of vipers through the belly of the dam. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. iii.

EXESTUATION. n. f. [exæstuo, Latin.] The state of boiling; tumultuous heat; effervescence; ebullition.

Saltpetre

Saltpetre is in operation a cold body: physicians and chymists give it in fevers, to allay the inward exstuations of the blood and humours. Boyle.

TO EXFOLIATE. v. n. [ex and folium, Latin.] To shell off; separate, as a corrupt bone from the sound part. A term of chirurgery.

Our work went on successfully, the bone exfoliating from the edges. Wifeman's Surgery.

EXFOLIATION. n. f. [from exfoliate.] The process by which the corrupted part of the bone separates from the sound.

If the bone be dressed, the flesh will soon arise in that cut of the bone, and make exfoliation of what is necessary, and incarn it. Wifeman's Surgery.

EXFOLIATIVE. adj. [from exfoliate.] That which has the power of procuring exfoliation.

Dress the bone with the milder exfoliatives, 'till the burnt bone is cast off. Wifeman's Surgery.

EXHA'LE. adj. [from exhale.] That which may be evaporated or exhaled.

The fire may resolve some of the more spirituous and exhalable parts, whereof distillation has shewn me that alabaster is not destitute, into vapours. Boyle.

EXHALATION. n. f. [exhalatio, Latin.]

1. The act of exhaling or sending out in vapours; emission.
2. The state of evaporating or flying out in vapours; evaporation.
3. That which rises in vapours, and sometimes takes the form of meteors.

No nat'ral exhalation in the sky;

No 'scape of nature, no distemper'd day;

But they will pluck away its nat'ral cause,

And call them meteors, prodigies, and signs,

Abortives, and presages, tongues of heav'n

Plainly denouncing vengeance upon John. Shak. King John.

While moving in so high a sphere, and with so vigorous a lustre, he must needs, as the sun, raise many envious exhalations; which, condensed by a popular odium, are capable to cast a cloud upon the brightest merit and integrity. K. Charles.

Anon, out of the earth, a fabrick huge
Rose like an exhalation, with the sound

Of dulcet symphonies and voices sweet. Milton's Par. Lost.

It is no wonder if the earth be often shaken, there being quantities of exhalations within those mines, or cavernous passages, that are capable of rarefaction and inflammation. Burn.

The growing tow'rs like exhalations rise,

And the huge columns heave into the skies. Pope.

TO EXHA'LE. v. a. [exhalo, Latin.]

1. To send or draw out in vapours or fumes.

Yon light is not daylight, I know it well:

It is some meteor that the sun exhales,

To be to thee this night a torch-bearer. Sh. Rom. and Jul.

I flattered myself with hopes that the vapour had been exhaled. Temple.

Fear freezes minds; but love, like heat,

Exhales the soul sublime to seek her native seat. Dryden.

2. To draw out.

See, dead Henry's wounds

Open their congeal'd mouths, and bleed afresh!

Blush, blush, thou lump of foul deformity;

For 'tis thy presence that exhales this blood

From cold and empty veins, where no blood dwells. Shak.

EXHA'LEMENT. n. f. [from exhale.] Matter exhaled; vapour.

Nor will polished amber, although it send forth a gross and corporal exhalement, be found a long time defective upon the exactest scales. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. ii. c. 5.

TO EXHA'UST. v. a.

1. To drain; to diminish; to deprive by draining.

Single men be many times more charitable, because their means are less exhausted. Bacon's Essays.

Spermatick matter of a vitious sort abounds in the blood, exhausts it of its best spirits, and derives the flower of it to the femal vessels. Wifeman's Surgery.

2. To draw out totally; to draw 'till nothing is left.

Though the knowledge they have left us be worth our study, yet they exhausted not all its treasures: they left a great deal for the industry and sagacity of after-ages. Locke.

The nurrling grove

Seems fair awhile, cherish'd with foster earth;

But when the alien compost is exhaust,

Its native poverty again prevails. Phillips.

EXHA'USTION. n. f. [from exhaust.] The act of drawing or draining.

EXHA'USTLESS. adj. [from exhaust.] Not to be emptied; not to be all drawn off; inexhaustible.

Of heat and light, what everduring stores

Brought from the sun's exhaustless golden shores,

Through gulphs immense of intervening air,

Enrich the earth, and every loss repair. Blackm. Creation.

TO EXHIBIT. v. a. [exhibeo, Latin.]

1. To offer to view or use; to offer or propose in a formal or publick manner.

If any claim redress of injustice, they should exhibit their petitions in the street. Shakesp. Measure for Measure.

He suffered his attorney-general to exhibit a charge of high treason against the earl. Clarendon.

2. To show; to display.

One of an unfortunate constitution is perpetually exhibiting a miserable example of the weakness of mind and body. Pope.

EXHIBITER. n. f. [from exhibit.] He that offers any thing; as a petition or charge, in a publick manner.

He seems indifferent,

Or rather swaying more upon our part,

Than cherishing th' exhibitors against us. Shakesp. Henry V.

EXHIBITION. n. f. [from exhibit.]

1. The act of exhibiting; display; setting forth.

What are all mechanick works, but the sensible exhibition of mathematick demonstrations? Grew's Cosmol. Sac. b. ii.

2. Allowance; salary; pension.

I crave fit disposition for my wife,

Due preference of place and exhibition,

As levels with her breeding. Shakespeare's Othello.

What maintenance he from his friends receives,

Like exhibition thou shalt have from me. Shakespeare.

All was assigned to the army and garrisons there, and she received only a pension or exhibition out of his coffers. Bacon.

He is now neglected, and driven to live in exile upon a small exhibition. Swift.

EXHIBITIVE. adj. [from exhibit.] Representative; displaying.

Truths must have an eternal existence in some understanding; or rather, they are the same with that understanding itself, considered as variously exhibitive or representative, according to the various modes of inimitability or participation. Norris.

EXHILARATE. v. a. [exhilare, Latin.] To make cheerful; to cheer; to fill with mirth; to enliven; to glad; to gladden.

The coming into a fair garden, the coming into a fair room richly furnished, a beautiful person, and the like, do delight and exhilarate the spirits much. Bacon's Natural History.

The force of that fallacious fruit,

That with exhilarating vapours bland

About their spirits, had play'd, and inmost pow'rs

Made err, was now exhal'd. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ix.

Continual tide

Flows from th' exhilarating fount. Phillips:

Let them thank

Boon nature, that thus annually supplies

Their vaults, and with her former liquid gifts

Exhilarates their languid minds, within

The golden mean confin'd. Phillips.

EXHILARATION. n. f. [from exhilarate.]

1. The act of giving gaiety.
2. The state of being enlivened.

And therefore exhilaration hath some affinity with joy, though it be a much lighter motion. Bacon's Natural History.

TO EXHORT. v. a. [exhortor, Latin.] To incite by words to any good action.

We beseech you, and exhort you by the Lord Jesus, that as ye have received of us, how you ought to walk, so ye would abound. 1 Thes. iv. i.

My duty is to exhort you to consider the dignity of that holy mystery. Common Prayer.

EXHORTATION. n. f. [from exhort.]

1. The act of exhorting; incitement to good.

If we will not encourage publick beneficence, 'till we are secure that no storm shall overturn what we help to build, there is no room for exhortations to charity. Atterbury.

2. The form of words by which one is exhorted.

I'll end my exhortation after dinner. Shakespeare.

EXHORTATORY. adj. [from exhort.] Tending to exhort.

EXHORTER. n. f. [from exhort.] One who exhorts or encourages by words.

TO EXICCATE. v. a. [exsicco, Latin.] To dry; to dry up. Dict.

EXICCATION. n. f. [from exiccate.] Arefaction; act of drying up; state of being dried up.

What is more easily refuted than that old vulgar assertion of an universal drought and exiccation of the earth? As if the sun could evaporate the least drop of its moisture, so that it should never descend again, but be attracted and elevated quite out of the atmosphere. Bentley's Sermons.

EXICCATIVE. adj. [from exiccate.] Drying in quality; having the power of drying.

EXIGENCE. } n. f. [This word is probably only a corruption
EXIGENCY. } of exigents, vitiated by an unskilful pronounciation.]

1. Demand; want; need.

As men, we are at our own choice, both for time and place and form, according to the exigence of our own occasions in private. Hooker, b. v. f. 24.

You have heard what the present condition and exigencies of these several charities are. Atterbury's Sermons.

While our fortunes exceed not the measure of real convenience, nience, and are adapted to the exigencies of our station, we perceive the hand of providence in our gradual and successive supplies. Rogers, Sermon 2.

2. Pressing necessity; distress; sudden occasion.
This dissimulation in war may be called stratagem and conduct; in other exigencies address and dexterity. Notes on the Ody.
Now in such exigencies not to need,
Upon my word you must be rich indeed!
A noble superfluity it craves,
Not for yourself, but for your fools and knaves. Pope.

E'XIGENT. n. f. [exigens, Latin.]
1. Pressing business; occasion that requires immediate help.
In such an exigent I see not how they could have staid to deliberate about any other regiment than that which already was devised to their hands. Hooker, Preface.
The council met, your guards to find you sent,
And know your pleasure in this exigent. Waller.

2. [A law term.] A writ sued when the defendant is not to be found, being part of the process leading to an outlawry. Shakespeare uses it for any extremity. Hanmer.
3. End.
These eyes, like lamps whose wasting oil is spent,
Wax dim, as drawing to their exigent. Shakesf. Henry VI.

EXIGU'ITY. n. f. [exiguitas, Latin.] Smallness; diminutiveness; slenderness.
The exiguity and shape of the extant particles is now supposed. Boyle on Colours.

EXIGU'OUS. adj. [exiguus, Latin.] Small; diminutive; little.
Their subtle parts and exiguus dose are consumed and evaporated in less than two hours time. Harvey.

E'XILE. n. f. [exilium, Latin.] It seems anciently to have had the accent indifferently on either syllable: now it is uniformly on the first.]

1. Banishment; state of being banished from one's country.
Our state of bodies would bewray what life
We've led since thy exile. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
Welcome is exile, welcome were my death. Shak. H. VI.
Let them pronounce the steep Tarpeian death,
Vagabond exile, flaying, pent to linger
But with a grain of day, I would not buy
Their mercy at the price of one fair word. Shak. Coriolanus.
2. The person banished.
O must the wretched exiles ever mourn,
Nor after length of rowling years return? Dryden's Virg.
Ulysses, sole of all the victor train,
An exile from his dear paternal coast,
Deplor'd his absent queen, and empire lost. Pope's Odyssey.

EXI'LE. adj. [exilis, Latin.] Small; slender; not full; not powerful. Not in use, except in philosophical writings.
It were also good to enquire what other means may be to draw forth the exile heat which is in the air; for that may be a secret of great power to produce cold weather. Bacon.
In a virginal, when the lid is down, it maketh a more exile sound than when the lid is open. Bacon's Natural History.

To E'XILE. v. a. [from the noun.] This had formerly the accent on the last syllable, now generally on the first, though Dryden has used both.] To banish; to drive from a country; to transport.
Call home our exil'd friends abroad,
That fled the snares of watchful tyranny. Shakesf. Macbeth.
Foul subornation is predominant,
And equity exil'd your highness' land. Shakesp. Henry VI.
For that offence,
Immediately we do exile him hence. Shak. Rom. and Juliet.
They fettered with the bonds of a long night, lay there exiled from the eternal providence. Wisd. xvii. 2.
His brutal manners from his breast exil'd,
His mien he fashion'd, and his tongue he fil'd. Dryden.
Arms and the man I sing, who forc'd by fate,
And haughty Juno's unrelenting hate,
Expel'd and exil'd. Dryden's Virgil's Æn.

EXI'LEMENT. n. f. [from exile.] Banishment.
Fitzosborn was discarded into foreign service for a pretty shadow of exilement. Wotton.

EXILI'TION. n. f. [exilitio, Latin.] The act of springing or rushing out suddenly.

From saltpetre proceedeth the force and report; for sulphur and small-coal, mixt, will not take fire with noise or exilition; and powder, which is made of impure and greasy petre, hath but a weak emission, and gives but a faint report. Brown.

EXI'LITY. n. f. [exilis, Latin.] Slenderness; smallness; diminution.
Certain flies, called ephemera, live but a day: the cause is the exility of the spirit, or perhaps the absence of the sun. Bac.
For exility of the voice, or other sounds, it is certain that the voice doth pass through solid and hard bodies, if they be not too thick; and through water, which is likewise a very close body, and such an one as letteth not in air. Bacon.

A body, by being subtilized, can lose nothing of its corporeity; neither can it hereby gain any thing but exility; for all degrees of subtility are essentially the same thing. Grew.

EXI'MIOUS. adj. [eximius, Latin.] Famous; eminent; conspicuous; excellent. Dict.

EXINANI'TION. n. f. [exinanitio, Latin.] Privation; loss.
He is not more impotent in his glory than he was in his exinanition. Decay of Piety.

To EXIST. v. n. [existo, Latin.] To be; to have a being.
It is as easy to conceive that an infinite Almighty Power might produce a thing out of nothing, and make that to exist de novo, which did not exist before; as to conceive the world to have had no beginning, but to have existed from eternity. South's Sermons.

It seems reasonable to enquire, how such a multitude comes to make but one idea, since that combination does not always exist together in nature. Locke.

One year is past; a different scene!
No farther mention of the dean:
Who now, alas, no more is mist
Than if he never did exist. Swift.

EXI'STENCE. } n. f. [existentia, low Latin.] State of being;
EXI'STENCY. } actual possession of being.

Nor is only the existence of this animal considerable, but many things delivered thereof. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iii.
It is impossible any being can be eternal with successive eternal physical changes, or variety of states or manner of existence, naturally and necessarily concomitant unto it. Hale.

The soul, secur'd in her existence, smiles
At the drawn dagger, and defies its point. Addison's Cato.
When a being is considered as possible, it is said to have an essence or nature: such were all things before the creation. When it is considered as actual, then it is said to have existence also. Watts's Logick.

EXI'STENT. adj. [from exist.] In being; in possession of being or of existence.

Whatsoever sign the sun possessed, whose recess or vicinity defineth the quarters of the year, those seasons were actually existent. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. vi. c. 2.

The eyes and minds are fattened on objects which have no real being, as if they were truly existent. Dryden.

EXISTIMA'TION. n. f. [existimatio, Latin.]
1. Opinion.
2. Esteem.

E'XIT. n. f. [exit, Latin.]
1. The term set in the margin of plays to mark the time at which the player goes off the stage.
2. Recess; departure; act of quitting the stage; act of quitting the theatre of life.

All the world's a stage,
And all the men and women meerly players:
They have their exits and their entrances,
And one man in his time plays many parts. Shakespeare.
A regard for fame becomes a man more towards the exit than at his entrance into life. Swift.
Many of your old comrades live a short life, and make a figure at their exit. Swift.

3. Passage out of any place.
In such a pervious substance as the brain, they might find an easy either entrance or exit, almost every where. Glanville.
4. Way by which there is a passage out.
The fire makes its way, forcing the water forth through its ordinary exits, wells, and the outlets of rivers. Woodw.

EXI'TAL. } adj. [exitialis, Latin.] Destructive; fatal;
EXI'TIOUS. } mortal.

Most exitial fevers, although not concomitated with the tokens, exanthemata, anthraxes, or carbuncles, are to be censured pestilential. Harvey on the Plague.

E'XODUS. } n. f. [ἔξοδος.] Departure; journey from a place:
E'XODY. } the second book of Moses is so called, because it describes the journey of the Israelites from Egypt.

In all probability their years continued to be three hundred and sixty-five days, ever since the time of the Jewish exody at least. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

EXOLE'TE. adj. [exoletus, Lat.] Obsolete; out of use. Dict.

To EXO'LVE. v. a. [exolvere, Latin.] To loose; to pay. Dict.

EXO'MPHALOS. n. f. [ἔξ and ὀμφαλός.] A navel rupture.

To EXONERATE. v. a. [exonero, Latin.] To unload; to disburthen; to free from any heavy charge.

The glands being a congeries of vessels curled, circumgyrated, and complicated, give the blood time to separate through the capillary vessels into the secretory ones, which afterwards all exonerate themselves into one common ductus. Ray.

EXONERA'TION. n. f. [from exonerate.] The act of disburthening, or discharging.

The body is adapted unto eating, drinking, nutrition, and other ways of repletion and exoneration. Grew.

EXO'PTABLE. adj. [exoptabilis, Lat.] Desireable; to be sought with eagerness or desire.

E'XORABLE. adj. [exorabilis, Latin.] To be moved by intreaty.

EXO'RBITANCE. } n. f. [from exorbitance.]
EXO'RBITANCY. }

1. The act of going out of the track prescribed.
2. Enormity;

E X O

I see some degree of this fault cleave to those, who have eminently corrected all other exorbitancies of the tongue.

Government of the Tongue, f. 4.

2. Enormity; gross deviation from rule or right.

The reverence of my presence may be a curb to your exorbitancies.
Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

The people were grossly imposed on, to commit such exorbitancies as could not end but in the dissolution of the government.
Swift on the Dissentions in Athens and Rome.

3. Boundless depravity.

They riot still,

Unbounded in exorbitance of ill.

Garth's Dispensary.

EXO'RBITANT. adj. [ex and orbito, Latin.]

1. Going out of the prescribed track; deviating from the course appointed or rule established.

What signifies the fiction of the tortoise riding upon the wings of the wind, but to prescribe bounds and measures to our exorbitant passions?
L'Estrange.

These phenomena are not peculiar to the earthquakes which have happened in our times, but have been observed in all ages, and particularly those exorbitant commotions of the waters of the globe.
Woodward's Natural History.

2. Anomalous; not comprehended in a settled rule or method.

The Jews, who had laws so particularly determining in all affairs what to do, were notwithstanding continually inured with causes exorbitant, and such as their laws had not provided for.
Hooker, b. iii. f. 11.

3. Enormous; beyond due proportion; excessive.

Their subjects would live in great plenty, were not the impositions so very exorbitant; for the courts are too splendid for the territories.
Addison's Remarks on Italy.

So endless and exorbitant are the desires of men, that they will grasp at all, and can form no scheme of perfect happiness with less.
Swift on the Dissentions in Athens and Rome.

TO EXO'RBITATE. v. n. [ex and orbito, Latin.] To deviate; to go out of the track or road prescribed.

The planets sometimes would have approached the sun as near as the orb of Mercury, and sometimes have exorbitated beyond the distance of Saturn.
Bentley's Sermons.

TO EXORCISE. v. a. [ἐξορκίζω.]

1. To adjure by some holy name.
2. To drive away spirits by certain forms of adjuration.
3. To purify from the influence of malignant spirits by religious ceremonies.

And fry'rs, that through the wealthy regions run,

Resort to farmers rich, and bless their halls,

And exorcise the beds, and cross the walls.
Dryden.

EXORCISER. n. f. [from exorcise.] One who practises to drive away evil spirits.

EXORCISM. n. f. [ἐξορκισμός.] The form of adjuration, or religious ceremony by which evil and malignant spirits are driven away.

Will his lordship behold and hear our exorcisms? Shakesp.

Symptoms supernatural, must be only curable by supernatural means; namely, by devout prayers or exorcisms. Harvey.

EXORCIST. n. f. [ἐξορκιστής.]

1. One who by adjurations, prayers, or religious acts, drives away malignant spirits.

Then certain of the vagabond Jews, exorcists, took upon them to call over them which had evil spirits. Acts xix. 13.

2. An enchanter; a conjurer. Improperly.

Soul of Rome!

Thou, like an exorcist, hast conjur'd up

My mortified spirit.
Shakespeare's Julius Cæsar.

Is there no exorcist

Beguiles the truer office of mine eyes?

Is't real that I see? Shakespeare's All's well that ends well.

EXORDIUM. n. f. [Latin.] A formal preface; the proemial part of a composition.

Nor will I thee detain

With poets fictions, nor oppress thine ear

With circumstance, and long exordiums here. May's Virgil.

I have been distast'd at this way of writing, by reason of long prefaces and exordiums. Addison on ancient Medals.

EXORNA'TION. n. f. [exornatio, Latin.] Ornament; decoration; embellishment.

It seemeth that all those curious exornations should rather cease.
Hooker, b. v. f. 15.

Hyperbolical exornations and elegancies many much affect.

Hale's Origin of Mankind.

EXO'SSATED. adj. [exossatus, Latin.] Deprived of bones. Diæ.

EXOSTO'SIS. n. f. [ἐξ and ὄσσειον.] Any protuberance of a bone that is not natural, as often happens in venereal cases. Quincy.

EXO'SSEOUS. adj. [ex and ὄσσειον, Latin.] Wanting bones; boneless; formed without bones.

Thus we daily observe in the heads of fishes, as also in snails and soft exosseous animals, nature near the head hath placed a flat white stone, or testaceous concretion. Brown.

EXO'TICK. adj. [ἐξωτικός.] Foreign; not produced in our own country; not domestick.

Some learned men treat of the nature of letters as of some remote exotick thing, whereof we had no knowledge but by fabulous relations. Holder's Elements of Speech.

E X P

Continue fresh hot-beds to entertain such exotick plants as arrive not to their perfection without them. Evelyn's Kalendar.

EXO'TICK. n. f. A foreign plant.

Claudian was seated on the other summit, which was barren, and produced, on some spots, plants that are unknown to Italy, and such as the gardeners call exoticks. Addison's Guard.

TO EXPAND. v. a. [expando, Latin.]

1. To spread; to lay open as a net or sheet.

2. To dilate; to spread out every way; to diffuse.

An animal growing, expands its fibres in the air as a fluid.

Arbuthnot on Air.

Along the stream of time thy name

Expanded flies, and gathers all its fame. Pope's Eff. on Man.

EXPA'NSE. n. f. [expansum, Latin.] A body widely extended without inequalities.

A murmuring sound

Of waters issu'd from a cave, and spread

Into a liquid plain; then stood unmov'd,

Pure as th' expanse of heav'n. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. iv.

Bright as th' ethereal glows the green expanse. Savage.

On the smooth expanse of crystal lakes,

The sinking stone at first a circle makes;

The trembling surface, by the motion stirr'd,

Spreads in a second circle, then a third;

Wide, and more wide, the floating rings advance,

Fill all the watry plain, and to the margin dance. Pope.

EXPANSIBILITY. n. f. [from expansible.] Capacity of extension; possibility to be expanded or spread into a wider surface.

Together with the rotundity common to the atoms of all fluids, there is some difference in bulk, by which the atoms in one fluid are distinguished from those of another; else all fluids would be alike in weight, expansibility, and all other qualities.

Grew's Cosmolog. Sac. b. i. c. 3.

EXPA'NSIBLE. adj. [from expansus, Latin.] Capable to be extended; capable to be spread into a wider surface.

Bodies are not expansible in proportion to their weight, or to the quantity of matter to be expanded. Grew's Cosmol.

EXPA'NSION. n. f. [from expand.]

1. The state of being expanded into a wider surface or greater space.

'Tis demonstrated that the condensation and expansion of any portion of the air is always proportional to the weight and pressure incumbent upon it.

Bentley's Sermons.

2. The act of spreading out.

The easy expansion of the wing of a bird, and the lightness, strength, and shape of the feathers, are all fitted for her better flight.

Grew's Cosmolog. Sac. b. i. c. 5.

3. Extent; space to which any thing is extended.

The capacious mind of man takes its flight farther than the stars, and cannot be confined by the limits of the world: it extends its thoughts often even beyond the utmost expansion of matter, and makes excursions into that incomprehensible inane.

Locke.

4. Pure space, as distinct from extension in solid matter.

Distance or space, in its simple abstract conception, I call expansion, to distinguish it from extension, which expresses this distance only as it is in the solid parts of matter.

Locke.

It would for ever take an useless flight,

Lost in expansion, void and infinite. Blackmore's Creation.

EXPA'NSIVE. adj. [from expand.] Having the power to spread into a wider surface, or greater space.

The elastic or expansive faculty of the air, whereby it dilates itself when compressed, hath been made use of in the common weather-glasses.

Ray on the Creation.

Then no more

Th' expansive atmosphere is cramp'd with cold. Thomson.

TO EXPA'TIATE. v. n. [expatio, Latin.]

1. To range at large; to rove without any prescribed limits.

Religion contracts the circle of our pleasures, but leaves it wide enough for her votaries to expatiate in. Addison's Spectat.

He looks in heav'n with more than mortal eyes,

Bids his free soul expatiate in the skies;

Amidst her kindred stars familiar roam,

Survey the region, and confess her home.

Pope.

Expatiate free o'er all this scene of man;

A mighty maze! but not without a plan. Pope's Eff. on Man.

With wonder seiz'd, we view the pleasing ground,

And walk delighted, and expatiate round. Pope's Odyssey.

2. To enlarge upon in language.

They had a custom of offering the tongues to Mercury, because they believed him the giver of eloquence: Dacier expatiates upon this custom.

Notes on Pope's Odyssey, b. iii.

3. To let loose; to allow to range. This sense is very improper.

Make choice of a subject, which, being of itself capable of all that colours and the elegance of design can possibly give, shall afterwards afford art an ample field of matter wherein to expatiate itself.

Dryden's Dufresnoy.

TO EXPE'CT. v. a. [expecto, Latin.]

1. To have a previous apprehension of either good or evil.

E X P

2. To wait for; to attend the coming.
While, expecting there the queen, he rais'd
His wond'ring eyes, and round the temple gaz'd. Dryden.
To EXPE'CT. v. n. To wait; to stay.
Elihu had expected 'till Job had spoken. Job.
EXPE'CTABLE. adj. [from expect.] To be expected; to be hoped or feared.
Occult and spiritual operations are not expectable from ice; for being but water congealed, it can never make good such qualities. Brown's Vulgar Errours.
EXPE'CTANCE. } n. f. [from expect.]
EXPE'CTANCY. }
1. The act or state of expecting; expectation.
Every moment is expectancy
Of more arrivance. Shakespeare's Othello.
Satyrs leave your petulance,
Or else rail upon the moon,
Your expectance is too soon;
For before the second cock
Crow, the gates will not unlock. Ben. John's Fairy Prince.
This blessed expectance must be now my theme. Boyle.
But fy, my wand'ring muse, how thou do'st stay!
Expectance calls thee now another way. Milton.
2. Something expected.
There is expectance here from both the sides,
What further you will do. Shakesp. Troilus and Cressida.
3. Hope; that of which the expectation is accompanied with pleasure.
Oh, what a noble mind is here o'erthrown!
The expectancy and rose of the fair state. Shakesp. Hamlet.
EXPE'CTANT. adj. [French.] Waiting in expectation.
Her majesty has offered concessions, in order to remove scruples raised in the mind of the expectant heir. Swift.
EXPE'CTANT. n. f. [from expect.] One who waits in expectation of any thing; one held in dependance by his hopes.
They, vain expectants of the bridal hour,
My stores in riotous expence devour. Pope's Odyssey, b. i.
This treatise was agreeable to the sentiments of the whole nation, except of those gentlemen who had employments, or were expectants. Swift to Pope.
EXPE'CTATION. n. f. [expectatio, Latin.]
1. The act of expecting.
The trees
Should have borne men, and expectation fainted, Longing for what it had not. Shak. Anth. and Cleopatra.
The rest,
That are within the note of expectation,
Already are i' th' court. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
2. The state of expecting either with hope or fear.
Live in a constant and serious expectation of that day, when we must appear before the Judge of heaven and earth. Rogers.
3. Prospect of any thing good to come.
My soul, wait thou only upon God; for my expectation is from him. Pf. lxii. 5.
4. The object of happy expectation; the Messiah expected.
Now clear I understand,
What oft my steadiest thoughts have search'd in vain,
Why our great expectation should be call'd
The seed of woman. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xii.
5. A state in which something excellent is expected from us.
How fit it will be for you, born so great a prince, and of so rare not only expectation but proof, to divert your thoughts from the way of goodness. Sidney.
You first came home
From travel with such hopes as made you look'd on,
By all men's eyes, a youth of expectation;
Pleas'd with your growing virtue, I receiv'd you. Otway.
EXPE'CTER. n. f. [from expect.]
1. One who has hopes of something.
These are not great expecters under your administration, according to the period of governors here, Swift.
2. One who waits for another.
Signify this loving interview
To the expecters of our Trojan part. Shak. Troil. and Cress.
To EXPE'CTORATE. v. a. [ex and pectus, Latin.] To eject from the breast.
Excrementitious humours are expectorated by a cough after a cold or an asthma. Harvey on Consumptions.
Morbifick matter is either attenuated so as to be returned into the channels, or expectorated by coughing. Arbuthnot.
EXPE'CTORATION. n. f. [from expectorate.]
1. The act of discharging from the breast.
2. That discharge which is made by coughing, as bringing up phlegm, or any thing that obstructs the vessels of the lungs, and strengthens the breath. Quincy.
With water, vinegar, and honey, in pleurifies and inflammations of the lungs, he mixeth spices, for promoting expectoration. Arbuthnot on Aliments.
EXPE'CTORATIVE. adj. [from expectorate.] Having the quality of promoting expectoration.
Syrups and other expectoratives, in coughs, must necessarily occasion a greater cough. Harvey on Consumptions.

2. It is used in Shakespeare for expedition; adventure; or attempt.
Let me hear
What yesternight our council did decree,
In forwarding this dear expedience. Shakespeare's Henry IV.
3. It is also used by Shakespeare for expedition; haste; dispatch.
I shall break
The cause of our expedience to the queen,
And get her leave to part. Shakesp. Anth. and Cleopatra.
Eight tall ships, three thousand men of war,
Are making hither with all due expedience. Shak. Richard II.
EXPE'DIENT. adj. [expedit, Latin.]
1. Proper; fit; convenient; suitable.
All things are not expedient: in things indifferent there is a choice; they are not always equally expedient. Hooker, b. ii.
When men live as if there were no God, it becomes expedient for them that there should be none; and then they endeavour to persuade themselves so. Tillotson's Sermons.
2. In Shakespeare, quick; expeditious.
The adverse winds,
Whose leisure I have staid, have given him time
To land his legions all as soon as I:
His marches are expedient to this town. Shakesp. King John.
EXPE'DIENT. n. f. [from the adjective.]
1. That which helps forward; as means to an end.
God, who delights not to grieve the children of men, does not project for our sorrow, but our innocence; and would never have invited us to the one, but as an expedient to the other. Decay of Piety.
2. A shift; means to an end which are contrived in an exigence.
Th' expedient pleas'd, where neither lost his right;
Mars had the day, and Venus had the night. Dryden.
He flies to a new expedient to solve the matter, and supposes an earth of a make and frame like that of Des Cartes. Woodw.
EXPE'DIENTLY. adv. [from expedient.]
1. Fitly; suitably; conveniently.
2. Hastily; quickly.

1. Quick; hasty; soon performed.
Wholesome advice, and expedite execution in freeing the state of those monsters. Sandys.
2. Easy; disencumbered; clear from impediments.
Nature can teach the church but in part; neither so fully as is requisite for man's salvation, nor so easily as to make the way plain and expedite enough, that many may come to the knowledge of it, and so be saved, and therefore the Scripture has been given. Hooker, b. iii. f. 3.
3. Nimble; active; agile.
The more any man's soul is cleansed from sensual lusts, the more nimble and expedite it will be in its operations. Tillot.
4. It seems to be used by Bacon for light armed in the Roman signification.
He sent the lord chamberlain with expedite forces to speed to Exeter, to the rescue of the town. Bacon's Henry VII.
EXPEDITELY. adv. [from expedite.] With quickness, readiness, haste.
Nature hath left his ears naked, that he may turn them more expeditely for the reception of sounds from every quarter. Grew's Musaeum.
EXPEDITION. n. f. [from expedite.]
1. Haste; speed; activity.
Prayers, whereunto devout minds have added a piercing kind of brevity, thereby the better to express that quick and speedy expedition wherewith ardent affections, the very wings of prayer, are delighted to present our suits in heaven. Hooker.
Ev'n with the speediest expedition
I will dispatch him to the emperor's court. Shakespeare.
2. A march or voyage with martial intentions.
Young Octavius, and Mark Antony,
Come down upon us with a mighty power,
Bending their expedition tow'rd Philippi. Shak. Jul. Caesar.

dazzled by it; even after he shall have turned his eyes from it. Digby on Bodies.

EXPE'RIMENT. n. f. [experimentum, Latin.] Trial of any thing; something done in order to discover an uncertain or unknown effect.

That which sheweth them to be wise, is the gathering of principles out of their own particular experiments; and the framing of our particular experiments, according to the rule of their principles, shall make us such as they are. Hooker, b. v.

It is good also not to try experiments in states, except the necessity be urgent, or the utility evident. Bacon.

Adam! by sad experiment I know,

How little weight with thee my words can find,

Found so erroneous. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x.

'Till his fall it was ignorant of nothing but of sin; or, at least, it rested in the notion without the smart of the experiment. South's Sermons.

When we are searching out the nature or properties of any being by various methods of trial, this sort of observation is called experiment. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

To EXPE'RIMENT. v. a. [from the noun.] To try; to search out by trial.

permission to expiate their crimes by their assiduous labours in so innocent and so hopeful a work. Bacon's Physf. Remarks.

The odium which some men's rigour or remissness had contracted upon my government, I resolved to expiate by regulations. King Charles.

For the cure of this disease an humble, serious, hearty repentance is the only physick; not to expiate the guilt of it, but to qualify us to partake of the benefit of Christ's attonement. Ray on the Creation.

2. To avert the threats of prodigies.

EXPIA'TION. n. f. [from expiate.]

1. The act of expiating or attoning for any crime.
2. The means by which we atton for crimes; attonement.

Law can discover sin, but not remove,
Save by those shadowy expiations weak,
The blood of bulls and goats. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xii.
The former part of this poem is but a due expiation for my not serving my king and country in it. Dryden.

Let a man's innocence be what it will, let his virtues rise to the highest pitch of perfection, there will be still in him so many secret sins, so many human frailties, so many offences of ignorance, passion and prejudice, so many unguarded words and thoughts, that without the advantage of such an expiation and attonement, as Christianity has revealed to us, it is impossible he should be saved. Addison's Spectator, N<sup>o</sup>. 50.

3. Practices by which the threats of ominous prodigies were averted.

Upon the birth of such monsters the Grecians and Romans did use divers sorts of expiations, and to go about their principal cities with many solemn ceremonies and sacrifices. Hayw.

EXPIATORY. adj. [from expiate.] Having the power of expiation or attonement.

His voluntary death for others prevailed with God, and had the force of an expiatory sacrifice. Hooker, b. v. f. 56.

Expired had the term that these two javels Should render up a reck'ning of their travels. Hubb. Tale.

To EXPIRE. v. n.

1. To make an emission of the breath.

If the inspiring and expiring organ of any animal be stoppt, it suddenly dies. Walton's Angler.

2. To die; to breathe the last.

For when the fair in all their pride expire,
To their first elements the souls retire. Pope.

3. To perish; to fall; to be destroyed.

All thy praise is vain,
Save what this verse, which never shall expire,
Shall to thee purchase. Spenser.

The dead man's knell,
Is there scarce ask'd, for whom; and good mens lives

EXP

Expire before the flowers in their caps,
Dying or ere they sicken. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

4. To fly out with a blast.

The distance judg'd for shot of every size,
The linstocks touch, the pond'rous ball expires;
The vigorous seaman every porthole plies,
And adds his heart to every gun he fires. Dryden.

5. To conclude; to terminate; to come to an end.

A month before
This bond expires, I do expect return
Of thrice three times the value of this bond. Shakespeare.

To EXPLA'IN. v. a. [explano, Latin.] To expound; to illustrate; to clear by notes or commentaries.

Such is the original design, however we may explain it away. Ayliffe's Parergon.

You will have variety of commentators to explain the difficult passages to you. Gay.

Some explain'd the meaning quite away. Pope.

EXPLA'INABLE. adj. [from explain.] Capable of being explained or interpreted.

It is symbolically explainable, and implieth purification and cleanness. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. v. c. 21.

EXPLA'INER. n. f. [from explain.] Expounder; interpreter; commentator.

EXPLANA'TION. n. f. [from explain.]

1. The act of explaining or interpreting.

2. The sense given by an explainer or interpreter.

Before this explanation be condemned, and the bill found upon it, some lawyers should fully inform the jury. Swift.

EXPLA'NATORY. adj. [from explain.] Containing explanation.

Had the printer given me notice, I would have printed the names, and writ explanatory notes. Swift.

EXPLETIVE. n. f. [expletivum, Latin] Something used only to take up room; something of which the use is only to prevent a vacancy.

These are not only useful expletives to matter, but great ornaments of style. Swift.

Of the ear the open vowels tire,
While expletives their feeble aid do join. Pope's Ess. on Critic.

Another nicety is in relation to expletives, whether words or syllables, which are made use of purely to supply a vacancy: do, before verbs plural, is absolutely such; and future refiners may explode did and does. Pope.

EXPLICABLE. adj. [from explicate.] Explainable; possible to be explained.

Many difficulties, scarce explicable with any certainty, occur in the fabrick of human nature. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

Great variety there is in compound bodies, and little many of them seem to be explicable. Boyle.

To EXPLICATE. v. a. [explico, Latin.]

1. To unfold; to expand.

They explicate the leaves, and ripen food
For the silk labourers of the mulberry wood. Blackmore.

2. To explain; to clear; to interpret.

They do not understand that part of Christian philosophy which explicates the secret nature of this divine sacrament. Taylor's Worthy Communicant.

Although the truths may be elicited and explicated by the contemplation of animals, yet they are more clearly evidenced in the contemplation of man. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

The last verse of his last satyr is not yet sufficiently explicated. Dryden's Juvenal, Ded. cat.

EXPLICA'TION. n. f. [from explicate.]

1. The act of opening; unfolding or expanding.

2. The act of explaining; interpretation; explanation.

The church preacheth, first publishing, by way of testimony, the truth which from them she hath received, written in the sacred volumes of Scripture; secondly, by way of explication, discovering the mysteries which lie hid therein. Hooker.

Many things are needful for explication, and many for application unto particular occasions. Hooker, b. i.

Allowances are made in the explication of our Saviour's parables, which hold only as to the main scope. Atterbury.

3. The sense given by an explainer; interpretation.

'Tis the substance of this theory I mainly depend upon: many single explications and particularities may be rectified upon farther thoughts. Burnet's Theory of the Earth, Preface.

EXPLICATIVE. adj. [from explicate.] Having a tendency to explain.

If the term which is added to the subject of a complex proposition be either essential or any way necessary to it, then it is called explicative; for it only explains the subject, as every mortal man is a son of Adam. Watts's Logick.

EXPLICA'TOR. n. f. [from explicate.] Expounder; interpreter; explainer.

EXPLICIT. adj. [explicitus, Latin.] Unfolded; plain; clear; not obscure; not merely implied.

We must lay aside that lazy and fallacious method of censuring by the lump, and bring things close to explicit proof and evidence. Burnet's Theory of the Earth, Preface.

These speculations, when most refined, serve only to shew how how impossible it is for us to have a clear and explicit notion of that which is infinite. South's Sermons.

EXPLICITLY. adv. [from explicit] Plainly; directly; not merely by inference or implication.

This querulous humour carries an implicit repugnance to God's disposals; but where it is indulged, it usually is its own expositor, and explicitly avows it. Government of the Tongue.

TO EXPLODE. v. a. [ex: lodo, Latin.]

1. To drive out disgracefully with some noise of contempt; to treat with open contempt; to treat not only with neglect, but open disdain or scorn.

Him old and young
Exploded, and had seiz'd with violent hands,
Had not a cloud descending snatch'd him thence Unseen amid' the throng. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xi.

Thus was th' applause they meant,
Turn'd to exploding hiss, triumph to shame,
Cast on themselves from their own mouths. Milt. Par. Lost.
Old age explodes all but morality. Roscommon.

There is pretended, that a magnetical globe or terrella, being placed upon its poles, would have a constant rotation; but this is commonly exploded, as being against all experience. Wilkins's Dædalus.

Shall that man pass for a proficient in Christ's school, who would have been exploded in the school of Zeno or Epictetus. South's Sermons.

Provided that no word, which a society shall give a sanction to, be afterwards antiquated and exploded, they may receive whatever new ones they shall find occasion for. Swift's Letter to the Lord High Treasurer.

2. To drive out with noise and violence.

But late the kindled powder did explode
The massy ball, and the brass tube unload. Blackmore.
EXPLODER. n. f. [from explode.] An hisser; one who drives out any person or thing with open contempt.

EXPLOIT. n. f. [expletum, Latin, res expleta.] A design accomplished; an achievement; a successful attempt.

Know'st thou not any whom corrupting gold
Would tempt into a close exploit of death? Shak. Rich. III.

Flight cannot stain the honour you have won;
But mine it will, that no exploit have done. Shak. Hen. VI.

How shall I relate
To human sense th' invisible exploits
Of warring spirits? Milton's Paradise Lost, b. v.

He breaks fierce Hannibal's insulting heats;
Of which exploit thus our friend Ennius treats. Denham.

Will you thus dishonour
Your past exploits, and fully all your wars? Addison's Cato.

TO EXPLOIT. v. a. [from the noun.] To perform; to achieve.

He exploited great matters in his own person in Gallia, and by his son in Spain. Camden's Remains.

TO EXPLORATE. v. a. [exploro, Latin.] To search out; to try by searching.

Snails exclude their horns, and therewith explore their way. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iii. c. 20.

EXPLORATION. n. f. [from explore.] Search; examination.

For exact exploration they should be suspended where the air is quiet, that, clear of impediments, they may the more freely convert upon their natural verticity. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Use may be made of the like way of exploration in that enquiry which puzzles so many modern naturalists. Boyle.

EXPLORATOR. n. f. [from explore.] One who searches; a searcher; an examiner.

EXPLO'RATORY. adj. [from explore.] Searching; examining.

TO EXPLORE. v. a. [exploro, Latin.] To try; to search into; to examine by trial.

Abdiel that fight endur'd not, where he stood
Among the mightiest, bent on highest deeds,
And thus his own undaunted heart explores. Milt. Par. Lost.

Divers opinions I have been inclined to question, not only as a naturalist, but as a chymist, whether they be agreeable to true grounds of philosophy, or the exploring experiments of the fire. Boyle.

But Capys, and the rest of founder mind,
The fatal present to the flames design'd,
Or to the wat'ry deep; at least to bore
The hollow sides, and hidden frauds explore. Dryden's Æn.

The mighty Stagyrite first left the shore,
Spread all his sails, and durst the deeps explore;
He steer'd securely, and discover'd far,
Led by the light of the Mæonian star. Pope's Ess. on Crit.

EXPLOREMENT. n. f. [from explore.] Search; trial.

The frustrated search of Porta, upon the exploremment of many, could scarce find one. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iii.

EXPLOSION. n. f. [from explode.] The act of driving out any thing with noise and violence.

Those parts which abound with strata of stone, or marble, making the strongest opposition, are the most furiously shattered; an event observable not only in this, but all other explosions whatever. Woodward's Natural History.

In gunpowder the charcoal and sulphur easily take fire, and set fire to the nitre; and the spirit of the nitre being thereby rarified into vapour, rushes out with explosion, after the manner that the vapour of water rushes out of an æolipile: the sulphur also, being volatile, is converted into vapour, and augments the explosion. New on's Opt.

With explosion vast,

The thunder raises his tremendous voice. Thomson.

EXPLOSIVE. adj. [from explode] Driving out with noise and violence.

These minerals constitute in the earth a kind of natural gunpowder, which takes fire; and by the assistance of its explosive power, renders the shock greater. Woodward's N. Hist.

EXPONENT. n. f. [from expono, Latin.]

Exponent of the ratio, or proportion between any two numbers or quantities, is the exponent arising when the antecedent is divided by the consequent: thus six is the exponent of the ratio which thirty hath to five. Also a rank of numbers in arithmetical progression, beginning from 0, and placed over a rank of numbers in geometrical progression, are called indices or exponents: and in this is founded the reason and demonstration of logarithms; for addition and subtraction of these exponents answers to multiplication and division in the geometrical numbers. Harris.

EXPONENTIAL. adj. [from exponent.]

Exponential curves are such as partake both of the nature of algebraick and transcendental ones. They partake of the former, because they consist of a finite number of terms, though those terms themselves are indeterminate; and they are in some measure transcendental, because they cannot be algebraically constructed. Harris.

TO EXPORT. v. a. [exporto, Latin] To carry out of a country, generally in the way of traffick.

Glorious followers taint business for want of secrecy, and export honour from a man, and make him a return in envy. Bacon's Essays, Civil and Moral.

Edward III. by his encouragement of trade, turned the scale so much in favour of English merchandize, that, by a balance of trade taken in his time, the exported commodities amounted to two hundred ninety-four thousand pounds, and the imported but to thirty-eight thousand. Addison's Freeholder.

Great ships brought from the Indies precious wood, and exported pearls and robes. Arbutnot on Coins.

EXPORT. n. f. [from the verb.] Commodity carried out in traffick.

EXPORTATION. n. f. [from export.] The act or practice of carrying out commodities into other countries.

The cause of a kingdom's thriving is fruitfulness of soil to produce necessities, not only sufficient for the inhabitants, but for exportation into other countries. Swift.

EXPORTER. n. f. [from export.] He that carries out commodities, in opposition to the importer, who brings them in.

Money which is weight, according to its denomination by the standard of the mint, will be that which will be melted down, or carried away in coin by the exporter, whether the pieces of each species be by the law bigger or less. Lo. ke.

TO EXPOSE. v. a. [expono, expositum, Lat. exposere, French.]

1. To lay open; to make liable to.

Take physick, pomp;
Expose thyself to feel what wretches feel,
That thou may'st shake the superflux to them,
And shew heav'n just. Shakespeare's King Lear.

Who here
Will envy whom the highest place exposes
Foremost to stand against the Thunderer's aim? Milt. P. L.

To pass the riper period of his age,
Acting his part upon a crowded stage,
To lasting toils expos'd, and endless cares;
To open dangers, and to secret snares. Prior.

2. To put in the power of any thing.

But still he held his purpose to depart;
For as he lov'd her equal to his life,
He would not to the seas expose his wife. Dryden.

3. To lay open; to make bare; to put in a state of being acted upon.

Then joyous birds frequent the lonely grove,
And beasts, by nature strong, renew their love;
Then fields the blades of bury'd corn disclose,
And while the balmy western spirit blows,
Earth to the breath her bosom dares expose. Dryden's Virgil.

4. To lay open to censure or ridicule; to show in such a state as brings contempt.

Like Horace, you only expose the follies of men, without arraigning their vices. Dryden's Juv. Dedication.

Tully has justly exposed a precept, that a man should live with his friend in such a manner, that if he became his enemy, it should not be in his power to hurt him. Addison's Spect.

A fool might once himself alone expose;
Now one in verse makes many more in prose. Pope.

Your fame and your property suffer alike, you are at once exposed and plundered. Pope.

5. To lay open to examination.

Those who seek truth only, freely expose their principles to the test, and are pleased to have them examined. Locke.

6. To put in danger.

The exposing himself notoriously did sometimes change the fortune of the day, when his troops begun to give ground. Clarendon, b. viii.

7. To cast out to chance.

A father, unnaturally careless of his child, gives him to another man; and he again exposes him: a third man finding him, breeds up and provides for him as his own. Locke.

Helpless and naked on a woman's knees,

To be expos'd or rear'd as she may please,

Feel her neglect, and pine from her disease. Prior.

8. To censure; to treat with dispraise. A colloquial abuse of the word.

A little wit is equally capable of exposing a beauty, and of aggravating a fault. Addison's Spectator, N<sup>o</sup>. 29.

EXPOSITION. n. f. [from expose.]

1. The situation in which any thing is placed with respect to the sun or air.

Water he chuses clear, light, without taste or smell; drawn not from snow, but from springs with an easterly exposition. Arbutnot on Aliments.

The diversity of exposition of the several kitchens in this city, whereby some receive the rays of the sun sooner, and others later, will occasion great irregularity as to the time of dining. Arbutnot.

2. Explanation; interpretation; [from expound, expono, Latin.]

My lord of York, it better shew'd with you,

When that your flock, assembled by the bell,

Encircled you, to hear with reverence

Your exposition on the holy text. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

You are a worthy judge;

You know the law: your exposition

Hath been most found. Shakespeare's Merch. of Venice.

I have sometimes very boldly made such expositions of my authors, as no commentator will forgive me. Dryden.

EXPOSITOR. n. f. [expositor, Latin.] Explainer; expounder; interpreter.

A mirth-moving jest,

Which his fair tongue, conceit's expositor,

Delivers in such apt and gracious words,

That aged ears play truant at his tales. Shakespeare.

In the picture of Abraham's sacrificing his son, Isaac is described as a little boy, which is not contentaneous unto the authority of expositors. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. v. c. 8.

The sinner's conscience is the best expositor of the mind of God, under any judgment or affliction. South's Sermons.

Commentators and scholiasts, those copious expositors of places, pour out a vain overflow of learning on passages plain and easy. Locke.

TO EXPOSTULATE. v. n. [expostulo, Latin.] To canvass with another; to altercate; to debate without open rupture.

More bitterly could I expostulate,

Save that for reverence of some alive

I give a sparing limit to my tongue. Shakesf. Richard III.

The emperor's ambassador did expostulate with the king, that he had broken his league with the emperor. Hayward.

It is madness for friendless and unarmed innocence to expostulate with invincible power. L'Estrange.

Durst I expostulate with providence, I then might ask. Cotton.

The bishop will expostulate, and the tenant will have regard to the reasonableness of the demand, rather than engage in a suit. Swift.

EXPOSTULATION. n. f. [from expostulate.]

1. Debate; altercation; discussion of an affair in private without rupture.

Expostulations end well between lovers, but ill between friends. Spect.

2. Charge; accusation.

This makes her bleeding patients to accuse

High heav'n, and these expostulations use;

Could nature then no private woman grace,

Whom we might dare to love, with such a face? Waller.

Expostulation is a private accusation of one friend touching another, supposed not to have dealt singly or considerately in the course of good friendship. Ayliffe's Parergon.

EXPOSTULATOR. n. f. [from expostulate.] One that debates with another without open rupture.

EXPOSTULATORY. adj. [from expostulate.] Containing expostulation.

This fable is a kind of an expostulatory debate between bounty and ingratitude. L'Estrange.

EXPOSURE. n. f. [from expose.]

1. The act of exposing or setting out to observation.

2. The state of being open to observation.

When we have our naked frailties hid,

That suffer in exposure, let us meet. Shakesf. Macbeth.

3. The state of being exposed, or being liable to any thing.

Determine on some course,

More than a wild exposure to each chance

That starts i' th' way before thee. Shakesf. Coriolanus.

4. The state of being in danger.

Ajax sets Therites

To match us in comparisons with dirt;

To weaken and discredit our exposure,

How hard soever rounded in with danger. Shakespeare.

5. Exposition; the situation in which the sun or air is received.

The cold now advancing, set such plants as will not endure the house, in pots two or three inches lower than the surface of some bed, under a southern exposure. Evelyn.

TO EXPOUND. v. a. [expono, Latin.]

1. To explain; to clear; to interpret; to shew the meaning of.

We cannot better interpret the meaning of those words than pope Leo himself expounded them, whose speech concerning our Lord's ascension may serve instead of a marginal gloss. Hooker, b. v. f. 45.

This by Calphurnia's dream is signified.

—And this way you have well expounded it. Shak. Ju. Cæs.

He expounded unto them in all the Scriptures the things concerning himself. Lu. xxiv. 27.

Those right holy fathers, as in matters of faith they did not make truth, but religiously expounded it; so in matters of ecclesiastical government, they did not create provinces for themselves, but ordered the countries which they then had. Raleigh's Essays.

2. To examine; to lay open: a Latinism.

He expounded both his pockets,

And found a watch with rings and lockets. Hudibras.

EXPOUNDER. n. f. [from expound.] Explainer; interpreter.

This they did partly as faithful witnesses, making a mere relation of what God himself had revealed unto them; and partly as careful expounders, teachers, and persuaders thereof. Hooker.

The best he was,

And faithfullest expounder of the laws. Dryden's Juv. Sat. 4.

TO EXPRESSES. v. a. [exprimo, expressus, Latin.]

1. To copy; to resemble; to represent.

So kids and whelps their fires and dams express,

And so the great I measur'd by the less. Dryden's Virgil.

Adorn a dream, expressing human form,

The shape of him who suffer'd in the storm;

And send it fleeting to the Thracian court,

The wreck of wretched Ceyx to report. Dryden.

2. To represent by any of the imitative arts: as poetry, sculpture, painting.

Each skilful artist shall express thy form

In animated gold. Smith's Phædra and Hippolitus.

3. To represent in words; to exhibit by language; to utter; to declare.

Less than half we find express,

Envy bid conceal the rest. Milton.

Though they have learned those sounds, yet there are no determined ideas laid up in their minds, which are to be expressed to others by them. Locke.

In moral ideas we have no sensible marks that resemble them, whereby we can set them down: we have nothing but words to express them by. Locke.

True wit is nature to advantage dress,

What oft was thought, but ne'er so well express. Pope.

Others for language all their care express,

And value books, as women men, for dress. Pope.

To shed tears, among the ancients, when they should express their gratitude to the gods with joy, was esteemed a prophanation. Notes to Pope's Odyssey.

4. To show or make known in any manner.

No longer shall thy bodice aptly lace,

That air and shape of harmony express,

Fine by degrees, and delicately less. Prior.

5. To utter; to declare, with the reciprocal pronoun.

Mr. Philips did express himself with much indignation against me one evening. Pope.

6. To denote; to designate.

Moses and Aaron took these men expressed by their names. Numb. i. 17.

7. To squeeze out; to force out by compression.

Among the watry juices of fruit are all the fruits out of which drink is expressed; as the grape, and the apple. Bacon.

8. To extort by violence: a Latinism.

Halters and racks cannot express from thee

More than thy deeds: 'tis only judgment waits thee. Ben. Johnson's Catiline.

EXPRESSES. adj. [from the verb.]

1. Copied; resembling; exactly like.

Of his presence many a sign

Still following thee, still compassing thee round

With goodness and paternal love; his face

Express, and of his steps the track divine. Milton's P. Lost.

2. Plain; apparent; in direct terms

There hath been some doubt whether containing in Scripture do import express setting down in plain terms; or else comprehending in such sort, that by reason we may from thence conclude all things which are necessary. Hooker, b. i.

There is not any positive law of men, whether general or particular, received by formal express consent, as in councils; or by secret approbation; but the same may be taken away, if occasion serves. Hooker, b. iv. f. 14.

All

All the gazers on the skies,
Read not in fair heaven's story
Expresser truth, or truer glory,
Than they might in her bright eyes. Ben. J. Epigr.

3. Clear; not dubious.

I love to feel myself of an express and settled judgment and affection, in things of the greatest moment. More's Div. Dial.

As to the testimonies of the fathers, let them be never so express against all sorts of prayers and invocations, they hold only of such a sort of prayer. Stillington.

Where reason or scripture is express for any opinion, or action, we may receive it as of divine authority. Locke.

4. On purpose; for a particular end.

They who are not induced to believe and live as they ought, by those discoveries which God hath made in Scripture, would stand out against any evidence whatsoever; even that of a messenger sent express from the other world. Atterbury's Sermon.

EXPRESS. n. f. [from the adjective.]

1. A messenger sent on purpose.

The king sent an express immediately to the marquis, with all the particular informations. Clarendon, b. viii.

As if expresses from all parts had come,
With fresh alarms threat'ning the fate of Rome. Dryd. Juv.

Upon the first moment I was discovered sleeping on the ground, after my landing, the emperor had early notice of it by an express. Gulliver's Travels.

2. A message sent.

I am content my heart should be discovered to the world, without any of those popular captations which some men use in their speeches and expresses. King Charles.

3. A declaration in plain terms. Not usual.

They do not only contradict the general design and particular expresses of the gospel, but trespass against all logick and common sense. Norris.

EXPRESSIBLE. adj. [from express.]

1. That may be uttered or declared.

They had not only a memory and tradition of it in general, but even of several particular accidents of it likewise, which they handed downwards to the succeeding ages, with notes of the greatest terror expressible. Woodward's Natural History.

2. That may be drawn by squeezing or expression.

EXPRESSION. n. f. [from express.]

1. The act or power of representing any thing.

There is nothing comparable to the variety of instructive expressions by speech, wherewith a man alone is endowed, as with an instrument suitable to the excellency of his soul, for the communication of his thoughts. Holder's Elem. of Speech.

2. The form or cast of language in which any thoughts are uttered.

But ill expression sometimes gives allay
To noble thoughts, whose flame shall ne'er decay. Buckingham.
The poet, to reconcile Helen to his reader, brings her in as a penitent, condemning her own infidelity in very strong expressions. Notes on the Odyssey.

3. A phrase; a mode of speech.

4. The act of squeezing or forcing out any thing by a press.

Those juices that are so fleshy, as they cannot make drink by expression, yet may make drink by mixture of water. Bacon.

The juices of the leaves are obtained by expression: from this juice proceeds the taste. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

EXPRESSIVE. adj. [from express.] Having the power of utterance or representation. With of before the thing expressed.

Each verse so swells expressive of her woes,
And ev'ry tear in lines so mournful flows,
We, spite of fame, her fate revers'd believe,
O'erlook her crimes, and think she ought to live. Tickell.
And four fair queens, whose hands sustain a flow'r,
Th' expressive emblem of their softer pow'r. Pope.

A visible and exemplary obedience to God's laws is the most expressive acknowledgment of the majesty and sovereignty of God, and disposes others to glorify him by the same observances. Rogers, Sermon 18.

EXPRESSIVELY. adv. [from expressive.] In a clear and representative way.

EXPRESSIVENESS. n. f. [from expressive.] The power of expression, or representation by words.

The murrain at the end has all the expressiveness that words can give: it was here that the poet strained hard to outdo Lucretius. Addison.

EXPRESSLY. adv. [from express.] In direct terms; plainly; clearly; not by implication; not generally.

It doth not follow, that of necessity we shall sin, unless we expressly extend this in every particular. Hooker, b. ii. f. 2.

Articles of belief, and things which all men must of necessity do, to the end they may be saved, are either expressly set down in Scripture, or else plainly thereby to be gathered. Hooker, b. iii. f. 10.

Who dare cross 'em,

Bearing the king's will from his mouth expressly? Shakes.

The beginning of the worship of images in these western parts, was by the folly and superstition of the people, expressly against the will of their own bishop. Stillington.

This account I expressly give of them, when I enter on the argument. Atterbury's Sermons.

All the duties that the best political laws enjoin, as conducive to the quiet and order of social life, are expressly commanded by our religion. Rogers, Sermon 17.

EXPRESSURE. n. f. [from express. Now disused.]

1. Expression; utterance.

There is a mystery in the soul of state,
Which hath an operation more divine,
Than breath or pen can give expressure to. Sh. Troil. and Cr.

2. The form; the likeness represented.

I will drop some obscure epistles of love, wherein, by the colour of his beard, the manner of his gait, the expressure of his eye, forehead, and complexion, he shall find himself personated. Shakes. Twelfth Night.

3. The mark; the impression.

And nightly, meadow fairies, look you sing,
Like to the garter-compass in a ring:
Th' expressure that it bears, green let it be,
More fertile fresh than all the field to see. Shakespeare.

TO EXPROBRATE. v. a. [exprobro, Latin.] To charge upon with reproach; to impute openly with blame; to upbraid.

To exprobrate their stupidity, he induces the providence of storks: now, if the bird had been unknown, the illustration had been obscure, and the exprobration not so proper. Brown.

EXPROBRATION. n. f. [from exprobrate.] Scornful charge; reproachful accusation; act of upbraiding.

The only goodness we glory in, is to find out somewhat whereby we may judge others to be ungodly: each other's fault we observe as matter of exprobration, and not of grief. Hooker's Sermons, Preface.

The Parthians, with exprobration of Crassus's thirst after money, poured molten gold into his mouth after he was dead. Abbot's Description of the World.

It will be a denial with scorn, with a taunting exprobration; and to be miserable without commiseration, is the height of misery. South's Sermons.

No need such boasts, or exprobrations false
Of cowardice: the military mound
The British files transcend in evil hour
For their proud foes. Phillips.

TO EXPROPRIATE. v. a. [ex and proprius, Latin.] To make no longer our own; to hold no longer as a property. Not in use.

When you have resigned, or rather consigned, your expropriated will to God, and thereby entrusted him to will for you, all his dispensations towards you are, in effect, the acts of your own will. Boyle's Seraphick Love.

TO EXPUGN. v. a. [expugno, Latin.] To conquer; to take by assault.

EXPUGNATION. n. f. [from expugna.] Conquest; the act of taking by assault.

The expugnation of Vienna he could never accomplish. Sand.

TO EXPULSE. v. a. [expulsus, Latin.] To drive out; to expel; to force away.

For ever should they be expuls'd from France,
And not have title of an earldom there. Shak. Henry VI.

Suppose a nation where the custom were, that after full age the sons should expulse their fathers and mothers out of possessions, and put them to their pensions. Bacon's holy War.

Although inwardly received, it may be very diuretick, and expulse the stone in the kidneys; yet how it should resolve or break that in the bladder, will require a farther dispute. Brown.

Dictys relates, that Peleus was expulsed from his kingdom by Acastus. Notes on the Odyssey.

EXPULSION. n. f. [from expulse.]

1. The act of expelling or driving out.

A wooer,
More hateful than the foul expulsion is
Of thy dear husband. Shakes. Cymbeline.

Sole victor from th' expulsion of his foes,

Messiah his triumphal chariot turn'd. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Others think it possible so to contrive several pieces of steel and a load-stone, that, by their continual attraction and expulsion of one another, they may cause a perpetual revolution of a wheel. Wilkins's Daedalus.

Coffee-coloured urine proceeds from a mixture of a small quantity of blood with the urine; but often prognosticates a resolution of the obstrueting matter, and the expulsion of gravel or a stone. Arbuthnot on Diet.

2. The state of being driven out.

To what end had the angel been set to keep the entrance into Paradise, after Adam's expulsion, if the universe had been Paradise? For then must Adam have been chased also out of the world. Raleigh's History of the World.

This magnificent temple was not finished 'till after the expulsion of Tarquin. Stillington.

EXPULSIVE. adj. [from expulse.] Having the power of expulsion.

If the member be dependent, by raising of it up, and placing it equal with or higher than the rest of the body, the influx influx may be restrained, and the part strengthened by expulsive bandages. Wifeman's Surgery.

EXPUNCTI. n. f. [from expunge.] Abolition; the act of expunging, blotting, or effacing.

TO EXPUNGE. v. a. [expungo, Latin.]

Neither do they remember the many alterations, additions, and expungings made by great authors in those treatises which they prepare for the publick. Swift.

2. To efface; to annihilate.

Wilt thou not to a broken heart dispense
Thy balm of mercy, and expunge th' offence? Sandys.

Deduct what is but vanity, or dross,
Or learning's luxury, or idleness,
Or tricks to shew the stretch of human brain
Mere curious pleasure, or ingenious pain;
Expunge the whole, or lop th' excrescent parts
Of all, our vices have created arts:
Then see how little the remaining sum,
Which serv'd the past, and must the times to come! Pope.

EXPURGA'TION. n. f. [expurgatio, Latin.]

1. The act of purging or cleansing.

All the intestines, but especially the great ones, kidneys and ureters, serve for expurgation. Wifeman's Surgery.

2. Purification from bad mixture, as of error or falsehood.

Wise men know, that arts and learning want expurgation; and if the course of truth be permitted to itself, it cannot escape many errors. Brown's Preface to Vulgar Errors.

EXPURGATORY. adj. [expurgatorius, Latin.] Employed in purging away what is noxious: as, the expurgatory index of the Romanists directs the abolition or expunction of passages admitted by any authors contrary to popery.

There wants expurgatory animadversions, whereby we might strike out great numbers of hidden qualities; and having once a conceded list, we might with more safety attempt their reasons. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. ii. c. 7.

EXQUISITE. adj. [exquisitus, Latin.]

1. Farfought; excellent; consummate; complete.

His absolute exactness they imitate by tending unto that which is most exquisite in every particular. Hooker, b. i. f. 5.

Why should the state be troubled with this needless charge of keeping and maintaining so great a navy in such exquisite perfection and readiness? Raleigh's Essays.

Adam and Eve, before the fall, were a different species; and none but a poet of the most unbounded invention, and the most exquisite judgment, could have fitted their conversation and behaviour to their state of innocence. Addison.

The pleasures of sense are probably relished by beasts in a more exquisite degree than they are by men; for they taste them sincere and pure, without being distracted in the pursuit, or disquieted in the use of them. Atterbury's Sermons.

2. Consummately bad.

With exquisite malice they have mixed the gall and vinegar of falsity and contempt. King Charles.

EXQUISITELY. adv. [from exquisite.] Perfectly; completely: in either a good or ill sense.

We see more exquisitely with one eye shut than with both open; for that the spirits visual unite themselves, and become stronger. Bacon's Natural History, No. 86.

A collection of rare manuscripts, exquisitely written in Arabic, and sought in the most remote parts by Epenius, the most excellent linguist. Wotton.

The soldier then, in Grecian arts unskill'd,
Returning rich with plunder from the field,
If cups of silver or of gold he brought,
With jewels set, and exquisitely wrought,
To glorious trappings strait the plate he turn'd,
And with the glitt'ring spoil his horse adorn'd. Dryden.

The poetry of opera's is generally as exquisitely ill as the musick is good. Addison's Remarks on Italy.

EXQUISITENESS. n. f. [from exquisite.] Nicety; perfection.

We suppose the superficies of the two glasses should be so exactly flat and smooth, that no air at all can come between them; and experience has informed us, that it is extremely difficult to procure from our ordinary tradesmen either glasses or marbles so much as approaching such an exquisiteness. Boyle.

EXSCRIPT. n. f. [exscriptum, Latin.] A copy; a writing copied from another.

EXSICCANT. adj. [from exsiccate.] Drying; having the power to dry up.

Some are moderately moist, and require to be treated with medicines of the like nature, such as fleshy parts; others dry in themselves, yet require exsiccants, as bones. Wifeman.

TO EXSICCATE. v. a. [exsicco, Latin.] To dry.

If in a dissolution of steel a separation of parts be made by precipitation, or exhalation, the exsiccated powder ascends not unto the loadstone. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. ii. c. 3.

Great heats and droughts exsiccate and waste the moisture and vegetative nature of the earth. Mortimer's Husbandry.

EXSICCATION. n. f. [from exsiccate.] The act of drying.

That which is concreted by exsiccation, or expression of humidity, will be resolved by humectation; as earth, dirt, and clay. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. ii. c. 1.

EXSICCATIVE. adj. [from exsiccate.] Having the power of drying.

EXSPU'TION. n. f. [expus, Latin.] A discharge of saliva by spitting. Quincy.

EXSU'CTION. n. f. [exugo, Latin.] The act of sucking out, or draining out, without immediate contact of the power sucking with the thing sucked.

If you open the valve, and force up the sucker, after this first exsuction you will drive out almost a whole cylinder full of air. Boyle.

EXSUDA'TION. n. f. [from exudo, Latin.] A sweating out; an extillation; an emission.

They seemed to be made by an exsudation, or extillation of some petrifying juices out of the rocky earth. Derham.

TO EXSU'FFOLATE. v. a. [a word peculiar to Shakespeare.] To whisper; to buzz in the ear, [from the Italian verb suffolar. Hammer.

Exchange me for a goat,

When I shall turn the business of my soul

To such exsuffolate and blown surmises. Shakesp. Othello.

EXSUFFLA'TION. n. f. [ex and sufflo, Latin.] A blast working underneath.

Of volatility the utmost degree is when it will fly away without returning: the next is when it will fly up, but with ease return: the next is when it will fly upwards over the helm, by a kind of exsufflation, without vapouring. Bacon.

TO EXSU'SCITATE. v. a. [exsus cito, Latin.] To rouse up; to stir up. Dict.

EXTANCY. n. f. [from extant.] Parts rising up above the rest; in opposition to those depressed.

The order of the little extancies, and consequently that of the little depressions in point of situation, will be altered likewise. Boyle on Colours.

EXTANT. adj. [extans, Latin.]

1. Standing out to view; standing above the rest.

That part of the teeth which is extant above the gums is naked, and not invested with that sensible membrane called perioosteum, wherewith the other bones are covered. Ray.

EXTE'MPORARY. adj. [extemporarius, Latin.] Uttered or performed without premeditation; sudden; quick.

This custom was begun by our ancestors out of an ambition of shewing their extemporary ability of speaking upon any subject. More's Divine Dialogues.

That men should confer at very distant removes by an extemporary intercourse, is another reputed impossibility. Glauc.

They write in so diminutive a manner, with such frequent interlineations, that they are hardly able to go on without perpetual hesitations, or extemporary expletives. Swift.

EXTE'MPORE. adv. [extempore, Latin.]

1. Without premeditation; suddenly; readily; without any previous care or preparation.

You may do it extempore; for it is nothing but roaring. Sh.

Nothing great ought to be ventured upon without preparation; but, above all, how sottish is it to engage extempore, where the concern is eternity? South's Sermon.

Hast thou no mark at which to bend thy bow?

Or, like a boy, pursue the carrion-crow

With pellets and with stones from tree to tree,

A fruitless toil, and liv'st extempore? Dryden's Pers. Sat. 3.

2. It is sometimes used as an adjective, but very improperly.

I have known a woman branch out into a long extempore dissertation upon a petticoat. Addison's Spectator, N. 247.

EXTEMPORENESS. n. f. [from extempore.] The faculty of speaking or acting without premeditation.

TO EXTEMPORE. v. n. [from extempore.] To speak extempore, or without premeditation.

The extemporizing faculty is never more out of its element than in the pulpit; though, even here, it is much more excusable in a sermon than in a prayer. South's Sermons.

TO EXTEND. v. a. [extendo, Latin.]

1. To stretch out towards any part.

See the figure of his lifeless friend,
And his old fire, his helpless hand extend. Dryden's Virgil.
Should ring god's altar a vile image stands,
Belies his features, nay extends his hands. Pope.

2. To spread abroad; to diffuse; to expand.

He much magnifies the capacity of his understanding, who persuades himself that he can extend his thoughts farther than God exists, or imagine any expansion where he is not. Locke.

3. To widen to a large comprehension.

Few extend their thoughts towards universal knowledge. Locke.

4. To stretch into assignable dimensions; to make local; to magnify so as to fill some assignable space.

The mind, say they, while you sustain
To hold her station in the brain;
You grant, at least she is extended,
Ergo, the whole dispute is ended. Prior.

5. To enlarge; to continue.

To Helen's bed the gods alone assign
Hermione, t' extend the regal line. Pope's Odyssey, b. iv.

EXTENSION. n. f. [from extensio, Latin.]

1. The act of extending.

2. The state of being extended.

The hiccough cometh of fulness of meat, especially in children, which causeth an extension of the stomach. Bacon.

All rest satisfied at the postures of moderation, and none endure the extremity of flexure or extension. Brown's Vul. Err.

This foundation of the earth upon the waters, or extension of it above the waters, doth agree to the antediluvian earth. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

By this idea of solidity is the extension of body distinguished from the extension of space: the extension of body being nothing but the cohesion or continuity of solid, separable, moveable parts; and the extension of space, the continuity of un-solid, inseparable, and immoveable parts. Locke.

EXTENSIVE. adj. [extensus, Latin.] Wide; large.

I would not be understood to recommend to all a pursuit of those sciences, to those extensive lengths to which the moderns have advanced them. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

EXTENSIVELY. adv. [from extensive.] Widely; largely.

'Tis impossible for any to pass a right judgment concerning them, without entering into most of these circumstances, and surveying them extensively, and comparing and balancing them all aright. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

EXTENSIVENESS. n. f. [from extensive.]

1. Largeness; diffusiveness; wideness.

As we have reason to admire the excellency of this contrivance, so have we to applaud the extensiveness of the benefit. Government of the Tongue, f. 1.

An extensiveness of understanding and a large memory are of service. Watts's Logick.

2. Possibility to be extended.

We take notice of the wonderful dilatibility or extensiveness of the throats and gullets of serpents: I myself have taken two entire adult mice out of the stomach of an adder, whose neck was not bigger than my little finger. Ray on the Creation.

EXTENSOR. n. f. [Latin.] The muscle by which any limb is extended.

Extensors are muscles so called, which serve to extend any part. Quincy.

Complaisant and civil people had the flexors of the head very strong; but in the proud and insolent there was a great overbalance of strength in the extensors of the neck and the muscles of the back. Arbuthnot and Pope's Mart. Scriblerus.

EXTENT. participle from extend. Extended.

Both his hands most filthy feculent,

Above the water were on high extent,

And fain'd to wash themselves incessantly. Spens. Fai. Queen.

EXTENT. n. f. [extensus, Latin.]

1. Space or degree to which any thing is extended.

If I mean to reign

David's true heir, and his full sceptre sway

To just extent over all Israel's sons. Milton's Paradise Lost.

His body behind his head becomes broad, from whence it is again extenuated all the way to the tail. Grew's Museum.

2. To lessen; to diminish in any quality.

To persist

In doing wrong, extenuates not wrong;

But makes it much more heavy. Shak. Troilus and Cressida:

But fortune there extenuate the crime;

What's vice in me, is only mirth in him. Dryden's Juvenal.

3. To lessen; to degrade; to diminish in honour.

Righteous are thy decrees on all thy works;

Who can extenuate thee? Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x.

4. To lessen in representation; to palliate. Opposite to aggravate.

When you shall these unlucky deeds relate,

Speak of me, as I am: nothing extenuate,

Nor set down aught in malice. Shakesf. Othello.

Upon his examination he denied little of that wherewith he was charged, nor endeavoured much to excuse or extenuate his fault; so that, not very wisely thinking to make his offence less by confession, he made it enough for condemnation. Bac.

Yet hear me, Sampson, not that I endeavour

To lessen or extenuate my offence. Milton's Agonistes.

5. To make lean.

EXTENUATION. n. f. [from extenuate.]

1. The act of representing things less ill than they are; contrary to aggravation; palliation.

2. Mitigation; alleviation of punishment.

When sin is to be judged, the kindest enquiry is what deeds of charity we can allege in extenuation of our punishment. Att.

3. A loss of plumpness, or a general decay in the muscular flesh of the whole body. Quincy.

EXTERIOR. adj. [exterior, Latin.] Outward; external; not intrinsic.

And what is faith, love, virtue unessay'd

Alone, without exterior help sustain'd? Milton's Par. Lost.

Seraphick and common lovers behold exterior beauties as children and astronomers consider Galileo's optick glasses. Boyle.

Father, blacker, and merrier, are words which, together with the thing they denominate, imply also something else separate and exterior to the existence of that thing. Locke.

EXTERIORLY. adv. [from exterior.] Outwardly; externally; not intrinsically.

You have slander'd nature in my form;

Which, howsoever rude exteriorly,

Is yet the cover of a fairer mind,

Than to be butcher of an innocent child. Shakes. K. John.

TO EXTERMINATE. v. a. [extermio, Latin.] To root out; to tear up; to drive away; to abolish; to destroy.

Unlucky vices, on which the exterminating lot happened to fall. Decay of Piety.

Alexander left Grecian colonies in the Indies; but they were exterminated by Sandrocothus. Arbutnot on Coins.

This discovery alone is sufficient, if the vices of men did not captivate their reason, to explode and exterminate rank atheism out of the world. Bentley's Sermons.

EXTERMINA'TION. n. f. [from exterminate.] Destruction; excision.

The question is, how far an holy war is to be pursued, whether to displanting and extermination of people. Bacon.

EXTERMINA'TOR. n. f. [exterminator, Latin.] The person or instrument by which any thing is destroyed.

TO EXTERMINE. v. a. [extermio, Latin.] To exterminate; to destroy.

If you do sorrow at my grief in love,

By giving love, your sorrow and my grief

Were both extermine'd. Shakes. As you like it.

EXTER'N. adj. [externus, Latin.]

1. External; outward; visible.

When my outward action doth demonstrate

The native act and figure of my heart

In compliment extern, 'tis not long after

But I will wear my heart upon my sleeve,

For daws to peck at. Shakespeare's Othello.

2. Without itself; not inherent; not intrinsic; not depending on itself.

When two bodies are pressed one against another, the rare body not being so able to resist division as the dense, and being not permitted to retire back, by reason of the extern violence impelling it, the parts of the rare body must be severed. Digby.

EXTERNAL. adj. [externus, Latin.]

1. Outward; not proceeding from itself; operating or acting from without; opposite to internal.

We come to be assured that there is such a being, either by an internal impression of the notion of a God upon our minds, or else by such external and visible effects as our reason tells us must be attributed to some cause, and which we cannot attribute to any other but such as we conceive God to be. Tillotson.

These shells being thus exposed loose upon the surface of the earth to the injuries of weather, to be trod upon by horses and other cattle, and to many other external accidents, are, in tract of time, worn, fretted, and broken to pieces. Woodward's Natural History.

2. Having the outward appearance; having to the view or outward perception any particular nature.

Adam was then no less glorious in his externals: he had a beautiful body as well as an immortal soul. South's Sermons.

He that commits only the external act of idolatry is as guilty as he that commits the external act of theft. Stillingfleet.

EXTERNALLY. adv. [from external.] Outwardly.

The exterior ministry, externally and alone, hath in it nothing excellent, as being destitute of the sanctity that God requires, and it is common to wicked men and good. Taylor.

TO EXTIL. v. n. [ex and stillo, Lat.] To drop or distil from.

EXTILLA'TION. n. f. [from ex and stillo, Latin.] The act of falling in drops.

TO EXTIMULATE. v. a. [extimulo, Latin.] To prick; to incite by stimulation.

Choler is one excretion whereby nature excludeth another, which, descending unto the bowels, extimulates and excites them unto expulsion. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iii. c. 2.

EXTIMULA'TION. n. f. [from extimulatio, Latin.] Pungency; power of exciting motion or sensation.

The native spirits admit great diversity; as hot, cold, active, dull, &c. whence proceed most of the virtues of bodies; but the air intermixed is without virtues, and maketh things insipid, and without any extimulation. Bacon's Natural History.

EXTIN'CT. adj. [extinctus, Latin.]

1. Extinguished; quenched; put out.

Their purple vengeance bath'd in gore retires,

Her weapons blunted, and extinct her fires. Pope.

2. At a stop; without progressive succession.

The royal family is all extinct,

And she who reigns bestows her crown on me. Dryden.

The nobility are never likely to be extinct, because the greatest part of their titles descend to heirs general. Swift.

3. Abolished; out of force.

A censure inflicted a jure continues, though such law be extinct, or the lawgiver removed from his office. Ayliffe.

EXTINCTION. n. f. [extinctio, Latin.]

1. The act of quenching or extinguishing.

Red-hot needles or wires, extinguished in quicksilver, do yet acquire a verticity according to the laws of position and extinction. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. ii. c. 2.

2. The state of being quenched.

The parts are consumed through extinction of their native heat, and dissipation of their radical moisture. Harvey.

3. Destruction; excision.

The extinction of nations, and the desolation of kingdoms, were but the effects of this destructive evil. Rogers's Sermons.

4. Suppression.

They lie in dead oblivion, losing half

The fleeting moments of too short a life,

Total extinction of th' enlighten'd soul. Thomson's Summer.

TO EXTINGUISH. v. a. [extinguo, Latin.]

1. To put out; to quench.

The soft god of pleasure that warm'd our desires,

Has broken his bow, and extinguish'd his fires. Dryden.

Then rose the seed of chaos and of night,

To blot out order, and extinguish light. Dunciad, b. iv.

2. To suppress; to destroy.

They extinguish the love of the people to the young king, by remembering some imperfections of his father. Hayward.

My fame of chastity, by which the skies

I reacht before, by thee extinguish'd dies. Denham.

3. To cloud; to obscure.

Bethink thee on her virtues that surmount,

Her nat'ral graces that extinguish art. Shakesp. Henry VI.

EXTINGUISHABLE. adj. [from extinguish.] That may be quenched, suppressed, or destroyed.

EXTINGUISHER. n. f. [from extinguish.] A hollow cone put upon a candle to quench it.

If it should ever offer to flame out again, I would use the conicum as an extinguisher to smother it. More's Div. Dialog.

Of it a broad extinguisher he makes,

And hoods the flames that to their quarry strove. Dryden.

'Tis better to cover the vital flame with an extinguisher of honour, than let it consume 'till it burns blue, and lies agonizing within the socket. Collier on the Value of Life.

EXTINGUISHMENT. n. f. [from extinguish.]

1. Extinction; suppression; act of quenching; destruction.

When death's form appears, she feareth not

An utter quenching, or extinguishment;

She would be glad to meet with such a lot,

That so she might all future ill prevent. Davies.

He moved him to a war upon Flanders, for the better extinguishment of the civil wars of France. Bacon.

The immediate cause of death is the resolution or extinguishment of the spirits. Bacon's Natural History, N<sup>o</sup>. 400.

2. Abolition; nullification.

Divine laws of Christian church polity may not be altered by extinguishment. Hooker, b. iii.

3. Termination of a family or succession.

His heart easily conceived treason against the crown, wherein he perished himself, and made a final extinguishment of his house and honour. Davies on Ireland.

TO EXTIRP. v. a. [extirpo, Latin.] To eradicate; to root out.

Which to extirp he laid him privily

Down in a darksome lowly place far in. Fairy Queen, b. i.

Nor shall that nation boast it so with us,

But be extirped from our provinces. Shakespeare's Henry VI.

TO EXTIRPATE. v. a. [extirpo, Latin.] To root out; to eradicate; to excise; to destroy.

The rebels were grown so strong, that they made account speedily to extirpate the British nation in that kingdom. Dryd.

We in vain endeavour with noise, and weapons of law, to drive the wolf from our own to another's door: the breed ought to be extirpated out of the island. Locke.

It is not the business of virtue to extirpate the affections, but to regulate them. Addison's Spectator, N<sup>o</sup>. 494.

EXTIRPA'TION. n. f. [from extirpate.] The act of rooting out; eradication; excision; destruction.

It is said that popery, for want of utter extirpation, hath in some places taken root and flourished again. Hooker, b. iv.

Religion requires the extirpation of all those passions and vices which render men unsociable and troublesome to one another. Tillotson, Sermon 3.

EXTIRPA'TOR. n. f. [from extirpate.] One who roots out; a destroyer.

EXTISPICIOUS. adj. [extispicium, Latin.] Augurial; relating to the inspection of entrails in order to prognostication.

Thus hath he deluded many nations unto his augurial and extispicious inventions, from casual and uncontrived contingences, divining events succeeding. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

TO EXTOL. v. a. [extollo, Latin.] To praise; to magnify; to laud; to celebrate.

When a rich man speaketh, every man holdeth his tongue; and look, what he saith they extol it to the clouds. Ecclus. xiii.

For which both heav'n and earth shall high extol

Thy praises, with th' innumerable sound

Of hymns, and sacred songs, wherewith thy throne

Encompass'd shall resound thee ever blest'd. Milt. Par. Lost.

Let Araby extol her happy coast,

Her cinnamon and sweet amomum boast. Dryden's Ovid.

EXTOLLER. n. f. [from extol.] A praiser; a magnifier; one that praises to the skies.

EXTORSIVE. adj. [from extort.] Having the quality of drawing by violent means. EXTORSIVELY.

EXTORSIVELY. adv. [from extorsive.] In an extorsive manner; by violence.

TO EXTORT. v. a. [extorqueo, extortus, Latin.]

1. To draw by force; to force away; to wrest; to wring from one.

'Till the injurious Roman did extort
This tribute from us, we were free. Shakesf. Cymbeline.
Newness

Of Cloten's death may drive us to a render,
Where we have liv'd; and so extort from us
That which we've done Shakesf. Cymbeline.

That glory never shall his wrath or might
Extort from me, to bow and sue for grace
With suppliant knee, and deify his pow'r. Milt. Par. Lost.

I remember well the impious oath,
Hardly extorted from my trembling youth. Rowe.

My earnest desires, not any doubts of your goodness, but my real concern for your welfare, extort this from me. Wake.

2. To gain by violence or oppression.

His tail was stretch'd out in wond'rous length,
That to the house of heav'nly gods it raught,
And with extorted power and borrow'd strength,
The ever-burning lamps from thence it brought. Spenser.
Are my chests fill'd up with extorted gold? Shakesf. H. VI.

TO EXTORT. v. n. To practise oppression and violence. Now disused.

To whom they never gave any penny of entertainment, but let them feed upon the countries, and extort upon all men where they come. Spenser on Ireland.

Before they did extort and oppress the people only by colour of a lewd custom, they did afterwards use the same extortions by warrant. Davies on Ireland.

EXTORTER. n. f. [from extort.] One who practises oppression or extortion.

Edric the extorter was deprived by king Cnute of the government of Mercia. Camden's Remains.

EXTORTION. n. f. [from extort.]

1. The act or practice of gaining by violence and rapacity.

That goodness

Of gleanings all the land's wealth into one,
Into your own hands, cardinal, by extortion. Shak. H. VIII.

Oppression and extortion did maintain the greatness, and oppression and extortion did extinguish the greatness of that house. Davies on Ireland.

2. Force by which any thing is unjustly taken away.

Because the lords had power to impose this charge, the freeholders were glad to give a great part of their lands to hold the rest free from that extortion. Davies on Ireland.

A succeeding king's just recovery of rights from unjust usurpations and extortions, shall never be prejudiced by any act of mine. King Charles.

EXTORTIONER. n. f. [from extortion.] One who practises extortion; one who grows rich by violence and rapacity.

There will be always tyrants, murderers, thieves, adulterers, extortioners, church-robbers, traitors, and other of the same rabblement. Camden's Remains.

The covetous extortioner is involved in the same sentence.

Decay of Piety.

TO EXTRACT. v. a. [extraho, extractum, Latin.]

1. To draw out of something.

The drawing one metal or mineral out of another, we call extracting. Bacon's Physical Remarks.

Out of the ashes of all plants they extract a salt which they use in medicines. Bacon's Natural History, N<sup>o</sup>. 645.

If the metallick or mineral matter is discoverable, it is so diffused and scattered amongst the crasser and more unprofitable matter, that it would never be possible to separate and extract
it. Woodward's Natural History.

2. To draw by chemical operation.

They

Whom sunny Borney bears, are stor'd with streams
Egregious, rum and rice's spirit extract. Phillips.

3. To take from something of which the thing taken was a part.

I now see

Bone of my bone, flesh of my flesh, myself
Before me: woman is her name, of man
Extracted. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. viii. l. 497.

4. To draw out of any containing body or cavity.

These waters were extracted, and laid upon the surface of the ground. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

5. To select and abstract from a larger treatise.

To see how this case is represented, I have extracted out of that pamphlet a few notorious falsehoods. Swift.

EXTRACT. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. The substance extracted; the chief parts drawn from anything.

In tinctures, if the superfluous spirit of wine be distilled off, it leaves at the bottom that thicker substance, which chymists call the extract of the vegetables. Boyle's Scept. Chym.

To dip our tongues in gall, to have nothing in our mouth but the extract and exhalation of our inward bitterness, is no great sensuality. Government of the Tongue, f. 10.

2. The chief heads drawn from a book; an abstract; an epi-tome.

I will present a few extracts out of authors. Camden's Rem.

Some books may be read by extracts made of them by others, but only in the less important arguments, and the meaner books; else distilled books are like common distilled waters, flashy things. Bacon's Essays, Civil and Moral.

Spend some hours every day in reading, and making extracts, if your memory be weak. Swift.

EXTRACT. partic. adj. See the verb.

EXTRACTION. n. f. [extractio, Latin.]

1. The act of drawing one part out of a compound; the act of drawing out the principal substance by chemical operation.

Although the charge of extraCTION should exceed the worth, at least it will discover nature and possibility. Bacon.

They have fallen upon the distillations of waters, extraCTIONS of oils, and such like experiments unknown to the ancients.

Hakewill on Providence.

It would not defray the charge and labour of the extraCTION, and must needs be all irretrievably lost. Woodward's Nat. Hist.

2. Derivation from an original; lineage; descent.

One whose extraCTION's from an ancient line,
Gives hope again that well-born men may shine;
The meanest in your nature mild and good,
The noble rest secured in your blood. Waller.

A family of an ancient extraCTION, transported with the conqueror out of Normandy. Clarendon.

EXTRACTOR. n. f. [Latin.] The person or instrument by which any thing is extracted.

EXTRADITIONARY. adj. [extra and dictio, Latin.] Not consisting in words but realities.

Of these extraditionary and real fallacies, Aristotle and lo-gicians make six; but we observe men are commonly deceived by four thereof. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. i. c. 4.

EXTRAJUDICIAL. adj. [extra and judicium, Latin.] Out of the regular course of legal procedure.

A declaratory or extrajudicial absolution is conferred in foro pœnitentiali. Ayliffe's Parergon.

EXTRAJUDICIALLY. adv. [from extrajudicial.] In a manner different from the ordinary course of legal procedure.

The confirmation of an election, though done by a previous citation of all persons concerned, may be said to be done extrajudicially, when opposition ensues thereupon. Ayliffe.

EXTRAMISSIION. n. f. [extra and mitto, Latin.] The act of emitting outwards; opposite to intromission.

Aristotle, Alhazen, and others, hold that sight is by reception, and not by extramission; by receiving the rays of the object unto the eye, and not by sending any out. Brown.

EXTRAMUNDANE. adj. [extra and mundus, Latin.] Beyond the verge of the material world.

'Tis a philosophy that gives the exactest topography of the extramundane spaces. Glanv. Scept. c. 18.

EXTRANEUS. adj. [extraneus, Latin.] Not belonging to any thing; foreign; of different substance; not intrinsic.

Relation is not contained in the real existence of things, but something extraneous and superinduced. Locke.

When the mind refers any of its ideas to any thing extraneous to them, they are then called true or false. Locke.

Gold, when equally pure, and freed from extraneous matter, is absolutely alike in colour, consistence, specifick gravity, and all other respects. Woodward on Fossils.

EXTRAORDINARILY. adv. [from extraordinary.]

1. In a manner out of the common method and order.

In the affairs which were not determinable one way or other by the Scripture, himself gave an extraordinarily direction and counsel, as oft as they sought it at his hands. Hooker.

In government it is good to use men of one rank equally;
for to countenance some extraordinarily, is to make them insolent, and the rest discontent. Bacon's Essays, Civ. and Moral.

2. Uncommonly; particularly; eminently; remarkably.

He quotes me right; and I hope all his quotations, wherein he is so extraordinarily copious and elaborate, are so. Howel.

The temple of Solomon was a type, and therefore was so extraordinarily magnificent; otherwise perhaps a cheaper structure might have been as serviceable. Wilkins's Math. Magick.

EXTRAORDINARINESS. n. f. [from extraordinary.] Uncommonness; eminence; remarkableness.

I chuse some few, which either for the extraordinariness of their guilt, or the frequency of their practice, are the most eminent. Government of the Tongue, f. 4.

EXTRAORDINARY. adj. [extraordinarius, Lat.] This word and its derivatives are generally pronounced extrordinary, whereby the a is liquified into the o.]

1. Different from common order and method; not ordinary.

Evils must be judged inevitable, if there be no apparent ordinary way to avoid them; because where council and advice bear rule of God's extraordinary power, without extraordinary warrant, we cannot presume. Hooker, b. v. f. 9.

At that time Spain had no other wars, save those which were grown into an ordinary: now they have coupled therewith the extraordinary of the Voltaline and the Palatinate.

Bacon's War with Spain.

Let us see what extraordinary armies have been transfitted thither, and what ordinary forces have been maintained there.

Davies's State of Ireland.

2. Different from the common course of law.

If they proceeded in a martial or any other extraordinary way;

way, without any form of law, his majesty should declare his justice and affection to an old faithful servant. Clarendon.

3. Eminent; remarkable; more than common.
The house was built of fair and strong stone, not affecting so much any extraordinary kind of fineness, as an honourable representing of a firm stateliness. Sidney.

The Indians worshipped rivers, fountains, rocks, or great stones, &c. and all things which seemed to have something extraordinary in them. Stillington's Def. of Dije. on Rom. Idol.

EXTRAORDINARY. adv. [This word seems only a colloquial barbarism, used for the ease of pronunciation.] Extraordinarily.

I ran over their cabinet of medals, but don't remember to have met with any things in it that are extraordinary rare. Add.
EXTRAPAROCHIAL. adj. [extra and parochia, Latin.] Not comprehended within any parish.

EXTRAPROVINCIAL. adj. [extra and provincia, Latin.] Not within the same province; not within the jurisdiction of the same archbishop.

An extraprovincial citation is not valid, ultra duas dietas, above two day's journey; nor is a citation valid that contains many conditions manifestly inconvenient. Ayliffe's Parergon.

EXTRAREGULAR. adj. [extra and regula, Latin.] Not comprehended within a rule.

His providence is extraregular, and produces strange things beyond common rules; and he led Israel through a sea, and made a rock pour forth water. Taylor's Rule of living holy.

EXTRA'VAGANCE. } n. f. [extravagans, Latin.]
EXTRA'VAGANCY. }

1. Excursion or sally beyond prescribed limits.
I have troubled you too far with this extravagance: I shall make no delay to recall myself into the road again, having been taught by you those several particulars. Hammond.

2. Irregularity; wildness.
3. Outrage; violence; outrageous vehemence.

How many, by the wild fury and extravagancy of their own passions, have put their bodies into a combustion, and by stirring up their rage against others, have armed that fierce humour against themselves. Tillotson, Sermon 4.

4. Unnatural tumour; bombast.
I remember some verses of my own, Maximin and Almanzor, which cry vengeance upon me for their extravagance. Dryden's Spanish Fryar, Dedication.

5. Waste; vain and superfluous expence.
She used to come home in her cups, and break the china and the looking-glasses; and was of such an irregular temper, and so entirely given up to her passion, that you might argue as well with the North-wind as with her ladyship; so expensive, that the income of three dukes was not enough to supply her extravagance. Arbutnot.

EXTRA'VAGANT. adj. [extravagans, Latin.]
1. Wandering out of his bounds. This is the primogeneal sense, but not now in use.

At his warning
The extravagant and erring spirit hies
To his confine. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

2. Roving beyond just limits or prescribed methods.
I dare not ask for what you would not grant:
But wishes, madam, are extravagant;
They are not bounded with things possible;
I may wish more than I presume to tell. Dryden's Aurengz.

3. Not comprehended in any thing.
Twenty constitutions of pope John XXII. are called the extravagants; for that they being written in no order or method, vagantur extra corpus collectionum canonum. Ayliffe's Parergon.

4. Irregular; wild.
For a dance they seem'd
Somewhat extravagant, and wild. Milton's Paradise Lost.
There appears something nobly wild and extravagant in great natural geniuses, infinitely more beautiful than turn and polishing. Addison's Spectator, N<sup>o</sup>. 160.
New ideas employed my fancy all night, and composed a wild extravagant dream. Addison's Spectator.

5. Wasteful; prodigal; vainly expensive.
An extravagant man, who has nothing else to recommend him but a false generosity, is often more beloved than a person of a much more finished character, who is defective in this particular. Addison's Spectator, N<sup>o</sup>. 243.

EXTRA'VAGANT. n. f. One who is confined in no general rule or definition.

We pity or laugh at those fatuous extravagants. Glanville.
There are certain extravagants among people of all sizes and professions; and there must be no drawing of general rules from particular exceptions. L'Estrange.

EXTRA'VAGANTLY. adv. [from extravagant.]
1. In an extravagant manner; wildly.

Her passion was extravagantly new;
But mine is much the madder of the two. Dryden.

2. In an unreasonable degree.
Some are found to praise our author, and others as rashly and extravagantly contradict his admirers. Pope's Ess. on Homer.

3. Expensively; luxuriously; wastefully.

EXTRA'VAGANTNESS. n. f. [from extravagant.] Excess; excursion beyond limits.

TO EXTRA'VAGATE. v. n. [extra and vagor, Latin.] To wander out of limits. Diët.

EXTRA'VASATED. adj. [extra and vasa, Latin.] Forced out of the properly containing vessels.

The viscid matter, which lies like leather upon the extravasated blood of pleuretick people, may be dissolved by a due degree of heat. Arbutnot on Aliments.

EXTRA'VASATION. n. f. [from extravasated] The act of forcing, or state of being forced out of the proper containing vessels.

Aliment, too viscid, obstructing the glands, and by its acrimony corroding the small vessels of the lungs, after a rupture and extravasation of blood, easily produces an ulcer. Arb.

EXTRA'VE'NATE. adj. [extra and vena, Latin.] Let out of the veins.

That there is a magnetick way of curing wounds, by anointing the weapon; and that the wound is affected in like manner as is the extravenate blood by the sympathetick medicine, as to matter of fact, is with circumstances of good evidence ascertained. Glanv. Scept. c. 24.

EXTRA'VE'RSION. n. f. [extra and versio, Latin.] The act of throwing out; the state of being thrown out.

Nor does there intervene heat to afford them any colour to pretend that there is made an extraversion of the sulphur, or of any of the two other supposed principles. Boyle.

EXTRAUGHT. part. [This is an obsolete participle from extract; as distraught from distract.] Extracted.

Sham'st thou not, knowing whence thou art extraught,
To let thy tongue detect thy baseborn heart? Shak. H. VI.

EXTREME. adj. [extremus, Latin.] This word is sometimes corrupted by the superlative termination, of which it is by no means capable, as it has in itself the superlative signification.]

1. Greatest; of the highest degree.
He that will take away extreme heat by setting the body in extremity of cold, shall undoubtedly remove the disease; but together with it the diseased too. Hooker, b. iv. f. 8.

The Lord shall smite thee with a fever, an inflammation, and an extreme burning. Deutr. xxviii. 22.

They thought it the extremest of evils to put themselves at the mercy of those hungry and disorderly people. Bacon.

2. Utmost.

The hairy fool
Stood on th' extremest verge of the swift brook, Augmenting it with tears. Shakes. As you like it.
Misen's cape and Bauli last he view'd,
That on the sea's extremest borders stood. Addison on Italy.

3. Last; that beyond which there is nothing.
Farewel, ungrateful and unkind! I go,
Condemn'd by thee, to those sad shades below:
I go th' extremest remedy to prove,
To drink oblivion, and to drench my love. Dryden.

4. Pressing in the utmost degree.
Cases of necessity being sometime but urgent, sometime extreme, the consideration of publick utility is urged equivalent to the easier kind of necessity. Hooker, b. v. f. 9.

EXTREME. n. f. [from the adjective]

1. Utmost point; highest degree of any thing.
Thither by harpy-footed furies hal'd,
At certain revolutions, all the damn'd
Are brought; and feel by turns the bitter change
Of fierce extremes, extremes by change more fierce;
From beds of raging fire to starve in ice
Their soft ethereal warmth, and there to pine Immoveable, infix'd, and frozen round
Periods of time; thence hurried back to fire. Milt. Pa. Lost.

Avoid extremes, and shun the faults of such
Who still are pleas'd too little, or too much. Pope.

They cannot bear that human nature, which they know to be imperfect, should be praised in an extreme, without opposition. Pope's Essay on Homer.

2. Points at the greatest distance from each other; extremity.

The true Protestant religion is seated in the golden mean; the enemies unto her are the extremes on either hand. Bacon.

The syllogistical form only shews, that if the intermediate idea agrees with those it is on both sides immediately applied to, then those two remote ones, or, as they are called, extremes, do certainly agree. Locke.

EXTREME'LY. adv. [from extreme.]

1. In the utmost degree.
She might hear, not far from her, an extremely doleful voice; but so suppressed with a kind of whispering note, that he could not conceive the words distinctly. Sidney.

2. Very much; greatly; in familiar language.

Whoever sees a scoundrel in a gown reeling home at midnight, is apt to be extremely comforted in his own vices. Swift.

EXTREMITY. n. f. [extremitas, Latin.]

1. The utmost point; the highest degree.

He that will take away extreme heat by setting the body in extremity of cold, shall undoubtedly remove the disease; but together with it the diseased too. Hooker, b. iv. f. 8.

Should

E X T

Should any one be cruel and uncharitable to that extremity, yet this would not prove that propriety gave any authority.

2. The utmost parts; the parts most remote from the middle.
It is commonly set forth green or yellow: in its proper colour it is inclining to white, excepting the extremities or tops of the wing-feathers, which are black.

The extremities of the joints must be seldom hidden, and the extremities or end of the feet never.

The extremity of pain often creates a coldness in the extremities; but such a sensation is very consistent with an inflammatory distemper.

3. The points in the utmost degree of opposition, or at the utmost distance from each other.

He's a man of that strange composition,

Made up of all the worst extremities

Of youth and age.

4. Remotest parts; parts at the greatest distance.

They sent fleets out of the Red Sea to the extremities of Æthiopia, and imported quantities of precious goods.

5. Violence of passion.

With equal measure she did moderate

The strong extremities of their outrage.

If I shew no colour for my extremity, let me be your table-sport.

6. The utmost violence, rigour, or distress.

Why should not the same laws take good effect on that people, being prepared by the sword, and brought under by extremity?

Their hearts she guesseth,

And yields her to extremity of time.

He promised, if they should be besieged, to do all he could to relieve them, before they should be reduced to extremity.

It should be never so exposed to the extremity of war as to fall into those barbarous hands.

I wish peace, and any terms prefer

Before the last extremities of war.

To EXTRICATE. v. a. [extrico, Latin.] To disembarra; to set free any one in a state of perplexity; to disentangle.

We run into great difficulties about free created agents, which reason cannot well extricate itself out of.

These are great reliefs to nature, as they give her an opportunity of extricating herself from her oppressions, and recovering the several tones and springs of her distended vessels.

Addison's Spectator, N<sup>o</sup>. 195.

EXTRICA'TION. n. f. [from extricate.] The act of disentangling; disentanglement.

Crude salt has a taste not properly acid, but such as predominates in brine; and it does not appear, that this acid spirit did as such pre-exist in the salt whence it was obtained, so that we may suppose it to have been made rather by transmutation than extrication.

EXTRINSICAL. adj. [extrinsecus, Latin.] External; outward; not intimately belonging; not intrinsic. It is commonly written so, but analogy requires extrinsecal.

A body cannot move, unless it be moved by some extrinsic agent: we may easily frame a conceit, how absurd it is to think that a body, by a quality in it, can work upon itself.

Neither is the atom by any extrinsic impulse diverted from its natural course.

Outward objects, that are extrinsic to the mind; and its own operations, proceeding from powers intrinsic, and proper to itself, which, when reflected on by itself, become also objects of its contemplation, are the original of all knowledge.

EXTRINSICALLY. adv. [from extrinsic.] From without.

If to suppose the soul a distinct substance from the body, and extrinsically advenient, be an error, almost all the world hath been mistaken.

EXTRINSICK. adj. [extrinsecus, Latin.] Outward; external.

When they cannot shake the main fort, they must try if they can possess themselves of the outworks, raise some prejudice against his carriage and his most extrinsic adherents.

Government of the Tongue, f. 7.

Extrinsic modes are such as arise from something that is not in the subject or substance itself; but it is a manner of being which some substances attain, by reason of something that is external or foreign to the subject; as, this globe lies within two yards of the wall; this man is beloved or hated.

To EXTRU'CT. v. a. [extruo, extruclum, Latin.] To build; to raise; to form into a structure.

EXTRU'CTOR. n. f. [from extruct.] A builder; a fabricator; a contriver.

To EXTRU'DE. v. a. [extrudo, Latin.] To thrust off; to drive off; to push out with violence.

If in any part of the continent they found the shells, they concluded that the sea had been extruded and driven off by the mud.

Woodward's Natural History.

E X U

EXTRU'SION. n. f. [extrusus, Latin.] The act of thrusting or driving out.

They suppose the channel of the sea to have been formed, and mountains and caverns, by a violent depression of some parts of the earth, and an extrusion and elevation of others.

Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

EXTU'BERANCE. n. f. [ex and tuber, Latin.] Knobs, or parts protuberant; parts that rise from the rest of the body.

The gouge takes off the irregularities or extuberances that lie farthest from the axis of the work.

EXU'BERANCE. n. f. [exuberatio, Latin.] Overgrowth; superfluous shoots; useless abundance; luxuriance.

Men esteem the overflowing of gall the exuberance of zeal, and all the promises of the faithful combatant they confidently appropriate.

Though he expatiates on the same thoughts in different words, yet in his similes that exuberance is avoided.

EXU'BERANT. adj. [exuberans, Latin.]

1. Growing with superfluous shoots; overabundant; superfluously plenteous; luxuriant.

Another Flora there of bolder hues,

And richer sweets, beyond our gardens pride,

Plays o'er the fields, and showers with sudden hand

Exuberant spring.

His similes have been thought too exuberant, and full of circumstances.

2. Abounding in the utmost degree.

We might there discern such immense power, such unsearchable wisdom, and such exuberant goodness, as may justly ravish us to an amazement, rather than a bare admiration.

Boyle's Seraphick Love.

A part of that exuberant devotion, with which the whole assembly raised and animated one another, catches a reader at the greatest distance of time.

EXU'BERANTLY. adv. [from exuberant.] Abundantly; to a superfluous degree.

A considerable quantity of the vegetable matter lay at the surface of the antediluvian earth, and rendered it exuberantly fruitful.

To EXU'BERATE. v. n. [exubero, Latin.] To abound in the highest degree.

All the loveliness imparted to the creature is lent it, to give us enlarged conceptions of that vast confluence and immensity that exuberates in God.

EXU'CCOUS. adj. [exsuccus, Latin.] Without juice; dry.

This is to be effected not only in the plant yet growing, but in that which is brought exuccous and dry unto us.

EXU'DATION. n. f. [from exudo, Latin.]

1. The organ of vision; the medium of the sense of sight.

Good sir John, as you have one eye upon my follies, turn another into the register of your own, that I may pass with a reproof off the easier. Shakesp. Merry Wives of Windsor.

My face is but a moon, and clouded too.

—Blessed are clouds to do as such clouds do:

Vouchsafe, bright moon, and these thy stars to shine,

Those clouds remov'd, upon our watry eyne. Shakespeare.

Nor doth the eye itself,

That most pure spirit of sense, behold itself,

Not going from itself; but eyes oppos'd,

Salute each other with each other's form. Sh. Troil. and Cress.

He kept him as the apple of his eye. Deutr. xxxii. 10.

As long looking against the sun or fire hurteth the eye by dilatation; so curious printing in small volumes, and reading of small letters, do hurt the eye by contraction. Bacon.

His awful presence did the crowd surprize,

Nor durst the rash spectator meet his eyes;

Eyes that confest'd him born for kingly sway,

So fierce, they flash'd intolerable day. Dryd. Knight's Tale.

But sure the eye of time beholds no name

So blest as thine in all the rolls of fame. Pope's Odyssey.

2. Sight; ocular knowledge.

Who hath bewitched you, that you should not obey the truth, before whose eyes Jesus Christ hath been evidently set forth? Gal. iii. 1.

3. Look; countenance.

I'll say yon grey is not the morning's eye,

'Tis but the pale reflex of Cynthia's brow. Sh. Rom. and Jul.

4. Front; face.

To justify this worthy nobleman,

Her shall you hear disproved to your eyes.

Shakespeare's Measure for Measure.

5. A posture of direct opposition, where one thing is in the same line with another.

Now pass'd, on either side they nimbly tack;

Both strive to intercept and guide the wind;

And in its eye more closely they come back,

To finish all the deaths they left behind. Dryd. Ann. Mirab.

6. Aspect; regard.

Having an eye to a number of rites and orders in the church of England, as marrying with a ring, &c. sundry church-offices, dignities and callings, for which they found no commandment in the holy Scripture, they thought by the one only stroke of an axiom to have cut them off. Hooker, b. iii. f. 4.

As in Scripture a number of laws, particular and positive, being in force, may not by any law of man be violated; we are, in making laws, to have thereunto an especial eye. Hooker.

The man that is tender among you, and very delicate, his eyes shall be evil towards his brother. Deutr. xxviii. 54.

He that hath a bountiful eye shall be blessed. Prov. xxii. 9.

That thinks he hath done well in people's eyes. Shakespeare.

I was as far from meditating a war as I was, in the eye of the world, from having any preparations for one. K. Charles.

Though he in all the people's eyes seem'd great,

Yet greater he appear'd in his retreat. Denham.

9. Sight; view; the place in which any thing may be seen.

There shall he practise tilts and tournaments,

Hear sweet discourse, converse with noblemen;

And be, in eye of every exercise,

Worthy his youth and nobleness of birth. Shakespeare.

10. Any thing formed like an eye.

Or see colours like the eye of a peacock's feather, by pressing our eyes on either corner, whilst we look the other way. Newton's Opt.

11. Any small perforation.

This Ajax has not so much wit as will stop the eye of Helen's needle. Shakesp. Troilus and Cressida.

Does not our Saviour himself speak of the intolerable difficulty which they cause in men's passage to heaven? Do not they make the narrow way much narrower, and contract the gate gate which leads to life to the straightness of a needle's eye? South's Sermons.

E Y E

12. A small catch into which a hook goes.

Those parts, if they cohere to one another but by rest only, may be much more easily dissociated, and put into motion by any external body, than they could be, if they were by little hooks and eyes, or other kind of fastenings entangled in one another. Boyle.

13. Bud of a plant.

Prune and cut off all your vine-shoots to the very root, save one or two of the stoutest, to be left with three or four eyes of young wood. Evelyn's Kalendar.

14. A small shade of colour.

The ground indeed is tawny.
—With an eye of green in't. Shakesp. Tempest.
Red with an eye of blue, makes a purple. Boyle on Colours.

Have a box when eunuchs sing,
And foremost in the circle eye a king. Pope's Epist. of Hor.

To EYE. v. n. To appear; to show; to bear an appearance.

Forgive me,

Since my becoming kill me when they do not Eye well to you. Shakesp. Anthony and Cleopatra.

EYEBALL. n. f. [eye and ball.] The apple of the eye; the pupil.

Oh, were mine eyeballs into bullets turn'd,
That I in rage might shoot them at your faces! Shak. H. VI.

Be subject to no sight but mine: invisible
To every eyeball else. Shakespeare's Tempest.

I feel my hair grow stiff, my eyeballs rowl;
This is the only form could shake my soul. Dryd. Ind. Emp.

Not when a gilt buffet's reflected pride
Turns you from sound philosophy aside,

Not when from plate to plate your eyeballs roll,
And the brain dances to the mantling bowl. Pope's Horace.

EYEBRIGHT. n. f. [euphrasia, Latin.] It hath an anomalous personated flower of one leaf, divided into two lips; the upper one upright, parted into several divisions; and the lower one divided into three parts, each of which is again divided into two: out of the flowercup rises the pointal, which afterwards turns to a fruit, or oblong husk, divided into two parts, and replete with small seeds. Miller.

EYEBROW. n. f. [eye and brow.] The hairy arch over the eye.

The lover,

Sighing like a furnace, with a woful ballad
Made to his mistress eyebrow. Shakesp. As you like it.

On the seventh day he shall shave all his hair off his head, his beard, and his eyebrows. Lev. xiv. 9.

Above stand the eyebrows, to keep any thing from running down upon them; as drops of sweat from the forehead, or dust. Ray on the Creation.

The balls of his broad eyes roll'd in his head,
And glar'd betwixt a yellow and a red;

He look'd a lion with a gloomy stare,
And o'er his eyebrows hung his matted hair. Dryden.

EYEDROP. n. f. [eye and drop.] Tear.

That tyranny which never quast but blood,
Would by beholding him have wash'd his knife

With gentle eyedrops. Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. ii.

EYEGLANCE. n. f. [eye and glance.] Quick notice of the eye.

His countenance was bold, and bashed not
For Guyon's looks; but scornful eyeglance at him shot. F. 2.

E Y E

EYEGGLASS. n. f. [eye and glass.] Spectacles; glass to assist the sight.

Ha' not you seen, Camillo?

But that's past doubt you have; or your eyeglass
Is thicker than a cuckold's horn. Shakesp. Winter's Tale.

By comparing it with a good perspective of four foot in length, made with a concave eyeglass, I could read at a greater distance with my own instrument than with the glass. Newton.

EYELESS. adj. [from eye.] Without eyes; sightless; deprived of sight.

A proclaim'd prize! most happy!

That eyeless head of thine was first fram'd flesh
To raise my fortunes. Shakesp. King Lear.

Promise was, that I

Should Israel from Philistian yoke deliver:
Ask for this great deliverer now, and find him

Eyeless in Gaza, at the mill with slaves:
Himself is bound under Philistian yoke. Milton's Agonistes.

Pentheus durst deride

The cheated people, and the eyeless guide. Addison's Ovid's Metamorph.

Eyeless he grop'd about with vengeful haste,
And jostled promontories as he pass'd. Garth's Ovid.

Meonides,

Poor eyeless pilgrim. Phillips.

Cyclop, if any pitying thy disgrace,
Ask who disfigur'd thus that eyeless face. Pope's Odyssey.

EYELET. n. f. [œillet, French, a little eye.] A hole through which light may enter; any small perforation for a lace to go through.

Slitting the back and fingers of a glove, I made eyelet holes to draw it close. Wise man's Surgery.

EYELID. n. f. [eye and lid.] The membrane that shuts over the eye.

Therewith her dim eyelids she up 'gan rear,
On which the dreary death did sit, as sad

As lump of lead, and made dark clouds appear. Fai. Queen.

Mark when she smiles with amiable cheer,
And tell me whereto can ye liken it!

When on each eyelid sweetly do appear
An hundred graces as in shade to sit. Spenser's Sonnets.

On my eyelids is the shadow of death. Job xvi. 16.

Fetch me that flower; the herb I shew'd thee once;
The juice of it, on sleeping eyelids laid,

Will make or man or woman madly doat
Upon the next live creature that it sees. Shakespeare.

The Turks have a black powder, made of a mineral called alcohol, which with a fine long pencil they lay under their eyelids, which doth colour black, whereby the white of the eye is set off more white. Bacon's Natural History.

At length, the crackling noise and dreadful blaze
Call'd up some waking lover to the fight;

And long it was ere he the rest could raise,
Whose heavy eyelids yet were full of night. Dryden.

EYESERVANT. n. f. [eye and servant.] A servant that works only while watched.

EYESERVICE. n. f. [eye and service.] Service performed only under inspection.

Servants, obey in all things your master; not with eye-service, as men pleasers, but in singleness of heart. Col. iii.

EYESHOT. n. f. [eye and shot.] Sight; glance; view.

I must carry off my prize as others do; and not think of sharing the booty before I am free from danger, and out of eyeshot from the other windows. Dryden's Don Sebastian.

I have preserved many a young man from her eyeshot by this means. Spectator, N<sup>o</sup>. 284.

EYESIGHT. n. f. [eye and sight.] Sight of the eye.

The Lord hath recompensed me according to my cleanness in his eyesight. 2 Sam. xxii. 22.

I have an ill-divining soul;

Methinks I see thee, now thou art below,
As one dead in the bottom of a tomb;

Either my eyesight fails, or thou look'st pale. Shakespeare.

I love you, sir,

Dearer than eyesight, space and liberty,
Beyond what can be valued, rich or rare. Shakesp. K. Lear.

Though sight be lost,

Life yet hath many solaces, enjoy'd
Where other senses want not their delights,

At home in leisure and domestick ease,
Exempt from many a care and chance, to which Eyesight exposes daily men abroad. Milton's Agonistes.

Josephus sets this down from his own eyesight, being himself a chief captain at the siege of Jopata, where these events happened. Wilkins's Math. Magic.

He blinds the wife, gives eyesight to the blind,
And molds and stamps anew the lover's mind. Dryden.

EYESORE. n. f. [eye and sore.] Something offensive to the sight.

Hath the church of Christ, from the first beginning, by a secret universal instinct of God's good spirit, always-tied itself

E Y E

to end neither sermon, nor almost any speech of moment, which hath concerned matters of God, without some special words of honour and glory to the Trinity which we all adore; and is the like conclusion of psalms become now, at length, an eyesore, or a galling to the ears that hear it? Hooker, b. v.

Fy, doff this habit; shame to your estate,

And eyesore to our solemn festival. Shak. Tam. of the Shrew.

As soon as the two lords came thither they covered, to the trouble of the other; but having presently to speak, they were quickly freed from that eyesore. Clarendon, b. viii.

Mordecai was an eyesore to Haman. L'Estrange, Fable 38.

He's the best piece of man's flesh in the market; not an eyesore in his whole body. Dryden's Don Sebastian.

EYESPO'TTED. adj. [eye and spot.] Marked with spots like eyes.

Nor Juno's bird, in her eyespotted train,

So many goodly colours doth contain.

Spenser.

EYESTRING. n. f. [eye and string.] The string of the eye; the tendon by which the eye is moved.

I would have broke mine eyestrings; crackt them, but

To look upon him.

Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

To know whether the sheep are sound or not, see that their gums be red, the brisket-skin red, and the eyestrings ruddy.

Mortimer's Husbandry.

EY'ETOOTH. n. f. [eye and tooth.] The tooth on the upper jaw next on each side to the grinders; the fang.

The next one on each side stronger and deeper rooted, and more pointed, called canini, in English eyeteeth, to tear the more tough sort of aliments. Ray on the Creation.

EY'EWINK. n. f. [eye and wink.] A wink, as a hint or token. They would have won any woman's heart; and, I warrant you, they could never get an eyewink of her. Shakespeare.

E Y R

EYEWITNESS. n. f. [eye and witness.] An ocular evidence; one who gives testimony to facts seen with his own eyes.

We made known unto you the power and coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, and were eyewitnesses of his majesty. 2 Pet.

To meet him all his saints, who silent stood

Eyewitnesses of his almighty acts,

With jubilee advanc'd. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vi.

Give us, if thou can'st,

Eyewitness of what first or last was done,

Relation more particular and distinct. Milton's Agonistes.

The curious, by laying together circumstances, attestations, and characters of those who are concerned in them, either receive or reject what at first but eyewitnesses could absolutely believe or disbelieve. Addison on the Christian Religion.

EYRE. n. f. [eyre, French; iter, Latin.] The court of justices itinerants; and justices in eyre are those only, which Bracton, in many places calls justiciarios itinerantes. The eyre also of the forest is nothing but the justice-seat, otherwise called; which is, or should by ancient custom, be held every three years by the justices of the forest, journeying up and down to that purpose. Cowel.

EY'RY. n. f. [from ey, an egg.] The place where birds of prey build their nests and hatch.

But I was born so high,

Our eyrie buildeth in the cedars top,

And dallies with the wind, and scorns the sun. Shak. R. III.

The eagle, and the stork,

On cliffs and cedar-tops their eyries build. Milt. Par. Lost.

Some haggard hawk, who had her eyry nigh,

Well pounc'd to fasten, and well wing'd to fly. Dryden.

F A B

F, A consonant generally reckoned by authors, and admitted by Scaliger, among the semi-vowels, and according to that opinion distinguished in the enumeration of the alphabet by a name beginning with a vowel, yet has so far the nature of a mute, that it is easily pronounced before a liquid in the same syllable. It has in English an invariable sound, formed by compression of the whole lips and a forcible breath. Its kindred letter is V, which, in the Islandick alphabet, is only distinguished from it by a point in the body of the letter.

FABA'CEOUS. adj. [fabaceus, Latin] Having the nature of a bean.

FA'BLE. n. f. [fable, French; fabula, Latin.]

1. A feigned story intended to enforce some moral precept.
Jotham's fable of the bees is the oldest extant, and as beautiful as any made since. Addison's Spectator.
2. A fiction in general.

Triptolemus, so sung the nine,
Strew'd plenty from his cart divine;
But, spite of all those fable makers,
He never sow'd on Almain acres. Dryden.

3. A vicious or foolish fiction.
But refuse profane and old wives fables. 1 Tim. iv. 7.
4. The series or contexture of events which constitute a poem epick or dramatick.

The moral is the first business of the poet: this being formed, he contrives such a design or fable as may be most suitable to the moral. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

The first thing to be considered in an epick poem is the fable, which is perfect or imperfect, according as the action, which it relates, is more or less so. Addison's Spectator.

5. A lye. This sense is merely familiar.

To FA'BLE. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To feign; to write not truth but fiction.
That Saturn's sons receiv'd the three-fold reign
Of heav'n, of ocean, and deep hell beneath,
Old poets mention, fabling. Prior.
Vain now the tales which fabling poets tell,
That wav'ring conquest still desires to rove!
In Marlbro's camp the goddess knows to dwell. Prior.
2. To tell falsehoods; to lye.
He fables not: I hear the enemy. Shakesp. Henry VI.

To FA'BLE. v. a. To feign; to tell of falsity.

We mean to win,
Or turn this heav'n itself into the hell
Thou fablest. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vi. l. 292.
Ladies of th' Hesperides, that seem'd
Fairer than feign'd of old, or fabl'd since
Of fairy damsels met in forest wide,
By knights. Milton's Parad. Lost.

FA'BLED. adj. [from fable.] Celebrated in fables.
Hail, fabled grotto! hail, Elysian soil!
Thou fairest spot of fair Britannia's isle! Tickell.

FA'BLER. n. f. [from fable.] A dealer in fiction; a writer of feigned stories.

To FA'BRICATE. v. a. [fabricor, Latin.]

1. To build; to construct.
2. To forge; to devise falsely. This sense is retained among the Scottish lawyers; for when they suspect a paper to be forged, they say it is fabricate.

FABRICA'TION. n. f. [from fabricate.] The act of building; construction.

This fabricat'on of the human body is the immediate work of a vital principle, that formeth the first rudiments of the human nature. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

FA'BRICK. n. f. [fabrica, Latin.]

1. A building; an edifice.
There must be an exquisite care to place the columns, set in several stories, most precisely one over another, that so the solid may answer to the solid, and the vacuities to the vacuities, as well for beauty as strength of the fabrick. Wot on.
2. Any system or compages of matter; any body formed by the conjunction of dissimilar parts.

Still will ye think it strange,
That all the parts of this great fabrick change;
Quit their old station and primeval frame. Prior.

F A C

To FA'BRICK. v. a. [from the noun.] To build; to form; to construct.

Shew what laws of life
The cheese inhabitants observe, and how Fabrick their mansions. Phillips.

FA'BULIST. n. f. [fabuliste, French.] A writer of fables.
Quitting *Eso*p and the fabulists, he copies from Boccace.

Our bard's a fabulist, and deals in fiction. Garrick.

FABULO'SITY. n. f. [fabulositas, Latin.] Lyingness; fulness of stories; fabulous invention.

In their fabulosity they would report, that they had observations for twenty thousand years.

Abbot's Description of the World.
FA'BULOUS. adj. [fabulosus, Latin.] Feigned; full of fables, or invented tales.

A person terrified with the imagination of spectres, is more reasonable than one who thinks the appearance of spirits fabulous and groundless. Addison's Spectator, N<sup>o</sup>. 110.

FA'BULOUSLY. adv. [from fabulous.] In fiction; in a fabulous manner.

There are many things fabulously delivered, and are not to be accepted as truths. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. vi. c. 8.

FACE. n. f. [face, French, from facies, Latin.]

1. The visage.
The children of Israel saw the face of Moses, that the skin of Moses's face shone. Exod. xxxiv. 35.

A man shall see faces, which, if you examine them part by part, you shall never find good; but take them together, are not uncomely. Bacon, Essay 44.

From beauty still to beauty ranging,
In ev'ry face I found a dart. Addison's Spectator.

2. Countenance; cast of the features; look; air of the face.
Seiz'd and ty'd down to judge, how wretched I!
Who can't be silent, and who will not lye:
To laugh, were want of goodness and of grace;
And to be grave, exceeds all pow'r of face. Pope's Epistles.
3. The surface of any thing.

A mist watered the whole face of the ground. Gen. ii. 6.

4. The front or forepart of any thing.
The breadth of the face of the house, towards the East, was an hundred cubits. Ezek. xli. 14.
4. State of affairs.

He look'd, and saw the face of things quite chang'd,
The brazen throat of war had ceas'd to roar;
All now was turn'd to jollity and game,
To luxury and riot, feast and dance. Milton's Par. Lost.
This would produce a new face of things in Europe. Addis.

5. Appearance; resemblance.
Keep still your former face, and mix again
With these lost spirits; run all their mazes with 'em;
For such are treasons. Ben. Johnson.

At the first shock, with blood and powder stain'd,
Nor heav'n, nor sea, their former face retain'd;
Fury and art produce effects so strange,
They trouble nature, and her visage change. Waller.

His dialogue has so much the face of probability, that some have mistaken it for a real conference. Baker.

6. Presence; sight.
Ye shall give her unto Eleazar, and one shall slay her before his face. Numb. xix. 3.

Jove cannot fear; then tell me to my face,
That I of all the gods am least in grace. Dryden's Iliad.

7. Confidence; boldness.
Thinking, by this face,
To fasten in our thoughts that they have courage;
But 'tis not so. Shakespeare's Julius Caesar.

How many things are there which a man cannot, with any face or comeliness, say or do himself? A man can scarce allege his own merits with modesty, much less extol them: a man cannot sometimes brook to supplicate or beg.

You'll find the thing will not be done
With ignorance and face alone. Hudibras, p. ii.
You, says the judge to the wolf, have the face to challenge that that which you never lost; and you, says he to the fox, have the confidence to deny that which you have certainly stolen.

L'Estrange, Fable 415.

This is the man that has the face to charge others with false citations.

Tillotson, Preface.

8. Distortion of the face.

Shame itself!

Why do you make such faces? Shakespeare's Macbeth.

FACE to FACE. [An adverbial expression.]

1. When both parties are present.

It is not the manner of the Romans to deliver any man to die, before that he which is accused have his accusers face to face.

Æt's xxv. 16.

2. Nakedly; without the interposition of other bodies.

Now we see through a glass darkly; but then face to face.

1 Cor. xiii. 12.

TO FACE. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To carry a false appearance; to play the hypocrite.

Thou needs must learn to laugh, to lye,

To face, to forge, to scoff, to company. Hubberd's Tale.

2. To turn the face; to come in front.

Face about, man; you a soldier, and afraid of the enemy!

Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

Then thrice the mounted squadrons ride around

The fire, and Arcite's name they thrice resound;

Hail and farewell they shouted thrice amain,

Thrice facing to the left, and thence they turn'd again. Dry.

TO FACE. v. a.

1. To meet in front; to oppose with confidence and firmness.

I'll face

This tempest, and deserve the name of king. Dryden.

We get intelligence of the force of the enemy, and cast about for a sufficient number of troops to face the enemy in the field of battle.

Addison on the War.

They are as loth to see the fires kindled in Smithfield as his lordship; and, at least, as ready to face them under a popish persecution.

Swift.

2. To oppose with impudence.

We trapp'd the state, and fac'd it down

With plots and projects of our own. Hudibras, p. iii. c. 2.

Because he walk'd against his will,

He fac'd men down that he stood still.

Prior.

3. To stand opposite to.

On one side is the head of the emperor Trajan; the reverse has on it the circus Maximus, and a view of the side of the Palatine mountain that faces it.

Addison on Italy.

The temple is described to be square, and the four fronts with open gates, facing the different quarters of the world.

Pope's Temple of Fame.

4. To cover with an additional superficies; to invest with a covering.

The whole fortification of Soleurre is faced with marble.

Addison's Remarks on Italy.

Where your old bank is hollow, face it with the first spit of earth that you dig out of the ditch.

Mortimer's Husbandry.

FA'CELESS. adj. [from face.] Without a face.

Bailey.

FACEPAINTER. n. f. [face and painter.] A drawer of portraits; a painter who draws from the life.

FACEPAINTING. n. f. [face and painting.] The art of drawing portraits.

Georgione, the cotemporary of Titian, excelled in portraits or facepainting.

Dryden's Dufresnoy.

FA'CEP. n. f. [facette, French.] A small surface; a superficies cut into several angles.

Honour that is gained and broken upon another, hath the quickest reflection, like diamonds cut with facets.

Bacon.

FACE'TIOUS. adj. [facetieux, French; facetia, Lat.] Gay; cheerful; lively; merry; witty. It is used both of persons and sentiments.

Socrates, informed of some derogating speeches used of him behind his back, made this facetious reply, Let him beat me too when I am absent.

Government of the Tongue, f. 6.

FACE'TIOUSLY. adv. [from facetious.] Gayly; cheerfully; wittily; merrily.

FACE'TIOUSNESS. n. f. [from facetious.] Cheerful wit; mirth; gaiety.

FA'CILE. adj. [facile, French; facilis, Latin.]

1. Easy; not difficult; performable or attainable with little labour.

Then also those poets, which are now counted most hard, will be both facile and pleasant.

Milton on Education.

To confine the imagination is as facile a performance as the Goteham's design of hedging in the cuckoo.

Glanv. Scept.

By dividing it into parts so distinct, the order in which they shall find each disposed, will render the work facile and delightful.

Evelyn's Kalendar.

This may at first seem perplexed with many difficulties, yet many things may be suggested to make it more facile and commodious.

Wilkins's Math. Magic.

2. Easily surmountable; easily conquerable.

The facile gates of hell too slightly barr'd. Milt. P. Lost.

3. Easy of access or converse; not haughty; not supercilious; not austere.

I meant she should be courteous, facile, sweet,

Hating that solemn vice of greatness, pride;

I meant each softest virtue there should meet,

Fit in that softer bosom to reside. Ben. Johnson's Epigrams.

Raphael now, to Adam's doubt propos'd,

Benevolent and facile, thus reply'd. Milton's Paradise Lost.

4. Pliant; flexible; easily persuaded to good or bad; ductile to a fault.

Too facile then, thou did'st not much gainstay;

Nay did'st permit, approve, and fair dismiss. Milt. P. Lost.

Since Adam and his facile consort Eve

Lost Paradise, deceiv'd by me. Milton's Paradise Regain'd.

Some men are of that facile temper, that they are wrought upon by every object they converse with, whom any affectionate discourse, or serious sermon, or any notable accident, shall put into a fit of religion, which yet usually lasts no longer than till somewhat else comes in their way. Calamy.

TO FACILITATE. v. a. [faciliter, French.] To make easy; to free from difficulty; to clear from impediments.

Choice of the likeliest and best prepared metal for the version will facilitate the work.

Bacon's Natural History.

They renewed their assault two or three days together, and planted cannon to facilitate their passage, which did little hurt; but they still lost many men in the attempt. Clarendon, b. viii.

Though perspective cannot be called a certain rule, or a finishing of the picture, yet it is a great succour and relief to art, and facilitates the means of execution. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

What produceth a due quantity of animal spirits, necessarily facilitates the animal and natural motions. Arbuthnot on Diet.

A war on the side of Italy would cause a great diversion of the French forces, and facilitate the progress of our arms in Spain.

Swift.

FACILITY. n. f. [facilité, French; facilitas, Latin.]

1. Easiness to be performed; freedom from difficulty.

Yet reason faith, reason should have ability

To hold these worldly things in such proportion,

As let them come or go with even facility. Sidney, b. ii.

Piety could not be diverted from this to a more commodious business by any motives of profit or facility. Raleigh.

A war upon the Turks is more worthy than upon any other Gentiles, both in point of religion and in point of honour; though facility and hope of success might invite some other choice.

Bacon's holy War.

2. Readiness in performing; dexterity.

They who have studied have not only learned many excellent things, but also have acquired a great facility of profiting themselves by reading good authors.

Dryden's Dufresnoy.

The facility which we get of doing things, by a custom of doing, makes them often pass in us without our notice. Locke.

3. Vitious ductility; easiness to be persuaded to good or bad; to ready compliance.

Facility is worse than bribery; for bribes come now and then: but if importunity or idle respects lead a man, he shall never be without.

Bacon, Essay 11.

'Tis a great error to take facility for good-nature; tenderness, without discretion, is no better than a more pardonable folly.

L'Estrange, Fable 30.

4. Easiness of access; complaisance; condescension; affability.

He opens and yields himself to the man of business with difficulty and reluctance; but offers himself to the visits of a friend with facility, and all the meeting readiness of appetite and desire.

South's Sermons.

FACINERIOUS. adj. [corrupted by Shakespeare from facinorous; facinus, facinoris, Latin.] Wicked; facinorous.

'Tis strange, 'tis very strange, that is the brief and the tedious of it; and he's of a most facinorous spirit that will not acknowledge it.

Shakesf. All's well that ends well.

FA'CING. n. f. [from To face.] An ornamental covering; that which is put on the outside of any thing by way of decoration.

These offices and dignities were but the facings and fringes of his greatness.

Wotton.

FACINOROUS. adj. [facinora, Latin.] Wicked; atrocious; detestably bad.

FACINOROUSNESS. n. f. [from facinorous] Wickedness in a high degree.

FACT. n. f. [factum, Latin]

1. A thing done; an effect produced; something not barely supposed or suspected, but really done.

In matter of fact there is some credit to be given to the testimony of man; but not in matter of opinion and judgment: we see the contrary both acknowledged and universally practised also throughout the world.

Hooker, b. ii. f. 7.

As men are not to mistake the causes of these operations, so much less are they to mistake the fact or effect, and rashly to take that for done which is not done. Bacon's Nat. History.

Matter of fact breaks out and blazes with too great an evidence to be denied.

South's Sermons.

2. Reality; not supposition; not speculation.

Those

Those effects which are wrought by the percussion of the sense, and by things in fact, are produced likewise in some degree by the imagination: therefore if a man see another eat four or acid things, which set the teeth on edge, that object tainteth the imagination. Bacon's Natural History, N<sup>o</sup>. 795.

If this were true in fact, I do not see any colour for such a conclusion. Addison on the State of the War.

Manifold sins, though in speculation they may be separable from war, in reality and fact never fail to attend it. Smalbridge.

3. Action; deed.

Unhappy man! to break the pious laws
Of nature, pleading in his children's cause:

Howe'er the doubtful fact is understood,

'Tis love of honour and his country's good;

The consul, not the father, sheds the blood. Dryden.

FACTION. n. f. [faction, French; factio, Latin.]

1. A party in a state.

The queen is valued thirty thousand strong;

If she hath time to breathe, be well assur'd

Her faction will be full as strong as ours. Shakesf. Henry VI.

He has been known to commit outrages,

And cherish factious. Shakespeare's Timon.

Their hatred went so far, that by one of Simon's faction murders were committed. 2 Mac. iv. 9.

By the weight of reason I should counterpoise the over-balancings of any factious. King Charles.

2. Tumult; discord; dissension.

They remained at Newbery in great faction among themselves. Clarendon.

FACTIONARY. n. f. [factionnaire, French.] One of a faction;
a party man. A word not in use.

Pr'ythee, fellow, remember my name is Menenius; always factionary of the party of your general. Shakesf. Coriolanus.

FACTIOUS. adj. [factieux, French.]

1. Given to faction; loud and violent in a party; publicly dissensionous; addicted to form parties and raise publick disturbances.

He is a traitor; let him to the Tower,

And crop away that factious pate of his. Shakesf. Hen. VI.

Be factious for redress of all these griefs. Shak. Jul. Cæsar.

2. Proceeding from publick dissensions; tending to publick discord.

Grey-headed men and grave, with warriors mix'd,

Asssemble; and harangues are heard; but soon

In factious opposition. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xi. l. 664.

Factious tumults overbore the freedom and honour of the two houses. King Charles.

Why these factious quarrels, controversies, and battles amongst themselves, when they were all united in the same design? Dryden's Juvenal, Dedication.

FACTIOUSLY. adv. [from factious.] In a manner criminally dissensionous or tumultuous.

I intended not only to oblige my friends, but mine enemies also; exceeding even the desires of those that were fac-tiously discontented. King Charles.

FACTIOUSNESS. n. f. [from factious.] Inclination to publick dissension; violent clamorousness for a party.

FACTITIOUS. adj. [factitius, Latin.] Made by art, in opposition to what is made by nature.

In the making and distilling of soap, by one degree of fire the salt, the water, and the oil or grease, whereof that facti-tious concrete is made up, being boiled up together, are easily brought to incorporate. Boyle.

Hardness wherein some stones exceed all other bodies, and among them the adamant all other stones, being exalted to that degree that art in vain endeavours to counterfeit it; the facti-tious stones of chymists, in imitation, being easily detected by an ordinary lapidist. Ray on the Creation.

FACTOR. n. f. [facteur, French; factor, Latin.]

1. An agent for another; one who transacts business for another. Commonly a substitute in mercantile affairs.

Take on you the charge

And kingly government of this your land;

Not as protector, steward, substitute,

Or lowly factor for another's gain. Shakesf. Richard III.

Percy is but my factor, good my lord,

T' engross up glorious deeds on my behalf. Shak. Hen. IV.

You all three,

The senators alone of this great world,

Chief factors for the gods. Shakesf. Anthony and Cleopatra.

We agreed that I should send up an English factor, that whatsoever the island could yield should be delivered at a reasonable rate. Raleigh's Apology.

It was conceived that the Scots had good intelligence, having some factors doubtless at this mart, albeit they did not openly trade. Hayward.

Vile arts and restless endeavours are used by some sly and venomous factors for the old republican cause. South's Sermons.

All the reason that I could ever hear alleged, by the chief factors for a general intromission of all sorts, sects and persuasions, into our communion, is, that those who separate from us are stiff and obstinate, and will not submit to the rules and orders of our church, and that therefore they ought to be taken away. South's Sermons.

Forc'd into exile from his rightful throne,

He made all countries where he came his own;

And viewing monarchs secret arts of sway,

A royal factor for their kingdoms lay. Dryden.

2. [In arithmetick.] The multiplicator and multiplicand. Harris.

FACTORY. n. f. [from factor.]

1. A house or district inhabited by traders in a distant country.

2. The traders embodied in one place.

FACTOTUM. n. f. [fac totum, Latin. It is used likewise in burlesque French.] A servant employed alike in all kinds of business: as Scrub in the Stratagem.

FACTURE. n. f. [French.] The act or manner of making any thing.

FACULTY. n. f. [faculté, French; facultas, Latin.]

1. The power of doing any thing; ability whether corporal or intellectual.

There is no kind of faculty or power in man, or any creature, which can rightly perform the functions allotted to it without perpetual aid and concurrence of that supreme cause of all things. Hooker, b. i. f. 8.

Orators may grieve; for in their sides,

Rather than heads, their faculty abides. Denham.

Reason in man supplies the defect of other faculties wherein we are inferior to beasts, and what we cannot compass by force we bring about by stratagem. L'Estrange.

2. Powers of the mind, imagination, reason, memory.

For well I understand in the prime end

Of nature, her the inferior; in the mind

And inward faculties, which most excel. Milt. Parad. Lost.

In the ordinary way of speaking, the understanding and will are two faculties of the mind. Locke.

Neither did our Saviour think it necessary to explain to us the nature of God, because it would be impossible, without bestowing on us other faculties than we possess at present. Swift.

3. [In physick.] A power or ability to perform any action natural, vital, and animal: by the first they understand that by which the body is nourished and augmented, or another like it generated: the vital faculty is that by which life is preserved, and the ordinary functions of the body performed; and the animal faculty is what conducts the operations of the mind.

Quincy.

4. A knack; habitual excellence; dexterity.

He had none of those faculties, which the other had, of reconciling men to him. Clarendon, b. viii.

A sober man would have wondered how our author found out monarchical absolute power in that text, had he not had an exceeding good faculty to find it himself where he could not shew it others. Locke.

He had an excellent faculty in preaching, if he were not too refined. Swift.

5. Quality; disposition or habit of good or ill.

I'm traduc'd by tongues which neither know

My faculties nor person, yet will be

The chronicles of my doing. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

6. Power; authority.

This Duncan

Hath born his faculties so meek, hath been

So clear in his great office, that his virtues

Will plead like angels. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

7. Privilege; right to do any thing.

Law hath set down to what persons, in what causes, with what circumstances, almost every faculty or favour shall be granted. Hooker, b. v.

8. Faculty, in an university, denotes the masters and professors of the several sciences: as, a meeting of the faculty or faculties.

FACUND. adj. [facundus, Latin.] Eloquent. Diët.

TO FA'DDLE. v. n. [corrupted from To fiddle, or toy with the fingers] To trifle; to toy; to play.

TO FADE. v. n. [fade, French, insipid, languid.]

1. To tend from greater to less vigour; to grow weak; to languish.

2. To tend from a brighter to a weaker colour.

The greenness of a leaf ought to pass for apparent, because soon fading into a yellow, it scarce lasts at all, in comparison of the greenness of an emerald. Boyle on Colours.

The spots in this stone are of the same colour throughout, even to the very edges; there being an immediate transition from white to black, and the colours not fading or declining gradually. Woodward on Fossils.

3. To wither: as a vegetable.

Ye shall be as an oak whose leaf fadeth, and as a garden that hath no water. Is. i. 30.

4. To die away gradually; to vanish; to be worn out.

Where either through the temper of the body, or some other default, the memory is very weak, ideas in the mind quickly fade. Locke.

The stars shall fade away, the sun himself

Grow dim with age, and nature sink in years. Addis. Cato.

s. To

F A I

5. To be naturally not durable; to be transient; easily to lose vigour or beauty.
The glorious beauty on the head of the fat valley shall be a fading flower. Jf. xxviii. 4.
The pictures drawn in our minds are laid in fading colours, and, if not sometimes refreshed, vanish and disappear. Locke.
Narcissus' change, to the vain virgin shows
Who trusts to beauty, trusts the fading rose. Gay's Fan.
To FADE. v. a. To wear away; to reduce to languor; to deprive of freshness or vigour; to wither.
This is a man old, wrinkled, faded, withered;
And not a maiden, as thou say'st he is. Shakespeare.
His palms, though under weights they did not stand,
Still thriv'd; no Winter could his laurels fade. Dryden.
Restless anxiety, forlorn despair,
And all the faded family of care. Garth's Disfens.
To FADGE. v. n. [gèpezan, Saxon; fugen, German.]
1. To suit; to fit; to have one part consistent with another.
How will this fadge? my master loves her dearly,
And I, poor monster, fond as much on him;
And she, mistaken, seems to dote on me. Shakespeare.
2. To agree; not to quarrel; to live in amity.
When they thriv'd they never fadg'd,
But only by the ears engag'd;
Like dogs that snarl about a bone,
And play together when they've none. Hudibras, p. iii.
3. To succeed; to hit.
The fox had a fetch; and when he saw it would not fadge, away goes he presently. L'Estrange's Fables.
4. This is a mean word not now used, unless perhaps in ludicrous and low compositions.
FA'CES. n. f. [Latin.] Excrements; but often used to express the ingredients and settlings after distillation and infusion. Quincy.
To FAG. v. a. [fatig, Latin.] To grow weary; to faint with weariness.
Creighton withheld his force 'till the Italian begun to fag, and then brought him to the ground. Mackenzie's Lives.
FAGE'ND. n. f. [from fag and end.]
1. The end of a web of cloath, generally made of coarser materials.
2. The refuse or meaner part of any thing.
In the world's fagend
A nation lies. Fanshawe.
When they are the worst of their way, and fixt in the fagend of business, they are apt to look not kindly upon those who go before them. Collier of Envy.
FA'GOT. n. f. [fagod, Welsh and Armorick; fagot, French.]
1. A bundle of sticks bound together for the fire.
About the pile of fagots, sticks and hay,
The bellows raised the newly kindled flame. Fairfax, b. ii.
Spare for no fagots, let there be enow;
Place pitchy barrels on the fatal stake. Shakesf. Henry VI.
Mitres or fagots have been the rewards of different persons, according as they pronounced these consecrated syllables or not. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.
2. A bundle of sticks for any purpose.
The black prince filled a ditch with fagots as successfully as the generals of our times do it with fascines. Addis. Spectator.
3. A soldier numbered in the muster-roll, but not really existing.
To FA'GOT. v. a. [from the noun] To tie up; to bundle together.
He was too warm on picking work to dwell,
But fagoted his notions as they fell,
And if they rhym'd and rattled, all was well. Dryden.
To FAIL. v. n. [failler, French; faelin, Welsh. Pezron.]
1. To be deficient; to cease from former plenty; to fall short; not to be equal to demand or use.
The waters fail from the sea, and the flood decayeth and drieth up. Job xiv. 11.
Where the credit and money fail, barter alone must do. Locke.
2. To be extinct; to cease to be produced.
Help, Lord, for the godly man ceaseth; for the faithful fail from among the children of men. Pf. xii. 1.
Let there not fail from the house of Joab one that hath an issue. 2 Sa. iii. 29.
3. To cease; to perish; to be lost.
For Titan, by the mighty loss dismay'd,
Among the heavens th' immortal fact display'd,
Left the remembrance of his grief should fail. Addison.
4. To die; to lose life.
Had the king in his last sickness fail'd,
Their heads should have gone off. Shakesf. Henry VIII.
Both he that helpeth shall fall, and he that is helper shall fall down, and they all shall fail together. Jf. xxxi. 3.
5. To sink; to be torn down; to languish through resistance.
Neither will I be always wroth; for the spirit should fail before me. Jf. lvii. 16.

F A I

6. To decay; to decline; to languish.
Mine eyes fail. Pf. cxix. 82.
I perceive
Thy mortal fight to fail: objects divine
Must needs impair and weary human sense. Milt. Par. Lost.
7. To miss; not to produce its effect.
Consider of deformity not as a sign which is deceiveable, but as a cause which seldom faileth of the effect. Bacon's Essays.
This jest was first of th' other house's making,
And, five times try'd, has never fail'd of taking. Dryden.
A persuasion that we shall overcome any difficulties, that we meet with in the sciences, seldom fails to carry us through them. Locke.
He does not remember whether every grain came up or not; but he thinks that very few failed. Mortimer's Husband.
8. To miss; not to succeed in a design.
I am enjoin'd, by oath, if I fail
Of the right casket, never in my life
To woo a maid in way of marriage. Shak. Merch. of Venice.
In difficulties of state, the true reason of failing proceeds from failings in the administration. L'Estrange.
Men who have been busied in the pursuit of the philosopher's stone, have failed in their design. Addison's Guardian.
9. To be deficient in duty.
Endeavour to fulfill God's commands, to repent as often as you fail of it, and to hope for pardon and acceptance of him. Wake's Preparation for Death.
To FAIL. v. a.
1. To desert; not to continue to assist or supply.
The ship was now left alone, as proud lords be when fortune fails them. Sidney, b. ii.
So hast thou oft with guile thine honour blent;
But little may such guile thee now avail.
If wanted force and fortune do not much me fail. Fai. Qu.
There shall be signs in the sun, the moon, and the stars, mens hearts failing them for fear. Lu. xxi. 26.
Her heart failed her, and she would fain have compounded for her life. L'Estrange.
He presumes upon his parts that they will not fail him at time of need, and so thinks it superfluous labour to make any provision beforehand. Locke.
2. Not to assist; to neglect; to omit to help.
Since nature fails us in no needful thing,
Why want I means my inward self to see? Davies.
3. To omit; not to perform.
The inventive god who never fails his part,
Inspires the wit, when once he warms the heart. Dryden.
4. To be wanting to.
There shall not fail thee a man on the throne. 1 Kings ii. 4.
FAIL. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Miscalriage; miss; unsuccessfulness.
2. Omission; non-performance.
Mark and perform it, see'st thou? for the fail
Of any point in't shall not only be Death to thyself, but to thy lewd-tongu'd wife. Shakespeare.
He will without fail drive out from before you the Canaanites. Jof. iii. 10.
3. Deficiency; want.
4. Death; extinction.
How grounded he his title to the crown
Upon our fail? Shakespeare's Henry VIII.
FA'ILING. n. f. [from fail.] Deficiency; imperfection; faults not atrocious; lapse.
Besides what failings may be in the matter, even in the expressions there must often be great obscurities. Digby.
To failings mild, but zealous for desert;
The clearest head, and the sincerest heart. Pope.
Even good men have many temptations to subdue, many conflicts with those enemies which war against the soul, and many failings and lapses to lament and recover. Rogers.
FA'ILURE. n. f. [from fail.]
1. Deficiency; cessation.
There must have been an universal failure and want of springs and rivers all the Summer season. Woodward's N. Hist.
2. Omission; non-performance; slip.
He that, being subject to an apoplexy, used still to carry his remedy about him; but upon a time shifting his cloaths, and not taking that with him, chanced upon that very day to be surprised with a fit: he owed his death to a mere accident, to a little inadvertency and failure of memory. South's Sermons.
3. A lapse; a slight fault.
FAIN. adj. [peagn, Saxon.]
1. Glad; merry; cheerful; fond. It is still retained in Scotland in this sense.
And in her hand she held a mirror bright,
Wherein her face she often viewed fain. Fairy Queen.
My lips will be fain when I sing unto thee, and so will my soul whom thou hast delivered. Psalms lxxi.
2. Forced; obliged; compelled. [This signification seems to have arisen from the mistake of the original signification in some ambiguous expressions; as, I was fain to do this, would equally equally suit with the rest of the sentence, whether it was understood to mean I was compelled, or I was glad to do it for fear of worse. Thus the primary meaning seems to have been early lost.]

Every weight to shroud it did constrain,
And this fair couple eke to shroud themselves were fain.
Fairy Queen, b. i. cant. 1. Stan. 6.

Whosoever will hear, he shall find God; whosoever will study to know, shall be also fain to believe. Hooker, b. v.

I was fain to forswear it; they would else have married me to the rotten medlar. Shakesf. Measure for Measure.

Faint heart never won fair lady. Proverb in Camden's Rem.

Our faint Egyptians pray for Antony;
But in their servile hearts they own Octavius. Dryden.

6. Dejected; depressed.

Consider him that endureth such contradiction against himself, left ye be wearied and faint in your minds. Hebr. xii. 3.

7. Not vigorous; not active.

The defects which hindered the conquest, were the faint prosecution of the war, and the looseness of the civil government. Davies on Ireland.

FAINTHEARTED. adj. [faint and heart.] Cowardly; timorous; dejected; easily depressed.

Fear not, neither be fainthearted for the two tails of these smoking firebrands. If. vii. 4.

They should resolve the next day as victorious conquerors to take the city, or else there as fainthearted cowards to end their days. Knolles's History of the Turks.

Now the late fainthearted rout,

O'erthrown and scatter'd round about,

Chac'd by the horror of their fear,

From bloody fray of knight and bear;

Took heart again and fac'd about;

As if they meant to stand it out. Hudibras, p. i. cant. 3.

Villain, stand off! base, groveling, worthless wretches,

Mongrels in faction; poor fainthearted traitors. Addis. Cato.

FAINTHEARTEDLY. adv. [from fainthearted.] Timorously; in a cowardly manner.

FA'INTISHNESS. n. f. [from faint.] Weakness in a slight degree; incipient debility.

A certain degree of heat lengthens and relaxes the fibres; whence proceeds the sensation of faintishness and debility in a hot day. Arbuthnot on Air.

FA'INTLING. adj. [from faint.] Timorous; feeble-minded. A burlesque or low word.

There's no having patience, thou art such a faintling silly creature. Arbuthnot's History of John Bull.

FA'INTLY. adv. [from faint.]

1. Feebly; languidly.

Love's like a torch, which, if secur'd from blasts,

Will faintly burn; but then it longer lasts:

Expos'd to storms of jealousy and doubt,

The blaze grows greater, but 'tis sooner out. Walsh.

2. Not in bright colours.

Nature affords at least a glimm'ring light;

The lines, tho' touch'd but faintly, are drawn right. Pope.

3. Without force of representation.

I have told you what I have seen and heard but faintly; nothing like the image and horror of it. Shakesf. King Lear.

An obscure and confused idea represents the object so faintly, that it doth not appear plain to the mind. Watts.

4. Without strength of body.

With his loll'd tongue he faintly licks his prey,

His warm breath blows her flix up as she lies. Dryden.

5. Not vigorously; not actively.

Though still the famish'd English, like pale ghosts,

Faintly besiege us one hour in a month. Shakesf. Henry VI.

6. Timorously; with dejection; without spirit.

2. Inactivity; want of vigour.

This evil proceeds rather of the unsoundness of the counsels laid for the reformation, or of faintness in following and effecting the same, than of any such fatal course appointed of God. Spenser's State of Ireland.

3. Timorousness; dejection.

The paleness of this flow'r

Bewray'd the faintness of my master's heart. Shak. Hen. VI.

FA'INTY. adj. [from faint.] Weak; feeble; languid; debilitated; enfeebled.

When Winter frosts constrain the field with cold,
The fainty root can take no steady hold. Dryd. Virg. Georg.

The ladies gasp'd, and scarcely could respire;
The breath they drew, no longer air, but fire:
The fainty knights were scorch'd, and knew not where
To run for shelter; for no shade was near. Dryden.

FAIR. adj. [fægen, Saxon; faur, Danish.]

1. Beautiful; elegant of feature; handsome. Fair seems in the common acceptation to be restrained, when applied to women, to the beauty of the face.

Thou art a fair woman to look upon. Gen. xii. 11.

My decay'd fair,
A sunny look of his will soon repair. Shak. Comed. of Err.

2. Not black; not brown; white in the complexion.

I never yet saw man,
But she would spell him backward; if fair fac'd,
She'd swear the gentleman should be her sister;
If black, why, nature, drawing of an antick,
Made a foul blot. Shak. Much Ado about Nothing.

Let us look upon men in several climates: the Ethiopians are black, flat-nosed, and crisp-haired: the Moors tawny; the Northern people large, and fair complexioned. Hale.

3. Pleasing to the eye; beautiful in general.

Carry him gently to my fairest chamber,
And hang it round with all my wanton pictures. Shakespeare.
Thus was he fair in his greatness, and in the length of his branches. Ezek. xxxi. 7.

4. Clear; pure.

A standard of a damask-rose, with the root on, was set in a chamber where no fire was, upright in an earthen pan, full of fair water, half a foot under the water. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
Even fair water, falling upon white paper or linnen, will immediately alter the colour of them, and make it sadder than that of the unwetted parts. Boyle on Colours.

5. Not cloudy; not foul; not tempestuous.

Fair is foul, and foul is fair;
Hover through the fog and filthy air. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
Fair weather cometh out of the earth. Job xxxvii. 22.
About three of the clock in the afternoon the weather was very fair and very warm. Clarendon, b. viii.

6. Favourable; prosperous: as, a fair wind.

In vain you tell your parting lover,
You wish fair winds may waft him over. Prior.

7. Likely to succeed.

Yourself, renowned prince, stood as fair
As any comer I have look'd on yet,
For my affection. Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.
The Caliphs obtained a mighty empire, which was in a fair way to have enlarged, until they fell out. Raleigh's Essays.
O pity and shame! that they who to live well
Enter'd so fair, should turn aside to tread Paths indirect, or in the midway faint. Milt. Paradise Lost.

8. Equal; just.

The king did so much desire a peace, that no man need advise him to it, or could divert him from it, if fair and honourable conditions of peace were offered to him. Clarendon.

9. Not effected by any insidious or unlawful methods; not foul.

After all these conquests he passed the rest of his age in his own native country, and died a fair and natural death. Temple.

10. Not practising any fraudulent or insidious arts: as, a fair rival, a fair disputant.

Virtuous and vicious ev'ry man must be,
Few in th' extreme, but all in the degree;
The rogue and fool by fits is fair and wise,
And ev'n the best, by fits, what they despise. Pope.

11. Open; direct.

For still, methought, she sung not far away;
At last I found her on a laurel-spray:
Close by my side she sat, and fair in sight,
Full in a line, against her opposite. Dryden.

12. Gentle; mild; not compulsory.

All the lords came in, and, being by fair means wrought thereunto, acknowledged king Henry. Spenser on Ireland.
For to reduce her by main force,
Is now in vain; by fair means, worse. Hudibras, p. iii.

13. Mild; not severe.

Not only do'tt degrade them, or remit
To life obscur'd, which were a fair dismissal;
But throw'tt them lower than thou did'tt exalt them high.
Milton's Agonistes.

14. Pleasing; civil.

Good sir, why do you start, and seem to fear
Things that do sound so fair? Shakespeare's Macbeth.
When fair words and good counsel will not prevail upon us, we must be frighted into our duty. L'Estrange.

15. Equitable; not injurious.

His doom is fair,
That dust I am, and shall to dust return. Milt. Parad. Lost.

16. Commodious; easy.

Hereby, upon the edge of yonder coppice,
A stand where you may make the fairest shoot. Shakespeare.

FAIR. adv. [from the adjective.]

1. Gently; decently; without violence.

He who fair and softly goes steadily forward, in a course that points right, will sooner be at his journey's end than he that runs after every one, though he gallop. Locke.

2. Civilly; complaisantly.

Well, you must now speak sir John Falstaff fair. Shakesp.
One of the company spoke him fair, and would have stoppt his mouth with a crust. L'Estrange, Fable 21.

In this plain fable you th' effect may see
Of negligence, and fond credulity;
And learn besides of flatt'ers to beware,
Then most pernicious when they speak too fair. Dryden.

His promise Palamon accepts; but pray'd
To keep it better than the first he made:
Thus fair they parted 'till the morrow's dawn;
For each had laid his plighted faith to pawn. Dryden.

Kalib ascend, my fair spoke servant rise,
And sooth my heart with pleasing prophecies. Dryd. In. Emp.
This promised fair at first. Addison on Italy.

3. Happily; successfully.

O, princely Buckingham, I'll kiss thy hand,

In sign of league and amity with thee:

Now fair befall thee and thy noble house!

Thy garments are not spotted with our blood. Shak. R. III.

4. On good terms.

There are other nice, though inferior cases, in which a man must guard, if he intends to keep fair with the world, and turn the penny. Collier of Popularity.

FAIR. n. f.

1. A beauty; elliptically a fair woman.

Of sleep forsaken, to relieve his care,
He sought the conversation of the fair. Dryden's Fables.
Gentlemen who do not design to marry, yet pay their devoirs to one particular fair. Spectator, No. 288.

2. Honesty; just dealing.

I am not much for that present; we'll settle it between ourselves: fair and square, Nic, keeps friends together. Arbuthnot.

FAIR. n. f. [foire, French; feria, or forum, Latin.] An annual or stated meeting of buyers and sellers; a time of traf-fick more frequented than a market. The privilege of holding fairs in England is granted by the king.

With silver, iron, tin and lead they traded in thy fairs.
Ezek. xxvii. 12.

His corn, his cattle, were his only care,
And his supreme delight a country fair. Dryden.

The ancient Nundinæ, or fairs of Rome, were kept every ninth day: afterwards the same privileges were granted to the country markets, which were at first under the power of the consuls. Arbuthnot on Coins.

FA'IRING. n. f. [from fair.] A present given at a fair.

Sweetheart, we shall be rich ere we depart,
If fairings come thus plentifully in. Shakes. Love's Lab. Lost.
What pretty things they are, we wonder at!

Like children that esteem every trifle,
And prefer a fairing before their fathers:
What difference is between us and them?
That we are dearer fools, cockscombs at A higher rate. Ben. Johnson's Discoveries.

Now he goes on, and sings of fairs and shows;
For still new fairs before his eyes arose:

How pedlars stalls with glitt'ring toys are laid,
The various fairings of the country maid. Gay's Pastorals.

FA'IRLY. adv. [from fair.]

1. Beautifully: as, a city fairly situated.
2. Commodiously; conveniently; suitably to any purpose or design.

Waiting 'till willing winds their sails supply'd,
Within a trading town they long abide,
Full fairly situate on a haven's side. Dryden.

3. Honestly; justly; without shift; without fraud.

To the first advantages we may fairly lay claim; I wish we had as good a title to the latter. Atterbury's Sermons.

It is a church of England man's opinion, that the freedom of a nation consists in an absolute unlimited legislative power, wherein the whole body of the people are fairly represented, and in an executive duly limited. Swift.

4. Ingenuously; plainly; openly.

The stage how loosely does Astrea tread,
Who fairly puts all characters to bed. Pope's Epist. of Hor.

5. Candidly; without sinister interpretations.

As I interpret fairly your design,
So look not with severer eyes on mine. Dryden's Aurengz.

6. Without violence to right reason.

Where I have enlarged them, I desire the false criticks would not always think that those thoughts are wholly mine; but that either they are secretly in the poet, or may be fairly deduced from him. Dryden.

This nutritious juice being a subtle liquor, scarce obtainable by a human body, the serum of the blood is fairly substituted in its place. Arbuthnot on Aiments.

7. Without blots.

Here is th' indictment of the good lord Hastings,
Which in a set hand fairly is engross'd. Shakes. Rich. III.

8. Completely; without any deficiency.

All this they fairly overcame, by reason of the continual presence of their king. Spenser's State of Ireland.

Let them say, 'tis grossly done; so it be fairly done, no matter. Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

Our love is not so great, Hortensio, but we may blow our nails together, and fast it fairly out. Shak. Tam. of the Shrew.

FA'IRNESS. n. f. [from fair.]

1. Beauty; elegance of form.

That which made her fairness much the fairer, was that it was but a fair ambassador of a most fair mind, full of wit, and a wit which delighted more to judge itself than to show itself. Sidney.

2. Honesty; candour; ingenuity.

There may be somewhat of wisdom, but little of goodness or fairness in this conduct. Atterbury's Sermons, Preface.

FA'IRSPOKEN. adj. [from fair and speak.] Bland and civil in language and address.

Arius, a priest in the church of Alexandria, a subtlewitted and

and a marvellous fairspoken man, but discontented that we should be placed before him in honour, whose superior he thought himself in desert, because through envy and stomach prone unto contradiction. Hooker, b. v. f. 42.

FA'IRY. n. f. [fephð, Saxon; fee, French.]

Ab ἔρα, terra, fit & ῥέρα Macedonum dialecto; unde ἑνέροι ἑνέροι, & Romanis inferi, qui Scoto-Saxonibus dicuntur feries, nostratiq; vulgo corruptius fairies, καταχώνιοι δαίμονες, five dii manes. Baxter's Glossary.

1. A kind of fabled beings supposed to appear in a diminutive human form, and to dance in the meadows, and reward cleanliness in houses; an elf; a fay.

Nan Page, my daughter, and my little son,
And three or four more of their growth, we'll dress
Like urchins, ouches, and fairies, green and white,
With rounds of waxen tapers on their heads,
And rattles in their hands. Shakesp. Merry Wives of Windsor.

Then let them all encircle him about,
And fairy like too pinch the unclean knight;
And ask him, why, that hour of fairy revel,
In their so sacred paths he dares to tread
In shape prophane. Shakesp. Merry Wives of Windsor.

By the idea any one has of fairies, or centaurs, he cannot know that things, answering those ideas, exist. Locke.

Fays, fairies, genii, elves, and demons hear. Pope.

2. Enchantress. Warburton.

To this great fairy I'll commend thy acts,
Make her thanks blest thee. Shakesp. Anth. and Cleopatra.

FA'IRY. adj.

1. Given by fairies.

Be secret and discrete; these fairy favours
Are lost when not conceal'd. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.
Such borrowed wealth, like fairy money, though it were Gold in the hand from which he received it, will be but leaves and dust when it comes to use. Locke.

2. Belonging to fairies.

This is the fairy land: oh, spight of spights,
We talk with goblins, owls, and elvish sprights. Shakesp.
FA'IRYSTONE. n. f. [fairy and stone.] It is found in gravel-pits, being of an hemispherical figure; hath five double lines arising from the centre of its basis, which meet in the pole. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

FAITH. n. f. [foi, French; fede, Italian; fides, Latin.]

1. Belief of the revealed truths of religion.

The name of faith being properly and strictly taken, it must needs have reference unto some uttered word, as the object of belief. Hooker, b. ii. f. 4.

Faith, if it have not works, is dead. Jam. ii. 17.

Vision in the next life is the perfecting of that faith in this life, or that faith here is turned into vision there, as hope into enjoying. Hammond's Pract. Catech.

Then faith shall fail, and holy hope shall die;
One lost in certainty, and one in joy. Prior.

2. The system of revealed truths held by the Christian church; the credenda.

What cause,

Mov'd our grand parents, in that happy state,
Favour'd of heav'n so highly, to fall off

From their Creator, and transgress his will? Milt. P. Lst.

As for those captive tribes, themselves
Who wrought their own captivity, fell off

From God to worship calves. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Were I always grave, one half of my readers would fall off from me. Addison's Spectator, N. 179.

53. To FALL on. To begin eagerly to do any thing.

Some coarse cold fallad is before thee set;
Bread with the bran perhaps, and broken meat;
Fall on, and try thy appetite to eat. Dryden's Pers. Sat.

54. To FALL on. To make an assault; to begin the attack.

They fell on, I made good my place: at length they came to th' broomstaff with me; I defied 'em still. Shak. Hen. VIII.

Fall on, fall on, and hear him not;

But spare his person for his father's sake. Dryd. Span. Fryar.

Draw all; and when I give the word fall on. Oedipus.

He pretends, amongst the rest, to quarrel with me, to have fallen foul on priesthood. Dryden's Fables, Pref.

55. To FALL over. To revolt; to desert from one side to the other.

And dost thou now fall over to my foes?
Thou wear a lion's hide! doff it, for shame,
And hang a calve's skin on those recreant limbs. Sh. K. John.

56. To FALL out. To quarrel; to jar; to grow contentious.

Little needed those proofs to one who would have fallen out with herself, rather than make any conjectures to Zelmane's speeches. Sidney, b. ii.

How fell you out, say that?
—No contraries hold more antipathy,
Than I and such a knave. Shakespeare's King Lear.

Meeting her of late behind the wood,
Seeking sweet favours for this hateful fool,
I did upbraid her, and fall out with her. Shakespeare.

The cedar, by the instigation of the loyalists, fell out with the homebians, who had elected him to be their king. Huvel.

A foul exasperated in ills, falls out
With every thing, its friend, itself. Addison's Cato.

It has been my misfortune to live among quarrelsome neighbours: there is but one thing can make us fall out, and that is the inheritance of lord Strut's estate. Arturhnot's John Bull.

57. To FALL out. To happen; to befall.

Who think you is my Dorus fallen out to be? Sidney.

Now, for the most part, it so falleth out, touching things which generally are received, that although in themselves they be most certain, yet, because men presume them granted of all, we are hardliest able to bring proof of their certainty. Hooker.

It so fell out, that certain players
We o'er-rode on the way; of those we told him. Shakesp.

Yet so it may fall out, because their end
Is hate, not help to me. Milton's Agonistes.

There fell out a bloody quarrel betwixt the frogs and the mice. L'Estrange, Fable 41.

If it so fall out that thou art miserable for ever, thou hast no reason to be surpris'd, as if some unexpected thing had happened. Tillotson, Sermon 5.

58. To FALL to. To begin eagerly to eat.

The men were fashio'd in a larger mould,
The women fit for labour, big and bold;
Gigantick hinds, as soon as work was done,
To their huge pots of boiling pulse would run;
Fall to, with eager joy, on homely food. Dryden's Juven.

59. To FALL to. To apply himself to.

They would needs fall to the practice of those virtues which they before learned. Sidney, b. ii.

I know thee not, old man; fall to thy prayers:

How ill white hairs become a fool and jester! Shak. H. V.

Having been brought up an idle horseboy, he will never after fall to labour; but is only made fit for the halter. Spenser.

They fell to raising money under pretence of the relief of Ireland. Clarendon.

My lady falls to play: so bad her chance,
He must repair it. Pope's Epist.

60. To FALL under. To be subject to; to become the object of.

We know the effects of heat will be such as will scarce fall under the conceit of man, if the force of it be altogether kept in. Bacon's Natural History, N. 99.

Those things which are wholly in the choice of another, fall under our deliberation. Taylor's Rule of living holy.

The idea of the painter and the sculptor is undoubtedly that perfect and excellent example of the mind, by imitation of which imagined form all things are represented, which fall under human sight. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

61. To FALL under. To be ranged with; to be reckoned with.

No rules that relate to pastoral can affect the Georgicks, which fall under that class of poetry which consists in giving plain instructions to the reader. Addison on the Georgicks.

62. To FALL upon. To attack; to invade; to assault.

Auria falling upon these gallies, had with them a cruel and deadly fight. Knolles.

An infection in a town first falls upon children, weak constitutions, or those that are subject to other diseases; but, spreading further, seizes upon the most healthy. Temple.

Man falls upon every thing that comes in his way; not a berry or a mushroom can escape him. Addison's Spectator.

To get rid of fools and scoundrels was one part of my design in falling upon these authors. Pope to Swift.

63. To FALL upon. To attempt.

I do not intend to fall upon nice philosophical disquisitions about the nature of time. Holder on Time.

64. To FALL upon. To rush against.

At the same time that the storm bears upon the whole species, we are falling foul upon one another. Addison's Spectator.

This is one of those general words of which it is very difficult to ascertain or detail the full signification. It retains in most of its senses some part of its primitive meaning, and implies either literally or figuratively descent, violence, or suddenness. In many of its senses it is opposed to rise; but in others has no counterpart, or correlative.

To FALL. v. a.

1. To drop; to let fall.

To-morrow in the battle think on me,
And fall thy edgeless sword, despair and die. Shak. Rich. III.

If that the earth could teem with woman's tears,
Each drop, she falls, would prove a crocodile. Shak. Othello.

Draw together;

And when I rear my hand, do you the like,
To fall it on Gonzalo. Shakespeare's Tempest.

I am willing to fall this argument: 'tis free for every man to write or not to write in verse, as he thinks it is or is not his talent, or as he imagines the audience will receive it. Dryd.

2. To sink; to depress.

If a man would endeavour to raise or fall his voice still by half notes, like the stops of a lute, or by whole notes alone without halves, as far as an eight, he will not be able to frame his voice unto it. Bacon's Natural History.

3. To diminish in value; to let sink in price.

Upon lessening interest to four per cent. you fall the price of your native commodities, or lessen your trade, or else prevent not the high use. Locke.

4. To yeave; to bring forth.

They then conceiving, did in yeaving time
Fall party-colour'd lambs, and those were Jacob's. Shakesp.

FALL. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The act of dropping from on high.

High o'er their heads a mould ring rock is plac'd,
That promises a fall, and shakes at ev'ry blast. Dryd. Æn.

2. The act of tumbling from an erect posture.

I saw him run after a gilded butterfly; and when he caught it, he let it go again, and after it again; and over and over he comes, and up again, and caught it again; or whether his fall enraged him, or how it was, he did so set his teeth, and did tear it. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

3. The violence suffered in dropping from on high.
My son coming into his marriage-chamber, happened to have a fall, and died. 2 Esdr. x. 48.
Spirit of wine, mingled with common water, if the first fall be broken, by means of a sop, or otherwise, stayeth above; and if once mingled, it severeth not again, as oil doth. Bacon's Phys. Rem.
A fever or fall may take away my reason. Locke.
Some were hurt with the falls they got by leaping upon the ground. Gulliver's Travels.
4. Death; overthrow; destruction incurred.
Wail his fall,
Whom I myself struck down. Shakesp. Macbeth.
Our fathers were given to the sword, and for a spoil, and had a great fall before our enemies. Judith viii. 9.
I will begin to pray for myself and for them; for I see the falls of us that dwell in the land. 2 Esdr. viii. 17.
5. Ruin; dissolution.
Paul's, the late theme of such a muse, whose flight Has bravely reach'd and soar'd above thy height;
Now shalt thou stand, though sword, or time, or fire;
Or zeal more fierce than they, thy fall conspire. Denham.
6. Downfal; loss of greatness; declension from eminence; degradation; state of being deposed from a high station; plunge from happiness or greatness into misery or meanness.
Her memory served as an accuser of her change, and her own handwriting was there to bear testimony against her fall. Sidney, b. ii.
Perhaps thou talk'st of me, and do'st enquire
Of my restraint; why here I live alone;
And pitiest this my miserable fall. Daniel's Civil War.
He, careless now of int'rest, fame, or fate,
Perhaps forgets that Oxford e'er was great;
Or deeming meanest what we greatest call,
Beholds thee glorious only in thy fall. Pope to Parnel.
7. Declension of greatness, power, or dominion.
'Till the empire came to be settled in Charles the Great, the fall of the Romans huge dominion concurring with other universal evils, caused those times to be days of much affliction and trouble throughout the world. Hooker, b. v. f. 41.
8. Diminution; decrease of price.
That the improvement of Ireland is the principal cause why our lands in purchase rise not, as naturally they should, with the fall of our interest, appears evidently from the effect the fall of interest hath had upon houses in London. Child.
9. Declination or diminution of sound; cadence; close of music.
That strain again; it had a dying fall:
O, it came o'er my ear, like the sweet South
That breathes upon a bank of violets, Stealing and giving odours. Shakesp. Twelfth Night.
How sweetly did they float upon the wings
Of silence, through the empty-vaulted night,
At ev'ry fall smoothing the raven down
Of darkness 'till it smil'd! Milton.
10. Declivity; steep descent.
Waters when beat upon the shore, or straitned, as the falls of bridges, or dashed against themselves by winds, give a roaring noise. Bacon's Natural History, N<sup>o</sup>. 115.
11. Cataract; cascade; rush of water down a steep place.
There will we sit upon the rocks,
And see the shepherds feed their flocks
By shallow rivers, to whose falls
Melodious birds sing madrigals. Shakespeare.
A whistling wind, or a melodious noise of birds among the spreading branches, or a pleasing fall of water running violently, these things made them to swoon for fear. Wisd. xvii.
Down through the crannies of the living walls
The crystal streams descend in murmur'ing falls. Dryd. Virg.
The swain, in barren deserts, with surprize
Sees lilies spring, and sudden verdure rise;
And starts, amidst the thirsty wilds, to hear
New falls of water murmur'ing in his ear. Pope's Messiah.
Now under hanging mountains,
Beside the falls of fountains,
He makes his moan;
And calls her ghost,
For ever, ever, ever lost! Pope's St. Cecilia.
12. The outlet of a current into any other water.
Before the fall of the Po into the gulph, it receives into its channel the most considerable rivers of Piedmont, Milan, and the rest of Lombardy. Addison's Remarks on Italy.
13. Autumn; the fall of the leaf; the time when the leaves drop from the trees.
What crowds of patients the town-doctor kills,
Or how last fall he rais'd the weekly bills. Dryden's Juven.
14. Any thing that falls in great quantities.
Upon a great fall of rain the current carried away a huge heap of apples. L'Estrange.
15. The act of felling or cutting down: as, the fall of timber.
FALLA'CIOUS. adj. [fallax, Latin; fallacieux, French.]

1. Producing mistake; sophistical. It is never used of men, but of writings, propositions, or things.
They believed and assented to things neither evident nor certain, nor yet so much as probable, but actually false and fallacious; such as were the absurd doctrines and stories of their rabbies. South's Sermons.
2. Deceitful; mocking expectation.
Soon as the force of that fallacious fruit,
That with exhilarating vapour bland
About their spirits had play'd, and inmost pow'rs
Made err, was now exhal'd. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ix.
False philosophy inspires
Fallacious hope. Milton.
- FALLA'CIOUSLY. adv. [from fallacious.] Sophistically; with purpose to deceive; with unsound reasoning
We shall so far encourage contradiction, as to promise not to oppose any pen that shall fallaciously refute us. Brown.
We have seen how fallaciously the author has stated the cause, by supposing that nothing but unlimited mercy, or unlimited punishment, are the methods that can be made use of. Addis.
- FALLA'CIOUSNESS. n. f. [from fallacious.] Tendency to deceive; inconclusiveness.
- FALLACY. n. f. [fallacia, Latin; fa'lace, French.] Sophism; logical artifice; deceit; deceitful argument; delusory mode of ratiocination.
Most princes make themselves another thing from the people by a fallacy of argument; thinking themselves most kings when the subject is most basely subjected. Sidney, b. ii.
Until I know this sure uncertainty,
I'll entertain the favour'd fallacy. Shak. Comedy of Errors.
It were a mere fallacy, and mistaking to ascribe that to the force of imagination upon another body, which is but the force of imagination upon the proper body. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
All men, who can see an inch before them, may easily detect gross fallacies. Dryden.
- FALLIBILITY. n. f. [from fallible.] Liableness to be deceived; uncertainty; possibility of error.
There is a great deal of fallibility in the testimony of men; yet there are some things we may be almost as certain of as that the sun shines, or that five twenties make an hundred. Watts's Logick.
- FALLIBLE. adj. [fal's, Latin.] Liable to error; such as may be deceived.
Do not falsify your resolution with hopes that are fallible: to-morrow you must die. Shakesp. Measure for Measure.
He that creates to himself thousands of little hopes, uncertain in the promise, fallible in the event, and depending upon a thousand circumstances, shall often fail in his expectations. Taylor's Rule of living holy.
Our intellectual or rational powers need some assistance, because they are so frail and fallible in the present state. Watts.
- FALLING. n. f. [from fall.] Indentings opposed to prominence.
It shows the nose and eyebrows, with the several prominencies and fallings in of the features, much more distinctly than any other kind of figure. Addison on ancient Medals.
- FALLINGSICKNESS. n. f. [fall and sickness.] The epilepsy; a disease in which the patient is without any warning deprived at once of his senses, and falls down.
Did Cæsar swoon?—He fell down in the market-place, and foam'd at mouth, and was speechless.—He hath the falling-sickness. Shakespeare's Julius Cæsar.
The dogfisher is good against the falling-sickness. Walton.
- FALLOW. adj. [falepe, Saxon.]
1. Pale red, or pale yellow.
How does your fallow greyhound, sir?
I heard say, he was out-run at Cotfale. Shakespeare.
The king, who was excessively affected to hunting, had a great desire to make a great park for red as well as fallow deer between Richmond and Hampton-court. Clarendon.
2. Unsowed; left to rest after the years of tillage. [Supposed to be so called from the colour of naked ground.]
The ridges of the fallow field lay traversed, so as the English must cross them in presenting the charge. Hayward.
3. Plowed, but not sowed; plowed as prepared for a second aration.
Her predecessors, in their course of government, did but sometimes cast up the ground; and so leaving it fallow, it became quickly overgrown with weeds. Hewel's Vocal Forrest.
4. Unplowed; uncultivated.
Her fallow leas
The darnel, hemlock, and rank fumitory,
Doth root upon. Shakespeare's Henry V.
5. Unoccupied; neglected.
Shall saints in civil bloodshed wallow
Of saints, and let the cause lie fallow. Hudibras, p. i. c. 2.
- FALLOW. n. f. [from the adjective.]
1. Ground plowed in order to be plowed again.
The plowing of fallows is a very great benefit to land. Mortimer's Husbandry.
They are the best ploughs to plow up Summer fallow with. Mortimer's Husbandry.
2. Ground

2. Ground lying at rest.

Within an ancient forest's ample verge,
There stands a lonely but a healthful dwelling,
Built for convenience, and the use of life;
Around it fallows, meads, and pastures fair,
A little garden, and a limpid brook,
By nature's own contrivance seems dispos'd. Row's J. Shore.

To FA'LLOW. v. n. To plow in order to a second plowing.
Begin to plow up fallows: this first fallowing ought to be very shallow. Mortimer's Husbandry.

But the ground ought to be well plowed and fallowed the Summer before. Mortimer.

FA'LLOWNESS. n. f. [from fallow.] Barrenness; an exemption from bearing fruit.

Like one, who, in her third widowhood, doth profess
Herself a nun, ty'd to retiredness,
S' affects my muse now a chaste fallowness. Donne.

FALSE. adj. [falsus, Latin; faux, fausse, French.]

1. Not morally true; expressing that which is not thought.
Innocence shall make

False accusation blush, and tyranny
Tremble at patience. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

There are false witnesses among men. L'Estrange.

2. Not physically true; conceiving that which does not exist.

For how can that be false, which ev'ry tongue
Of ev'ry mortal man affirms for true?

Which truth hath in all ages been so strong,
As, loadstone like, all hearts it ever drew. Davies.

A farce is that in poetry which grotesque is in a picture:
the persons and action of a farce are all unnatural, and the manners false; that is, inconsistent with the characters of mankind. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

3. Suppositious; succedaneous.

Take a vessel, and make a false bottom of coarse canvass:
fill it with earth above the canvass. Bacon's Nat. History.

4. Deceiving expectation.

The heart of man looks fair to the eye; but when we come to lay any weight upon't, the ground is false under us.
L'Estrange, Fable 54.

5. Not agreeable to rule, or propriety.

Now, fy upon my false French; by mine honour, in true English, I love thee, Kate. Shakespeare's Henry V.

6. Not honest; not just.

What thou would'st highly,
That thou would'st holily; would'st not play false,
And yet would'st wrongly win. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
The true prince may, for recreation sake, prove a false thief; for the poor abuses of the times want countenance.
Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. i.

Men are sponges, which, to pour out, receive;
Who know false play, rather than lose, deceive. Donne.

7. Treacherous; perfidious; traiterous; deceitful; hollow.

I grant him bloody,
Luxurious, avaricious, false, deceitful,
Sudden, malicious, smacking of ev'ry sin
That has a name. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

False of heart, light of ear, bloody of hand. Shakespeare.
A man to whom he had committed the trust of his person, in making him his chamberlain; this man, no ways disgraced, no ways discontent, no ways put in fear, turns false unto him. Bacon's Henry VII.

So hast thou cheated Theseus with a wile,
Against thy vow, returning to beguile
Under a borrow'd name; as false to me,
So false thou art to him who set thee free. Dryden.

The ladies will make a numerous party against him, for being false to love in forsaking Dido. Dryd. Virg. Æn. Ded.

8. Counterfeit; hypocritical; not real.

False tears true pity moves: the king commands
To loose his fetters. Dryden's Æn. b. ii.

9. In all these senses true is the word opposed.

To FALSE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To violate by failure of veracity.

Is't not enough that to this lady mild,
Thou falsed hast thy faith with perjury. Fairy Queen, b. i.

2. To deceive.

Fair seemly pleasure each to other makes,
With goodly purposes there as they fit;
And in his falsed fancy he, her takes
To be the fairest wight that lived yet. Fairy Queen, b. i.

3. To defeat; to balk; to shift; to evade, as fencers commonly do.

But, Guyon, in the heat of all his strife,
Was wary wife, and closely did await Advantage, whilst his foe did rage most rife;
Sometimes athwart, sometimes he strook him strait,
And falsed oft his blows t' illude him with such bait. F. Qu.

4. This word is now out of use.

FALSEHEARTED. adj. [false and heart.]

1. Treacherous; perfidious; deceitful; hollow.

The traitorous or treacherous, who have misled others, are severely punished; and the neutrals and falsehearted friends and followers, who have flatted aside like a broken bow, he noted. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.

FA'LSHOOD. n. f. [from false.]

1. Want of truth; want of veracity.

All deception in the course of life is, indeed, nothing else but a lie reduced to practice, and falsehood passing from words to things. South's Sermons.

2. Want of honesty; treachery; deceitfulness; perfidy.

3. A lie; a false assertion.

FA'LSELY. adv. [from false.]

1. Contrarily to truth; not truly.

Simeon and Levi spake not only falsely but insidiously, nay hypocritically, abusing proselytes and religion. Gov. of Tongue.

Already were the Belgians on our coast,

Whose fleet more mighty every day became

By late success, which they did falsely boast,

And now by first appearing seem'd to claim. Dryd. Ann Mir.

Tell him, I did in vain his brother move,

And yet he falsely said he was in love;

Falsely; for had he truly lov'd, at least

He would have giv'n one day to my request. Dryd. Aureng.

Such as are treated ill, and upbraided falsely, find out an intimate friend that will hear their complaints, and endeavour to sooth their secret resentments. Addison's Spectator.

2. Erroneously; by mistake.

He knows that to be inconvenient which we falsely think convenient for us. Smalbridge's Sermons.

3. Perfidiously; treacherously; deceitfully.

FA'LSENESS. n. f. [from false.]

1. Contrariety to truth.

2. Want of veracity; violation of promise.

Suppose the reverse of virtue were solemnly enacted, and the practice of fraud and rapine, and perjury and falseness to a man's word, and all vice were established by a law, would that which we now call vice gain the reputation of virtue, and that which we now call virtue grow odious to human nature? Tillotson, Sermon 3.

3. Duplicity; deceit; double dealing.

Piety is opposed to hypocrisy and insincerity, and all falseness or foulness of intentions, especially to personated devotion. Hammond's Fundamentals.

4. Treachery; perfidy; traitorousness.

King Richard might create a perfect guest,

That great Northumberland, then false to him,

Would of that seed grow to a greater falseness. Shak. H. IV.

The prince is in no danger of being betrayed by the falseness, or cheated by the avarice of such a servant. Rogers.

FA'LSER. n. f. [from false.] A deceiver; an hypocrite. Now obsolete.

Such end had the kid; for he would weaned be

Of craft coloured with simplicity;

And such end, pardie, does all them remain,

That of such falsers friendship been fain. Spenser's Pastorals.

FALSIFIA'BLE. adv. [from falsify.] Liable to be counter-feited or corrupted.

FALSIFICA'TION. n. f. [falsification, French, from falsify.]

1. The act of counterfeiting any thing so as to make it appear what it is not.

Concerning the word of God, whether it be by misconstruction of the sense, or by falsification of the words, witting-ly to endeavour that any thing may seem divine which is not,
is very plainly to abuse, and even to falsify Divine evidence, which injury, offered but unto men, is most worthily counted heinous. Hooker, b. iii. f. 5.

To counterfeit the dead image of a king in his coin is an high offence; but to counterfeit the living image of a king in his person, exceedeth all falsifications; except it should be that of a Mahomet, that counterfeits divine honour. Bacon.

2. Confutation.

The poet invents this fiction to prevent posterity from searching after this isle, and to preserve his story from detection of falsification. Notes on the Odyssey.

FA'LSIFIER. n. f. [from falsify.]

1. One that counterfeits; one that makes any thing to seem what it is not.

It happens in theories built on too obvious or too few experiments, what happens to falsifiers of coin; for counterfeit money will endure some one proof, others another, but none of them all proofs. Boyle.

2. A liar; one that contrives falsehoods.

Boasters are naturally falsifiers, and the people, of all others, that put their shams the worst together. L'Estrange's Fables.

To FA'LSIFY. v. a. [falsifier, French.]

1. To counterfeit; to forge; to produce something for that which in reality it is not.

We cannot excuse that church, which either through corrupt translations of Scripture, delivereth, instead of divine speeches, any thing repugnant unto that which God speaketh; or, through falsified additions, proposeth that to the people of God as Scripture which is in truth no Scripture.

Hooker, b. v. f. 19.

The Irish bards use to forge and falsify every thing as they list, to please or displease any man. Spenser on Ireland.

2. To

2. To confute; to prove false.

Our Saviour's prophecy stands good in the destruction of the temple, and the dissolution of the Jewish œconomy, when Jews and Pagans united all their endeavours, under Julian the apostate, to baffle and falsify the prediction. Addison.

3. To violate; to break by falsehood.

It shall be thy work, thy shameful work, which is in thy power to shun, to make him live to see thy faith falsified, and his bed defiled. Sidney, b. ii.

He suddenly falsified his faith, and villainously slew Selymes the king, as he was bathing himself, mistrusting nothing less than the falsehood of the pyrate. Knolles's History of the Turks.

This superadds treachery to all the other pestilent ingredients of the crime; 'tis the falsifying the most important trust. Decay of Piety.

4. To pierce; to run through.

His crest is rash'd away, his ample shield
Is falsify'd, and round with jav'lin's fill'd. Dryden's Æn.

Of this word Mr. Dryden writes thus. My friends quarrelled at the word falsified, as an innovation in our language. The fact is confessed; for I remember not to have read it in any English author; though perhaps it may be found in Spenser's Fairy Queen. But suppose it be not there: why am I forbidden to borrow from the Italian, a polished language, the word which is wanting in my native tongue? Horace has given us a rule for coining words, si græco fonte cadant, especially when other words are joined with them which explain the sense. I use the word falsify, in this place, to mean that the shield of Turnus was not of proof against the spears and javelins of the Trojans, which had pierced it through and through in many places. The words which accompany this new one, makes my meaning plain:

Ma si l'U.bergo d'Anibi era perfetto,

Che mai poter falsarlo in nessun canto. Ariosto, cant. xxvi.
Falsar cannot otherwise be turned than by falsified; for his shield was falsed, is not English. I might indeed have contented myself with saying his shield was pierced, and bored, and stuck with javelins. Dryden.

Dryden, with all this effort, was not able to naturalise the new signification, which I have never seen copied, except once by some obscure nameless writer, and which indeed deserves not to be received.

TO FALSIFY. v. n. To tell lies; to violate truth.

This point have we gained, that it is absolutely and universally unlawful to lie and falsify. South's Sermons.

FALSITY. n. f. [falsitas, Latin.]

1. Falsehood; contrariety to truth.

Neither are they able to break through those errors, wherein they are so determinately settled, that they pay unto falsity the whole sum of whatsoever love is owing unto God's truth. Hooker, b. v. f. 49.

Can you on him such falsities obtrude?

And as a mortal the most wise delude? Sandys's Paraphrase.

Probability does not properly make any alteration, either in the truth or falsity of things; but only imports a different degree of their clearness or appearance to the understanding. South's Sermons.

2. A lye; an error; a false assertion or position.

That Danubius ariseth from the Pyrenean hills, that the earth is higher towards the North, are opinions truly charged on Aristotle by the restorer of Epicurus, and all easily confutable falsities. Glanv. Sceps. c. 20.

TO FALTER. v. n. [faltar, to be wanting, Spanish; vaultur, a stammerer, Islandick, which is probably a word from the same radical.]

1. To hesitate in the utterance of words.

With faltering tongue, and trembling ev'ry vein,
Tell on, quoth she. Fairy Queen, b. i.

The pale assistants on each other star'd,
With gaping mouths for issuing words prepar'd;
The still-born sounds upon the palate hung,
And dy'd imperfect on the faltering tongue. Dryden.

He changes, gods! and falters at the question:
His fears, his words, his looks declare him guilty. Smith.

2. To fail in any act of the body.

This earth shall have a feeling; and these stones
Prove armed soldiers, ere her native king
Shall fa ter under foul rebellious arms. Shakesf. Richard II.

3. To fail in any act of the understanding.

How far ideots are concerned in the want or weakness of any or all faculties, an exact observation of their several ways of faltering would discover. Locke.

TO FALTER. v. a. To silt; to cleanse. This word seems to be merely rustick or provincial.

Barley for malt must be bold, dry, sweet, and clean faltered from foulness, feeds and oats. Mortimer's Husbandry.

FALTERINGLY. adv. [from falter.] With hesitation; with difficulty; with feebleness.

TO FAMBLE. v. a. [famler, Danish.] To hesitate in the speech. This word I find only in Skinner.

FAME. n. f. [fama, Latin; φάμα, Dorick.]

1. Celebrity; renown.

The house to be builded for the Lord must be exceeding magnifical, of fame and of glory throughout all countries.

1 Chro. xxii. 5.

The desire of fame will not suffer endowments to lie useless. Addison's Spectator.

What is this fame, for which we thoughts employ,
The owner's wife, which other men enjoy? Pope.

2. Report; rumour.

We have heard the fame of him, and all that he did in Egypt. Jos. ix. 9.

I shall shew what are true fames. Bacon.

FA'MED. adj. [from fame.] Renowned; celebrated; much talked of.

He is fam'd for mildness, peace and prayer. Shak. H. VI.

He purposes to seek the Clarian god,

Avoiding Delphos, his more fam'd abode,

Since Phlegyan robbers made unsafe the road. Dryden.

Aristides was an Athenian philosopher, famed for his learning and wisdom; but converted to Christianity. Addison.

FA'MELESS. adj. [from fame.] Without fame; without renown.

Then let me, fameless, love the fields and woods,

The fruitful water'd vales and running floods. May's Virgil.

FAMILIAR. adj. [familiaris, Latin.]

1. Domestick; relating to a family.

They range familiar to the dome. Pope.

2. Affable; not formal; easy in conversation.

Be thou familiar, but by no means vulgar. Shak. Hamlet.

Be not too familiar with Pains; for he misuses thy favours so much, that he swears thou art to marry his sister Nell. Shak.

3. Unceremonious; free, as among persons long acquainted.

Kalandar streight thought he saw his niece Parthenia, and was about in such familiar sort to have spoken unto her; but she, in grave and honourable manner, gave him to understand that he was mistaken. Sidney.

4. Well known; brought into knowledge by frequent practice or custom.

I see not how the Scripture could be possibly made familiar unto all, unless far more should be read in the people's hearing than by a sermon can be opened. Hooker, b. v. f. 22.

Let us chuse such limbs of noble counsel,

That the great body of our state may go

In equal rank with the best govern'd nation;

That war, or peace, or both at once, may be

As things acquainted and familiar to us. Shakesf. Henry IV.

Our sweet

Recess, and only consolation left

Familiar to our eyes! Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xi.

One idea which is familiar to the mind, connected with others which are new and strange, will bring those new ideas into easy remembrance. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

5. Well acquainted with; accustomed; habituated by custom.

Or chang'd at length, and to the place conform'd

In temper and in nature, will receive

Familiar the fierce heat, and void of pain. Milton's P. Lost.

The senses at first let in particular ideas; and the mind, by degrees, growing familiar with some of them, they are lodged in the memory, and names got to them. Locke.

He was amazed how so impotent and groveling an insect as I could entertain such inhuman ideas, and in so familiar a manner, as to appear wholly unmoved at all the scenes of blood and desolation. Gulliver's Travels.

Patient permit the sadly-pleasing strain;

Familiar now with grief, your tears refrain. Pope's Odyssey.

6. Common; frequent.

To a wrong hypothesis, may be reduced the errors that may be occasioned by a true hypothesis, but not rightly understood: there is nothing more familiar than this. Locke.

7. Easy; unconstrained.

He unreins

His muse, and sports in loose familiar strains. Addison.

8. Too nearly acquainted.

A poor man found a priest familiar with his wife, and because he spake it abroad, and could not prove it, the priest sued him for defamation. Camden.

FA'MILIAR. n. f.

1. An intimate; one long acquainted.

The king is a noble gentleman, and my familiar. Shakesp.

When he finds himself avoided and neglected by his *familiar*s, this affects him. Rogers, Sermon 10.

2. A demon supposed to attend at call.

Love is a familiar; there is no evil angel but love. Shakesp.

FAMILIARITY. n. f. [familiarité, French, from familiar.]

1. Easiness of conversation; omission of ceremony; affability.

2. Acquaintance; habitude.

We contract at last such an intimacy and familiarity with them, as makes it difficult and irksome for us to call off our minds. Atterbury's Sermons.

3. Easy intercourse.

They say any mortals may enjoy the most intimate familiarities with these gentle spirits. Pope.

F A M

TO FAMILIARIZE. v. a. [familiariser, French.]

1. To make familiar; to make easy by habitude.
2. To bring down from a state of distant superiority.

The genius smiled upon me with a look of compassion and affability that familiarized him to my imagination, and at once dispelled all fear and apprehensions. Addison's Spectator.

FA'MILIARLY. adv. [from familiar.]

1. Unceremoniously; with freedom like that of long acquaintance.

Because that I familiarly sometimes
Do use you for my fool, and chat with you,
Your sawciness will jest upon my love. Shak. Comed. of Err.
He talks as familiarly of John of Gaunt as if he had been sworn brother to him; and I'll be sworn he never saw him but once in the Tiltyard, and then he broke his head. Sh.
The governour came to us, and, after salutations, said fami- liarly, that he was come to visit us, and called for a chair and sat him down. Bacon's New Atlantis.

2. Commonly; frequently; with the unconcernedness or easiness of long habitude or acquaintance.

Lesser mists and fogs than those which covered Greece with so long darkness, do familiarly present our senses with as great alterations in the sun and moon. Raleigh's Hist. of the World.

3. Easily; without solemnity; without formality.

Horace still charms with graceful negligence,
And without method talks us into sense;
Will, like a friend, familiarly convey
The truest notions in the easiest way. Pope's Ess. on Critic.

FAM'ILLE. en famille, French. In a family way; domestically.

Deluded mortals, whom the great
Chuse for companions tete à tete;
Who at their dinners, en famille,
Get leave to sit whene'er you will. Swift.

FA'MILY. n. f. [familia, Latin; famille, French.]

1. Those who live in the same house; household.
The night made little impression on myself; but I cannot answer for my whole family; for my wife prevailed on me to take somewhat. Swift.
2. Those that descend from one common progenitor; a race; a tribe; a generation.
3. A class; a tribe; a species.

There be two great families of things, sulphureous and mercurial, inflammable and not inflammable, mature and crude, oily and watry. Bacon's Natural History, N°. 354.

FA'MINE. n. f. [famine, French; fames, Latin.] Scarcity of food; dearth; distress for want of victuals.

Our cattle's strength
Will laugh a siege to scorn: here let them lie,
'Till famine and the ague eat them up. Shakesf. Macbeth.
Famines have not been of late observed, partly because of the industry of mankind, partly by those supplies that come by sea to countries in want, but principally by the goodness of God. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

This city never felt a siege before,
But from the lake receiv'd its daily store;
Which now shut up, and millions crowded here,
Famine will soon in multitudes appear. Dryd. Indian Emp.

TO FA'MISH. v. a. [from fames, Latin; famis, old French.]

1. To kill with hunger; to starve; to destroy by want of food.
What, did he marry me to famish me? Shakespeare.
The pains of famish'd Tantalus he'll feel,
And Sisyphus, that labours up the hill
The rowling rock in vain; and curst Ixion's wheel. Dryd.
2. To kill by deprivation or denial of any thing necessary to life.

Thin air
Above the clouds will pine his entrails gross,
And famish him of breath, if not of bread. Milt. P. Lost.

TO FA'MISH. v. n. To die of hunger.

You are all resolved rather to die than to famish. Sh. Coriol.

FA'MISHMENT. n. f. [from famish.] The pain of hunger;
want of food.

Apicius, thou did'st on thy gut bestow
Full ninety millions; yet, when this was spent,
Ten millions still remain'd to thee; which thou,
Fearing to suffer thirst and famishment,
In poison'd potion drank'st. Hakewill on Providence.

FAMO'SITY. n. f. [from famous.] Renown; celebrity. Dict.

FA'MOUS. adj. [fameux, French; famosus, Latin.]

1. Renowned; celebrated; much talked of and praised.
Henry the fifth, too famous to live long;
England ne'er lost a king of so much worth. Shak. Hen. VI.
There rose up before Moses two hundred and fifty princes of the assembly, famous in the congregation, men of renown. Nump. xvi. 2.
She became famous among women; for they had executed judgment upon her. Ezek. xxiii. 10.
Pyreus was only famous for counterfeiting all base things;
as earthen pitchers, a scullery, rogues together by the ears,
and swine tumbling in the mire; whereupon he was surnamed Rupographus. Peacham on Drawing.

F A N

I shall be nam'd among the famous
Of women, sung at solemn festivals. Milton's Agonistes.
Many, besides myself, have heard our famous Waller own, that he derived the harmony of his numbers from the Godfrey of Bulloign, which was turned into English by Mr. Fairfax.
Dryden's Fables, Dedication.

2. It has sometimes a middle signification, and imports fame whether for good or ill.

Menecrates and Menas, famous pyrates,
Make the sea serve them. Shakesf. Anthony and Cleopatra.
FA'MOUSLY. adv. [from famous.] With great renown; with great celebration.

Then this land was famously enriched
With politick grave counsel; then the king
Had virtuous uncles to protect his grace. Shakesf. Rich. III.
They looked on the particulars as things famously spoken of,
and believed, and worthy to be recorded and read. Grew's Cos.

FA'MOUSNESS. n. f. [from famous.] Celebrity; great fame.

FAN. n. f. [vannus, Latin.]

1. An instrument used by ladies to move the air and cool themselves.

With scarfs, and fans, and double change of brav'ry,
With amber bracelets, beads, with all this knav'ry. Shakesf.
Flavia, the least and slightest toy
Can with resistless art employ:
In other hands the fan would prove
An engine of small force in love;
But she, with such an air and mien,
Not to be told or safely seen,
Directs its wanton motions so,
That it wounds more than Cupid's bow;
Gives coolness to the matchless dame,
To every other breast a flame. Atterbury.

The modest fan was lifted up no more,
And virgins smil'd at what they blush'd before. Pope.

2. Any thing spread out like a woman's fan into a triangle with a broad base.

As a peacock and crane were in company, the peacock spread his tail, and challenged the other to shew him such a fan of feathers. L'Estrange.

3. The instrument by which the chaff is blown away when corn is winnowed. [Van, French.]

Flaile, strawfork, and rake with a fan that is strong. Tuss.
Asses shall eat clean provender, winnowed with the shovel and with the fan. If. xxx. 24.

In the wind and tempest of fortune's frown,
Distinction, with a broad and powerful fan,
Puffing at all, winnows the light away. Shak. Troil. and Cr.
For the cleansing of corn is commonly used either a wicker-fan, or a fan with sails. Mortimer's Husbandry.

4. Any thing by which the air is moved; wings.

The pris'ner with a spring from prison broke;
Then stretch'd his feather'd fans with all his might,
And to the neighb'ring maple wing'd his flight. Dryden.

5. An instrument to raise the fire.
Nature worketh in us all a love to our own counsels: the contradiction of others is a fan to inflame that love. Hooker.

TO FAN. v. a.

1. To cool or recreate with a fan.
She was fanned into slumbers by her slaves. Spectator.

2. To ventilate; to affect by air put in motion.
Let every feeble humour shake your hearts;
Your enemies, with nodding of their plumes,
Fan you into despair. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
The Norweyan banners flout the sky,
And fan our people cold. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

The air
Floats as they pass, fann'd with unnumber'd plumes:
From branch to branch the smaller birds with song
Solac'd the woods, and spread their painted wings,
'Till ev'n. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vii. l. 432.

The fanning wind upon her bosom blows;
To meet the fanning wind the bosom rose:
The fanning wind and purling streams continue her repose.
Dryden's Cynon and Iphigenia.

Calm as the breath which fans our eastern groves,
And bright, as when thy eyes first lighted up our loves. Dryd.
And now his shorter breath, with sultry air,
Pants on her neck, and fans her parting hair. Pope.

3. To separate, as by winnowing.

I have collected some few, therein fanning the old, not omitting any. Bacon's Apophthegms.
Not so the wicked; but as chaff, which, fann'd,
The wind drives, so the wicked shall not stand
In judgment. Milton.

FANA'TICISM. n. f. [from fanatic.] Enthusiasm; religious frenzy.

A church whose doctrines are derived from the clear fountains of the Scriptures, whose polity and discipline are formed upon the most uncorrupted models of antiquity, which has stood unshaken by the most furious assaults of popery on the one hand, and fanaticism on the other; has triumphed over all

all the arguments of its enemies, and has nothing now to contend with but their slanders and calumnies. Rogers's Sermons.
FANA'TICK. adj. [fanaticus, Latin; fanatique, Fr.] Enthusiastick; struck with a superstitious frenzy.

After these appear'd

A crew, who, under names of old renown,
 Osiris, Isis, Orus, and their train,
 With monstrous shapes and forceries abus'd

Fanatick Egypt, and her priests, to seek

Their wand'ring gods disguis'd in brutish forms. Milt. P. L.

FANA'TICK. n. f. [from the adjective.] An enthusiast; a man mad with wild notions of religion.

The double armature of St. Peter is a more destructive engine than the tumultuary weapon snatcht up by a fanatick.

Decay of Piety.

FA'NCIFUL. adj. [fancy and full.]

1. Imaginative; rather guided by imagination than reason.

Some fanciful men have expected nothing but confusion and ruin from those very means, whereby both that and this is most effectually prevented. Woodward's Natural History.

2. Directed by the imagination, not the reason; full of wild images.

What treasures did he bury in his sumptuous buildings?
 and how foolish and fanciful were they? Hayward.

It would show as much singularity to deny this, as it does a fanciful facility to affirm it. Garth's Preface to Ovid.

FA'NCIFULLY. adv. [from fanciful.] According to the wildness of imagination.

FA'NCIFULNESS. n. f. [from fanciful.] Addition to the pleasures of imagination; habit of following fancy rather than reason.

Albertus Magnus, with somewhat too much curiosity, was somewhat transported with too much fancifulness towards the influences of the heavenly motions, and astrological calculations. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

FANCY. n. f. [contracted from phantasy, phantasia, Latin; φαντασία.]

1. Imagination; the power by which the mind forms to itself images and representations of things, persons, or scenes of being.

Shakespeare, fancy's sweetest child!

Milton.

In the soul

Are many lesser faculties, that serve
 Reason as chief: among these fancy next
 Her office holds; of all external things,
 Which the five watchful senses represent,
 She forms imaginations, airy shapes,
 Which reason joining, or disjoining, frames
 All what we affirm, or what deny, and call
 Our knowledge, or opinion. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. v.

Though no evidence affects the fancy so strongly as that of sense, yet there is other evidence, which gives as full satisfaction and as clear a conviction to our reason. Atterbury.

Love is by fancy led about,

From hope to fear, from joy to doubt:

Whom we now a goddess call,

Divinity grac'd in every feature,

Strait's a deform'd, a perjur'd creature;

Love and hate are fancy all.

Granville.

2. An opinion bred rather by the imagination than the reason.

Mens private fancies must give place to the higher judgment of that church which is in authority over them. Hooker.

A person of a full and ample fortune, who was not disturbed by any fancies in religion. Clarendon, b. viii.

I have always had a fancy, that learning might be made a play and recreation to children. Locke.

3. Taste; idea; conception of things.

The little chapel called the Salutation is very neat, and built with a pretty fancy. Addison on Italy.

4. Image; conception; thought.

How now, my lord, why do you keep alone;

Of sorriest fancies your companions making,

Using those thoughts which should indeed have died

With them they think on?

Shakespeare's Macbeth.

5. Inclination; liking; fondness.

Tell me where is fancy bred,

Or in the heart, or in the head?

How begot, how nourished?

It is engender'd in the eyes,

With gazing fed, and fancy dies

In the cradle where it lies.

His fancy lay extremely to travelling.

For you, fair Hermia, look you arm yourself,

To fit your fancies to your father's will;

Or else the law of Athens yields you up

To death, or to a vow of single life.

A resemblance in humour or opinion, a fancy for the same business or diversion, is oftentimes a ground of affection. Collier of Friendship.

6. Caprice; humour; whim.

True worth shall gain me, that it may be said

Desert, not fancy, once a woman led. Dryden's Ind. Emp.

The sultan of Egypt kept a good correspondence with the Jacobites towards the head of the Nile, for fear they should take a fancy to turn the course of that river. Arbutnot.

7. Frolick; idle scheme; vagary.

One that was just entring upon a long journey, took up a fancy of putting a trick upon Mercury. L'Estrange.

8. Something that pleases or entertains.

The altering of the scent, colour, or taste of fruit, by infusing, mixing, or cutting into the bark or root of the tree, herb, or flower, any coloured, aromatical, or medicinal substance, are but fancies: the cause is, for that those things have passed their period, and nourish not. Bacon's Nat. History.

London-pride is a pretty fancy, and does well for borders.

Mortimer's Husbandry.

To FA'NCY. v. n. [from the noun.] To imagine; to believe without being able to prove.

All are not always bound to hate and punish the true enemies of religion, much less any whom they may fancy to be so: all are always obliged to love its true friends, and to pray for its very enemies. Spratt's Sermons.

If our search has reached no farther than simile and metaphor, we rather fancy than know, and are not yet penetrated into the inside and reality of the thing; but content ourselves with what our imaginations furnish us with. Locke.

To FA'NCY. v. a.

1. To portray in the mind; to image to himself; to imagine.

But he whose noble genius is allow'd,

Who with stretch'd pinions soars above the crowd;

Who mighty thought can clothe with manly drefs,

He whom I fancy, but can ne'er express. Dryd. Juven. Sat.

2. To like; to be pleased with.

Ninus both admiring her judgment and valour, together with her person and external beauty, fancied her so strongly, as, neglecting all princely respects, he took her from her husband. Raleigh's History of the World.

It is a little hard that the queen cannot demolish this town in whatever manner she pleaseth to fancy. Swift.

FANCYMO'NGER. n. f. [from fancy.] One who deals in tricks of imagination.

There is a man haunts the forest, that abuses our young plants with carving Rosalind on their barks; hangs odes upon hawthorns, and elegies on brambles; all, forsooth, deifying the name of Rosalind. If I could meet that fancymonger, I would give him some good counsel; for he seems to have the quotidian of love upon him. Shakesp. As you like it.

FA'NCYSICK. adj. [fancy and sick.] One whose imagination is unfound; one whose distemper is in his own mind.

'Tis not necessity, but opinion, that makes men miserable; and when we come once to be fancysick, there's no cure for it. L'Estrange.

FANE. n. f. [fane, French; fanum, Latin.] A temple; a place consecrated to religion.

Nor fane, nor capitol,

The prayers of priests, nor times of sacrifice,

Embarments all of fury, shall lift up

Their rotten privilege.

Shakesp. Coriolanus.

Old Calibe, who kept the sacred fane

Of Juno, now she seem'd. Dryden's Æn. b. vii. l. 589.

Yet some to fanes repair'd, and humble rites

Perform'd to Thor and Woden, fabled gods,

Who with their vot'ries in one ruin shar'd.

Phillips.

A sacred fane in Egypt's fruitful lands,

Hewn from the Theban mountain's rocky womb. Tickell.

The fields are ravish'd from th' industrious swains,

From men their cities, and from gods their fanes. Pope.

FANFARON. n. f. [French, from the Spanish. Originally in Arabick it signifies one who promises what he cannot perform. Menage.]

1. A bully; a hector.

2. A bluffer; a boaster of more than he can perform.

There are fanfarons in the trials of wit too, as well as in feats of arms; and none so forward to engage in argument or discourse as those that are least able to go through with it. L'Estr.

Virgil makes Æneas a bold avower of his own virtues, which, in the civility of our poets, is the character of a fanfaron or hector. Dryden on Dramatick Poesy.

FANFARONA'DE. n. f. [from fanfaron, French.] A bluffer; a tumour of fictitious dignity.

The bishop copied this proceeding from the fanfaronade of monsieur Bouffleus, when the earl of Portland and that general had an interview. Swift.

To FANG. v. a. [fangan, Saxon; vangen, Dutch.] To seize; to gripe; to clutch.

Destruction fang mankind!

Shakespeare's Timon.

FANG. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. The long tusks of a boar or other animal; any thing like 'em.

Here feel we but the penalty of Adam,

The season's difference; as the icy fang

And churlish chiding of the Winter's wind;

Which, when it bites and blows upon my body,

Ev'n 'till I shrink with cold, I smile and say

This is no flattery.

Shakespeare's As you like it.

Some

Some creatures have overlong or outgrowing teeth, which we call fangs, or tusks; as boars, pikes, falmons, and dogs, though less. Bacon's Natural History, N<sup>o</sup>. 752.

Prepar'd to fly,

The fatal fang drove deep within his thigh,
And cut the nerves: the nerves no more sustain
The bulk; the bulk, unprop'd, falls headlong on the plain.

Dryden's Ovid, b. viii.

Then charge him close, provoke him to the rage
Of fangs and claws, and, stooping from your horse,
Rivert the panting savage to the ground. Addison's Cato.

2. The nails; the talons.

3. Any shoot or other thing by which hold is taken.

The protuberant fangs of the yuca are to be treated like the tuberoses. Evelyn's Kalendar.

FA'NGED. adj. [from fang.] Furnished with fangs or long teeth; furnished with any instruments of destruction, which can be exercised in imitation of fangs.

My two schoolfellows,

Whom I will trust as I will adders fang'd,
They bear the mandate. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

Not Scythians, nor fierce Dacians, onward rush
With half the speed, nor half so swift retreat:

In chariots, fang'd with scythes, they scour the field,
Drive through our wedg'd battalions with a whirl,

And strew a dreadful harvest on the plain. Phillips's Briton.

FA'NGLE. n. f. [from fang, Saxon, to attempt. Skinner.] Silly attempt; trifling scheme. It is never used, or rarely, but in contempt with the epithet new; as, new fangles, new fang'leneffs.

FA'NGLED. adj. [from fangle.] This word seems to signify gaudy; ridiculously shewy; vainly decorated. This is still retained in Scotland: as, he's new fangled, or whimsical, and very fond of novelty.

Quick wits be in desire new fangled, and in purpose un-constant. Ascham.

A book! oh, rare one!

Be not, as in this fangled world, a garment
Nobler than that it covers. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

FA'NGLESS. adj. [from fang.] Toothless; without teeth.

The king hath wasted all his rods

On late offenders, that he now doth lack

The very instruments of chastisement;

So that his pow'r, like to a fangless lion,

May offer, but not hold. Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. ii.

FA'NGOT. n. f. [ ] A quantity of wares: as raw silk, &c. containing from one or two hundred weight three quarters. Dict.

FA'NNEL. n. f. [fanon, French.] A sort of ornament like a scarf, worn about the left arm of a mass-priest when he officiates. Dict.

FA'NNER. n. f. [from fan.] One that plays a fan.

I will send unto Babylon fanners that shall fan her. Jerem.

FA'NTASIED. adj. [from fantasy] Filled with fancies or wild imaginations.

As I travell'd hither through the land,

I found the people strangely fantasied. Shakesf. King John.

FANTA'SM. n. f. [See PHANTASM.]

FANTA'STICAL. } adj. [fantastique, Fr. from fantasy.]

FANTA'STICK. }

1. Irrational; bred only in the imagination.

The delight that a man takes from another's sin, can be nothing else but a fantastical, preternatural complacency, arising from that which he really has no feeling of. South.

2. Subsisting only in the fancy; imaginary.

Present feats

Are less than horrible imaginings:

My thought, whose murder yet is but fantastical,

Shakes so my single state of man, that function

Is smother'd in surmise; and nothing is,

But what is not.

But what is not. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Men are so possessed with their own fancies, that they take them for oracles; and are arrived to some extraordinary revelations of truth, when indeed they do but dream dreams, and amuse themselves with the fantastick ideas of a busy imagination. Decay of Piety.

3. Unreal; apparent only; having the nature of phantoms which only assume visible forms occasionally.

Are ye fantastical, or that indeed

Which outwardly ye shew?

Which outwardly ye shew? Shakespeare's Macbeth.

4. Capricious; humourous; unsteady; irregular.

Nor happiness can I, nor misery feel,

From any turn of her fantastick wheel.

From any turn of her fantastick wheel. Prior.

5. Whimsical; fanciful; indulgent to one's own imagination.

They put such words in the mouths of one of these fantastical mind-infected people, that children and musicians call lovers.

I'll knit it up in filken strings,

With twenty odd conceited true love knots:

To be fantastick, may become a youth

Of greater time than I. Shakesf. Two Gentlemen of Verona.

Dumvir is provided with an imperious, expensive and fan- taflick mistress; to whom he retires from the conversation of a discreet and affectionate wife. Tatler.

We are apt to think your medallists a little fantastical in the different prices they set upon their coins, without any regard to the metal of which they are composed. Addison.

FANTA'STICALLY. adj. [from fantastical.]

1. By the power of imagination.

2. Capriciously; humourously; unsteadily.

England is so idly king'd,

Her sceptre so fantastically borne,

By a vain, giddy, shallow, humourous youth.

That fear attends her not. Shakespeare's Henry V.

3. Whimsically; in compliance with mere imagination.

One cannot so much as fantastically chuse, even or odd, he thinks not why. Grew's Cosmol. b. ii. c. 4.

FANTA'STICALNESS. } n. f. [from fantastical.]

FANTA'STICKNESS. }

1. Humourousness; mere compliance with fancy.

2. Whimsicalness; unreasonableness.

I dare not assume to myself to have put him out of conceit with it, by having convinced him of the fantasticalness of it. Tillotson, Preface.

3. Caprice; unsteadiness.

FANTASY. n. f. [fantasie, Fr. phantasia, Latin; Φαντασία.]

1. Fancy; imagination; the power of imagining. See FANCY.

How now, Horatio? you tremble and look pale!

Is not this something more than fantasy? Shakesf. Hamlet.

* I talk of dreams,

Which are the children of an idle brain,

Begot of nothing but vain fantasy;

Which is as thin of substance as the air,

And more unconstant than the wind. Shak. Rom. and Juliet.

He is superstitious grown of late,

Quite from the main opinion he held once

Of fantasy, of dreams, and ceremonies. Shak. Jul. Caesar.

Go you, and where you find a maid,

That ere she sleep hath thrice her prayers said,

Rein up the organs of her fantasy,

Sleep she as sound as careless infancy. Shakespeare.

These spirits of sense, in fantasy's high court,

Judge of the forms of objects, ill or well;

And so they send a good or ill report

Down to the heart, where all affections dwell. Davies.

By the power of fantasy we see colours in a dream, or a mad man sees things before him which are not there. Newton.

2. Idea; image of the mind.

And with the sug'ry sweet thereof allure,

Chaste ladies ears to fantasies impure. Hubberd's Tale.

3. Humour; inclination.

I would wish that both you and others would cease from drawing the Scriptures to your fantasies and affections. Whitg.

FA'NTOM. n. f. [See PHANTOM.]

FAP. adj. Fuddled; drunk. It seems to have been a cant word in the time of Shakespeare.

The gentleman had drunk himself out of his five senses;

and being fap, sir, was, as they say, cashiered. Shakespeare.

FAR. adv. [feor, Saxon; fatt, Erse.

1. To great extent in length.

Pay sacred rev'rence to Apollo's song,

Left wrathful the far-shooting god emit

His fatal arrows.

Prior.

2. To a great extent every way. This less proper:

Vast and great

Is what I love: the far extended ocean

To a little riv'let I prefer.

Prior.

With costly cates she stain'd her frugal board;

Then with ill-gotten gold she bought a lord:

Corruption, discord, luxury combin'd,

Down sunk the far fam'd mistress of mankind. Arbuthnot.

From the same lineage stern Æetes came,

The far fam'd brother of th' enchantress dame.

Pope.

3. To a great distance progressively.

Be factious for redress of all these griefs,

And I will set this foot of mine as far

As who goes farthest.

As who goes farthest. Shakespeare's Julius Caesar.

Is it far you ride?

—As far, my lord, as will fill up the time

'Twixt this and supper.

Far from that hated face the Trojans fly;

All but the fool who sought his destiny. Dryden's Æn.

4. Remotely; at a great distance.

He meant to travel into far countries, until his friends affection either ceased or prevailed.

Sidney.

In a kingdom rightly ordered, after a law is once published, it presently takes effect far and wide; all states framing themselves thereunto. Hooker, b. i. f. 3.

And after that long strayed here and there,

Through every field and forest far and near. Hubb. Tale.

Far be it from me to justify the cruelties which were at first used towards them, which had their reward soon after.

Bacon's Holy War.

He sent light horsemen into Mesopotamia with a guide, because

cause the country was unto him best known; following not far after himself with all his army. Kneller's Hist. of the Turks.

And yet the lights which in my tower do shine,
Mine eyes, which view all objects nigh and far,
Look not into this little world of mine. Davies.

God hath bid dwell far off all anxious cares,
And not molest us; unless we ourselves
Seek them with wand'ring thoughts, and notions vain. Milt.
I have been hunting up and down, far and near, since your unhappy indisposition, to find out a remedy. L'Estrange.

The nations far and near contend in choice,
And send the flow'r of war by publick voice. Dryden.

The painted lizard and the birds of prey,
Foes of the frugal kind, be far away. Dryden's Virg. Geor.

But from the reading of my book and me,
Be far, ye foes of virtuous poetry!
Who fortune's fault upon the poor can throw,
Point at the tatter'd coat and ragged shoe. Dryden's Pers.

Far off you view'd them with a longing eye
Upon the topmost branch. Dryden.

These words are so far from establishing any dominion, that we find the quite contrary. Locke.

'Till on the Po his blasted corps was hurl'd,
Far from his country, in the western world. Addison's Ovid.

5. To a distance.
As far as the East is from the West, so far hath he removed our transgressions from him. Pf. ciii. 12.

Neither did those that were sent, and travelled far off, undertake so difficult enterprizes without a conductor. Raleigh.

But all in vain! which when he saw, he ceas'd Contending, and remov'd his tents far off. Milt. Par. Lost.

I had always a curiosity to look back into the sources of things, and view in my mind, so far as I was able, the beginning and progress of a rising world. Burn. Th. of the World.

A lion's hide around his loins he wore;
The well-poiz'd javelin to the field he bore,
Inur'd to blood; the far destroying dart,
And the best weapon, an undaunted heart. Addison's Ovid.

6. In a great part.
When they were by Jebus the day was far spent. Judg.

7. In a great proportion; by many degrees.
Who can find a virtuous woman? for her price is far above rubies. Prov. xxxi. 10.

Such a communication passeth far better through the water than air. Bacon's Natural History, N<sup>o</sup>. 134.

Those countries have far greater rivers, and far higher mountains to pour down waters, than any part of the old world. Bacon's New Atlantis.

The face of war,
In ancient times, doth differ far
From what our fiery battles are. Waller.

Of negatives we have far the least certainty, and they are usually hardest, and many times impossible to be proved. Tillot.

Latin is a more succinct language than either the Italian, Spanish, French, or even than the English, which, by reason of its monosyllables, is far the most compendious of them.

Dryden.

Besides, he's lovely far above the rest,
With you immortal, and with beauty blest. Pope.

Ah! hope not yet to breathe thy native air;
Far other journey first demands thy care. Pope's Odyssey.

8. To a great height; magnificently. This is perhaps only in
Shakespeare.

I do not think
So fair an outward, and such stuff within,
Endows a man but him.

—You speak him far.
—I don't extend him, sir. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

9. To a certain point; to a certain degree.

The substance of the service of God, so far forth as it hath in it any thing more than the law of reason doth teach, may not be invented of men, as it is amongst the heathen;
but must be received from God himself. Hooker, b. i.

Answer them
How far forth you do like their articles. Shakesf. Henry IV.

Not to resolve, is to resolve; and many times it breeds as many necessities, and engageth as far in some other sort, as to resolve. Bacon.

Of this I need not many words to declare how far it is from being so much as any part of repentance. Hammond.

My discourse is so far from being equivalent to the position he mentions, that it is a perfect contradiction to it. Tillotson.

The custom of these tongues sometimes so far influences the expressions, that in these epistles one may observe the force of the Hebrew conjugations. Locke on St. Paul's Epistles.

10. It is used often in composition: as farshooting, farseeing.

FAR-FETCH. n. f. [far and fetch.] A deep stratagem. A ludicrous word.

But jesuits have deeper reaches,
In all their politick farfetches;

And from their Coptick priest, Kircherus,
Found out this mystick way to jeer us. Hudibras, p. iii.

FAR-FETCHED. adj. [far and fetch.]

1. Brought from places remote.

Of these things others quickly will dispose,
Whose pains have earn'd the farfetch'd spoil. Milt. Pa. Lost.

By his command we boldly cross'd the line,
And bravely fought where southern stars arise:

We trac'd the farfetch'd gold unto the mine,
And that which brib'd our fathers made our prize. Dryden.

2. Studiously fought; elaborately strained; not easily or naturally introduced.

York, with all his farfetch'd policy. Shakesf. Henry VI.
For farfetch'd rhymes make puzzled angels strain,

And in low prose dull Lucifer complain. Smith.

Under this head we may rank those words, which signify different ideas, by a sort of an unaccountable farfetch'd analogy, or distant resemblance, that fancy has introduced between one thing and another; as when we say, the meat is green when it is half roasted. Watts's Logick.

FAR-PIERCING. adj. [far and pierce.] Striking, or penetrating a great way.

Atlas, her fire, to whose farpiercing eye
The wonders of the deep expanded lie;

Th' eternal columns which on earth he rears,
End in the starry vault, and prop the spheres. Pope's Odysf.

FAR-SHOOTING. adj. [far and shoot.] Shooting to a great distance.

Then loud he call'd Æneas thrice by name;
The loud repeated voice to glad Æneas came;

Great Jove, he said, and the farshooting god,
Inspire thy mind to make thy challenge good. Dryd. Æn.

FAR. adj.

1. Distant; remote.

But we must beg our bread in climes unknown,
Beneath the scorching or the freezing zone;

And some to far Oasis shall be sold,
Or try the Lybian heat, or Scythian cold. Dryden's Virgil.

2. It was formerly used not only as an adverb but an adjective, with off.

These things seem small and undistinguishable,
Like far off mountains turned into clouds. Shakespeare.

If we may behold in any creature any one spark of that eternal fire, or any far off dawning of God's glorious brightness, the same in the beauty, motion, and virtue of this light may be perceived. Raleigh's History of the World.

3. From FAR. In this sense is used elliptically for a far or remote place.

The Lord shall bring a nation against thee from far, from the end of the earth. Deutr. xxvii. 49.

4. Remoter of the two; in horsemanship, the right side of the horse, which the rider turns from him when he mounts.

No true Egyptian ever knew in horses
The far side from the near. Dryden's Cleomenes.

FAR. n. f. [contracted from farrow.] The offspring of a sow;
young pigs.

Sows, ready to farrow this time of the year,
Are for to be made of and counted full dear;

For now is the loss of the far of the sow
More great than the loss of two calves of the cow. Tuss.

TO FARCE. v. a. [farcio, Latin; farcir, French.]

1. To stuff; to fill with mingled ingredients.

Wrestling is a pastime which either the Cornishmen derived from Corineus, their first pretended founder, or at least it ministred some stuff to the farcing of that fable. Carew.

2. To extend; to swell out.

'Tis not the balm, the sceptre and the ball,
The sword, the mace, the crown imperial,
The enterriss'd robe of gold and pearl,

The farced title running fore the king. Shakesf. Henry V.

FARCE. n. f. [from the verb; or from farcer, French, to mock.] A dramattick representation written without regularity, and stuffed with wild and ludicrous conceits.

There is yet a lower sort of poetry and painting, which is out of nature; for a farce is that in poetry which grotesque is in a picture: the persons and actions of a farce are all unnatural, and the manners false; that is, inconsistent with the characters of mankind: grotesque painting is the just resemblance of this. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

What should be great, you turn to farce. Prior.

They object against it as a farce, because the irregularity of the plot should answer to the extravagance of the characters, which they say this piece wants, and therefore is no farce. Gay.

FARICAL. adj. [from farce.] Belonging to a farce; appropriated to a farce.

They deny the characters to be farical, because they are actually in nature. Gay's Preface to the What d'ye Call it.

FARCY. n. f. [farcina, Italian; farcin, French.] The leprosy of horses. It is probably curable by antimony.

FARDEL. n. f. [fardello, Italian; fardeau, Fr.] A bundle;
a little pack.

Let us to the king: there is that in this fardel will make him scratch his beard. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

- Who would *fare*ls bear,
To groan and sweat under a weary life? Shakesp. Hamlet.
To FARE. v. n. [fapan, Saxon; varen, Dutch.]
1. To go; to pass; to travel.
At last, resolving forward still to fare,
Until the blust'ring storm is overblown. Fairy Queen, b. i.
His spirits pure were subject to our sight,
Like to a man in shew and shape he fares. Fairfax.
So on he fares, and to the border comes
Of Eden. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. iv. l. 131.
Sadly they far'd along the sea-beat shore;
Still heav'd their hearts. Pope.
  2. To be in any state good or bad.
So bids thee well to fare thy nether friend. Fairy Queen.
A stubborn heart shall fare evil at the last. Ecclus. iii. 26.
Well fare the hand, which to our humble sight
Presents that beauty, which the dazzling light
Of royal splendor. Waller.
So in this throng bright Sacharissa far'd,
Oppress'd by those who strove to be her guard:
As ships, though never so obsequious, fall
Foul in a tempest on their admiral. Waller.
So fares the stag among th' enraged hounds;
Repels their force, and wounds returns for wounds. Denb.
But as a barque, that in foul weather,
Toss'd by two adverse winds together,
Is bruised and beaten to and fro,
And knows not which to turn him to;
So far'd the knight between two foes,
And knew not which of them t' oppose. Hudibras, p. i.
If you do as I do, you may fare as I fare. L'Estrange.
Thus fares the queen, and thus her fury blows
Amidst the crowd. Dryden's Æn.
English ministers never fare so well as in a time of war with a foreign power, which diverts the private feuds and animosities of the nation, and turns their efforts upon the common enemy. Addison's Freeholder, N<sup>o</sup>. 49.
Some give out there is no danger at all; others are comforted that it will be a common calamity, and they shall fare no worse than their neighbours. Swift.
  3. To proceed in any train of consequences good or bad.
Thus it fareth when too much desire of contradiction
causeth our speeches rather to pass by number than to stay for weight. Hooker, b. ii. f. 5.
So fares it when with truth falsehood contends. Milton.
  4. To happen to any one well or ill. With it preceding in an impersonal form.
When the hand finds itself well warmed and covered, let it refuse the trouble of feeding the mouth, or guarding the head,
'till the body be starved or killed, and then we shall see how it will fare with the hand. South's Sermons.
  5. To feed; to eat; to be entertained with food.
The rich man fares sumptuously every day. Luke.
Feast your ears with the musick awhile, if they will fare so harshly as on the trumpet's sound. Shakespeare's Timon.
Men think they have fares hardly, if, in times of extremity, they have descended so low as dogs; but Galen delivereth, that, young, fat, and gelded, they were the food of many nations. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iii. c. 25.
- FARE. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Price of passage in a vehicle by land or by water. Used only of that which is paid for the person, not the goods.
He found a ship going to Tarfish; so he paid the fare thereof, and went down into it to go with them unto Tarfish. Jon.
He passage begs with unregarded pray'r,
And wants two farthings to discharge his fare. Dryd. Juv.
  2. Food prepared for the table; provisions.
But come, so well refresh'd, now let us play,
As meet is, after such delicious fare. Milton's Paradise Lost.
But when the western winds with vital pow'r
Call forth the tender grass and budding flow'r,
Then, at the last, produce in open air
Both flocks, and send them to their Summer's fare. Dryden.
This is what nature's want may well suffice;
He that would more is covetous, not wise:
But since among mankind so few there are,
Who will conform to philosophick fare,
This much I will indulge thee for thy ease,
And mingle something of our times to please. Dryd. Juv.
Upon his rising up he ordered the peasant to set before him whatever food he had in his house: the peasant brought out a great deal of coarse fare, of which the emperor eat very heartily. Addison's Guardian, N<sup>o</sup>. 99.
- FAREWELL. adv. [This word is originally the imperative of the verb fare well, or fare you well; sis felix, abi in bonam rem; or bene sit tibi; but in time use familiarised it to an adverb, and it is used both by those who go and those who are left.]
1. The parting compliment; adieu.
But farewell, king; sith thus thou wilt appear,
Freedom lives hence, and banishment is here. Shak. K. Lear.

- Farewell*, master Silence: I will not use many words with you; fare you well, gentlemen, both. Shakesp. Henry IV.
Whether we shall meet again, I know not,
Therefore our everlasting farewell take;
For ever, and for ever, farewell, Cassius. Shak. Jul. Caesar.
Be not amazed, call all your senses to you; defend your reputation, or bid farewell to your good life for ever. Shakesp.
An iron slumber shuts my swimming eyes;
And now farewell, involv'd in shades of night,
For ever I am ravish'd from thy sight. Dryden's Virg. Geo.
Farewell, says he; the parting sound scarce fell
From his faint lips, but she replied farewell. Dryden.
O queen, farewell! be still possess
Of dear remembrance, blessing still and blest! Pope's Odyss.
2. It is sometimes used only as an expression of separation without kindness.
Farewell the year which threaten'd so
The fairest light the world can show. Waller.
Treading the path to nobler ends,
A long farewell to love I gave;
Resolv'd my country and my friends
All that remain'd of me should have. Waller.
- FAREWELL. n. f.
1. Leave; act of departure.
See how the morning opes her golden gates,
And takes her farewell of the glorious sun. Shakesp. Hen. VI.
If chance the radiant sun, with farewell sweet,
Extend his evening beam, the fields revive,
The birds their notes renew, and bleating herds
Attest their joy, that hill and valley ring. Milt. Par. Lost.
As in this grove I took my last farewell,
As on this very spot of earth I fell. Dryden.
Before I take my farewell of this subject, I shall advise the author for the future to speak his meaning more plainly. Addis.
  2. It is sometimes used as an adjective; leave-taking.
Several ingenious writers, who have taken their leave of the publick in farewell papers, will not give over so, but intend to appear again; though perhaps under another form, and with a different title. Spektator, N<sup>o</sup>. 445.
- FARINA'CEOUS. adj. [from farina, Latin.] Mealy; tasting like meal or flower of corn.
The properest food of the vegetable kingdom for mankind, is taken from the farinaceous or mealy seeds of some culmi-ferous plants; as oats, barley, wheat, rice, rye, maize, panick, and millet. Arbutnot on Aliments.
- FARM. n. f. [ferme, French; peom, provision, Saxon.]
1. Ground let to a tenant; ground cultivated by another man upon condition of paying part of the profit to the owner or landlord.
Touching their particular complaint for reducing lands and farms to their ancient rents, it could not be done without a parliament. Hayward.
  2. The state of lands let out to the culture of tenants.
The lords of land in Ireland do not use to set out their land in farm, for term of years, to their tenants; but only from year to year, and some during pleasure. Spenser on Ireland.
- To FARM. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To let out to tenants at a certain rent.
We are enforc'd to farm our royal realm,
The revenue whereof shall furnish us
For our affairs in hand. Shakespeare's Richard II.
  2. To take at a certain rate.
They received of the bankers scant twenty shillings for thirty, which the earl of Cornwall farmed of the king. Camden's Rem.
  3. To cultivate land.
- FA'RMER. n. f. [fermier, French; or from farm.]
1. One who cultivates hired ground.
Thou hast seen a farmer's dog bark at a beggar; and the creature run from the cur: there thou might'st behold the great image of authority; a dog's obey'd in office. Shakesp.
  2. One who cultivates ground, whether his own or another's.
Nothing is of greater prejudice to the farmer than the stocking of his land with cattle that are larger than it will bear.
Mortimer's Husbandry.
- FA'RMOST. n. f. [superlative of far.] Most distant; remote.

Was hew'd and fashion'd by laborious art,
Through the hill's hollow sides. Dryden's Æn. b. vi.
- FA'RNES. n. f. [from far.] Distance; remoteness.
Their nearness on all quarters to the enemy, and their far-ness from timely succour by their friends, have forced the commanders to call forth the uttermost number of able hands to fight. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.
- FARRA'GINOUS. adj. [from farrago, Latin.] Formed of different materials.
Being a confusion of knaves and fools, and a farraginus concurrence of all conditions, tempers, sexes and ages, it is but natural if their determinations be monstrous, and many ways inconsistent with truth. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
- FARRA'GO. n. f. [Latin.] A mass formed confusedly of several ingredients; a medley.
- FARRIER.

FA'RRER. n. f. [ferrier, French; ferrarius, Latin.]

1. A shoer of horses.

But the utmost exactness in these particulars belong to farriers, saddlers, smiths, and other tradesmen. Digby.

2. One who professes the medicine of horses.

If you are a piece of a farrier, as every good groom ought to be, get sack, brandy, or strong-beer to rub your horses.

Swift's Directions to the Groom.

To FA'RRIER. v. n. [from the noun.] To practise physick or chirurgery on horses.

Though there are many pretenders to the art of farriering and cawleeching, yet many of them are very ignorant. Mort.

Pour in sow's blood that hath litter'd

Her nine farrows.

Shakespeare's Macbeth.

To FA'RROR. v. a. To bring pigs. It is used only of swine.

Sows ready to farrow this time of the year,

Are for to be made of.

Tuff. Husb.

The swine, although multiparous, yet being bifolcous, and only cloven-hoofed, is farrowed with open eyes, as other bifolcous animals.

Brown,

Ev'n her, who did her numerous offspring boast,

As fair and fruitful as the sow that carry'd

The thirty pigs, at one large litter farrow'd. Dryd. Juven.

FART. n. f. [ferz, Saxon.] Wind from behind.

Love is the fart

Of every heart;

It pains a man when 'tis kept close;

And others doth offend, when 'tis let loose.

Suckling.

To FART. v. a. [from the noun.] To break wind behind.

As when we a gun discharge,

Although the bore be ne'er so large,

Before the flame from muzzle burst,

Just at the breech it flashes first;

So from my lord his passion broke,

He farted first, and then he spoke.

Swift.

FA'RTHER. adv. [This word is now generally considered as the comparative degree of far; but by no analoger can far make farther or farthest: it is therefore probable, that the ancient orthography was nearer the true, and that we ought to write further and furthest, from forth, forthier, furthest, forþon, furþer, Saxon; the o and u, by resemblance of sound, being first confounded in speech, and afterwards in books.] At a greater distance; to a greater distance; more remotely; beyond; moreover.

To make a perfect judgment of good pictures, when compared with one another, besides rules, there is farther required a long conversation with the best pieces. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

They contented themselves with the opinions, fashions and things of their country, without looking any farther. Locke.

FA'RTHER. adj. [supposed from far, more, probably from forth.]

1. More remote.

Let me add a farther truth, that without those ties of gratitude, I have a most particular inclination to honour you.

Dryden's Juven. Dedication.

2. Longer; tending to greater distance,

Before our farther way the fates allow,

Here must we fix on high the golden bough. Dryden's Æn.

FA'RTHERANCE. n. f. [more properly furtherance, from further.] Encouragement; promotion.

That was the foundation of the learning I have, and of all the fartherance that I have obtained. Ascham's Schoolmaster.

FARTHERMO'RE. adv. [more properly furthermore.] Besides; over and above; likewise.

Farthermore the leaves, body and boughs of this tree, by so much exceed all other plants, as the greatest men of power and worldly ability surpass the meanest. Raleigh's History.

To FA'RTHER. v. a. [more proper To further.] To promote; to facilitate; to advance.

If he had farthered or hindered the taking of the town,

Dryden's Dedicat. to the Æn.

FA'RTHEST. adv. [more properly furthest. See FARTHER.]

1. At the greatest distance.

2. To the greatest distance.

Yet it must be withal considered, that the greatest part of the world are they which be farthest from perfection. Hooker.

FA'RTHING. n. f. [feorðling, Saxon, from feorpen, four, that is, the fourth part of a penny.]

1. The fourth of a penny; the smallest English coin.

A farthing is the least denomination or fraction of money used in England. Cocker's Arithmetick.

Else all those things we toil so hard in,

Would not avail one single farthing.

Prior.

2. Copper money.

The parish find, 'tis true; but our church-wardens

Feed on the silver, and give us the farthings.

Gay.

You are not obliged to take money not of gold or silver; not the halfpence or farthings of England. Swift.

3. It is used sometimes in a sense hyperbolical: as, it is not worth a farthing; or proverbial.

His son builds on, and never is content,

'Till the last farthing is in structure spent Dryden's Juven.

FA'RTHINGALE. n. f. [This word has much exercised the etymology of Skinner, who at last seems to determine that it is derived from vertu garde: if he had considered what vert signifies in Dutch, he might have found out the true sense.] A hoop; circles of whalebone used to spread the petticoat to a wide circumference.

With silken coats, and caps, and golden rings,

With ruffs, and cuffs, and farthingales, and things. Shakesp.

Tell me,

What compass will you wear your farthingale? Shakesp.

Arthur wore in hall

Round table, like a farthingal. Hudibras, p. i. cant. 1.

Some will have it that it portends the downfall of the French king; and observe, that the farthingale appeared in England a little before the ruin of the Spanish monarchy. Addison.

She seems a medley of all ages,

With a huge farthingale to swell her fustian stuff,

A new commode, a topknot, and a ruff.

Swift.

FA'RTHINGSWORTH. n. f. [farthing and worth.] As much as is sold for a farthing.

They are thy customers; I hardly ever sell them a farthingsworth of any thing. Arbuthnot's History of John Bull.

FASCES. n. f. [Latin.] Rods anciently carried before the consuls as a mark of their authority.

The duke beheld, like Scipio, with disdain,

That Carthage, which he ruin'd, rise once more;

And shook aloft the fascies of the main,

To fright those slaves with what they felt before. Dryden.

FASCIAT. n. f. [Latin.] A fillet; a bandage.

FA'SCIATED. adj. [from fascia.] Bound with fillets; tied with a bandage. Diæ.

FASCIATION. n. f. [from fascia.] Bandage; the act or manner of binding diseased parts.

Three especial sorts of fasciation, or rowling, have the worthies of our profession commended to posterity. Wiseman.

To FA'SCINATE. v. a. [fascino, Latin.] To bewitch; to enchant; to influence in some wicked and secret manner.

There be none of the affections which have been noted to fascinate or bewitch, but love and envy. Bacon, Essay 9.

Such a fascinating sin this is, as allows men no liberty of consideration. Decay of Piety.

FASCINATION. n. f. [from fascinate.] The power or act of bewitching; enchantment; unseen inexplicable influence.

He had such a crafty and bewitching fashion, both to move pity and to induce belief, as was like a kind of fascination and enchantment to those that saw him or heard him. Bacon.

The Turks hang old rags, or such like ugly things, upon their fairest horses, and other goodly creatures, to secure them against fascination. Waller.

There is a certain bewitchery or fascination in words, which makes them operate with a force beyond what we can naturally give an account of. South's Sermons.

FASCINE. n. f. [French.] A faggot. Military cant.

The black prince passed many a river without the help of pontoons, and filled a ditch with faggots as successfully as the generals of our times do with fascines. Addison's Spectator.

FA'SCINOUS. adj. [fascinum, Latin.] Caused or acting by witchcraft, or enchantment.

I shall not discuss the possibility of fascinous diseases, farther than refer to experiment. Harvey on Consumptions.

FA'SHION. n. f. [façon, French; facies, Latin.]

1. Form; make; state of any thing with regard to its outward appearance.

They pretend themselves grieved at our solemnities in erecting churches, at their form and fashion, at the stateliness of them and costliness, and at the opinion which we have of them. Hooker, b. v. f. 17.

The fashion of his countenance was altered. Luke ix. 29.

Stand these poor people's friend.

—I will,

Or let me lose the fashion of a man: Shakesp. Henry VIII.

2. The make or cut of cloaths.

I'll be at charges for a looking-glass,

And entertain a score or two of taylors,

To study fashions to adorn my body. Shakesp. Richard III.

You, sir, I entertain for one of my hundred; only, I do not like the fashion of your garments. Shakesp. King Lear.

3. Manner; sort; way.

For that I love your daughter

In such a righteous fashion as I do,

Perforce against all checks, rebukes, and manners,

I must advance. Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

Pluck Casca by the sleeve,

And he will, after his four fashion, tell you

What hath proceeded. Shakespeare's Julius Caesar.

The commissioners either pulled down or defaced all images in churches; and that in such unseasonable and unseasoned fashion, as if it had been done in hostility against them. Hayw.

4. Custom operating upon dress, or any domestick ornaments.

Here's

Here's the note

How much your chain weighs to the utmost carat,
The fineness of the gold, the chargeful fashion. Shakespeare.

5. Custom; general practice.

Zelmane again, with great admiration, begun to speak of him; asking whether it were the fashion or no, in Arcadia, that shepherds should perform such valorous enterprizes. Sidn.

Though the truth of this hath been universally acknowledged, yet because the fashion of the age is to call every thing into question, it will be requisite to satisfy mens reason about it. Tillotson, Sermon 3.

Why truly, wife, it was not easily reconciled to the common method; but then it was the fashion to do such things. Arbutnot's History of John Bull.

6. Manner imitated from another; way established by precedent.

Sorrow so royally in you appears,
That I will deeply put the fashion on,
And wear it in my heart. Shakespeare.

7. General approbation; mode.

A young gentleman accommodates himself to the innocent diversions in fashion. Locke.

His panegyricks were bestowed only on such persons as he had familiarly known, and only at such times as others cease to praise, when out of power, or out of fashion. Pope.

The graves of the rebellious generations were already fashioned in the clouds, which soon after should swallow up all living creatures. Raleigh's History of the World.

The rib he form'd, and fashion'd with his hands:

Under his forming hands a creature grew,
Man like, but different sex. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. viii.

Inability will every one find in himself, who shall go about to fashion in his understanding any simple idea, not received by his senses from external objects, or by reflection from the operations of his mind about them. Locke.

How could this noble fabrick be design'd,
And fashion'd, by a maker brute and blind?
Could it of art such miracles invent?

And raise a beauteous world of such extent? Blackm. Creat.

A different toil another forge employs,
Here the loud hammer fashions female toys;
Each trinket that adorns the modern dame,
First to these little artists ow'd its frame. Gay's Fan.

2. To fit; to adapt; to accommodate.

Laws ought to be fashioned unto the manners and conditions of the people to whom they are meant, and not to be imposed upon them according to the simple rule of right. Spenser.

Ne do, I doubt, but that ye well can fashion
Yourself thereto, according to occasion. Hubb. Tale.
Nature, as it grows again tow'rd earth,

Some are allured to law, not on the contemplation of equity, but on the promising and pleasing thoughts of litigious terms, fat contentions, and flowing fees. Milton.

A fat benefice is that which so abounds with an estate and revenues, that a man may expend a great deal in delicacies of eating and drinking. Ayliffe's Parergon.

FAT. n. f. An oily and sulphureous part of the blood, deposited in the cells of the membrana adiposa, from the innumerable little vessels which are spread amongst them.

The fat is to be found immediately under the skin, in all the parts of the body, except in the forehead, eyelids, lips, upper part of the ear, yard, and scrotum. In some the vesicles of the membrana adiposa are so full, that the fat is an inch or more thick; and in others they are almost flat, containing little or no fat. There are two sorts of fat; one yellow, soft, and lax, which is easily melted, called pinguedo; another firm, white, brittle, and which is not so easily melted, called sebum, suet, or tallow. Some reckon the marrow of the bones for a third sort of fat. Quincy.

In this ointment the strangest and hardest ingredients to come by, are the moss upon the skull of a dead man unburied, and the fats of a boar and a bear, killed in the act of generation. Bacon's Natural History, No. 998.

This membrane separates an oily liquor called fat: when the fibres are lax, and the aliment too redundant, great part of it is converted into this oily liquor. Arbutnot on Aliments.
FAT. n. f. [fæt, Saxon; vatte, Dutch. This is generally written vat.] A vessel in which any thing is put to ferment or be soaked.

The fats shall overflow with wine and oil. Joel ii. 24.

TO FAT. v. n. To grow fat; to grow full fleshed.

Clarence, he is well repaid;

He is frank'd up to fatting for his pains. Shakesf. Rich. III.

The one labours in his duty with a good conscience; the other, like a beast, but fatting up for the slaughter. L'Estrange.

An old ox fats as well, and is as good, as a young one.

Mortimer's Husbandry.

FA'TAL. adj. [fatalis, Latin; fatal, French]

1. Deadly; mortal; destructive; causing destruction.

O fatal maid! thy marriage is endow'd

With Phrygian, Latian, and Rutilian blood. Dryden's Æn.

A palsy in the brain is most dangerous; when it seizeth the heart, or organs of breathing, fatal. Arbutnot on Diet.

2. Proceeding by destiny; inevitable; necessary.

Others delude their trouble by a graver way of reasoning, that these things are fatal and necessary, it being in vain to be troubled at that which we cannot help. Tillotson's Sermons.

3. Appointed by destiny.

It was fatal to the king to fight for his money; and though he avoided to fight with enemies abroad, yet he was still enforced to fight for it with rebels at home. Bacon's Henry VII.

Fatal course

Had circled his full orb. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. v.

It was Still fatal to stout Hudibras,

In all his feats of arms, when least

He dreamt of it, to prosper best. Hudibras, p. i. cant. 3.

Behold the destin'd place of your abodes;

For thus Anchises prophecy'd of old,

And this our fatal place of rest foretold. Dryden's Æn. b. vii.

O race divine!

For beauty still is fatal to the line.

Dryden.

FA'TALIST. n. f. [from fate.] One who maintains that all things happen by invincible necessity.

Will the obstinate fatalists find sufficient apology. Watts.

FATALITY. n. f. [fatalité, French, from fatal.]

1. Predestination; predetermined order or series of things and events; preordination of inevitable causes acting invincibly in perpetual succession.

The stoicks held a fatality, and a fixed unalterable course of events; but then they held also, that they fell out by a necessity emergent from and inherent in the things themselves, which God himself could not alter. South's Sermons.

2. Decree of fate.

By a strange fatality men suffer their dissenting to be drawn into the stream of the present vogue. King Charles.

All the father's precaution could not secure the son from the fatality of dying by a lion. L'Estrange's Fables.

3. Tendency to danger; tendency to some great or hazardous event.

Seven times seven, or forty-nine, nine times nine, or eighty-one, and seven times nine, or the years sixty-three, is conceived to carry with it the most considerable fatality. Bro.

FA'TALLY. adv. [from fatal.]

1. Mortally; destructively; even to death.

The stream is so transparent, pure and clear,

That had the self-enamour'd youth gaz'd here,

So fatally deceiv'd he had not been,

While he the bottom, not his face had seen. Denham.

'Tis the procession of a funeral vow,

Which cruel laws to Indian wives allow,

When fatally their virtue they approve;

Chearful in flames, and martyrs of their love. Dryd. Auren.

2. By the decree of fate; by inevitable and invincible determination.

To say that the world was made casually by the concurrence of atoms, is to affirm that the atoms composed the world mechanically and fatally; only they were not sensible of it. Bentley's Sermons.

FA'TALNESS. n. f. [from fatal.] Invincible necessity.

FATE. n. f. [fatum, Latin.]

1. Destiny; an eternal series of successive causes.

Necessity or chance

Approach not me; and what I will is fate.

Milton.

There is a necessity in fate

Why still the brave bold man is fortunate.

Dryden.

You must obey me soon or late;

Why will you vainly struggle with your fate!

Dryden.

When empire in its childhood first appears,

A watchful fate o'ersees its rising years.

Dryden.

Random chance, or wilful fate,

Guides the shaft from Cupid's bow.

A. Phillips.

2. Event predetermined.

Tell me what fates attend the duke of Suffolk?

By water shall he die, and take his end.

Shakespeare.

3. Fate; destruction.

Viewing a neighbouring hill, whose top of late

A chapel crown'd, 'till in the common fate

Th' adjoining abbey fell.

Denham.

Looking, he feeds alone his famish'd eyes;

Feeds ling'ring death, but looking not he dies;

Yet still he chose the longest way to fate,

Wasting at once his life and his estate.

Dryden.

Courage uncertain dangers may abate;

But who can bear th' approach of certain fate!

Dryden.

The whizzing arrow sings,

And bears thy fate, Antinous, on its wings.

Pope.

4. Cause of death.

With full force his deadly bow he bent,

And feather'd fates among the mules and sumpters sent. Dry.

FA'TED. adj. [from fate.]

She fled her father's rage, and with a train

Driv'n by the southern blasts was fated here to reign. Dryd.

2. Determined in any manner by fate.

Bright Vulcanian arms,

Fated from force of steel by Stygian charms,

Suspended, shone on high.

Dryden's Æn.

3. Endued with any quality by fate.

Her aukward love indeed was oddly fated;

She and her Polly were too near related.

Prior.

4. Invested with the power of fatal determination. Peculiar to Shakespeare.

Thy fated sky

Gives us free scope.

Shakespeare.

FA'THER. n. f. [fæðer, Saxon; aaber, Erse. This word is found likewise in the Persian language.]

1. He by whom the son or daughter is begotten.

Father is a notion superinduced to the substance, or man, and refers only to an act of that thing called man, whereby he contributed to the generation of one of his own kind. Locke.

Son of Bensalem, thy father saith it; the man by whom thou hast breath and life speaketh the word. Bacon.

He shall forget

Father and mother, and to his wife adhere. Milt. Pa. Lost.

2. The first ancestor.

It was said

It should not stand in thy posterity;

But that myself should be the root and father

Of many kings.

Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Abraham is the father of us all.

Rom. iv. 16.

3. The appellation of an old man.

A poor blind man was accounted cunning in prognosticating weather: Epfom, a lawyer, said in scorn, Tell me, father, when doth the sun change? The old man answered, when such a wicked lawyer as you goeth to heaven. Camden.

4. The title of any man reverend for age, learning, and piety.

You shall find one well accompanied

With reverend fathers and well learned bishops. Sh. R. III.

1. The quality of being fat, plump, or full-fed.
2. Fat; grease; fulness of flesh.
And by his side rode loathsome gluttony;
Deformed creature, on a filthy swine;
His belly was upblown with luxury,
And eke with fatness swollen were his eyes. Fai. Queen, b. i.
3. Unctuous or greasy matter.
Earth and water, mingled by the help of the sun, gather a nitrous fatness. Bacon's Natural History, N<sup>o</sup>. 355.
4. Oleaginousness; sliminess.
By reason of the fatness and heaviness of the ground, Egypt did not produce metals, wood, pitch, and some fruits. Arbuth.
5. Fertility; fruitfulness.
God give thee of the dew of heaven, and the fatness of the earth, and plenty of corn and wine. Gen. xxvii. 28:
6. That which causes fertility.
When around
The clouds drop fatness, in the middle sky
The dew suspended fluid, and left unmoist
The execrable glebe. Phillips.
Vapours and clouds feed the plants of the earth with the balm of dews and the fatness of showers. Bentley's Sermons.
TO FATTEN. v. a. [from fat.]
1. To feed up; to make fleshy; to plump with fat.
Frequent blood-letting, in small quantities, often increaseth the force of the organs of digestion, and fatteneth and increaseth the distemper. Arbuthnot on Diet.
2. To make fruitful.
Town of stuff to fatten land. Lib. Londiniensis.
Dare not, on thy life;
Touch aught of mine;
This falchion else, not hitherto withstood,
These hostile fields shall fatten with thy blood. Dryden.
3. To feed grossly; to increase.
Obscene Orontes
Conveys his wealth to Tyber's hungry shores,
And fattens Italy with foreign whores. Dryden's Juvenal.
TO FATTEN. v. n. [from fat.] To grow fat; to be pampered;
to grow fleshy.
All agree to spoil the publick good,
And villains fatten with the brave man's labour. Otway.
Apollo check'd my pride; and bad me feed
My fatt'ning flocks, nor dare beyond the reed. Dryden.
Yet then this little spot of earth well till'd,
A num'rous family with plenty fill'd,
The good old man and thrifty housewife spent
Their days in peace, and fatten'd with content;
Enjoy'd the dregs of life, and liv'd to see
A long-descending healthful progeny. Dryden's Juvenal.
Tygers

Tygers and wolves shall in the ocean breed,
The whale and dolphin fatten on the mead,
And every element exchange its kind,
When thriving honesty in courts we find.

Granville.

FATUOUS. adj. [fatuus, Latin.]

1. Stupid; foolish; feeble of mind.

We pity or laugh at those fatuous extravagants, while yet ourselves have a considerable dose of what makes them so. Glan.

2. Impotent; without force; illusory; alluding to an ignis fatuus.

And when that flame finds combustible earth,

Thence fatuous fires and meteors take their birth. Denham.

FATUITY. n. f. [fatuité, French; from fatuus.] Foolishness; weakness of mind; some degree of frenzy.

It had argued a very short fight of things, and extreme fatuity of mind in me, to bind my own hands at their request. King Charles.

These symptoms were so high in some as to produce a sort of fatuity or madness. Arbutnot on Air.

FA'TWITTED. adj. [fat and wit.] Heavy; dull; stupid.

Thou art so fatwitted with drinking old sack, and unbottoning thee after supper, and sleeping upon benches in the afternoon, that thou hast forgotten. Shakes. Henry IV.

FA'TTY. adj. [from fat.] Unctuous; oleaginous; greasy;
partaking of the nature of fat.

The like cloud, if oily or fatty, will not discharge; not because it flicketh faster, but because air preyeth upon water, and flame and fire upon oil. Bacon's Natural History.

The gourd

And thirsty cucumber, when they perceive

Th' approaching olive, with resentment fly

Her fatty fibres, and with tendrils creep

Diverse, detesting contact.

Phillips.

The common symptoms of the muriatick scurvy are, a saline taste in the spittle, and a lixivial urine, sometimes with a fatty substance like a thin skin a-top. Arbutnot on Aliments.

FA'UCET. n. f. [fausset, French; fauces, Latin.] The pipe inserted into a vessel to give vent to the liquor, and stopped up by a peg or spigot. It is sometimes improperly written fessit.

You were out a good wholesome forenoon in hearing a cause between an orange-wife and a fessit-seller, and adjourned a controversy of three-pence to a second audience. Shakesp.

If you are sent down to draw drink, and find it will not run, blow strongly into the faucet, and it will immediately pour into your mouth. Swift's Direct. to the Butler.

FA'UCHION. n. f. [See FALCHION.] A crooked sword.

But good Æneas order'd on the shore

A stately tomb, whose top a trumpet bore;

A soldier's fauchion, and a seaman's oar. Dryden's Æn.

FAUFEL. n. f. [French.] The fruit of a species of the palm-tree. See PALM.

FAVILLOUS. adj. [favilla, Latin.] Consisting of ashes.

As to foretelling of strangers, from the fungous particles about the wicks of the candle, it only signifieth a moist air about them, hindering the avolation of light and the favillous particles. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. v. c. 22.

FA'ULCON. } See { FALCON.

FA'ULCONRY. } { FALCONRY.

FAULT. n. f. [faut, faute, Fr. faltar, to be deficient, Spanish.
The l is sometimes sounded, and sometimes mute. In conversation it is generally suppressed.]

1. Offence; slight crime; somewhat liable to censure or objection.

The prophet chuseth rather to charge them with the fault of making a law unto themselves, than the crime of transgressing a law which God had made. Hooker, b. iii. f. 6.

He finds no fault with their opinion about the true God, but only that it was not clear and distinct enough. Stillingfleet.

He that but conceives a crime in thought,

Contracts the danger of an actual fault:

Then what must he expect that still proceeds

To commit sin, and work up thoughts to deeds. Dryden.

If you like not my poem, the fault may possibly be in my writing; but more probably 'tis in your morals, which cannot bear the truth of it. Dryden.

They wholly mistake the nature of criticism, who think its business is principally to find fault. Dryden.

To be desirous of a good name, and careful to do every thing, that we innocently may, to obtain it, is so far from being a fault, even in private persons, that it is their great and indispensible duty. Atterbury's Sermons.

Before his sacred name flies ev'ry fault,

And each exalted stanza teems with thought.

Pope.

Which of our thrum-cap'd ancestors found fault,

For want of sugar-tongs or spoons for salt?

King.

Being void of all friendship and enmity, they never complain, nor find fault with the times. Swift.

2. Defect; want; absence.

I could tell to thee, as to one it pleases me, for fault of a better, to call my friend, I could be sad, and sad indeed too. Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. ii.

There is no straw given unto thy servants, and they say unto us, make brick; and behold, thy servants are beaten;
but the fault is in thine own people. Ex. v. 16.

3. Puzzle; difficulty: as, the enquirer is at a fault.

To FAULT. v. n. [from the noun.] To be wrong; to fail.

Which moved him rather in eclogues than otherwise to write, minding to furnish our tongue in this kind wherein it faulteth. Spenser.

To FAULT. v. a. To charge with a fault; to accuse.

For that I will not fault thee,

But for humbleness exalt thee.

Old Song.

FA'ULTER. n. f. [from fault.] An offender; one who commits a fault.

Then she, behold the faulter here in sight;

This hand committed that supposed offence. Fairfax, b. ii.

jector.

FA'ULTILY. adv. [from faulty] Not rightly; improperly; defectively; erroneously.

FA'ULTINESS. n. f. [from faulty]

1. Badness; viciousness; evil disposition.

When her judgment was to be practised in knowing faulti-ness by his first tokens, she was like a young fawn, who coming in the wind of the hunters, doth not know whether it be a thing or no to be eschewed. Sidney, b. ii.

2. Delinquency; actual offences.

The inhabitants will not take it in evil part, that the faulti-ness of their people heretofore is by us so far forth laid open.

Hooker, Preface.

FA'ULTLESS. adj. [from fault.] Without fault; perfect; completely excellent.

Where for our sins he faultless suffered pain,

There where he died, and where he liv'd again. Fairfax.

Who durst thy faultless figure thus deface? Dryden's Æn.

Whoever thinks a faultless piece to see,

Thinks what ne'er was, nor is, nor e'er shall be. Pope.

FA'ULTY. adj. [fautif, French, from fault.]

1. Guilty of a fault; blameable; criminal; not innocent.

The king doth speak as one which is faulty. 2 Sa. xiv. 13.

Can thus

Th' image of God in man, created once

So goodly and erect, though faulty since!

To such unfighly sufferings be debas'd! Milton's Par. Lost.

2. Wrong; erroneous.

The form of polity by them set down for perpetuity, is three ways faulty; faulty in omitting some things which in Scripture are of that nature, as, namely, the difference that ought to be of pastors, when they grow to any great multitude; faulty in requiring doctors, deacons, and widows, as things of perpetual necessity by the law of God, which in truth are nothing less; faulty also in urging some things by Scripture mutable, as their lay-elders. Hooker, b. iii.

3. Defective; bad in any respect; not fit for the use intended.

By accident of a faulty helmet that Parker had on, he was stricken into the mouth at the first course, so that he died pre-

With favour, 'twere no loss if 't might be inquir'd
What the condition of these arms would be. B. Johnf. Cat.
They got not the land by their own sword; but thy right hand and thine arm, and the light of thy countenance, because thou hast a favour unto them. Pf. xlv. 3.
Come down, said Reynard, let us treat of peace:
A peace, with all my soul, said Chanticleer;
But, with your favour, I will treat it here. Dryden.
6. Object of favour; person or thing favoured.
All these his wond'rous works, but chiefly man,
His chief delight and favour; him, for whom
All these his works so wond'rous he ordain'd. Milt. P. L.
7. Something given by a lady to be worn.
And every one his lovesuit will advance
Unto his several mistress, which they'll know
By favours several which they did bestow. Shakespeare.
It is received that it helpeth to continue love, if one wear the hair of the party beloved; and perhaps a glove, or other like favour, may as well do it. Bacon's Natural History.
A blue ribband tied round the sword-arm, I conceive to be the remains of that custom of wearing a mistress's favour on such occasions of old. Spectator, N<sup>o</sup>. 436.
8. Any thing worn openly as a token.
Here, Fluellen, wear thou this favour for me, and stick it in thy cap: when Alanfon and myself were down together, I pluck'd this glove from his helm. Shakesp. Henry V.
9. Feature; countenance.
That is only suitable in laying a foul complexion upon a filthy favour, setting forth both in sluttishness. Sidney.
Young though thou art, thine eye
Hath staid upon some favour that it loves. Shakespeare.
Disseat thy favour with an usurped beard. Shakesp. Othello.
There's no goodness in thy face: if Antony
Be free and healthful, why so tart a favour
To trumpet such good tidings. Shakesp. Ant. and Cleopatra.
Yet well I remember
The favours of these men: were they not mine?
Did they not sometime cry, all hail! to me? Shakesp. R. II.
A youth of fine favour and shape. Bacon's Henry VII.
By their virtuous behaviour they compensate hardness of their favour, and by the pulchritude of their souls, make up what is wanting in the beauty of their bodies. South.
- FA'VOURABLE. adj. [favorable, French; favorabilis, Latin.]

To draw th' earth's purest spirit, and resist

Its feculence, which in more porous stocks

Of cyder plants finds passage free. Phillips.

FE'CULENT. adj. [feculentus, Lat. feculent, French.] Foul;
dreggy; excrementitious.

But both his hands, most filthy feculent,

Above the water were on high extent,

And fain'd to wash themselves incessantly,

Yet nothing cleaner were for such intent. Fairy Queen.

We may affirm them to be to the body as the light of a candle to the gross and feculent snuff, which as it is not pent up in it, so neither doth it partake of its stench and impurity. Glanv. Apology.

FECUND. adj. [fecundus, Latin; fecund, Fr.] Fruitful; prolific.

The more sickly the years are, the less fecund or fruitful of children also they be. Graunt's Bills of Mortality.

FECUNDA'TION. n. f. [fecundo, Latin.] The act of making fruitful or prolific.

She requested these plants as a medicine of fecundation, or lific. Dict.

FECUNDITY. n. f. [from fecund; fecundité, French.]

1. Fruitfulness; quality of producing or bringing forth in great abundance.

I appeal to the animal and vegetable productions of the earth, the vast numbers whereof notoriously testify the extreme luxuriance and fecundity of it. Woodward's Nat. Hist.

2. Power of producing or bringing forth.

Some of the ancients mention some seeds that retain their fecundity forty years; and I have found, from a friend, that melon-seeds, after thirty years, are best for raising of melons.

Ray on the Creation.

He could never create so ample a world, but he could have made a bigger; the fecundity of his creative power never growing barren, nor being exhausted. Bentley's Sermons.

FED. Preterite and participle pass. of To feed.

For on the grassy verdure as he lay,

And breath'd the freshness of the early day,

Devouring dogs the helpless infant tore,

Fed on his trembling limbs, and lapp'd the gore. Pope.

FE'DARY. n. f. [foedus, Latin, or from feudum.] This word, peculiar to Shakespeare, may signify either a confederate; a partner; or a dependant.

Damn'd paper!

Black as the ink that's on thee, senseless bauble!

Art thou a fedary for this act, and lookest

So virgin-like without? Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

FE'DERAL. adj. [from foedus, Latin.] Relating to a league or contract.

It is a federal rite betwixt God and us, as eating and drinking, both among the Jews and Heathens, was wont to be.

Hammond's Fundamentals.

The Romans compelled them, contrary to all federal right and justice, both to part with Sardinia, their lawful territory, and also to pay them for the future a double tribute. Grew.

FE'DERARY. n. f. [from foedus, Latin.] A confederate; an confederacy.

FEE. n. f. [feoh, Saxon; fee, Danish, cattle; feudum, low Latin; feu, Scottish.]

1. [In law.] All lands and tenements that are held by any acknowledge of superiority to a higher lord. All lands and tenements, wherein a man hath a perpetual estate to him and his heirs, &c. are divided into allodium and feudum: allodium is every man's own land, which he possesses merely in his own right, without acknowledgment of any service, or payment of any rent to any other. Feudum, or fee, is that which we hold by the benefit of another, and in name whereof we owe services, or pay rent, or both, to a superior lord. And all our land in England, the crown-land, which is in the king's own hands, in right of his crown, excepted, is in the nature of feudum: for though a man have land by descent from his ancestors, or bought it for his money; yet is the land of such a nature, that it cannot come to any, either by descent or purchase, but with the burthen that was laid upon him who had novel fee, or first of all received it as a benefit from his lord, to him and to all such to whom it might descend, or be

be any way conveyed from him. So that no man in England has directum d minium, that is, the very property or demesne in any land, but the prince in right of his crown: for though he that has fee has jus perpetuum & utile dominium, yet he owes a duty for it, and therefore it is not simply his own. Fee is divided into two sorts; fee-absolute, otherwise called fee-simple, and fee-conditional, otherwise termed fee-tail: fee-simple is that whereof we are seized in those general words, To us and our heirs for ever: fee-tail is that whereof we are seized to us and our heirs, with limitation; that is, the heirs of our body, &c. And fee-tail is either general or special: general is where land is given to a man, and the heirs of his body: fee-tail special is that where a man and his wife are seized of land to them and the heirs of their two bodies. Cowel.

Now like a lawyer, when he land would let,

Or sell fee-simples in his master's name. Hubberd's Tale.

Here's the lord of the soil come to seize me for a stray, for entering his fee-simple without leave. Shakespeare's Henry VI.

2. Property; peculiar.

What concern they?

The general cause; or is it a fee-grief,

Due to some single breast? Shakespeare's Macbeth.

3. Reward; gratification; recompense.

These be the ways by which, without reward,

Living in courts be gotten, though full hard;

For nothing there is done without a fee. Hubberd's Tale.

Not helping, death's my fee;

But if I help, what do you promise me? Shakespeare.

4. Payments occasionally claimed by persons in office.

Now that God and friends

Have turn'd my captive state to liberty,

At our enlargement what are thy due fees? Shak. Hen. VI.

5. Reward paid to physicians or lawyers.

He does not reject the person's pretensions, who does not know how to explain them; or refuse doing a good office for a man, because he cannot pay the fee of it. Addison's Spectat.

6. Portion; pittance; share. Obsolete.

In pruning and trimming all manner of trees,

Reserve to each cattle their property fees. Tuff. Husbandry.

FE'EFARM. n. f. [fee and farm.] Tenure by which lands are held from a superiour lord.

John surrendered his kingdoms to the pope, and took them back again, to hold in feefarm; which brought him into such hatred, as all his lifetime after he was posselt with fear. Davies.

TO FE'E. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To reward; to pay.

No man fees the sun, no man purchases the light, nor errs if he walks by it. South's Sermons.

Watch the disease in time; for when within

The dropfy rages and extends the skin,

In vain for hellebore the patient cries,

And fees the doctor; but too late is wise. Dryden's Persf.

2. To bribe.

I have long loved her, and ingrossed opportunities to meet her; feed every slight occasion, that could but niggardly give me sight of her. Shakesp. Merry Wives of Windsor.

3. To keep in hire.

There's not a thane of them but in his house

I have a servant fee'd. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

FE'EBLE. adj. [foible, French.] Weak; debilitated; sickly; infirm; without strength of body or mind.

The men carried all the feeble upon asses to Jericho. 2 Chron.

Command th' assistance of a faithful friend,

But feeble are the succours I can send. Dryden's Æn.

How I have lov'd, excuse my falt'ring tongue;

My spirits feeble, and my pains are strong. Dryden.

We carry the image of God in us, a rational and immortal soul; and though we be now miserable and feeble, yet we aspire after eternal happiness, and finally expect a great exaltation of all our natural powers. Bentley's Sermons.

A crutch that helps the weak along,

Supports the feeble, but retards the strong. Smith.

TO FE'EBLE. v. a. [from the noun.] To weaken; to enfeeble; to deprive of strength or power. Not in use.

Or as a cattle reared high and round,

By subtile engines and malicious slight

Is undermined from the lowest ground,

And her foundation forc'd and feebled quite. Fairy Queen.

Shall that victorious hand be feebled here,

That in your chambers gave you chastisement? Sh. K. John.

FE'EBLEMINDED. adj. [feeble and mind.] Weak of mind; defective in resolution and constancy.

Warn them that are unruly, comfort the feebleminded, support the weak, be patient toward all men. 1 Theff. v. 14.

FE'EBLENESS. n. f. [from feeble.] Weakness; imbecility; infirmity; want of strength.

A better head Rome's glorious body fits,

Than his that shakes for age and feebleness. Shak. Tit Andr.

Some in their latter years, through the feebleness of their limbs, have been forced to study upon their knees. South.

FE'EBLY. adv. [from feeble.] Weakly; without strength.

Like mine, thy gentle numbers feebly creep;

Thy tragick muse gives smiles, thy comick sleep. Dryden.

TO FEED. v. a. [fedan, Gothick; feban, foeban, Saxon.]

1. To supply with food.

Her heart and bowels through her back he drew,

And fed the hounds that help'd him to pursue. Dryden.

Boerhaave fed a sparrow with bread four days, in which time it eat more than its own weight. Arbuthnot on Diet.

2. To supply; to furnish.

A constant smoke arises from the warm springs that feed the many baths with which this island is stocked. Addison.

The breadth of the bottom of the hopper must be half the length of a barleycorn, and near as long as the rollers, that it may not feed them too fast. Mortimer's Husbandry.

3. To graze; to consume by cattle.

Once in three years feed your mowing lands, if you cannot get manure constantly to keep them in heart. Mortimer.

The frost will spoil the grafs; for which reason take care to feed it close before Winter. Mortimer's Husbandry.

4. To nourish; to cherish.

How oft from pomp and state did I remove,

To feed despair, and cherish hopeless love? Prior.

5. To keep in hope or expectation.

Barbarossa learned the strength of the emperor, craftily feeding him with the hope of liberty. Knolles's Hist. of the Turks.

6. To delight; to entertain; to keep from satiety.

The alteration of scenes, so it be without noise, feeds and relieves the eye, before it be full of the same object. Bacon.

TO FEED. v. n.

1. To take food. Chiefly applied to animals food.

To feed were best at home;

From thence the sawce to meat is ceremony;

Meeting were bare without it. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

2. To prey; to live by eating.

I am not covetous of gold;

Nor care I, who doth feed upon my cost. Shakesp. Hen. V.

You cry against the noble senate, who,

Under the gods, keep you in awe, which else

Would feed on one another. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

Galen speaketh of the curing of the scirrhus of the liver by milk of a cow, that feedeth upon certain herbs. Bacon.

Some birds feed upon the berries of this vegetable. Brown.

He feeds on fruits, which, of their own accord,

The willing grounds and laden trees afford. Dryden's Virg.

The Brachmans were all of the same race, lived in fields and woods, and fed only upon rice, milk, or herbs. Temple.

All feed on one vain patron, and enjoy

Th' extensive blessing of his luxury. Pope's Essay on Man.

3. To pasture; to place cattle to feed.

If a man shall cause a field to be eaten, and shall put in his beast, and shall feed in another man's field, he shall make restitution. Ex. xxii. 5.

4. To grow fat or plump.

FEED. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Food; that which is eaten.

A fearful deer then looks most about when he comes to the best feed, with a shugging kind of tremor through all her principal parts. Sidney, b. ii.

An old worked ox fats as well as a young one: their feed is much cheaper, because they eat no oats. Mortimer's Husb.

Not to his master's but his feeder's hand. Denham.

2. An exciter; an encourager.

When thou do'st hear I am as I have been,

Approach me, and thou shalt be as thou was't,

The tutor and the feeder of my riots. Shakesp. Henry IV.

3. One that eats.

With eager feeding, food doth choak the feeder. Shakesp.

We meet in Aristotle with one kind of thrush, called the missel-thrush, or feeder upon misseltoe. Brown's Vulgar Err.

4. One that eats nicely; one that lives luxuriously.

But that our feasts

In every mefs have folly, and the feeders

Jest with it as a custom, I should blush

To see you so attired. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

But such fine feeders are no guests for me;

Riot agrees not with frugality:

Then, that unfashionable man am I,

With me they'd staive for want of ivory. Dryden's Juven.

TO FEEL. pret. felt; part pass. felt. v. n. [fehan, Saxon.]

1. To have perception of things by the touch.

The sense of feeling can give us a notion of extension, shape, and all other ideas that enter at the eye, except colours. Addison's Spectator, N<sup>o</sup>. 411.

2. To search by feeling. See FEELER.

3. To have a quick sensibility of good or evil, right or wrong. Man, who feels for all mankind. Pope.

This hand, whose touch,
Whose ev'ry touch would force the feeler's soul
To th' oath of loyalty. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

2. The horns or antennæ of insects.

Insects clean their eyes with their forelegs as well as antennæ; and as they are perpetually feeling and searching before them with their feelers or antennæ, I am apt to think that besides wiping and cleaning the eyes, the uses here named may be admitted. Derham's Physico-Theology.

FEELING. participial adj. [from feel.]

1. Expressive of great sensibility.

O wretched state of man in self-division!
O well thou say'st a feeling declaration
Thy tongue hath made of Cupid's deep incision. Sidney.
Thy wailing words do much my spirits move,
They uttered are in such a feeling fashion. Sidney, b. ii.
Write 'till your ink be dry, and with your tears
Moist it again; and frame some feeling line,
That may discover such integrity. Sh. Two Gent. of Verona.

2. Sensibly felt. This sense is not sufficiently analogical.

A most poor man made tame to fortune's blows,
Who, by the art of known and feeling sorrows,
Am pregnant to good pity. Shakespeare's King Lear.
I had a feeling sense
Of all your royal favours; but this last Strikes through my heart. Southerne.

FE'ELING. n. f. [from feel.]

1. The sense of touch.

Why was the fight
To such a tender ball as th' eye confin'd?
So obvious and so easy to be quench'd,
And not, as feeling, through all parts diffus'd,
That she might look at will through ev'ry pore. Milton.

2. Sensibility; tenderness.

The apprehension of the good,
Gives but the greater feeling to the worse. Shakesf. Rich. II.
Their king, out of a princely feeling, was sparing and compassionate towards his subjects. Bacon's Henry VII.

3. Perception.

Great persons had need to borrow other men's opinions to think themselves happy; for if they judge by their own feeling, they cannot find it. Bacon's Essays.

As we learn what belongs to the body by the evidence of sense, so we learn what belongs to the soul by an inward consciousness, which may be called a sort of internal feeling. Watts.

FEELINGLY. adv. [from feeling.]

1. With expression of great sensibility.

The princess might judge that he meant himself, who spake so feelingly. Sidney.

He would not have talked so feelingly of Codrus's bed, if there had been room for a bedfellow in it. Pope.

2. So as to be sensibly felt.

Here feel we but the penalty of Adam,
The season's difference; as the icy phang,
And churlish chiding of the Winter's wind,
Which when it bites and blows upon my body,
Ev'n 'till I shrink with cold, I smile and say,
This is no flattery: these are counsellors,
That feelingly persuade me what I am. Shakesf. As you like it.

He feelingly knew, and had trial of the late good, and of the new purchased evil. Raleigh's History of the World.

FEET. n. f. The plural of foot.

His brother's image to his mind appears,
Inflames his heart with rage, and wings his feet with fears. Pope's Statius.

FEETLESS. adj. [from feet.] Without feet.

Geoffrey of Bouloin broched three feetless birds, called Al-lerions, upon his arrow. Camden.

To FEIGN. v. a. [feindre, French; fingere, Latin.]

1. To invent.

And these three voices differ; all the things done, the doing and the doer; the thing feigned, the feigning and the feigner; so the poem, the poetry and the poet. Ben. Johnson's Discover.
No such things are done as thou sayest, but thou feignest them out of thine own heart. Neh. vi. 8.

2. To make a show of.

Both his hands, most filthy feculent,
Above the water were on high extent,
And feigned to wash themselves incessantly. Spensf. Fairy Qu.

3. To make a shew of; to do upon some false pretence.

Me gentle Delia beckons from the plain,
Then, hid in shades, eludes her eager swain;
But feigns a laugh to see me search around. Pope.

4. To dissemble; to conceal. Now obsolete.

Each trembling leaf and whistling wind they hear,
As ghastly bug their hair on end does rear;
Yet both do strive their fearfulness to feign. Fairy Queen.

To FEIGN. v. n. To relate falsely; to image from the invention.

Therefore the poet

Did feign that Orpheus drew trees, stones, and floods;
Since nought so stockish, hard and full of rage,
But musick for the time doth change his nature. Shakesf.

FEIGNEDLY. adv. [from feign.] In fiction; not truly.

Such is found to have been falsely and feignedly in some of the heathens. Bacon, Essay 28.

FEIGNER. n. f. [from feign.] Inventer; contriver of a fiction.

And these three voices differ; all the things done, the doing and the doer; the thing feigned, the feigning and the feigner; so the poem, the poetry and the poet. Ben. Johnson.

FEINT. participial adj. [from feign, for feigned; or feint, Fr.]

The mind by degrees loses its natural relish of real, solid truth, and is reconciled insensibly to any thing that can be but dressed up into any feint appearance of it. Locke.

FEINT. n. f. [feint, French.]

1. A false appearance; an offer of something not intended to be.

2. A mock assault; an appearance of aiming at one part when another is intended to be struck.

But, in the breast encamp'd, prepares
For well-bred feints and future wars. Prior.

FE'LANDERS. n. f. Worms in hawks.FE'LDFARE. n. f. See FIELDFARE.To FELICITATE. v. a. [feliciter, French; felicitare, Latin.]

1. To make happy.

I profess
Myself an enemy to all other joys;
And find I am alone felicitate.
In your dear highness' love. Shakespeare's King Lear.
What a glorious entertainment and pleasure would fill and felicitate his spirit, if he could grasp all in a single survey. Watts.

2. To congratulate.

They might proceed unto forms of speeches, felicitating the good, or deprecating the evil to follow. Brown's Vulgar Err.
FELICITA'TION. n. f. [French, from felicitate.] Congratulation. Dict.

FELICITOUS. adj. [felix, Latin.] Happy. *Dict.*FELICITOUSLY. adv. [from felicitous.] Happily. *Dict.*FELICITY. n. f. [felicitas, Latin; felicité, Fr.] Happiness; prosperity; blissfulness; blessedness.

The joyous day, dear Lord, with joy begin,
And grant that we, for whom thou didest die,
Being with thy dear blood clean wash'd from sin,
May live for ever in felicity. Spenser, Sonnet 68.

Others in virtue plac'd felicity;
But virtue join'd with riches and long life,
In corporal pleasure he, and careless ease. Milt. Par. Reg.
So the felicities of her wonderful reign may be complete. Atterbury's Sermons.

How great, how glorious a felicity, how adequate to the desires of a reasonable nature, is revealed to our hopes in the gospel! Rogers, Sermon iii.

FELINE. adj. [felinus, Latin.] Like a cat; pertaining to a cat.

Even as in the beaver; from which he differs principally in his teeth, which are canine, and in his tail, which is feline, or a long taper. Grew's Museum.

FELL. adj. [felle, Saxon.]

1. Cruel; barbarous; inhuman.

- It seemed fury, discord, madness fell,
Flew from his lap when he unfolds the same. Fairfax, b. ii.
So fellest foes,
Whose passions and whose plots have broke their sleep,
To take the one the other, by some chance,
Some trick not worth an egg, shall grow dear friends. Shak.
That instant was I turn'd into a hart,
And my desires, like fell and cruel hounds,
E'er since pursue me. Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.
2. Savage; ravenous; bloody.
I know thee, love! wild as the raging main,
More fell than tygers on the Lybian plain. Pope's Autumn.
Scorning all the taming arts of man,
The keen hyena, fellest of the fell. Thomson's Spring.
- FELL. n. f. [felle, Saxon.] The skin; the hide.
Wipe thine eye;
The gougers shall devour them, flesh and fell,
Ere they shall make us weep. Shakespeare's King Lear.
The time has been my senses would have cool'd
To hear a night-shriek; and my fell of hair
Would at a dismal treatise rouse and stir. Shakesp. Macbeth.
- To FELL. v. a. [fellen, German.]
1. To knock down; to bring to the ground.
Villain, stand, or I'll fell thee down. Shakesp. Henry V.
Up and down he traverses his ground;
Now wards a felling blow, now strikes again. Daniel.
Taking the small end of his musket in his hand, he struck him on the head with the stock, and felled him. Raleigh.
His fall, for the present, struck an earthquake into all minds; nor could the vulgar be induced to believe he was felled. Howel's Vocal Forrest.
On their whole host I flew Unarm'd, and with a trivial weapon fell'd
Their choicest youth: they only liv'd who fled. Milt. Agon.
Whom with such force he struck he fell'd him down,
And cleft the circle of his golden crown. Dryden.
I fell'd along a man of bearded face,
His limbs all cover'd with a shining case. Dryd. Ind. Emp.
2. To hew down; to cut down.
Then would he seem a farmer that would fell Bargains of woods, which he did lately fell. Hubb. Tales.
Proud Arcite and fierce Palamon,
In mortal battle, doubling blow on blow;
Like lightning flam'd their fauchions to and fro,
And shot a dreadful gleam; so strong they struck,
There seem'd less force requir'd to fell an oak. Dryden.
- FELL. The preterite of To fall.
None on their feet might stand,
Though standing else as rocks; but down they fell
By thousands, angel on archangel roll'd. Milton.
- FE'LLER. n. f. [from fell.] One that hews down.
Since thou art laid down, no feller is come up against us.

gall. Dict.
- FE'LLMONGER. n. f. [from fell.] A dealer in hides.
- FE'LLNESS. n. f. [from fell.] Cruelty; savageness; fury; rage.
When his brother saw the red blood trail
Adown so fast, and all his armour steep,
For very felness loud he 'gan to weep. Fairy Queen, b. ii.
- FE'LLOE. n. f. [felge, Danish.] The circumference of a wheel; the outward part. It is often written fally or felly.
Out, out, thou strumpet fortune! all you gods,
In general synod, take away her power;
Break all the spokes and fellies from her wheel,
And bowl the round nave down the hill of heav'n. Shakesp.
Their axle-trees, naves, felloes, and spokes were all molten.
1 Kings vii. 33.
- FELLOW. n. f. [quasi, to follow, Minshew; from fe, faith, and lag, bound, Saxon, Junius; fallow, Scottish.]
1. A companion; one with whom we consort.
In youth I had twelve fellows like unto myself, but not one of them came to a good end. Ascham's Schoolmaster.
To be your fellow,
You may deny me; but I'll be your servant,
Whether you will or no. Shakespeare's Tempest.
Have we not plighted each our holy oath,
That one should be the common good of both;
One soul should both inspire, and neither prove
His fellow's hindrance in pursuit of love? Dryden.
2. An associate; one united in the same affair.
Each on his fellow for assistance calls;
At length the fatal fabrick mounts the walls. Dryden's Virg.
3. One of the same kind.
Let partial spirits still aloud complain,
Think themselves injur'd that they cannot reign;
And own no liberty, but where they may Without controul upon their fellows prey. Waller.
A shepherd had one favourite dog: he fed him with his own hand, and took more care of him than of any of his fellows.
L'Estrange's Fables.

4. Equal; peer.

Chieftain of the rest
I chose him here: the earth shall him allow;
His fellows late, shall be his subjects now. Fairfax, b. ii.
So you are to be hereafter fellows, and no longer servants. Sidney.

5. One thing suited to another; one of a pair.

When virtue is lodged in a body, that seems to have been prepared for the reception of vice: the soul and the body do not seem to be fellows. Addison's Spectator, N<sup>o</sup>. 86.

6. One like another: as, this knave hath not his fellow.

7. A familiar appellation used sometimes with fondness; some times with esteem; but generally with some degree of contempt.

This is Othello's ancient, as I take it:

—The same indeed; a very valiant fellow. Shakesp. Othello.
An officer was in danger to have lost his place, but his wife made his peace; whereupon a pleasant fellow said, that he had been crushed, but that he saved himself upon his horns.
Bacon, Apophthegm 4.

Full fifteen thousand lusty fellows

With fire and sword the fort maintain;

Each was a Hercules, you tell us,

Yet out they march'd like common men. Prior.

8. A word of contempt: the foolish mortal; the mean wretch; the sorry rascal.

Those great fellows scornfully receiving them, as foolish birds fallen into their net, it pleased the eternal justice to make them suffer death by their hands. Sidney, b. ii.

Cassio hath here been set on in the dark

By Rodorigo, and fellows that are 'scap'd:

He's almost slain, and Rodorigo dead. Shakesp. Othello.

I have great comfort from this fellow: methinks he hath no drowning mark about him; his complexion is perfect gallows: Shakespeare's Tempest.

Opinion, that did help me to the crown,

Had still kept loyal to possession;

And left me in reputeless banishment,

A fellow of no mark nor likelihood. Shakesp. Henry IV.

How oft the fight of means, to do ill deeds,

Makes deeds ill done? for had'st not thou been by,

A fellow by the hand of nature mark'd,

Quoted, and sign'd to do a deed of shame,

This murder had not come into my mind. Shakesp. K. John.

The Moor's abus'd by some most villainous knave,

Some base notorious knave, some scurvy fellow. Shak. Othell.

The fellow had taken more fish than he could spend while they were sweet. L'Estrange.

As next of kin, Achilles' arms I claim;

This fellow would ingraft a foreign name

Upon our stock, and the Sisyphian seed

By fraud and theft asserts his father's breed. Dryden.

You will wonder how such an ordinary fellow, as this Mr.

Wood, could have got his majesty's broad seal. Swift.

You'll find, if once the monarch acts the monk,

Or, cobbler like, the parson will be drunk,

Worth makes the man, and want of it the fellow;

The rest is all but leather and prunella. Pope's Ess. on Man.

9. Sometimes it implies a mixture of pity with contempt.

The provost commanded his men to hang him up on the nearest tree: then the fellow cried out that he was not the miller, but the miller's man. Hayward.

10. A member of a college that shares its revenues.

To FE'LLOW. v. a. To suit with; to pair with; to match.
Fellow is often used in composition to mark community of nature, station, or employment.

Imagination,

With what's unreal, thou co-active art,

And fellow'st nothing. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

FE'LLOW-COMMONER. n. f.

1. One who has the same right of common.

He cannot appropriate, he cannot inclose, without the consent of all his fellowcommoners, all mankind. Locke.

2. A commoner at Cambridge of the higher order, who dines with the fellows.

FE'LLOW-CREA'TURE. n. f. One that has the same creator.

Reason is the glory of human nature, and one of the chief eminencies whereby we are raised above our fellowcreatures the brutes in this lower world. Watts's Logic, Introduction.

FE'LLOW-HEIR. n. f. Coheir; partner of the same inheritance.

The Gentiles should be fellowheirs. Eph. iii. 6.

FE'LLOW-HELPER. n. f. Coadjutor; one who concurs in the same business.

We ought to receive such, that we might be fellowhelpers to the truth. 3 Jo. viii.

FE'LLOW-LA'BOURER. n. f. One who labours in the same design.

My fellowlabourers have likewise commissioned me to perform in their behalf this office of dedication. Dryd. Jew. Ded.

FE'LLOW-SERVANT. n. f. One that has the same matter.

Not

Nor less think we in heav'n of thee on earth,
Than of our fellowservant; and inquire Gladly into the ways of God with man. Milt. Parad. Lost.
Fair fellowservant! may your gentle ear
Prove more propitious to my slighted care
Than the bright dame's we serve. Waller.

Their fathers and yours were fellowservants to the same heavenly master while they lived; nor is that relation dissolved by their death, but ought still to operate among their surviving children. Atterbury's Sermons.

FELLOW-SOLDIER. n. f. One who fights under the same commander. An endearing appellation used by officers to their men.

Come, fellowsoldier, make thou proclamation. Shakesp.
Epaphroditus, my brother and companion in labour, and fellowsoldier. Phil. ii. 25.

FELLOW-STUDENT. n. f. One who studies in company with another.

I pr'ythee, do not mock me, fellowstudent;
I think it was to see my mother's wedding. Shakesp. Hamlet.
If you have no fellowstudent at hand, tell it over with your acquaintance. Watts's Logick.

FELLOW-SUBJECT. n. f. One who lives under the same government.

The bleeding condition of their fellowsubjects was a feather in the balance with their private ends. Swift.

FELLOW-SUFFERER. n. f. One who shares in the same evils;
one who partakes the same sufferings with another.

How happy was it for those poor creatures, that your grace was made their fellow sufferer? And how glorious for you, that you chose to want rather than not relieve the wants of others?
Dryden's Fables, Dedication.

We in some measure share the necessities of the poor at the same time that we relieve them, and make ourselves not only their patrons but fellow sufferers. Addison's Spectator.

FELLOW-WRITER. n. f. One who writes at the same time, or on the same subject.

Since they cannot raise themselves to the reputation of their fellow-writers, they must sink it to their own pitch, if they would keep themselves upon a level with them. Addison's Spectator.

FELLOWFEELING. n. f. [fellow and feeling.]

1. Sympathy.
It is a high degree of inhumanity not to have a fellowfeel-
ing of the misfortune of my brother. L'Estrange.

2. Combination; joint interest.
Even your milkwoman and your nurserymaid have a fel- lowfeeling. Arbuthnot's History of John Bull.

FELLOWLIKE. } adj. [fellow and like.] Like a companion;
FELLOWLY. } on equal terms; companionable.

All which good parts he graceth with a good fellowlike, kind, and respectful carriage. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

One seed for another, to make an exchange,
With fellowly neighbourhood seemeth not strange. Tusser.

FELLOWSHIP. n. f. [from fellow.]

1. Companionship; comfort; society.
This boy cannot tell what he would have,
But kneels and holds up hands for fellowship. Shak. Coriolan.
From blissful bow'rs

Of amarantine shade, fountain, or spring,
By the waters of life, where'er they sat
In fellowships of joy, the sons of light
Hasted. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xi. l. 80.

There is no man but God puts excellent things into his possession, to be used for the common good; for men are made for society and mutual fellowship. Calamy's Sermons.

God having designed man for a sociable creature, made him not only with an inclination and under the necessity to have fellowship with those of his own kind, but furnished him also with language, which was to be the great instrument and cementer of society. Locke.

2. Association; confederacy; combination.

We would not die in that man's company,
That fears his fellowship to die with us. Shakesp. Henry V.
Those laws do bind men absolutely, even as they are men, although they have never any settled fellowship, never any solemn agreement amongst themselves what to do, or not to do. Hooker, b. i. f. 10.

Most of the other Christian princes were drawn into the fellowship of that war. Knolles's History of the Turks.

3. Equality.

4. Partnership; joint interest.

Nearer acquainted, now I feel by proof
That fellowship in pain divides not smart,
Nor lightens aught each man's peculiar load. Parad. Reg.
O love! thou sternly dost thy pow'r maintain,
And wilt not bear a rival in thy reign;
Tyrants and thou all fellowship disdain. Dryden.

5. Company; state of being together.

The great contention of the sea and skies
Parted our fellowship. But hark, a sail! Shakesp. Othello.

6. Frequency of intercourse; social pleasure.

In a great town friends are scattered, so that there is not that fellowship which is in less neighbourhoods. Bacon's Essays.

7. Fitness and fondness for festal entertainments, with good prefixed.

He had by his excessive good fellowship, which was grateful to all the company, made himself popular with all the officers of the army. Clarendon, b. viii.

8. An establishment in the college with share in its revenue.

Corusodes having, by the most extreme parsimony, saved thirty-four pounds out of a beggarly fellowship, went up to London. Swift.

9. [In arithmetick.] That rule of plural proportion whereby we balance accompts, depending between divers persons, having put together a general stock, so that they may every man have his proportional gain, or sustain his proportional part of loss. Cocker's Arithmetick.

10. A rule in arithmetick, by which two or more independent operations of the rule of three may divide any given number into unequal parts, proportional to certain other numbers.
It is so called, because the more common and useful application thereof is in the division of gains, losses, or other things, among partners in company. Malcolm.

FELLY. adv. [from fell.] Cruelly; inhumanly; savagely; barbarously.

Fair ye be sure, but cruel and unkind;

As is a tyger, that with greediness

Hunts after blood, when he by chance doth find

A feeble beast, doth felly him oppress. Spenser's Sonnets.

FEL-DE-SE. n. f. [In law.] He that committeth felony by murdering himself.

FELON. n. f. [felon, French; felo, low Latin; fel, Saxon.]

1. One who has committed a capital crime.

I apprehend thee for a felon here. Shak. Romeo and Juliet.

And often have you brought the wily fox,

Chas'd even amid' the folds; and made to bleed,

Like felons, where they did the murd'rous deed. Dryden.

2. A whitlow; a tumour formed between the bone and its investing membrane, very painful.

The malign paronychia is that which is commonly called a felon. Wiseman's Surgery.

FELON. adj. Cruel; traitorous; inhuman.

Ay me! what thing on earth, that all things breeds,

Might be the cause of so impatient plight!

What fury, or what fiend with felon deeds,

Hath stirred up so mischievous despoight! Spenser.

Then bids prepare th' hospitable treat,

Vain shews of love to veil his felon hate. Pope's Odyssey.

FELONIOUS. adj. [from felon.] Wicked; traitorous; villa-nous; malignant; perfidious; destructive.

This man conceived the duke's death; but what was the motive of that felonious conception is in the clouds. Wotton.

O thievish night!

Why should'st thou, but for some felonious end,

In thy dark lanthorn thus close up the stars

That nature hung in heav'n, and fill'd the lamps

With everlasting oil, to give due light

To the misted and lonely traveller? Milton.

In thy felonious heart though venom lies,

It does but touch thy Irish pen and dies. Dryden.

FELONIOUSLY. adj. [from felonious.] In a felonious way.

FELONOUS. adj. [from felon.] Wicked; felonious.

I am like for desperate dole to die,

Through felonous force of mine enemy. Spenser's Pastorals.

FELONY. n. f. [felonie, Fr. felonia, low Latin, from felon.] A crime denounced capital by the law; an enormous crime.

I will make it felony to drink small beer. Shakesp. Henry VI.

FELT. The preterite of FEEL, which see.

FELT. n. f. [feltz, Saxon.]

1. Cloath made of wool united without weaving.

It were a delicate stratagem to shoe

A troop of horse with felt. Shakespeare's King Lear.

2. A hide or skin.

To know whether sheep are sound or not, see that the felt be loose. Mortimer's Husbandry.

TO FELT. v. a. [from the noun.] To unite without weaving.

The same wool one man felts into a hat, another weaves it into cloath, another into kersey. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

TO FELTRE. v. a. [from felt.] To clot together like felt.

His feltred locks, that on his bosom fell,

On rugged mountains briers and thorns resemble. Fairfax.

FELU'CCA. n. f. [felu, Fr. felkon, Arab.] A small open boat with six oars. Diët.

FEMALE. n. f. [femelle, French; femella, Latin.] A she;
one of the sex which brings young.

God created man in his own image, male and female created he them. Gen. i. 27.

Man, more divine,

Lord of the wide world, and wide wat'ry seas,

Indu'd with intellectual sense and soul,

Are masters to their females, and their lords. Shakespeare.

FEMALE. adj.

1. Not masculine; belonging to a she.

If by a female hand he had foreseen

He was to die, his wish had rather been

The lance and double ax of the fair warrior queen. Dryd.

2. FEMALE

2. FEMALE Rhymes. Double rhymes so called, because in French, from which the term is taken, they end in a weak or feminine. These rhymes are female:

'Th' excess of heat is but a fable;

We know the torrid zone is now found habitable. Cowley.

The female rhymes are in use with the Italian in every line, with the Spaniard promiscuously, and with the French alternately, as appears from the Alarique, the Pucelle, or any of their later poems. Dryden's Preface to Ann. Mirab.

FEME Covert. n. f. [French.] A married woman; who is also said to be under covert baron. Blount.

FEME Sole. n. f. [French.] A single woman; an unmarried woman.

FEMINA'LITY. n. f. [from fæmina, Latin.] Female nature.

If in the minority of natural vigour the parts of feminality take place, upon the increase or growth thereof the masculine appears. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iii. c. 17.

FE'MININE. adj. [femininus, Latin.]

1. Of the sex that brings young; female.

Thus we chastise the god of wine

With water that is feminine,

Until the cooler nymph abate

His wrath, and so congregate. Cleaveland.

2. Soft; tender; delicate.

Her heav'nly form

Angelick, but more soft and feminine. Milton's Parad. Lost.

3. Effeminate; emasculated.

Ninias was no man of war at all, but altogether feminine and subjected to ease and delicacy. Raleigh's Hist. of the World.

FE'MININE. n. f. A she; one of the sex that brings young; a female.

O! why did God create at last

This novelty on earth, this fair defect

Of nature? And not fill the world at once

With men, as angels, without feminine? Milt. Par. Lost.

FE'MORAL. adj. [femorialis, Latin.] Belonging to the thigh.

The largest crooked needle should be used in taking up the femoral arteries in amputation. Sharp's Surgery.

FEN. n. f. [fenn, Saxon; venne, Dutch.] A marsh; low flat and moist ground; a moor; a bog.

Mexico is a city that stands in the midst of a great marsh or fen. Abbot's Description of the World.

I go alone,

Like to a lonely dragon, that his fen

Makes fear'd and talk'd of more than seen. Shakes. Coriolan.

Yon common cry of curs, whose breath I hate,

As reek o' th' rotten fens. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

The surface is of black fen earth. Woodward on Fossils.

He to Portina's wat'ry marshes went;

A long canal the muddy fen divides,

And with a clear unfully'd current glides. Addison.

FE'NBERRY. n. f. [fen and berry.] A kind of black-berry. Skinner.

FENCE. n. f. [from defence.]

1. Guard; security; outwork; defence.

That proved not fence enough to the reputation of their oppressors. Decay of Piety.

There's no fence against inundations, earthquakes, or hurricanes. L'Estrange, Fable 167.

To put them out of their parents view, at a great distance, is to expose them to the greatest dangers of their whole life, when they have the least fence and guard against them. Locke.

Let us bear this awful corps to Cæsar,

And lay it in his sight, that it may stand

A fence betwixt us and the victor's wrath. Addison's Cato.

2. Inclosure; mound; hedge.

In vain did nature's wife command

Divide the waters from the land,

If daring ships, and men prophane,

Invade th' inviolable main;

Th' eternal fences overleap,

And pass at will the boundless deep. Dryden's Horace.

Shall I mention make

Of the vast mound that binds the Lucrine lake?

Or the disdainful sea, that, shut from thence,

Roars round the structure, and invades the fence? Dryden.

Employ their wiles and unavailing care,

To pass the fences and surprise the fair. Pope.

3. The art of fencing; defence.

I bruised my skin th' other day, with playing at sword and dagger with a master of fence. Shakes. Merry Wives of Windsor.

4. Skill in defence.

I'll prove it on his body, if he dare,

Despite his nice fence and his active practice. Shakespeare.

TO FENCE. v. a.

1. To inclose; to secure by an inclosure or hedge.

Th' inhabitants each pasture and each plain

Destroyed have, each field to waste is lade;

In fenced towers bestowed is their grain,

Before thou cam'st this kingdom to invade. Fairfax, b. ii.

He hath fenced up my way that I cannot pass, and set darkness in my paths. Job xix. 8.

Thou hast clothed me with skin and flesh, and hast fenced me with bones and sinews. Job x. 11.

He went about to make a bridge to a strong city, which was fenced about with walls. 2 Mac. xii. 13.

See that the churchyard be fenced in with a decent rail, or other inclosure. Ayliffe's Parergon.

2. To guard.

So much of adders wisdom I have learnt;

To fence my ear against thy sorceries. Milton's Agonistes.

With love to friend, th' impatient lover went,

Fenc'd from the thorns; and trod the deep descent. Dryden.

TO FENCE. v. n.

1. To practise the arts of manual defence; to practise the use of weapons.

He having got some iron, should have it beaten into swords, and put into his servants hands to fence with, and bang one another. Locke.

2. To guard against; to act on the defensive.

Vice is the more stubborn as well as the more dangerous evil, and therefore in the first place to be fenced against. Locke.

3. To fight according to art.

If a throstle sing, he falls strait a capering;

He will fence with his own shadow. Shak. Merch. of Venice.

A beauteous heifer in the wood is bred;

The stooping warriors, aiming head to head,

Engage their clashing horns; with dreadful sound

The forest rattles, and the rocks rebound;

They fence and push, and, pushing, loudly roar,

Their dewlaps and their sides are bath'd in gore. Dryden.

A man that cannot fence will keep out of bullies and gamblers company. Locke.

These, being polemical arts, could no more be learned alone than fencing or cudgelplying. Arbuth. and Pope's Ma. Sc.

FENCELESS. adj. [from fence.] Without inclosure; open.

Each motion of the heart rises to fury,

And love in their weak bosoms is a rage

As terrible as hate, and as destructive:

So the wind roars o'er the wide fenceless ocean,

And heaves the billows of the boiling deep,

Alike from North, from South, from East, from West. Rowe's Jane Shore.

FENCER. n. f. [from fence.] One who teaches or practises the use of weapons, or science of defence.

Calmness is great advantage: he that lets

Another chafe, may warm him at his fire,

Mark all his wand'rings, and enjoy his frets;

As cunning fencers suffer heat to tire. Herbert.

A nimble fencer will put in a thrust so quick, that the foil will be in your bosom when you thought it a yard off. Digby.

FENCIBLE. adj. [from fence.] Capable of defence. Addison.

FENCINGMASTER. n. f. [fence and master.] One who teaches the use of weapons.

FENCINGSCHOOL. n. f. [fence and school.] A place in which the use of weapons is taught.

If a man be to prepare his son for duels, I had rather mine should be a good wrestler than an ordinary fencer, which is the most a gentleman can attain to, unless he will be constantly in the fencing-school, and every day exercising. Locke.

TO FEND. v. a. [from defend.] To keep off; to shut out.

Spread with straw the bedding of thy fold,

With fern beneath, to fend the bitter cold. Dryden's Virgil.

TO FEND. v. n. To dispute; to shift off a charge.

The dexterous management of terms, and being able to fend and prove with them, passes for a great part of learning; but it is learning distinct from knowledge. Locke.

FENDER. n. f. [from fend.]

1. An iron plate laid before the fire to hinder coals that fall from rolling forward to the floor.

2. Any thing laid or hung at the side of a ship to keep off violence.

FENERATION. n. f. [fæneratio, Latin.] Usury; the gain of interest; the practice of increasing money by lending.

The hare figured not only pusillanimity and timidity from its temper, but feneration and usury from its fecundity and superfetation. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iii. c. 17.

FE'NUGREEK. n. f. [fœnum Græcum, Latin.] A plant.

It hath a papilionaceous flower, out of whose empalement rises the pointal, which afterwards becomes a pod, somewhat plain, shaped like a horn, and full of seeds, for the most part rhomboid or kidney-shaped. Miller.

FE'NNEL. n. f. [fœniculum, Latin.] A plant of strong scent.

It is an umbelliferous plant, whose leaves are divided into capillaceous jags: the petals of the flower are intire, and placed orbicularly, expanding in form of a rose: each flower is succeeded by two oblong thick gibbous seeds, chaucled on one side, and plain on the other. J. J. Miller.

A fav'ry odour blown, more pleas'd my sense

Than smell of sweetest fennel, or the teats

Of ewe, or goat, dropping with milk at ev'n. Milton.

FENNELFLOWER. n. f. A plant.

FENNELGIANT. n. f. A plant.

It hath a large succulent milky root: the stalks are spongy, and filled with pith: the flowers consist of many leaves, expanded in form of a rose, growing in an umbel: each flower is succeeded by two large oval-shaped flat seeds, which are very thin, and turn black when ripe: the leaves are like those of fennel. Miller:

FE'NNY. adj. [from fen.]

1. Marshy; boggy; moorish.

Driving in of piles is used for stone or brick houses, and that only where the ground proves fenny or moorish. Moxon.

The hungry crocodile, and hissing snake;

Lurk in the troubl'd stream and fenny brake. Prior:

2. Inhabiting the marsh.

Fillet of a fenny snake,

In the caudron boil and bake. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

FE'NNYSTONES. n. f. A plant.

FE'NSUCKED. adj. [fen and suck.] Sucked out of marshes.

Infect her beauty,

You fenfucked fogs, drawn by the pow'rful sun. Sh. K. Lear.

FE'OD. n. f. [feodum, low Latin.] Fee; tenure. Dict.

FE'ODAL. adj. [feodal, French, from feod.] Held from another.

FE'ODARY. n. f. [from feodum, Latin.] One who holds his estate under the tenure of suit and service to a superiour lord. Hanmer.

To FEOFF. v. a. [fief, fieffer, French; feoffare, low Latin.]

To put in possession; to invest with right.

FEOFFEE. n. f. [feoffatus, Latin; fieffe, French.] One put in possession.

The late earl of Desmond, before his breaking forth into rebellion, conveyed secretly all his lands to feoffee in trust, in hope to have cut off her majesty from the escheat of his lands. Spenser's State of Ireland.

FE'OFFER. n. f. [feffator, low Latin.] One who gives possession of any thing. See FEOFFMENT.

FE'OFFMENT. n. f. [feoffamentum, Latin.] The act of granting possession.

Any gift or grant of any honours, castles, lands, or other immoveable things, to another in fee-simple, that is, to him and his heirs for ever, by the delivery of seisin of the thing given: when it is in writing, it is called a deed of feoffment; and in every feoffment the giver is called the feoffor, feoffator, and he that receiveth by virtue thereof the feoffee, feoffatus. The proper difference between a feoffor and a donor is, that the feoffor gives in fee-simple, the donor in fee-tail. Cowel.

The act of parliament cut off and frustrated all such conveyances as had, by the space of twelve years before his rebellion, been made; within the compass whereof the fraudulent feoffment of others, his accomplices and fellow-traytors, were contained. Spenser's State of Ireland.

FERA'CITY. n. f. [feracitas, Lat.] Fruitfulness; fertility. Dict.

FERAL. adj. [feralis, Latin.] Funereal; mournful; deadly. Dict.

FERIA'TION. n. f. [feriatio, Lat.] The act of keeping holiday; cessation from work.

As though there were any feriation in nature, this season is commonly termed the physicians vacation. Brown's Vulg. Err.

FERINE. adj. [ferinus, Latin.] Wild; savage.

The only difficulty that remains is touching those ferine, noxious, and untameable beasts; as lions, tygers, wolves and bears. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

FER'NENESS. n. f. [from ferine.] Barbarity; savageness; wildness.

A ferine and necessitous kind of life, a conversation with those that were fallen into a barbarous habit of life, would assimilate the next generation to barbarism and ferineness. Hale.

FER'ITY. n. f. [feritas, Latin.] Barbarity; cruelty; wildness; savageness.

He reduced him from the most abject and stupid ferity to his senses, and to sober reason. Woodward's Natural History.

To FERMENT. v. a. [fermento, Latin; fermenter, French.]

To exalt or rarify by intestine motion of parts.

Ye vig'rous swains! while youth ferments your blood,

And purer spirits swell the sprightly flood,

Now range the hills, the thickest woods beset,

Wind the shrill horn, or spread the waving net. Pope.

To FERMENT. v. n. To have the parts put into intestine motion.

FERMENT. n. f. [ferment, French; fermentum, Latin.]

1. That which causes intestine motion.

The semen puts females into a fever, upon impregnation; and all animal humours which poison, are putrefying ferments. Floyer on the Humours.

Subdue and cool the ferment of desire. Rogers's Sermons.

2. The intestine motion; tumult.

FERMENTABLE. adj. [from ferment.] Capable of fermentation.

FERMENTAL. adj. [from ferment.] Having the power to cause fermentation

Cucumbers, being waterish, fill the veins with crude and windy ferocities, that contain little salt or spirit, and debilitate the vital acidity and fermental faculty of the stomach. Brown.

FERMENTA'TION. n. f. [fermentatio, Latin.] A flow in motion of the intestine particles of a mixt body, arising usually from the operation of some active acid matter, which rarifies, exalts, and subtilizes the soft and sulphureous particles: as when leaven or yeast rarifies, lightens, and ferments bread or wort, &c. And this motion differs much from that usually called ebullition or effervescence, which is a violent boiling and struggling between an acid and an alkali, when mixed together. Harris.

The juice of grapes, after fermentation, will yield a spiritus ardens. Boyle.

A man, by tumbling his thoughts, and forming them into expressions, gives them a new kind of fermentation; which works them into a finer body, and makes them much clearer than they were before. Collier of Friendship.

The sap, in fluent dance,

And lively fermentation, mounting, spreads

All this innumerable colour'd scene of things. Thomson.

FERMENTATIVE. adj. [from ferment.] Causing fermentation; having the power to cause fermentation.

Aromatical spirits destroy by their fermentative heat. Arbuth.

FERN. n. f. [feapn, Saxon.] A plant.

The male fern is common on the stumps of trees in woods, and on the banks of ditches: the leaves are formed of a number of small pinnules, dentated on the edges, and set close by one another on slender ribs. On the back of these pinnules are produced the seeds, small and extremely numerous. Decoctions of the root and diet-drinks have been used in chronick disorders and obstructions. The country people esteem it a sovereign remedy for the rickets in children. Hill.

Black was the forest, thick with beech it stood,

Horrid with fern, and intricate with thorn;

Few paths of human feet or tracks of beasts were worn. Dryden's Æneid.

There are great varieties of fern in different parts of the world; but they are seldom cultivated in gardens. Miller:

FE'RNY. adj. [from fern.] Overgrown with fern.

The herd suffic'd, did late repair

To ferny heaths, and to their forest-lare. Dryden:

FERO'CIOUS. adj. [ferox, Latin; feroce, French]

1. Savage; fierce.

2. Ravenous; rapacious.

The hare, that becometh a prey unto man, unto beasts and fowls of the air, is fruitful even unto superfetation; but the lion and ferocious animal hath young ones but seldom, and but one at a time. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iii. c. 16.

Smedley rose in majesty of mud;

Shaking the horrors of his ample brows,

And each ferocious feature grim with ooze. Pope's Dunciad, b. ii.

FERO'CITY. n. f. [ferocitas, Lat. ferocité, Fr. from ferocious.] Savageness; wildness; fierceness.

An uncommon ferocity in my countenance, with the remarkable flatness of my nose, and extent of my mouth, have procured me the name of lion. Addison's Guardian.

Untaught, uncultivated, as they were Inhospitable, full of ferocity. Phillips's Briton.

FE'RREOUS. adj. [ferreus, Latin.] Irony; of iron.

In the body of glass there is no ferreous or magnetical nature. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. ii. c. 3.

FE'RRET. n. f. [fured, Welsh; furet, French; ferret, Dutch; viverra, Lat.]

1. A kind of rat with red eyes and a long snout, used to catch rabbits.

With what an eager earnestness she looked, having threatening not only in her ferret eyes, but while she spoke her nose seemed to threaten her chin. Sidney, b. ii.

Cicero

Looks with such ferret and such fiery eyes,

As we have seen him. Shakespeare's Julius Cæsar.

Coneys are destroyed or taken either by ferrets or pursenets. Mortimer's Husbandry.

2. A kind of narrow ribband.

To FE'RRET. v. a. [from the noun] To drive out of lurking places, as the ferret drives the coney.

The archbishop had ferreted him out of all his holds. Heylin.

FE'RRETER. n. f. [from ferret.] One that hunts another in his privacies.

FE'RRIAGE. n. f. [from ferry.] The fare paid at a ferry.

FERRUGINOUS. adj. [ferrugineus, Fr. ferrugineus, Latin.] Partaking of the particles and qualities of iron.

They are cold, hot, purgative, diuretick, ferruginous, saline, petresying and bituminous. Ray on the Creation.

FE'RRULE. n. f. [from ferrum, iron, Latin.] An iron ring put round any thing to keep it from cracking.

The fingers ends are strengthened with nails, as we fortify the ends of our staves or forks with iron hoops or ferrules. Ray.

To FERRY. v. a. [feapan, to pass, Saxon; fahr, German, a passage. Skinner imagines that this whole family of words may be deduced from the Latin veho. I do not love Latin originals; but if such must be sought, may not these words be more naturally derived from ferri, to be carried?] To carry over in a boat.

Cymocles

FER

Cymocles heard and saw,
He loudly call'd to such as were aboard,
The little bark unto the shore to draw,
And him to ferry over that deep ford. Fairy Queen, b. ii.
To FER'RY. v. n. To pass over water in a vessel of carriage.
Thence hurried back to fire,
They ferry over this Lethæan sound
Both to and fro, their sorrow to augment. Milt. Par. Lost.
FER'RY. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. A vessel of carriage; a vessel in which goods or passengers are carried over water.
By this time was the worthy Guyon brought Unto the other side of that wide strand,
Where she was rowing, and for passage sought:
Him needed not long call, she soon to hand
Her ferry brought. Fairy Queen, b. ii. cant. 6.
There went a ferryboat to carry over the king's household.
2 Sa. xix. 18.
Bring them with imagin'd speed
Unto the Traject, to the common ferry
Which trades to Venice. Shakesf. Merchant of Venice.
I went down to the river Brent in the ordinary ferry. Addis.
2. The passage over which the ferryboat passes.
FER'RYMAN. n. f. [ferry and man.] One who keeps a ferry; one who for hire transports goods and passengers over the water.
I past, methought, the melancholy flood;
With that grim ferryman, which poets write of,
Unto the kingdom of perpetual night. Shakesf. Richard III.
The common ferryman of Egypt, that wafted over the dead bodies from Memphis, was made by the Greeks the ferryman of hell, and solemn stories raised after him. Brown.
The grisly ferryman of hell deny'd
Æneas entrance, 'till he knew his guide. Roscommon.
FER'TH, or forth. Common terminations are the same as in English an army; coming from the Saxon word fyrð. Gibson.
FER'TILE. adj. [fertile, French; fertilis, Latin.]
1. Fruitful; abundant; plenteous.
I had hope of France,
As firmly as I hope for fertile England. Shakesf. Henry VI.
I have had a large, a fair, and a pleasant field; so fertile, that it has given me two harvests in a Summer. Dryden.
I ask whether in the uncultivated waste of America, left to nature, without any improvement, a thousand acres yield the needy inhabitants as many conveniences of life as ten acres of equally fertile land do in Devonshire? Locke.
View the wide earth adorn'd with hills and woods,
Rich in her herds, and fertile by her floods. Blackm. Creat.
2. With of before the thing produced.
The earth is fertile of all kind of grain. Camden's Remains.
This happy country is extremely fertile, as of those above, so likewise of its productions under ground. Woodward.
FER'TILENESS. n. f. [from fertile.] Fruitfulness; fecundity.
To FER'TILITE. v. a. [from fertile.] To fecundate; to fertilize; to make fruitful or productive.
A cock will in one day fertilitate the whole racemation or cluster of eggs, which are not excluded in many weeks after. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iii.
FER'TILITY. n. f. [fertilitas, Latin.] Fecundity; abundance; fruitfulness; plenteousness.
I will go root away
The noisom weeds, that without profit suck
The soil's fertility from wholesome flowers. Shak. Rich. II.
Paradise itself exceeded in beauty and fertility; and these places had but a resemblance thereof. Raleigh's History.
To inundations Egypt, through which the Nile flows, and the Indies owe their extraordinary fertility, and those mighty crops they produce after these waters are withdrawn. Woodw.
To FER'TILIZE. v. a. [fertiliser, French.] To make fruitful; to make plenteous; to make productive; to fecundate.
Rain-water carries along with it a sort of terrestrial matter that fertilizes the land, as being proper for the formation of vegetables. Woodward's Natural History.
FER'TILY. adv. [from fertile.] Fruitfully; plenteously; plentifully; abundantly.
FER'VENCY. n. f. [fervens, Latin.]
1. Heat of mind; ardour; eagerness.
Your diver
Did hang a saltfish on his hook, which he
With fervency drew up. Shakespeare's Ant. and Cleopatra.
2. Pious ardour; flame of devotion; zeal.
We have on all sides lost much of our first fervency towards God. Hooker, Dedication.
There must be zeal and fervency in him which proposeth for the rest those suits and supplications, which they by their joyful acclamations must ratify. Hooker, b. v. f. 25.
When you pray, let it be with attention, with fervency, and with perseverance. Wake's Preparation for Death.
FER'VENT. adj. [fervens, Latin; fervent, French.]
1. Hot; boiling.
From the phlegmatick humour, the proper alloy of fervent blood, will flow a future quietude and serenity. Wotton.

FES

2. Hot in temper; vehement.
They that are more fervent to dispute, be not always the most able to determine. Hooker, b. iv. f. 14.
3. Ardent in piety; warm in zeal; flaming with devotion.
This man being fervent in the spirit, taught diligently the things of the Lord. Acts xviii. 25.
So spake the fervent angel; but his zeal
None seconded, as out of season judg'd,
Or singular and rash. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. v.
Let all enquiries into the mysterious points of theology be carried on with fervent petitions to God, that he would dispose their minds to direct all their skill to the promotion of a good life. South's Sermons.
FER'VENTLY. adv. [from fervent.]
1. Eagerly; vehemently.
They all that charge did fervently apply,
With greedy malice and importune toil. Fairy Queen, b. ii.
2. With pious ardour; with holy zeal.
Epaphras saluteth you, labouring fervently for you in prayers.
He cares not how or what he suffers, so he suffer well, and be the friend of Christ; nor where nor when he suffers, so he may do it frequently, fervently, and acceptably. Taylor.
FER'VID. adj. [fervidus, Latin.]
1. Hot; burning; boiling.
2. Vehement; eager; zealous.
FER'VIDITY. n. f. [from fervid.]
1. Heat.
2. Zeal; passion; ardour. Dist.
FER'VIDNESS. n. f. [from fervid.] Ardour of mind; zeal; passion.
As to the healing of Malchus's ear, in the act of the meek lamb of God, it was a kind of injury done to him by the fervidness of St. Peter, who knew not yet what spirit he was of. Bentley's Sermons.
FER'ULA. n. f. [ferule, Fr. from ferula, giant fennel, Lat.] An instrument of correction with which young scholars are beaten on the hand: so named because anciently the stalks of fennel were used for this purpose.
These differ as much as the rod and ferula. Shaw's Gramm.
To FER'ULE. v. a. To chastise with the ferula.
FER'VOUR. n. f. [fervor, Latin; ferveur, French.]
1. Heat; warmth.
Were it an undeniable truth that an effectual fervour proceeded from this star, yet would not the same determine the opinion. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iv.
Like bright Aurora, whose refulgent ray
Foretells the fervour of ensuing day,
And warns the shepherd with his flocks retreat
To leafy shadows, from the threatned heat. Waller.
These silver drops, like morning dew,
Foretell the fervour of the day;
So from one cloud soft show'rs we view,
And blasting lightnings burst away. Pope.
2. Heat of mind; zeal; ardour of devotion.
Odious it must needs have been to abolish that which all had held for the space of many ages, without reason so great as might in the eyes of impartial men appear sufficient to clear them from all blame of rash proceedings, if in fervour of zeal they had removed such things. Hooker, b. iv. f. 14.
Haply despair hath seiz'd her;
Or, wing'd with fervour of her love, she's flown
To her desir'd Posthumus. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.
There will be at Loretto, in a few ages more, jewels of the greatest value in Europe, if the devotion of its princes continues in its present fervour. Addison's Remarks on Italy.
FESCUE. n. f. [veese, Dutch; festu, French.] A small wire by which those who teach to read point out the letters.
Teach him an alphabet upon his fingers, making the points of his fingers of his left hand both on the inside to signify some letter, when any of them is pointed at by the forefinger of the right hand, or by any kind of fescue. Holder.
Teach them how manly passions ought to move;
For such as cannot think, can never love;
And since they needs will judge the poet's art,
Point 'em with fescues to each shining part. Dryden.
FE'SELS. n. f. A kind of base grain.
Disdain not fescels or poor vech to sow,
Or care to make Egyptian lentils thrive. May's Virg. Georg.
FESSE. n. f. [In heraldry.]
The fesse is so called of the Latin word fascia, a band or girdle, possessing the third part of the escutcheon over the middle: if there be above one, you must call them bars; if with the field there be odd pieces, as seven or nine, then you must name the field, and say so many bars; if even, as six, eight, or ten, you must say barwise, or barry of six, eight, or ten, as the king of Hungary bears argent and gules barry of eight. Pea-ham on Blazoning.
To FE'STER. v. n. [fesse, in Bavarian, a swelling corrupted, Junius.] To rankle; to corrupt; to grow virulent.
I might, even in my lady's presence, discover the sore which had deeply festered within me. Sidney, b. ii.
How

How should our festered sores be cured? Hooker, b. i.
 Inward corruption and infected sin,
 Not purg'd, not heal'd, behind remained still,
 And festering sore did rankle yet within. Fairy Queen, b. i.
 I have some wounds upon me, and they smart
 To hear themselves remember'd.
 — Well might they fester 'gainst ingratitude,
 And tent themselves with death. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
 Mind that their souls

May make a peaceful and a sweet retire
 From off these fields, where, wretches, their poor bodies
 Must lie and fester. Shakespeare's Henry V.
 There was imagination, that between a knight whom the duke had taken into some good degree of favour, and Felton, there had been ancient quarrels not yet well healed, which might perhaps be festering in his breast, and by a certain inflammation produce this effect. Wotton.

Passion, anger, and unkindness may give a wound that shall bleed and smart; but it is treachery only that makes it fester. South's Sermons.

FESTINATE. adj. [festinatus, Latin.] Hasty; hurried. A word not in use.

Advise the duke, where you are going, to a most festinate preparation: we are bound to the like. Shakesp. King Lear.

FESTINATELY. adv. [from festinate.] Hastily; speedily; with speed. Not in use.

Take this key; give enlargement to the swain, and bring him festinately hither. Shakesp. Love's Labour Lost.

FESTINATION. n. f. [festinatio, Latin.] Haste; hurry.

FESTIVAL. adj. [festivus, Latin.] Pertaining to feasts; joyous.

He appeared at great tables, and festival entertainments, that he might manifest his divine charity to men. Atterbury.

FESTIVAL. n. f. Time of feast; anniversary-day of civil or religious joy.

So tedious is this day,
 As is the night before some festival,
 To an impatient child that hath new robes,
 And may not wear them. Shakesp. Romeo and Juliet.
 Th' invited sisters with their graces blest
 Their festivals. Sandys.

The morning trumpets festival proclaim'd
 Through each high street. Milton's Agonistes.

Follow, ye nymphs and shepherds all,
 Come celebrate this festival,
 And merrily sing, and sport, and play;
 For 'tis Oriana's nuptial day. Granville.

By sacrifice of the tongues they purged away whatever they had spoken amiss during the festival. Notes on the Odyssey.

The festival of our Lord's resurrection we have celebrated, and may now consider the chief consequence of his resurrection, a judgment to come. Atterbury's Sermons.

FESTIVE. adj. [festivus, Latin.] Joyous; gay; befitting a feast.

The glad circle round them yield their souls
 To festive mirth and wit that knows no gall. Thomson.

FESTIVITY. n. f. [festivitas, Latin, from festive.]
 1. Festival; time of rejoicing.

The daughter of Jephtha came to be worshipped as a deity, and had an annual festivity observed unto her honour. Brown.

There happening a great and solemn festivity, such as the sheep-shearings used to be, David condescends to beg of a rich man some small repast. South.

2. Gaiety; joyfulness; temper or behaviour befitting a feast.

To those persons there is no better instrument to cause the remembrance, and to endear the affection to the article, than the recommending it by festivity and joy of a holyday. Taylor.

FESTOON. n. f. [feston, French.] In architecture, an ornament of carved work in the form of a wreath or garland of flowers, or leaves twisted together, thickest at the middle, and suspended by the two extremes, whence it hangs down perpendicularly. Harris.

FESTUCINE. adj. [festuca, Latin.] Straw-colour between green and yellow.

Therein may be discovered a little insect of a festucine or pale green, resembling a locust or grasshopper. Brown.

FESTUCOUS. adj. [festuca, Latin.] Formed of straw.

We speak of straws, or festucous divisions, lightly drawn over with oil. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

TO FET. v. a. To fetch; to go and bring.

Get home with thy fewel, made ready to fet,
 The sooner the easier carriage to get. Tuff. Husbandry.

He in a chair was fet,
 Tossing and turning them withouten end;

But for he was unable them to fet,
 A little boy did on him still attend. Fairy Queen, b. ii.

And they fet forth Urijah out of Egypt to Jehoiakim, who slew him with the sword. Jer. xxvi. 23.

FET. n. f. [I suppose from fait, French, a part or portion.]
 A piece.

The bottom clear,
 Now laid with many a fet

Of seed-pearl, ere she bath'd her there
 Was known as black as jet. Drayton.
TO FETCH. v. a. preter. fetch'd; anciently fet, unless it rather came from To fet. [feccan, fezzan, Saxon.]

1. To go and bring.
 They have devis'd a mean
 How he her chamber-window will ascend,
 And with a corded ladder fetch her down. Shakespeare.
 We will take men to fetch victuals for the people. Judg. xx.
 Go to the flock, and fetch me from thence two kid goats.
Gen. xxvii. 9.

The seat of empire, where the Irish come,
 And the unwilling Scotch, to fetch their doom. Waller.
 Draw forth the monsters of th' abyss profound,
 Or fetch th' aerial eagle to the ground. Pope's Ess. on Man.

2. To derive; to draw.
 On, you noblest English,
 Whose blood is fetch'd from fathers of war-proof. Sh. H. V.

3. To strike at a distance.
 The conditions of weapons, and their improvements, are the fetching afar off; for that outruns the danger, as it is seen in ordnance and muskets. Bacon's Essays.

4. To bring to any state by some powerful operation.
 In smells we see their great and sudden effect in fetching men again, when they swoon. Bacon's Natural History.

At Rome any of those arts immediately thrives, under the encouragement of the prince, as may be fetch'd up to its perfection in ten or a dozen years, which is the work of an age or two in other countries. Addison on Italy.

5. To draw within any confinement or prohibition.
 General terms may sufficiently convey to the people what our intentions are, and yet not fetch us within the compass of the ordinance. Sanderfon.

6. To produce by some kind of force.
 These ways, if there were any secret excellence among them, would fetch it out, and give it fair opportunities to advance itself by. Milton on Education.

An human soul without education is like marble in the quarry, which shews none of its beauties 'till the skill of the polisher fetches out the colours. Addison's Spectator.

7. To perform any excursion.
 I'll fetch a turn about the garden, pitying
 The pangs of barr'd affections; though the king
 Hath charg'd you should not speak together. Shak. Cymbel.

When evening grey doth rise, I fetch my round
 Over the mount, and all this hollow ground. Milton.
 To come to that place they must fetch a compass three miles on the right hand through a forest. Knolles's History.

8. To perform with suddenness or violence.
 Note a wild and wanton herd,
 Or race of youthful and unhandled colts,
 Fetching mad bounds, bellowing and neighing loud. Shakesp.
 The fox fetch'd a hundred and a hundred leaps at a delicious cluster of grapes. L'Estrange.

Talk to her of an unfortunate young lady that lost her beauty by the small-pox, she fetches a deep sigh. Addison.

9. To reach; to arrive at; to come to.
 Mean time flew our ships, and streight we fetch'd
 The tyrens isle; a spleenless wind so stretcht
 Her wings to waft us, and so urg'd our keel. Chapman.

It needs not thy belief,
 If earth, industrious of herself, fetch day
 Travelling East; and with her part averse
 From the sun's beam, meet night; her other part Still luminous by his ray. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. viii.
 The hare laid himself down, and took a nap; for, says he,
 I can fetch up the tortoise when I please. L'Estrange.

10. To obtain as its price.
 During such a state, silver in the coin will never fetch as much as the silver in bullion. Locke.

TO FETCH. v. n. To move with a quick return.
 Like a shifted wind unto a sail,

It makes the course of thoughts to fetch about. Shakespeare.
FETCH. n. f. [from the verb.] A stratagem by which any thing is indirectly performed; by which one thing seems intended and another is done; a trick; an artifice.

An envious neighbour is easy to find,
 His cumbersome fetches are seldom behind:
 His fetch is to flatter, to get what he can;
 His purpose once gotten, a pin for thee than. Tuff. Husband.

It is a fetch of wit;
 You laying these slight fullies on my son,
 As 'twere a thing a little foil'd i' th' working. Shak. Hamlet.
 But Sidrophel, as full of tricks

As rota men of politicks,
 Streight cast about to over-reach
 Th' unwary conqueror with a fetch. Hudibras, p. ii.
 With this fetch he laughs at the trick he hath plaid me. Still.
 The fox had a fetch in't. L'Estrange, Fab. 42.

From these instances and fetches
 Thou mak'st of horses, clocks and watches,

Quoth

Quoth Mat, thou seem'st to mean
That Alma is a mere machine.

Prior.

FE'TCHER. n. f. [from fetch.] One that fetches any thing.

FE'TID. adj. [from foetidus, Latin; fetide, Fr.] Stinking; rancid; having a smell strong and offensive.

Most putrefactions are of an odious smell; for they smell either fetid or mouldy.

Bacon's Natural History.

In the most severe orders of the church of Rome, those who practise abstinence, feel after it fetid hot eruptions.

Plague, fiercest child of Nemesis divine,

Descends from Ethiopia's poison'd woods,

From stified Cairo's filth and fetid fields.

Thomson's Summer.

FE'TIDNESS. n. f. [from fetid.] The quality of stinking.

FE'TLOCK. n. f. [from feet and lock.] A tuft of hair as big as the hair of the mane that grows behind the pastern-joint of many horses: horses of a low size have scarce any such tuft.

Farrier's Dict.

Their wounded steeds

Fret fetlock deep in gore, and with wild rage

Yerk out their armed heels at their dead masters.

White were the fetlocks of his feet before,

And on his front a snowy star he bore.

FE'TOR. n. f. [from factor, Latin.] A stink; a stench; a strong and offensive smell

The fetor may discover itself by sweat and humour.

When the symptoms are attended with a fetor of any kind, such a disease will be cured by acedent substances, and none better than whey.

FE'TTER. n. f. It is commonly used in the plural fetters.

[from feet; pettere, Saxon.] Chains for the feet; chains by which walking is hindered.

Doctrine unto fools is as fetters on the feet, and like manacles on the right hand.

Drawing after me the chains and fetters whereunto I have been thirteen years tied, I have by other mens errors failed.

Passion's too fierce to be in fetters bound,

And nature flies him like enchanted ground.

The wretch in double fetters bound,

Your potent mercy may release.

I thought her pride

Had broke your fetters, and assur'd your freedom.

To FE'TTER. v. a. [from the noun.] To bind; to enchain;

to shackle; to tie.

Neither her great worthiness nor his own suffering for her,

could fetter his fickleness.

My conscience! thou art fetter'd

More than my thanks and wrists.

Fetter strong madness in a filken thread;

Charm ach with air, and agony with words.

Doth a master chide his servant because he doth not come, yet knows that the servant is chained and fettered, so as he cannot move?

A chain which man to fetter man has made;

By artifice impos'd, by fear obey'd.

To FE'TTLE. v. n. [A cant word from feel.] To do trifling business; to ply the hands without labour.

When your master is most busy in company, come in and pretend to fettle about the room; and if he chides, say you thought he rung the bell.

FE'TUS. n. f. [from foetus, Latin.] Any animal in embryo; any thing yet in the womb; any thing unborn.

Nor are we at leisure to examine that paradox of Hippocrates, which some learned physicians have of late revived, that the fetus respire in the womb.

FEUD. n. f. [from feahd, enmity, Saxon.] Quarrel; contention; opposition; war.

Though men would find such mortal feuds

In sharing of their publick goods.

In former ages it was a constant policy of France to raise and cherish intestine feuds and discords in the isle of Great Britain.

Scythia mourns

Our guilty wars, and earth's remotest regions

Lie half unpeopled by the feuds of Rome.

FEUDAL. adj. [from feudalis, low Latin.] Pertaining to fees, feus, or tenures by which lands are held of a superiour lord.

FEUDAL. n. f. A dependance; something held by tenure;

a fee; a f.u.

Wales, that was not always the feudal territory of England, having been governed by a prince of their own, had laws utterly strange to the laws of England.

FEUDATORY. n. f. [from feudal.] One who holds not in chief,

but by some conditional tenure from a superiour.

The duke of Parma was reasonably well tempted to be true to that enterprize, by no less promise than to be made a feudatory, or beneficiary king of England, under the seignory in chief of the pope, and the protection of the king of Spain.

FE'VER. n. f. [from fièvre, French; febris, Latin.] A disease in which the body is violently heated, and the pulse quickened, or in which heat and cold prevail by turns. It is sometimes continual, sometimes intermittent.

Think'st thou the fiery fever will go out

With titles blown from adulation?

Will it give place to flexure and low bending?

Duncan is in his grave;

After life's fitful fever he sleeps well.

Should not a ling'ring fever be remov'd;

Because it long has rag'd within my blood?

He had never dreamed in his life; 'till he had the fever he was then newly recovered of.

To FE'VER. v. a. [from the noun.] To put into a fever.

The white hand of a lady fever thee!

Shake to look on't.

FE'VERET. n. f. [from fever.] A slight fever; febricula.

A light feveret, or an old quartan ague, is not a sufficient excuse for non-appearance.

FE'VERFEW. n. f. [from febris and fugo, Latin.]

It has a fibrose root: the leaves are conjugated; and divided into many segments: the cup of the flower is squamose and hemispherical: the flowers grow in an umbel upon the top of the stalks, and the rays of the flower are generally white.

The species are nine; but the first, called common feverfew, is the sort used in medicine, and is found wild in many parts of England; but is, however, cultivated in medicinal gardens.

FE'VERISH. adj. [from fever.]

1. Troubled with a fever.

To other climates beasts and birds retire,

And feverish nature burns in her own fire.

When an animal that gives suck turns feverish, that is, its juices more alkaline, the milk turns from its native genuine whiteness to yellow.

2. Tending to a fever.

A feverish disorder disabled me.

3. Uncertain; inconstant; now hot, now cold.

We toss and turn about our feverish will,

When all our ease must come by lying still;

For all the happiness mankind can gain,

Is not in pleasure, but in rest from pain.

4. Hot; burning.

And now four days the sun had seen our woes,

Four nights the moon beheld th' incessant fire;

It seem'd as if the stars more sickly rose,

And farther from the feverish North retire.

FE'VERISHNESS. n. f. [from feverish.] A slight disorder of the feverish kind.

FE'VEROUS. adj. [from fièvreux-se, French, from fever.]

1. Troubled with a fever or ague.

Thou mad'st thine enemies shake, as if the world

Were feverous, and did tremble.

2. Having the nature of a fever.

All fe'rous kinds,

Convulsions, epilepsies, fierce catarrhs.

3. Having a tendency to produce fevers.

It hath been noted by the ancients, that southern winds, blowing much, without rain, do cause a feverous disposition of the year; but with rain, not.

FE'VERY. adj. [from fever.] Diseased with a fever.

O Rome, thy head

Is drown'd in sleep, and all thy body fev'ry.

FE'UILLAGE. n. f. [French.] A bunch or row of leaves.

I have done Homer's head; and I inclose the outline, that you may determine whether you would have it so large, or reduced to make room for feuillage or laurel round the oval.

FE'UILLEMORT. n. f. [French.] The colour of a faded leaf, corrupted commonly to philemot.

FE'UTERER. n. f. A dogkeeper: perhaps the cleaner of the kennel.

FEW. adj. [from feo, feopa, Saxon; fewa, Danish]

1. Not many; not in a great number.

We are left but few of many.

So much the thirst of honour fires the blood;

So many would be great, so few be good;

For who would virtue for herself regard,

Or wed without the portion of reward?

On Winter seas we fewer storms behold,

Than foul diseases that infect the fold.

Men have fewer or more simple ideas from without, according as the objects they converse with afford greater or less variety.

The fewer still you name, you wound the more;

Bond is but one, but Harpax is a score.

Party is the madness of many, for the gain of a few.

The imagination of a poet is a thing so nice and delicate, that it is no easy matter to find out images capable of giving pleasure to one of the few, who, in any age, have come up to that character.

2. Sometimes elliptically; not many words.

To answer both allegations at once, the very substance of that they contain is in few but this.

F I C

So having said, he thus to Eve in few:
 Say, woman, what is this which thou hast done? Milton.
 Thus Jupiter in few unfolds the charge. Dryden's Æn.
 The firm resolve I here in few disclose. Pope's Odyssey.

FE'WEL. n. f. [feu, French.] Combustible matter; materials for keeping fire: as firewood, coal.
 If a spark of error have thus far prevailed, falling even where the wood was green, and farthest off from any inclination unto furious attempts, must not the peril thereof be greater in men, whose minds are as dry fewel, apt beforehand unto tumults, seditions and broils? Hooker, Dedication.
 Others may give the fewel or the fire;
 But they the breath, that makes the flame, inspire. Denham.
 A known quantity of fewel, all kindled at once, will cause water to boil, which being lighted gradually will never be able to do it. Bentley's Sermons.

TO FE'WEL. v. a. [from the noun.] To feed with fewel.
 Never, alas! the dreadful name,
 That fewels the infernal flame. Cowley.

FE'WNESS. n. f. [from few.]
 1. Paucity; smallness of number.
 These, by reason of their fewness, I could not distinguish from the numbers of the rest with whom they are embodied. Dryden's Preface to the Hind and Panther.
 2. Paucity of words; brevity; conciseness.
Fewness and truth, 'tis thus. Shakesf. Meas. for Measure.

TO FEY. v. a. [veghen, Dutch.] To cleanse a ditch of mud.
 Such muddy deep ditches and pits in the field,
 That all a dry Summer no water will yield,
 By feying and casting that mud upon heaps,
 Commodities many the husbandman reaps. Tuss. Husband.

FIB. n. f. [A cant word among children.] A lye; a falsehood.
 Destroy his fib or sophistry; in vain,
 The creature's at his dirty work again. Pope's Epistles.
 I so often lie,
 Scarce Harvey's self has told more *fib*s than I. Pope.

TO FIB. v. n. [from the noun.] To lie; to tell lyes; to speak falsely.
 If you have any particular mark, whereby one may know when you fib, and when you speak truth, you had best tell it me. Arbuthnot's History of John Bull.

FIBBER. n. f. [from fib.] A teller of *fib*s.
FIBRE. n. f. [fibre, Fr. fibra, Latin.] A small thread or string; the first constituent parts of bodies.
 Now sliding streams the thirsty plants renew,
 And feed their fibres with reviving dew. Pope.
 2. A fibre, in physick, is an animal thread, of which there are different kinds: some are soft, flexible, and a little elastick; and these are either hollow, like small pipes, or spongy and full of little cells, as the nervous and fleshy fibres: others are more solid, flexible, and with a strong elasticity or spring, as the membranous and cartilaginous fibres: and a third sort are hard and flexible, as the fibres of the bones. Now of all those some are very sensible, and others destitute of all sense: some so very small as not to be easily perceived; and others, on the contrary, so big as to be plainly seen; and most of them, when examined with a microscope, appear to be composed of still smaller fibres: these fibres first constitute the substance of the bones, cartilages, ligaments, membranes, nerves, veins, arteries and muscles. And again, by the various texture and different combination of some or all of those parts, the more compound organs are framed; such as the lungs, stomach, liver, legs and arms, the sum of all which make up the body. Quincy.
 My heart sinks in me while I hear him speak,
 And every slacken'd fibre drops its hold,
 Like nature letting down the springs of life:
 The name of father awes me still. Dryd. Spanish Fryar.

FIBRIL. n. f. [fibrille, French.] A small fibre or string.
 The muscles consist of a number of fibres, and each fibre of an incredible number of little fibrils bound together, and divided into little cells. Cheyne's Phil. Princ.

FIBROUS. adj. [fibreux, French, from fibre.] Composed of fibres or stamina.
 The difference between bodies fibrous and bodies viscous is plain; for all wool and tow, and cotton and silk, have a greediness of moisture. Bacon's Natural History.
 I saw Petrus' arms employ'd around
 A well-grown oak, to root it from the ground;
 This way and that he wrench'd the fibrous bands,
 The trunk was like a sapling in his hands. Dryden.
 The fibrous and solid parts of plants pass unaltered through the intestines. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

FIBULA. n. f. [Latin.] The outer and lesser bone of the leg, much smaller than the tibia: it lies on the outside of the leg; and its upper end, which is not so high as the knee, receives the lateral knob of the upper end of the tibia into a small sinus, which it has in its inner side. Its lower end is received into the small sinus of the tibia, and then it extends into a large process, which forms the outer ankle. Quincy.

FICKLE. adj. [picol, Saxon.]
 1. Changeable; unconstant; irresolute; wavering; unsteady; mutable; changeful; without steady adherence.

F I D

Remember where we are,
 In France amongst a fickle wavering nation. Shak. Hen. VI.
 A slave, whose easy borrow'd pride
 Dwells in the fickle grace of her he follows. Shak. K. Lear.
 Or likeliest hovering dreams,
 The fickle pensioners of Morpheus' train. Milton.
 They know how fickle common lovers are;
 Their oaths and vows are cautiously believ'd;
 For few there are but have been once deceiv'd. Dryden.
 We in vain the fickle sex pursue,
 Who change the constant lover for the new. Prior.

2. Not fixed; subject to vicissitude.
 He would be loth
 Us to abolish; lest the adversary
 Triumph, and say, fickle their state, whom God
 Most favours! Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ix.

FICKLENESS. n. f. [from fickle.] Inconstancy; uncertainty; unsteadiness.
 Neither her great worthiness, nor his own suffering for her, could fetter his fickleness; but, before his marriage-day, he had taken to wife that Baccha of whom she complained. Sidney.
 Beware of fraud, beware of fickleness,
 In choice and change of thy dear loved dame. Fairy Queen.
 I am a soldier, and unapt to weep,
 Or to exclaim on fortune's fickleness. Shakesf. Henry VI.
 Instability of temper ought to be checked, when it disposes men to wander from one scheme of government to another, since such a fickleness cannot but be attended with fatal consequences. Addison's Freeholder, N<sup>o</sup>. 25.
 Whether out of fickleness or design I can't tell, I found that what she liked one day she disliked another. Addison.

FICKLY. adv. [from fickle.] Without certainty or stability.
 Do not now,
 Like a young wasteful heir, mortgage the hopes
 Of godlike majesty on bankrupt terms,
 To raise a present pow'r that's fickly held
 By the frail tenure of the people's will. Southern.

FICO. n. f. [Italian.] An act of contempt done with the fingers, expressing a fig for you.
 Having once recovered his fortress, he then gives the fico to all that his adversaries can by siege, force, or famine attempt against him. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

FICTILE. adj. [fictilis, Latin.] Moulded into form; manufactured by the potter.
 The cause of fragility is an impotency to be extended; and therefore stone is more fragil than metal, and so fictile earth is more fragil than crude earth. Bacon's Nat. History.

FICTION. n. f. [fictio, Latin; fiction, French.]
 1. The act of feigning or inventing.
 If the presence of God in the image, by a mere fiction of the mind, be a sufficient ground to worship that image, is not God's real presence in every creature a far better ground to worship it? Stillington.
Fiction is of the essence of poetry, as well as of painting: there is a resemblance in one of human bodies, things, and actions, which are not real; and in the other of a true story by a fiction. Dryden's Dufresnoy.
 2. The thing feigned or invented.
 If through mine ears pierce any consolations,
 By wise discourse, sweet tunes, or poets fictions;
 If ought I cease these hideous exclamations,
 While that my soul, she, she lives in affliction. Sidney.
 So also was the fiction of those golden apples kept by a dragon, taken from the serpent, which tempted Evah. Raleigh.

3. A falsehood; a lye.

FICTIOUS. adj. [fictus, Latin.] Fictitious; imaginary; invented. A word coined by Prior.
 With fancy'd rules and arbitrary laws
 Matter and motion man restrains,
 And study'd lines and fictious circles draws. Prior.

FICTITIOUS. adj. [fictitius, Latin.]
 1. Counterfeit; false; not genuine.
 Draw him strictly so,
 That all who view the piece may know
 He needs no trappings of fictitious fame. Dryden.
 2. Feigned; imaginary.
 The human persons are as fictitious as the airy ones; and Belinda resembles you in nothing but in beauty. Pope.
 3. Not real; not true.
 Milton, sensible of this defect in the subject of his poem, brought into it two characters of a shadowy and fictitious nature, in the persons of sin and death, by which means he has interwoven in his fable a very beautiful allegory. Addis. Spect.

FICTITIOUSLY. adv. [from fictitious.] Falsely; counterfeitedly.
 These pieces are fictitiously set down, and have no copy in nature. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. v. c. 20.

FID. n. f. [fitto, Italian.] A pointed iron with which seamen untwist their cords. Skinner.

FIDDLE. n. f. [fiedele, Saxon; vedel, Dutch; fidel, German; fidicula, Latin; fiill, Erse.]
 1. A stringed instrument of musick; a violin.

In trials of musical skill, the judges did not crown the fiddle; but the performer.

Stillington.

The adventure of the bear and fiddle

Is sung; but breaks off in the middle.

Hudibras.

She tried the fiddle all over, by drawing the bow over every part of the strings; but could not, for her heart, find where-about the tune lay.

Addison's Guardian, N<sup>o</sup>. 93.

TO FIDDLER. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To play upon a fiddle.

Themistocles being desired at a feast to touch a lute, he said he could not fiddle, but he could make a small town a great city.

Bacon's Essays.

Others import yet nobler arts from France,

Teach kings to fiddle, and make senates dance.

Pope.

2. To trifle; to shift the hands often, and do nothing, like a fellow that plays upon a fiddle.

A cunning fellow observed, that old Lewis had stole away part of the map, and saw him fiddling and turning the map, trying to join the two pieces together.

Arbuth. H of J. Bull.

Good cooks cannot abide what they justly call fiddling work, where abundance of time is spent, and little done.

Swift.

FIDDLERFADDLE. n. f. [A cant word.] Trifles.

She said that their grandfather had a horse shot at Edgehill, and their uncle was at the siege of Buda; with abundance of fiddlefaddle of the same nature.

Spectator, N<sup>o</sup>. 299.

FIDDLERFADDLE. adj. Trifling; giving trouble, or making a bustle about nothing.

She was a troublesome fiddlefaddle old woman, and so ceremonious that there was no bearing of her.

Arbuthn. J. Bull.

FIDDLER. n. f. [from fiddle.] A musician; one that plays upon the fiddle.

Let no sawcy fiddler presume to intrude,

Unless he is sent for to vary our blifs.

Ben. Johnson.

Nero put the fiddlers to death, for being more skilful in the trade than he was.

Taylor's Rule of living holy.

These will appear such chits in story,

'Twill turn all politicks to jests,

To be repeated like John Dory,

When fiddlers sing at feasts.

Dryden.

When mifs delights in her spinnet,

A fiddler may a fortune get.

Swift.

FIDDLSTICK. n. f. [fiddle and stick.] The bow and hair which a fiddler draws over the strings of a fiddle.

His grisly beard was long and thick,

With which he strung his fiddlestick.

Hudibras, p. i.

FIDDLSTRING. n. f. [fiddle and string.] The string of a fiddle; that which makes the noise.

A fiddlestring, moistened with water, will sink a note in a little time, and consequently must be relaxed or lengthened one sixteenth.

Arbuthnot on Air.

FIDELITY. n. f. [fideltas, Latin; fidélité, French.]

1. Honesty; veracity.

The church, by her publick reading of the book of God, preached only as a witness; now the principal thing required in a witness is a fidélité.

Hooker, b. v. f. 19.

They mistake credulity for fidélité.

Clarke.

TO FIDGE. v. n. [A cant word.] To move nimbly and

TO FIDGET. v. n. [irregularly.] It implies in Scotland agitation.

Tim, thou'rt the Punch to stir up trouble in;

You wriggle, fidge, and make a rout,

Put all your brother puppets out;

Run on in a perpetual round,

To teaze, perplex, disturb, confound.

Swift.

FIDUCIAL. adj. [fiducia, Latin.] Confident; undoubting.

Faith is cordial, and such as God will accept of, when it affords fiducial reliance on the promises, and obediential submission to the commands.

Hammond's Pract. Catech.

FIDUCIARY. n. f. [fiduciarius, Latin.]

1. One who holds any thing in trust.

2. One who depends on faith without works.

The second obstructive is that of the fiduciary, that faith is the only instrument of his justification; and excludes good works from contributing any thing toward it.

Hammond.

FIDUCIARY. adj.

1. Confident; steady; undoubting; untouched with doubt.

That faith, which is required of us, is then perfect, when it produces in us a fiducial assent to whatever the Gospel has revealed.

Wake's Preparation for Death.

2. Not to be doubted.

Elaiana can rely no where upon mere love and fiducial obedience, unless at her own home, where she is exemplarily loyal to herself in a high exact obedience.

Howel's Voc. Forest.

FIEF. n. f. [fief, French.] A fee; a manor; a possession held by some tenure of a superiour.

To the next realm she stretch'd her sway,

For painture near adjoining lay,

A plenteous province and alluring prey;

A chamber of dependencies was fram'd,

And the whole fief, in right of poetry, she claim'd.

Dryd.

As they were honoured by great privileges, so their lands were in the nature of fiefs, for which the possessors were obliged to do personal service at sea.

Arbuthnot on Coins.

FIELD. n. f. [feld, Saxon; feld, German; veld, Dutch.]

1. Ground not inhabited; not built on.

Live with me, and be my love,

And we will all the pleasure prove,

That hills and vallies, dale and field;

And all the craggy mountains yield.

Raleigh.

By the civil law the corpse of persons deceased were buried out of the city in the fields.

Ayliffe's Parergon.

I have seen her rise from her bed.

Shakespeare's Macbeth.

5. The ground of battle.

What though the field be lost,

All is not lost.

Milton's Paradise Lost, b. i.

When a man is in the field, a moderate skill in fencing rather exposes him to the sword of his enemy than secures him from it.

Locke.

6. A battle; a campaign; the action of an army while it keeps the field.

You maintain several factions;

And whilst a field should be dispatch'd and fought,

You are disputing of your generals.

Shakesp. Henry VI.

7. A wide expanse.

The god a clearer space for heav'n design'd;

Where fields of light and liquid ether flow,

Purg'd from the pond'rous dregs of earth below.

Dryden.

Ask of yonder argent fields above,

Why Jove's satellites are less than Jove.

Pope's Ess. on Man.

8. Space; compass; extent.

The ill-natured man gives himself a large field to expatiate in: he exposes failings in human nature.

Addison's Spectator.

I should enter upon a field too wide, and too much beaten, if I should display all the advantages of peace.

Smalridge.

Who can this field of miracles survey,

And not with Galen all in rapture say,

Behold a God, adore him and obey.

Blackmore's Creation.

9. The ground or blank space on which figures are drawn.

Let the field or ground of the picture be clean, light, and well united with colour.

Dryden's Dufresnoy.

10. [In heraldry.] The surface of a shield.

FIELDED. adj. [from field.] Being in field of battle.

Now, Mars, I pr'ythee, make us quick in work;

That we with smoking swords may march from hence,

To help our fielded friends.

Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

FIELD-BASIL. n. f. [field and basil.] A plant with a labiated flower, consisting of one leaf, whose upper lip is upright, roundish, and generally split in two; but the beard, or under lip, is divided into three segments: these flowers are disposed in whorles round the stalks, and are succeeded by oblong seeds.

Miller.

FIELDBED. n. f. [field and bed.] A bed contrived to be set up easily in the field.

Romeo, good-night; I'll to my trucklebed,

This fieldbed is too cold for me to sleep.

Shak. Rom. and Jul.

FIELDFARE. n. f. [feld and faran, to wander in the fields.] A bird.

Winter birds, as woodcocks and fieldfares, if they come early out of the northern countries, with us shew cold Winters.

Shakespeare's K. Lear.

2. Any infernal being.

What now, had I a body again, I could,

Coming from hell; what fiends would wish should be,

And Hannibal could not have wish'd to see.

B. Johnf. Cat.

The hell-hounds, as ungorg'd with flesh and blood,

Pursue their prey, and seek their wonted food;

The fiend remounts his courser.

Dryden's Theo. and Hon.

O woman!

F I E

- O woman! woman! when to ill thy mind
Is bent, all hell contains no fouler fiend. Pope's Odyssey.
- FIERCE. adj. [fier, French; ferox, Latin.]
1. Savage; ravenous; easily enraged.
Thou huntest me, as a fierce lion. Job.
  2. Vehement in rage; eager of mischief.
Destruction enters in the treacherous wood,
And vengeful slaughter, fierce for human blood. Pope.
Tyrants fierce, that unrelenting die Pope.
With that the god, whose earthquakes rock the ground,
Fierce to Phœacia crost the vast profound. Pope's Odyssey.
  3. Violent; outrageous Curst be their anger, for it was fierce; and their wrath, for it was cruel. Gen. xlix. 7.
  4. Passionate; angry; furious.
This fierce abridgment
Hath to it circumstantial branches, which Distinction should be rich in. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.
A man brings his mind to be positive and fierce for positions whose evidence he has never examined. Locke.
  5. Strong; forcible.
The ships, though so great, are driven of fierce winds;
yet are they turned about with a very small helm. Ja. iii. 2.
- FIERCELY. adv. [from fierce.] Violently; furiously.
Battle join'd, and both sides fiercely fought. Shak. H. VI.
The defendants, fiercely assailed by their enemies before, and beaten with the great ordnance behind, were grievously distressed. Knolles's History of the Turks.
The air, if very cold, irritateth the flame, and maketh it burn more fiercely, as fire scorseth in frosty weather, and so furthereth the consumption. Bacon's Natural History.
- FIERCENESS. n. f. [from fierce.]
1. Ferocity; savageness.
The same defect of heat which gives a fierceness to our natures, may contribute to that roughness of our language.
Swift's Letter to the Lord High Treasurer.
  2. Eagerness for blood; fury.
Suddenly there came out of a wood a monstrous lion, with a she-bear not far from him, of little less fierceness. Sidney.
  3. Quickness to attack; keenness in anger and resentment.
The Greeks are strong, and skillful to their strength,
Fierce to their skill, and to their fierceness valiant. Shakesf.
  4. Violence; outrageous passion.
His pride and brutal fierceness I abhor;
But scorn your mean suspicions of me more. Dryd. Aureng.
- FIERIFA'CIAS. [In law.] A judicial writ, that lies at all times within the year and day, for him that has recovered in an action of debt or damages, to the sheriff, to command him to levy the debt, or the damages of his goods, against whom the recovery was had. Cowel.
- FIERINESS. n. f. [from fiery.]
1. Hot qualities; heat; acrimony.
The ashes, by their heat, their fieriness, and their dryness, belong to the element of earth. Boyle.
  2. Heat of temper; intellectual ardour.
The Italians, notwithstanding their natural fieriness of temper, affect always to appear sober and sedate. Addison.
- FIERY. adj. [from fire.]
1. Consisting of fire.
Scarcely had Phœbus in the gloomy East
Yet harnessed his fiery footed team,
Ne rear'd above the earth his flaming crest,
When the last deadly smoak aloft did steam. Fairy Queen.
I know, thou'dst rather
Follow thine enemy in a fiery gulph
Than flatter him in a bower. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
  2. Hot like fire.
Hath thy fiery heart so parcht thy entrails,
That not a tear can fall for Rutland's death? Shak. H. VI.
  3. Vehement; ardent; active.
Then fiery expedition be my wing,
Jove's Mercury, and herald for a king. Shakesf. Rich. III.
I drew this gallant head of war,
And cull'd these fiery spirits from the world,
To outlook conquest, and to win renown
Ev'n in the jaws of danger and of death. Shakesf. K. John.
  4. Passionate; outrageous; easily provoked.
You know the fiery quality of the duke;
How unremoveable, and fixt he is
In his own course. Shakespeare's King Lear.
  5. Unrestrained; fierce.
Then, as I said, the duke, great Bolingbroke,
Mounted upon a hot and fiery steed,
Which his aspiring rider seem'd to know,
With slow but stately pace kept on his course. Shak. R. II.
Through Elis and the Grecian towns he flew;
Th' audacious wretch four fiery coursfers drew. Dryden.
  6. Heated by fire.
The sword which is made fiery doth not only cut, by reason of the sharpness which simply it hath, but also burn by means of that heat which it hath from fire. Hooker, b. v. 54.

F I G

- See! from the brake the whirring pheasant springs,
And mounts exulting on triumphant wings:
Short is his joy; he feels the fiery wound,
Flutters in blood, and panting beats the ground. Pope.
- FIFE. n. f. [ffie, French.] A pipe blown to the drum; military wind-musick.
Farewell the plumed troops, and the big war
That make ambition virtue! oh farewell!
Farewell the neighing steed and the shrill trump,
The spirit-stirring drum, th' ear-piercing ffie. Shak. Othello.
Thus the gay victim, with fresh garlands crown'd,
Pleas'd with the sacred ffie's enlivening sound,
Through gazing crowds in solemn state proceeds. Phillips.
- FIFTEEN. adj. [pyfeyne, Saxon.] Five and ten.
I have dreamed and slept above some fifteen years and more. Shakespeare's Taming of the Shrew.
- FIFTEENTH. adj. [pyfteoða, Sax.] The ordinal of fifteen;
the fifth after the tenth.
A fifteenth part of silver incorporate with gold, will not be recovered by any water of separation, except you put a greater quanty of silver to draw up the less. Bacon's Natural History.
London sends but four burgesies to parliament, although it bear the fifteenth part of the charge of the whole nation in all publick taxes and levies. Graunt's Bills of Mortality.
- FIFTH. adj. [pyfta, Saxon.]
1. The ordinal of five; the next to the fourth.
With smiling aspect you serenely move,
In your fifth orb, and rule the realm of love. Dryden.
Just as I wish'd, the lots were cast on four,
Myself the fifth. Pope's Odyssey, b. ix.
  2. All the ordinals are taken elliptically for the part which they expres: a fifth, a fifth part; a third, a third part.
The publick shall have lost four fifths of its annual income for ever. Swift.
- FIFTHLY. adv. [from fifth.] In the fifth place.
Fifthly, living creatures have a more exact figure than plants. Bacon's Natural History, N<sup>o</sup>. 607.
- FIFTIETH. adj. [pyfteozopa, Saxon.] The ordinal of fifty.
If this medium be rarer within the sun's body than at its surface, and rarer there than at the hundred part of an inch from its body, and rarer there than at the fiftieth part of an inch from its body, and rarer there than at the orb of Saturn, I see no reason why the increase of density should stop any where. Newton's Opt.
- FIFTY. adj. [pyftiz, Saxon.] Five tens.
A wither'd hermit, five score Winters worn,
Might shake off fifty looking in her eye. Shakespeare.
Judas ordained captains over thousands, hundreds, fifties, and tens. 1 Mac. iii. 55.
The breadth of the ark shall be fifty cubits. Gen. vi. 15.
In the Hebrew there is a particle consisting but of one letter, of which there are reckoned up above fifty several significations. Locke.
- FIG. n. f. [figus, Latin; figo, Spanish; figue, French.]
1. A tree that bears figs.
The characters are: the flowers, which are always inclosed in the middle of the fruit, consist of the leaf, and are male and female in the same fruit: the male flowers are situated towards the crown of the fruit; and the female, growing near the stalk, are succeeded by small hard seeds: the intire fruit is, for the most part, turbinated and globular, or of an oval shape, is fleshy, and of a sweet taste. Miller.
Full on its crown a fig's green branches rise,
And shoot a leafy forest to the skies. Pope's Odyssey, b. xii.
Or lead me through the maze,
Embowering endless of the Indian fig. Thomson's Summer.
  2. A luscious soft fruit; the fruit of the figtree.
It maketh figs better, if a figtree, when it beginneth to put forth leaves, have his top cut off. Bacon's Nat. History.
Figs are great subduers of acrimony. Arbuthnot on Diet.
- TO FIG. v. a. [See FICO.]
1. To insult with fico's or contemptuous motions of the fingers.
When Pistol lies, do this, and fig me like
The bragging Spaniard. Shakespeare's Henry IV.
  2. To put something usefess into one's head. Low cant.
Away to the sow she goes, and figs her in the crown with another story. L'Estrange.
- FIGAPPLE. n. f. A fruit.
A figapple hath no core or kernel, in these resembling a fig, and differing from other apples. Mortimer's Husbandry.
- FIGMARIGOLD. n. f. A plant. It is succulent, and has the appearance of houseleek: the leaves grow opposite by pairs. Mill.
- TO FIGHT. v. n. preter. fought; part. pass. fought. [feohan, Saxon.]
1. To contend in battle; to war; to make war; to battle; to contend in arms. It is used both of armies and single combatants.
King Henry, be thy title right or wrong,
Lord Clifford vows to fight in thy defence. Shak. Hen. VI.
Fierce fiery warriors fight upon the clouds
In ranks and squadrons, and right form of war. Shakesp.
The common question is, if we must now surrender Spain,
what

what have we been fighting for all this while? The answer is ready: we have been fighting for the ruin of the publick interest, and the advancement of a private. Swift.

For her confederate nations fought; and kings were slain, Troy was o'erthrown, and a whole empire fell. Phillips.

2. To combat; to duel; to contend in single fight. One shall undertake to fight against another. z Esdr. xlii.

The poor wren,
The most diminutive of birds, will fight,
The young ones in her nest, against the owl. Shakesf. Macb.

3. To act as a soldier in any case.
Richard, that robb'd the lion of his heart,
And fought the holy wars in Palestine,
By this brave duke came early to his grave. Shak. K. John.

Greatly unfortunate, he fights the cause
Of honour, virtue, liberty and Rome. Addison's Cato.

4. It has with before the person opposed.
5. To contend.

The hot and cold, the dry and humid fight. Sandys.
To FIGHT. v. a. To war against; to combat against.

Himself alone, an equal match he boasts,
To fight the Phrygian and the Ausonian hosts. Dryd. Æn.

FIGHT. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Battle.

2. Combat; duel.
Herilus in single fight I slew,
Whom with three lives Feronia did endue;
And thrice I sent him to the Stygian shore,
'Till the last ebbing soul return'd no more. Dryden's Æn.

3. Something to screen the combatants in ships.

FIGHTER. n. f. [from fight.] Warriour; duellist.
I will return again into the house, and desire some conduct of the lady: I am no fighter. Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.

O, 'tis the coldest youth upon a charge,
The most deliberate fighter! Dryden's All for Love.

FIGHTING. participial adj. [from fight.]
1. Qualified for war; fit for battle.

An host of fighting men went out to war by bands. 2 Chro.
2. Occupied by war; being the scene of war.

In fighting fields, as far the spear I throw
As flies the arrow from the well-drawn bow. Pope's Odyss.

FIGMENT. n. f. [figmentum, Latin] An invention; a fiction; the idea feigned.

Upon the like grounds was raised the figment of Briareus, who, dwelling in a city called Hecatonchiria, the fancies of those times assigned him an hundred hands. Brown's Vulg. Err.

The most frightful passages, probably so strange as to be hardly credible; it carried rather an appearance of figment and invention, in those that handed down the memory of it, than of truth and reality. Woodward's Natural History.

FIGPECKER. n. f. [fig and peck.] A bird.

FIGULATE. adj. [from figulus, Latin.] Made of potters clay.

FIGURABLE. adj. [from figuro, Latin.] Capable of being brought to certain form, and retained in it. Thus lead is figurable, but not water.

The differences of impressible and not impressible, figurable and not figurable, scissible and not scissible, are plebeian notions. Bacon's Natural History.

FIGURABILITY. n. f. [from figurable.] The quality of being capable of a certain and stable form.

FIGURAL. adj. [from figure.]
1. Represented by delineation.

Incongruities have been committed by geographers in the figural resemblances of several regions. Brown's Vulg. Err.

2. FIGURAL Numbers. Such numbers as do or may represent some geometrical figure, in relation to which they are always considered, and are either lineary, superficial, or solid. Harris.

FIGURATE. adj. [figuratus, Latin.]
1. Of a certain and determinate form.

Plants are all figurate and determinate, which inanimate bodies are not; for look how far the spirit is able to spread and continue itself, so far goeth the shape or figure, and then is determined. Bacon.

2. Resembling any thing of a determinate form: as, figurate stones retaining the forms of shells in which they were formed by the deluge.

3. FIGURATE Counterpoint. [In musick.] That wherein there is a mixture of discords along with the concords. Harris.

5. FIGURATE Descant. [In musick.] That wherein discords are concerned, as well, though not so much, as concords; and may well be termed the ornament or rhetorical part of musick, in regard that in this are introduced all the varieties of points, figures, syncopes, diversities of measures, and whatever else is capable of adorning the composition. Harris.

FIGURATION. n. f. [figuratus, Latin.]
1. Determination to a certain form.

Neither doth the wind, as far as it carrieth a voice, with motion thereof confound any of the delicate and articulate figurations of the air in variety of words. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

2. The act of giving a certain form.

If motion be in a certain order, there followeth vivification and figuration in living creatures perfect. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

FIGURATIVE. adj. [figurativus, Fr. from figura, Latin.]
1. Representing something else; typical; representative.

This, they will say, was figurative, and served by God's appointment but for a time, to shadow out the true everlasting glory of a more divine sanctity; where into Christ being long since entered, it seemeth that all these curious exornations should rather cease. Hooker, b. v. f. 15.

2. Changed by rhetorical figures from the primitive meaning;
not literal.

How often have we been railed at for understanding words in a figurative sense, which cannot be literally understood without overthrowing the plainest evidence of sense and reason. Stillingfleet's Def. of Disc. on Rom. Idol.

This is a figurative expression, where the words are used in a different sense from what they signify in their first ordinary intention. Rogers, Sermon 14.

3. Full of figures; full of rhetorical exornations; full of changes from the original sense.

Sublime subjects ought to be adorned with the sublimest and with the most figurative expressions. Dryden's Juvenal, Pref.

FIGURATIVELY. adj. [from figurative.] By a figure; in a sense different from that which words originally imply; not literally.

The custom of the apostle is figuratively to transfer to himself, in the first person, what belongs to others. Hammond.

The words are different, but the sense is still the same; for therein are figuratively intended Uzziah and Ezechias. Brown.

Satyr is a kind of poetry in which human vices are reprehended, partly dramatically, partly simply; but, for the most part, figuratively and occultly. Dryden's Juvenal, Dedicat.

1. The form of any thing as terminated by the outline.

Flowers have all exquisite figures, and the flower numbers are chiefly five and four; as in primroses, briar-roses, single muskroses, single pinks and gilliflowers, &c. which have five leaves; lilies, flower-de-luces, borage, buglafs, &c. which have four leaves. Bacon's Natural History.

Men find green clay that is soft as long as it is in the water, so that one may print on it all kind of figures, and give it what shape one pleases. Boyle.

Figures are properly modifications of bodies; for pure space is not any where terminated, nor can be: whether there be or be not body in it, it is uniformly continued. Locke.

2. Shape; form; semblance.
He hath borne himself beyond the promise of his age, doing in the figure of a lamb the feats of a lion. Shakespeare.

3. Person; external form; appearance graceful or inelegant, mean or grand.

The blue German shall the Tigris drink,
E'er I, forsaking gratitude and truth,
Forget the figure of that godlike youth. Dryden's Virgil.

I was charmed with the gracefulness of his figure and delivery, as well as with his discourses. Addison's Spectator.

A good figure, or person, in man or woman, gives credit at first sight to the choice of either. Clarissa.

4. Distinguished appearance; eminence; remarkable character.
While fortune favour'd, while his arms support
The cause, and rul'd the counsels of the court,
I made some figure there; nor was my name
Obscure, nor I without my share of fame. Dryden's Æn.

The speech, I believe, was not so much designed by the knight to inform the court, as to give him a figure in my eye, and keep up his credit in the country. Addison's Spectator.

Not a woman shall be unexplained that makes a figure either as a maid, a wife, or a widow. Addison's Guardian.

Whether or no they have done well to set you up for making another kind of figure, time will witness. Addison.

Many princes made very ill figures upon the throne, who before were the favourites of the people. Addison's Freeholder.

5. A statue; an image; something formed in resemblance of somewhat else.

The several statues, which seemed at a distance to be made of the whitest marble, were nothing else but so many figures in snow. Addison's Freeholder.

6. Representations in painting; persons exhibited in colours.
In the principal figures of a picture the painter is to employ the finews of his art; for in them consists the principal beauty of his work. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

My favourite books and pictures sell;
Kindly throw in a little figure,
And set the price upon the bigger. Prior.

7. Arrangement; disposition; modification.
The figure of a syllogism is the proper disposition of the middle term with the parts of the question. Watts's Logick.

8. A character denoting a number.
Hearts, tongues, figures, scribes, bards, poets cannot Think, speak, cast, write, sing, number
His love to Anthony. Shakespeare's Ant. and Cleopatra.

He that seeketh to be eminent amongst able men, hath a great great task; but that is ever good for the publick: but he that plots to be the only figure among cyphers, is the decay of a whole age. Bacon's Essays.

As in accounts cyphers and figures pass for real fums, so in human affairs words pass for things themselves. South's Sermon.

9. The horoscope; the diagram of the aspects of the astrological houses.

We do not know what's brought to pass under the profession of fortunetelling: she works by charms, by spells, by the figure, and dawbry beyond our element. Shakespeare.

He set a figure to discover

If you were fled to Rye or Dover. Hudibras, p. iii. cant. 1.

Figure flingers and star-gazers pretend to foretell the fortunes of kingdoms, and have no foresight in what concerns themselves. L'Estrange, Fable 94.

10. [In theology.] Type representative.

Who was the figure of him that is to come. Romans.

11. [In rhetoric.] Any mode of speaking in which words are detorted from their literal and primitive sense. In strict acceptation, the change of a word is a trope, and any affection of a sentence a figure; but they are generally confounded by the exactest writers.

Silken terms precise,

Three pil'd hyperboles, spruce affectation,

Figures pedantical, these Summer flies

Have blown me full of maggot ostentation. Shakespeare.

Here is a strange figure invented against the plain and natural sense of the words; for by praying to bestow, must be understood only praying to pray. Stillingfleet.

They have been taught rhetoric, but yet never taught to express themselves in the language they are always to use; as if the names of the figures that embellished the discourse of those, who understood the art of speaking, were the very art and skill of speaking well. Locke.

12. [In grammar.] Any deviation from the rules of analogy or syntax.

TO FIGURE. v. a. [figuro, Latin.]

1. To form into any determinate shape.

Trees and herbs, in the growing forth of their boughs and branches, are not figured, and keep no order. Bacon.

Accept this goblet, rough with figur'd gold. Dryd. Virgil.

2. To show by a corporeal resemblance: as in picture or statuary.

Arachne figur'd how Jove did abuse

Europa like a bull, and on his back

Her through the sea did bear; so lively seen,

That it true sea, and true bull ye would ween. Spenser.

Now marks the course of rolling orbs on high,

O'er figur'd worlds now travels with his eye. Pope.

3. To cover or adorn with figures.

I'll give my jewels for a set of beads,

My gorgeous palace for a hermitage,

My gay apparel for an almsman's gown,

My figur'd goblets for a dish of wood. Shakesp. Richard II.

4. To diversify; to variegate with adventitious forms or matter.

But this effusion of such manly drops,

Startle mine eyes, and makes me more amaz'd

Than had I seen the vaulty top of heav'n

Figur'd quite o'er with burning meteors. Shakesp. K. John.

5. To represent by a typical or figurative resemblance.

When sacraments are said to be visible signs of invisible grace, we thereby conceive how grace is indeed the very end for which these heavenly mysteries were instituted; and the matter whereof they consist is such as signifieth, figureth, and representeth their end. Hooker, b. v.

There is a history in all mens lives,

Figuring the nature of the times deceased. Shakesp. Hen. IV.

Marriage rings are not of this stuff:

Oh! why should ought less precious or less tough

The emperor appears as a rising sun, and holds a globe in his hand to figure out the earth that is enlightened and actuated by his beams. Addison on ancient Medals.

6. To image in the mind.

None that feels sensibly the decays of age, and his life wearing off, can figure to himself those imaginary charms in riches and praise, that men are apt to do in the warmth of their blood. Temple.

If love, alas! be pain, the pain I bear

No thought can figure, and no tongue declare. Prior.

7. To prefigure; to foreshow.

Three glorious suns, each one a perfect sun,

In this the heaven figures some event. Shakesp. Henry VI.

8. To form figuratively; to use in a sense not literal.

Figured and metaphorical expressions do well to illustrate more abstruse and unfamiliar ideas, which the mind is not yet thoroughly accustomed to. Locke.

Quacks, figure-flingers, pettifoggers, and republican plotters cannot well live without it. Collier of Confidence.

FIGWORT. n. f. [fig and wort.] A plant.

It hath an anomalous flower, consisting of one leaf, gaping at both sides, and generally globular, cut as it were into two lips, under the upper one of which are two small leaves. Mill.

FILACEOUS. adj. [from filum, Lat.] Consisting of threads; composed of threads.

They make cables of the bark of lime-trees: it is the stalk that maketh the filaceous matter commonly, and sometimes the down that groweth above. Bacon's Natural History.

FILACER. n. f. [filaxarius, low Lat. filum.] An officer in the Common Pleas, so called because he files those writs whereon he makes process. There are fourteen of them in their several divisions and counties: they make out all original process, as well real as personal and mixt. Harris.

FILAMENT. n. f. [filament, Fr. filamenta, Latin.] A slender thread; a body slender and long like a thread.

The effluvium passing out in a smaller thread, and more enlightened filament, it stirreth not the bodies interposed. Bro.

The lungs of consumptives have been consumed, nothing remaining but the ambient membrane, and a number of withered veins and filaments. Harvey on Consumptions.

The ever-rolling orb's impulsive ray

On the next threads and filaments does bear,

Which form the springy texture of the air

And those still strike the next, 'till to the sight

The quick vibration propagates the light. Blackm. Creation

The dung of horses is nothing but the filaments of the hay, and as such combustible. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

FILBERT. n. f. [This is derived by Junius and Skinner from the long beards or husks, as corrupted from full beard, or full of beard. It probably had its name, like many other fruits, from some one that introduced or cultivated it; and is therefore corrupted from Filbert or Filibert, the name of him who brought it hither.] A fine hazel nut with a thin shell.

In August comes fruit of all sorts; as plumbs, pears, apricots, barberries, filberts, muskmelons, monkshoods of all colours. Bacon, Essay 47.

Thou hast a brain, such as it is indeed!

On what else should thy worm of fancy feed?

Yet in a filbert I have often known

Maggots survive, when all the kernel's gone. Dorset.

There is also another kind, called the filbert of Constantinople; the leaves and fruit of which are bigger than either of the former: the best are those of a thin shell. Mortimer.

TO FILCH. v. a. [A word of uncertain etymology. The French word filer, from which some derive it, is of very late production, and therefore cannot be its original.] To steal; to take by theft; to pilfer; to pillage; to rob; to take by robbery. It is usually spoken of petty thefts.

He shall find his wealth wonderfully enlarged by keeping his cattle in inclosures, where they shall always have safe being, that none are continually filched and stolen. Spenser.

The champion robbeth by night,

And prowleth and filcheth by daie. Tusser's Husbandry.

Who steals my purse, steals trash; 'tis something, nothing;

'Twas mine, 'tis his, and has been slave to thousands;

But he that filches from me my good name,

Robs me of that which not enriches him,

And makes me poor indeed. Shakespeare's Othello.

His thefts were too open; his filching was like an unskilful finger, he kept no time. Shakesp. Merry Wives of Windsor.

He could discern cities like hives of bees, wherein every bee did nought else but sting; some like hornets, some like filching wasps, others as drones. Burton on Melancholy.

What made thee venture to betray,

And filch the lady's heart away. Hudibras, p. iii. cant. 1.

The pismire was formerly a husbandman, that secretly filched away his neighbour's goods. L'Estrange's Fables.

Fain would they filch that little food away,

While unrestrain'd those happy gluttons prey. Dryden.

So speeds the wily fox, alarm'd by fear,

Who lately filch'd the turkey's callow care. Gay's Trivia.

FILCHER. n. f. [from filch.] A thief; a petty robber.

FILE. n. f. [file, French; filum, a thread, Latin.]

1. A thread.

But let me resume the file of my relation, which this object of books, best agreeable to my course of life, hath a little interrupted. Wotton.

2. A line on which papers are strung to keep them in order.

All records, wherein there was any memory of the king's attainder, should be cancelled and taken off the file. Bacon.

The petitions being thus prepared, do you continually set apart an hour in a day to peruse those, and then rank them into several files, according to the subject matters. Bacon.

Th' apothecary-train is wholly blind;

From files a random recipe they take,

And many deaths of one prescription make. Dryden.

3. A catalogue; roll; series.

Our present musters grow upon the file

To five and twenty thousand men of choice. Shakesp. H. IV.

The valu'd file

Distinguishes the swift, the slow, the subtle. Shak. Macb.

4. A line of soldiers ranged one behind another.

Those goodly eyes,

That o'er the files and musters of the war

Have glow'd like plated Mars, now bend, now turn

Upon a tawny front. Shakespeare's Ant. and Cleopatra.

So saying, on he led his radiant files,

Dazzling the moon. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. iv.

5. [feol, Saxon; vijle, Dutch.] An instrument to rub down prominences.

The rough or coarse-toothed file, if it be large, is called a rubber, and is to take off the unevenness of your work which the hammer made in the forging: the bastard-toothed file is to take out of your work the deep cuts, or file-strokes, the rough file made: the fine-toothed file is to take out the cuts, or file-strokes, the bastard file made; and the smooth file is to take out those cuts, or file-strokes, that the fine file made. Moxon.

Yet they had a file for the mattocks and for the coulter.

1 Sa. xiii. 21.

The smiths and armourers on palfreys ride,

Files in their hands and hammers at their side,

And nails for loosen'd spears, and thongs for shields provide.

Dryden's Knight's Tale.

FILECUTTER. s. n. [file and cutter.] A maker of files.

Gad-steel is a tough sort of steel: filecutters use it to make their chisels, with which they cut their files. Moxon.

TO FILE. v. a. [from filum, a thread.]

1. To string upon a thread or wire. Whence to file a bile is to offer it in its order to the notice of the judge.

From the day his first bill was filed he began to collect reports. Arbuthnot and Pope's Mart. Scrib.

2. [from feolan, Saxon.] To cut with a file.

They which would file away most from the largeness of that offer, do in more sparing terms acknowledge little less.

Hooker, b. v. f. 27.

His humour is lofty, his discourse peremptory, his tongue filed, and his eye ambitious. Shakesf. Love's Labour Lost.

Let men be careful how they attempt to cure a blemish by filing or cutting off the head of such an overgrown tooth. Ray.

3. [from filan.] To foul; to sully; to pollute. This sense is retained in Scotland.

For Banquo's issue have I fil'd my mind,

For them the gracious Duncan have I murder'd. Shakesf.

His weeds, divinely fashioned,

All fil'd and mangl'd. Chapman's Iliads, b. xviii.

TO FILE. v. n. [from the noun.] To march in a file, not abreast, but one behind another.

All ran down without order or ceremony, 'till we drew up in good order, and filed off. Tatler, N<sup>o</sup>. 86.

Did all the grosser atoms at the cell

Of chance file off to form the pond'rous ball,

And undetermin'd into order fall? Blackmore's Creation.

FILEMOT. n. f. [corrupted from feuille morte, a dead leaf, French.] A brown or yellow-brown colour.

The colours you ought to wish for are blue or filemot, turned up with red. Swift's Direct. to the Footman.

FILER. n. f. [from file.] One who files; one who uses the file in cutting metals.

FILIAL. adj. [filial-le, French; filius, Latin.]

1. Pertaining to a son; befitting a son.

My mischievous proceeding may be the glory of his filial piety, the only reward now left for so great a merit. Sidney.

From imposition of strict laws, to free

Acceptance of large grace; from servile fear

To filial; works of law, to works of faith. Milt. Pa. Lost.

He griev'd, he wept, the fight an image brought

Of his own filial love; a sadly pleasing thought. Dryden.

2. Bearing the character or relation of a son.

And thus the filial godhead answer'ing spoke. Milt. P. L.

Where the old myrtle her good influence sheds,

Sprigs of like leaf erect their filial heads;

And when the parent rose decays and dies,

With a resembling face the daughter buds arise. Prior.

FILIA'TION. n. f. [from filius, Latin.] The relation of a son to a father; correlative to paternity.

The relation of paternity and filiation, between the first and second person, and the relation between the sacred persons of the Trinity, and the denomination thereof, must needs be eternal, because the terms of relation between whom that relation ariseth were eternal. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

FILINGS. n. f. [without a singular; from file.] Fragments rubbed off by the action of the file.

The filings of iron infused in vinegar, will, with a decoction of galls, make good ink, without any copperose at all.

Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. vi. c. 12.

The chippings and filings of those jewels are of more value than the whole mass of ordinary authors. Felton on the Class.

TO FILL. v. n. [fillan, Saxon.]

1. To store 'till no more can be admitted.

Fill thine horn with oil.

1 Sa. xvi. 1.

Fill the waterpots with water, and they filled them up to the brim.

Jo. ii. 7.

The earth is filled with violence through them. Gen. vi. 13.

2. To store abundantly.

Be fruitful and multiply, and fill the waters in the seas. Gen.

3. To satisfy; to content.

Nothing but the supreme and absolute Infinite can adequately fill and super-abundantly satisfy the infinite desires of intelligent beings. Cheyne's Phil. Princ.

4. To glut; to surfeit.

Thou art going to lord Timon's feast.

—Ay, to see meat fill knaves, and wine heat fools. Shakesf.

5. To FILL out. To pour out liquor for drink.

6. To FILL out. To extend by something contained.

I only speak of him

Whom pomp and greatness fits so loose about,

That he wants majesty to fill them out. Dryden.

7. To FILL up. [Up is often used without much addition to the force of the verb.] To make full.

Hope leads from goal to goal,

And opens still, and opens on his soul;

'Till lengthen'd on to faith, and unconfin'd,

It pours the bliss that fills up all the mind. Pope's Ess. on Man.

8. To FILL up. To supply.

When the several trades and professions are supplied, you will find most of those that are proper for war absolutely necessary for filling up the laborious part of life, and carrying on the underwork of the nation. Addison on the War.

9. To FILL up. To occupy by bulk.

There would not be altogether so much water required for the land as for the sea, to raise them to an equal height; because mountains and hills would fill up part of that space upon the land, and so make less water requisite. Burnet.

10. To FILL up. To engage; to employ.

Is it far you ride?

—As far, my lord, as will fill up the time

'Twixt this and supper. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

TO FILL. v. n.

1. To give to drink.

In the cup which she hath filled, fill to her double. Rev. xviii.

We fill to th' general joy of the whole table,

And to our dear friend Banquo, whom we miss. Shak. Mac.

2. To grow full.

3. To glut; to satiate.

Things that are sweet and fat are more filling, and do swim and hang more about the mouth of the stomach, and go not down so speedily. Bacon's Natural History.

4. To FILL up. To grow full.

Neither the Palus Meotis nor the Euxine, nor any other seas, fill up, or by degrees grow shallower. Woodward.

The first stage of healing, or the discharge of matter, is by surgeons called digestion; the second, or the filling up with flesh, incarnation; and the last, or skinning over, cicatrization. Sharp's Surgery.

FILL. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. As much as may produce complete satisfaction.

Her neck and breasts were ever open bare,

That aye thereof her babes might suck their fill. Fairy Qu.

But thus inflam'd bespoke the captain,

Who scorneth peace shall have his fill of war. Fairfax, b. ii.

When ye were thirsty, did I not cleave the rock, and waters flowed out to your fill?

2 Esd. i. 20.

Mean while enjoy

Your fill, what happiness this happy state

Can comprehend, incapable of more. Milton's Par. Lost.

Amid' the tree now got, where plenty hung

Tempting so nigh, to pluck and eat my fill

I spar'd not.

Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ix.

Which made me gently first remove your fears,

That so you might have room to entertain

Your fill of joy. Denham's Sophy.

Your barbarity, which I have heard so long exclaimed against in town and country, may have its fill of destruction. Pope.

2. [More properly thill.] The place between the shafts of a carriage.

This mule being put in the fill of a cart, run away with the cart and timber. Mortimer's Husbandry.

FILLER. n. f. [from fill.]

1. Any thing that fills up room without use.

'Tis a meer filler, to stop a vacancy in the hexameter, and connect the preface to the work of Virgil. Dryd. Æn. Dedic.

A mixture of tender gentle thoughts and suitable expressions, of forced and inextricable conceits, and of needless fillers up to the rest. Pope.

2. One whose employment is to fill vessels of carriage.

They commonly have three, four, five or six hewers or diggers to four fillers, being proportioned so as to keep the fillers always at work. Mortimer's Husbandry.

FYLLET. n. f. [filet, French; filum, Latin.]

1. A band tied round the head or other part.

His baleful breath inspiring, as he glides,

Now like a chain around her neck he rides;

Now

Now like a fillet to her head repairs,
And with his circling volumes folds her hairs. Dryd. Æn.

She scorn'd the praise of beauty, and the care;

A belt her waist, a fillet binds her hair. Pope's Windsor For.

2. The fleshy part of the thigh: applied commonly to veal.

The youth approach'd the fire, and as it burn'd,

On five sharp broachers rank'd, the roast they turn'd:

These morsels stay'd their stomachs; then the rest

They cut in legs and fillets for the feast. Dryden's Iliad.

3. Meat rolled together, and tied round.

Fillet of a fenny snake,

In the cauldron boil and bake. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

The mixture thus, by chymick art

United close in every part,

In fillets roll'd, or cut in pieces,

Appear'd like one continu'd species. Swift.

4. [In architecture.] A little member which appears in the ornaments and mouldings, and is otherwise called listel. Harris.

To FILLET. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To bind with a bandage or fillet.

2. To adorn with an astragal.

He made hooks for the pillars, and overlaid their chapiters and filleted them. Ex. xxxviii. 28.

To FILLIP. v. a. [A word, says Skinner, formed from the sound. This resemblance I am not able to discover, and therefore am inclined to imagine it corrupted from fill up, by some combination of ideas which cannot be recovered.] To strike with the nail of the finger by a sudden spring or motion.

If I do, fillip me with a three-man beetle. Shak. Hen. IV.

Then let the pebbles on the hungry beach

Fillip the stars: then let the mutinous winds

Strike the proud cedars 'gainst the fiery sun. Shakesp. Coriol.

We see, that if you fillip a lutestring, it sheweth double or treble. Bacon's Natural History, No. 183.

FILLIP. n. f. [from the verb.] A jerk of the finger let go from the thumb.

FILLY. n. f. [filoy, Welsh; fille, French.]

1. A young horse or mare.

Geld fillies, but tits, yer a nine days of age,

They die else of gelding, or gelders do rage:

Young fillies so likely of bulk and of bone,

Keep such to be breeders, let gelding alone. Tuff. Husband.

A well-wayed horse will convey thee to thy journey's end, when an unbacked filly may give thee a fall. Suckling.

2. A young mare, opposed to a colt or young horse.

I jest to Oberon, and make him smile,

When I a fat and bean-fed horse beguile,

Neighing in likeness of a filly foal. Shakespeare.

I am joined in wedlock, for my sins, to one of those fillies who are described in the old poet. Addison's Spectator.

FILM. n. f. [fylmepa, Saxon.] A thin pellicle or skin.

While the silver needle did work upon the sight of his eye, to remove the film of the cataract, he never saw any thing more clear or perfect than that white needle. Bacon's N. Hist.

Michael from Adam's eyes the film remov'd,

Which that false fruit that promis'd clearer sight

Had bred. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ii. l. 412.

A stone is held up by the films of the bladder, and so kept from grating or offending it. Graunt's Bills of Mortality.

There is not one infidel so ridiculous as to pretend to solve the phenomena of sight, fancy, or cogitation, by those fleeting superficial films of bodies. Bentley's Sermons.

He from thick films shall purge the visual ray,

And on the sightless eyeballs pour the day. Pope's Messiah.

To FILM. v. a. [from the noun.] To cover with a pellicle or thin skin.

It will but skin and film the ulcerous place,

Whilst rank corruption, mining all within,

Infects unseen. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

FILMY. adj. [from film.] Composed of thin membranes or pellicles.

So the false spider, when her nets are spread,

Deep ambush'd in her silent den does lie;

And feels, far off, the trembling of her thread,

Whose filmy cord should bind the struggling fly. Dryden.

They with fruitless toil

Flap filmy pinions oft, to extricate

Their feet in liquid shackles bound, 'till death

Bereave them of their worthless souls; such doom

Waits luxury, and lawless love of gain. Phillips.

Loose to the winds their airy garments flew,

Thin glitt'ring textures of the filmy dew;

Dipt in the richest tincture of the skies,

Where light disports in ever-mingling dyes. Pope.

To FILTER. v. a. [filtru, low Latin; per filum trahere.]

1. To defecate by drawing off liquor by depending threads.

2. To strain; to percolate.

Dilute this liquor with fair water, filter it through a paper, and so evaporate it. Grew's Musæum.

FILTER. n. f. [filtrum, Latin.]

1. A twist of thread, of which one end is dipped in the liquor to be defecated, and the other hangs below the bottom of the vessel, so that the liquor drips from it. See NEW DISPENSATORY.

2. A strainer; a searce.

That the water, passing through the veins of the earth, should be rendered fresh and potable, which it cannot be by any percolations we can make, but the saline particles will pass through a tenfold filter. Ray on the Creation.

FILFTH. n. f. [filð, Saxon.]

1. Dirt; nastiness; any thing that soils or fouls.

When we in our viciousness grow hard,

The wise gods seal our eyes;

In our own filth drop our clear judgments. Shakespeare.

Wisdom and goodness to the vile seem vile;

Filths favour but themselves. Shakespeare's King Lear.

Neither may you trust waters that taste sweet; for they are commonly found in rising grounds of great cities, which must needs take in a great deal of filth. Bacon's Natural History.

How perfect then is man? From head to foot

Defil'd with filth, and rotten at the root. Sandys.

Though perhaps among the rout

He wildly flings his filth about;

He still has gratitude and sap'ence,

To spare the folks that give him ha'pence. Swift.

2. Corruption; grossness; pollution.

Such do likewise exceedingly dispose us to piety and religion, by purifying our souls from the dross and filth of sensual delights. Tilston's Sermons.

FILTHILY. adv. [from filthy] Nastily; foully; grossly.

It stuck filthily in the camel's stomach that bulls, bears, and the like, should be armed, and that a creature of his size should be left defenceless. L'Estrange, Fable 78.

FILTHINESS. n. f. [from filthy.]

1. Nastiness; foulness; dirtiness.

Men of virtue suppressed it, lest their shining should discover the others filthiness. Sidney, b. ii.

2. Corruption; pollution.

They held this land, and with their filthiness

Polluted this same gentle soil long time,

That their own mother loath'd their beastliness,

And 'gan abhor her brood's unkindly crime,

All were they born of her own native slime. Fairy Queen.

They never duly improved the utmost of such a power, but gave themselves up to all the filthiness and licentiousness of life imaginable. South's Sermons.

FILTHY. adj. [from filth.]

1. Nasty; foul; dirty.

Fair is foul, and foul is fair;

Hover through the fog and filthy air. Shakesp. Macbeth.

2. Gross; polluted.

As all stories are not proper subjects for an epick poem or a tragedy, so neither are they for a noble picture: the subjects both of the one and of the other, ought to have nothing of immoral, low, or filthy in them. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

To FILTRATE. v. a. [from filter.] To strain; to percolate; to filter.

The extract obtained by the former operation, burnt to ashes, and those ashes boiled in water and filtrated, yield a fiery salt. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

FILTRATION. n. f. [from filtrate.] A method by which liquors are procured fine and clear. The filtration in use is straining a liquor through paper, which, by the smallness of its pores, admits only the finer parts through, and keeps the rest behind. Quincy.

We took then common nitre, and having, by the usual way of solution, filtration, and coagulation, reduced it into crystals, we put four ounces of this purified nitre into a strong new crucible. Boyle.

FIMBLE Hemp. n. f.

The season of pulling of it is first about Lambas, when good part of it will be ripe; that is, the light Summer hemp, that bears no seed, which is called fimble hemp. Mortim. Hu. b.

Good flax and good hemp, for to have of her own,

In May a good housewife will see it be sown;

And afterwards trim it, to serve at a need,

The fimble to spin, and the carle for her seed. Tuff. Husb.

FIN. n. f. [fin, Saxon; vin, Dutch.] The wing of a fish; the limb by which he balances his body, and moves in the water.

He that depends

Upon your favours, swims with fins of lead,

And hews down oaks with rushes. Shakespeare's Othello.

Their fins consist of a number of gristly bones, long and slender, like pins and needles. Mere's Antid. against Atheism.

Thus at half-ebb a rowling sea

Returns, and wins upon the shore;

The watry herd, affrighted at the roar,

Rest on their fins awhile, and stay,

Then backward take their wond'ring way. Dryden.

Still at his oar th' industrious Libys plies;

But as he plies, each busy arm shrinks in,

And by degrees is fashion'd to a fin. Addis. Ovid's Metam.

FIN-FOOTED.

FIN-FOOTED. adj. [fin and foot] Palmipedous; having feet with membranes between the toes.

It is described like fippedes, or birds which have their feet or claws divided; whereas it is palmipedous or fin-footed, like swans and geese, according to the method of nature in latirostrous or flat-billed birds; which being generally swimmers, the organ is wisely contrived unto the action, and they are framed with fins or oars upon their feet. Brown's Vulg. Err.

FINABLE. adj. [from fine.] That admits a fine.

This is the order for writs of covenant that be finable. Bac.

He sent letters to the council, wherein he acknowledged himself favoured in bringing his cause finable. Hayward.

FINAL. adj. [final, French; finalis, Latin]

1. Ultimate; last.

And over them triumphant death his dart
Shook; but delay'd to strike, though oft invoc'd

With vows, as their chief good, and final hope. Milt. P. L.

2. Conclusive; decisive.

There be many examples where sea-fights have been final to the war. Bacon, Essay 30.

Henry spent his reign in establishing himself, and had neither leisure nor opportunity to undertake the final conquest of Ireland. Davies on Ireland.

3. Mortal; destructive.

At last resolv'd to work his final smart,

He lifted up his hand, but back again did start. Fai. Queen.

4. Respecting the end or motive.

Some things in such sort are allowed, that they be also required as necessary unto salvation, by way of direct, immediate, and proper necessity final; so that, without performance of them, they cannot by ordinary course be saved, nor by any means be excluded from life, observing them. Hooker, b. ii.

By its gravity fire raises the water in pumps, siphons, and other engines; and performs all those feats which former philosophers, through ignorance of the efficient cause, attributed to a final, namely, nature's abhorrence of a vacuity. Ray.

Your answering in the final cause, makes me believe you are at a loss for the efficient. Collier on Thought.

FINALLY. adv. [from final.]

1. Ultimately; lastly; in conclusion.

Sight bereav'd

May chance to number thee with those Whom patience finally must crown. Milton's Agonistes.

2. Completely; without recovery.

Their houses were many times in danger of ruin; yet was there not any house of noble English in Ireland utterly destroyed, or finally rooted out by the hand of justice, but the house of Desmond only. Davies on Ireland.

Doubtless many men are finally lost, who yet have no mens fins to answer for but their own. South's Sermons.

FINANCE. n. f. [French.] Revenue; income; profit. It is seldom used in the singular.

This sort of finance hath been increased by this new device.

Bacon's Off. of Alienation.

The residue of these ordinary finances be casual or uncertain; as be the escheats and forfeitures. Bacon.

His pretence for making war upon his neighbours was their pyracies, though he practised the same trade when he was straitened in his finances at the siege of Byzantium. Arbutnot.

FINANCIER. n. f. [French.] One who collects or farms the publick revenue.

FINARY. n. f. [from To fine.] In the iron works, the second forge at the iron mills. Diet.

FINCH. n. f. [finch, Saxon.] A small bird of which we have three kinds, the goldfinch, chaffinch, and bulfinch.

TO FIND. v. a. [findan, Saxon; vinden, Dutch.]

1. To obtain by searching or seeking.

Ask, and it shall be given you; seek, and ye shall find.

Matt. vii. 7.

Whereas thou hast searched all my stuff, what hast thou found of all thy household stuff?

Gen. xxxi. 37.

A bird that flies about,

And beats itself against the cage,

Finding at last no passage out,

It sits and sings.

Cowley.

2. To obtain something lost.

When he hath found his sheep, he layeth it on his shoulders rejoicing.

Luke xv. 5.

In my school days, when I had lost one shaft,

I shot his fellow of the self-same flight

The self-same way, with more advised watch,

To find the other forth; by vent'ring both,

I oft found both. Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.

3. To meet with; to fall upon.

There watchful at the gate they find

Suspicion with her eyes behind.

Dodley's Miscell.

In woods and forests thou art found.

Cowley.

The bad must miss, the good unsought shall find. Pope.

4. To know by experience.

How oft will he

Of thy chang'd faith complain!

And his fortunes find to be

So airy and so vain!

Cowley.

The torrid zone is now found habitable.

Cowley.

5. To discover by study.

Physicians

With sharpen'd sight some remedies may find.

Dryden.

Thy maid! ah, find some nobler theme,

Whereon thy doubts to place.

Cowley.

6. To discover what is hidden.

A curse on him who found the oar.

Cowley.

7. To hit on by chance; to perceive by accident:

They build on sands, which if unmov'd they find,

'Tis but because there was no wind.

Cowley.

8. To gain by any mental endeavour.

If we for happiness could leisure find,

And wand'ring time into a method bind,

We should not then the great mens favour need.

Cowley.

We oft review, each finding like a friend

Something to blame, and something to commend.

Pope.

9. To remark; to observe.

Beauty or wit in all I find.

Cowley.

10. To detect; to deprehend; to catch.

When first found in a lie, talk to him of it as a strange monstrous matter, and so shame him out of it.

Locke.

11. To reach; to attain.

They are glad when they can find the grave.

Job iii. 22.

He did the utmost bounds of knowledge find,

Yet found them not so large as was his mind.

Cowley.

12. To meet.

A clear conscience and heroick mind,

In ill's their business and their glory find.

Cowley.

13. To settle; to fix any thing in one's own opinion.

Some men

The marks of old and catholick would find.

Cowley.

14. To determine by judicial verdict.

His peers, upon this evidence,

Have found him guilty of high treason. Shakesp. Hen. VIII.

15. To supply; to furnish: as, he finds me in money and in victuals.

16. [In law.] To approve: as, to find a bill.

17. To FIND himself. To be; to fare with regard to ease or pain, health or sickness.

Pray, sir, how d'ye find yourself? says the doctor. L'Estr.

18. To FIND out. To unriddle; to solve.

The finding out of parables is a wearisome labour of the mind.

Ecclef. xiii. 26.

19. To FIND out. To discover something hidden:

Can'st thou by searching find out God? Can'st thou find out the Almighty unto perfection?

Job ii. 7.

There are agents in nature able to make the particles of bodies stick together by very strong attractions, and it is the business of experimental philosophy to find them out.

What hinders then, but that thou find her out,

And hurry her away by manly force? Addison's Cato.

20. To FIND out. To obtain the knowledge of.

The principal part of painting is to find out and thoroughly to understand what nature has made most beautiful.

Dryden.

21. To FIND out. To invent; to excogitate.

A man of Tyre, skilful to work in gold, and to find out every device which shall be put to him.

2 Chron. ii. 14.

22. The particle out is added often without any other use than that it adds some force or emphasis to the verb.

While she proudly march'd about,

Greater conquests to find out,

She beat out Susan by the by.

Cowley.

It is agreeable to compare the face of a great man with the character, and to try if we can find out in his looks and features either the haughty, cruel, or merciful temper.

Addison.

He was afraid of being insulted with Greek; for which reason he desired a friend to find him out a clergyman rather of plain sense than much learning.

Addison's Spectator.

FINDER. n. f. [from find.]

1. One that meets or falls upon any thing.

We will bring the device to the bar, and crown thee for a finder of mad men.

Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.

2. One that picks up any thing lost.

Some lewd squeaking cryer,

Well pleas'd with one lean thread-bare goat for hire,

May like a devil roar through every street,

And gall the finder's conscience, if they meet.

Donne.

O yes! if any happy eye

This roving wanton shall descry,

Let the finder surely know

Mine is the wag; 'tis I that owe

The winged wand'rer.

Crashaw.

FINDFAULT. n. f. [find and fault.] A censurer; a caviller.

We are the makers of manners, Kate; and the liberty that follows our places, stops the mouth of all findfaults.

FINDY. adj. [gynbig, Saxon.] Plump; weighty; firm; solid. Thus the proverb,

A cold May and a windy,

Makes the barn fat and findy.

means that it stores the barn with plump and firm grain. Jun.

FINE. adj. [finne, French; fijn, Dutch and Erse, perhaps from finitus, completed, Latin.]

1. Not coarse.
Not any skill'd in loops of fingering fine,
With this so curious net-work might compare. Spenser.
He was arrayed in purple and fine linen. Luke.
  2. Refined; pure; free from dross.
Two vessels of fine copper, precious as gold. Ezra viii. 27.
  3. Subtle; thin; tenuous: as, the fine spirits evaporate.
  4. Refined; subtilly excogitated.
In substance he promised himself money, honour, friends, and peace in the end; but those things were too fine to be fortunate, and succeed in all parts. Bacon.
Whether the scheme has not been pursued so far as to draw it into practice, or whether it be too fine to be capable of it, I will not determine. Temple.
  5. Keen; thin; smoothly sharp.
Great affairs are commonly too rough and stubborn to be wrought upon by the finer edges or points of wit. Bacon.
  6. Clear; pellucid; transparent; as, the wine is fine.
  7. Nice; exquisite; delicate.
Are they not senseless then, that think the soul
Nought but a fine perfection of the sense. Davies.
The irons of planes are set fine or rank: they are set fine, when they stand so shallow below the sole of the plane, that in working they take off a thin shaving. Moxon's Mech. Exer.
  8. Artful; dexterous.
The wisdom of all these latter times, in princes affairs, is rather fine deliveries, and shiftings of dangers and mischiefs, than solid and grounded courses to keep them aloof. Bacon.
  9. Fraudulent; sly; knavishly subtle.
Through his fine handling, and his cleanly play,
He all those royal signs had stol'n away. Hubberd's Tale.
  10. Elegant; with elevation.
To call the trumpet by the name of the metal was fine. Dry.
  11. Applied to person, it means beautiful with dignity.
  12. Accomplished; elegant of manners.
He was not only the finest gentleman of his time, but one of the finest scholars. Felton on the Classics.
  13. Showy; splendid.
It is with a fine genius as with a fine fashion; all those are displeased at it who are not able to follow it. Pope.
The satirical part of mankind will needs believe, that it is not impossible to be very fine and very filthy. Swift.
  14. [Ironically.] Something that will serve the purpose; something worth contemptuous notice.
That same knave, Ford, her husband, hath the finest mad devil of jealousy in him, master Brook, that ever governed frenzy. Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.
They taught us, indeed, to cloath, to dwell in houses,
To feast, to sleep on down, to be profuse:
A fine exchange for liberty. Phillips's Briton.
- FINE. n. f. [ffin, Cimbr.]
1. A mulct; a pecuniary punishment.
The killing of an Irishman was not punished by our law, as manslaughter, which is felony and capital; but by a fine or pecuniary punishment, called an ericke. Davies on Ireland.
  2. Penalty.
Ev'n this ill night your breathing shall expire, Paying the fine of rated treachery. Shakesp. King John.
  3. Forfeit; money paid for any exemption or liberty.
The spirit of wantonness is sure scared out of him: if the devil have him not in fee-simple, with fine and recovery, he will never, I think, in the way of waste, attempt us again.
Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.
Beside fines set upon plays, games, balls and feasting, they have many customs which contribute to their simplicity. Addis.
How vain that second life in others breath,
Th' estate which wits inherit after death!
Ease, health, and life for this they must resign,
Unsure the tenure, but how vast the fine! Pope.
  4. [From finis, Latin; fin, enfin, French.] The end; conclusion. It is seldom used but adverbially, in fine.
In fine, whatsoever he was, he was nothing but what it pleased Zelmane, the powers of his spirit depending of her. Sid.
His resolution, in fine, is, that in the church a number of things are strictly observed, whereof no law of scripture maketh mention one way or other. Hooker, b. ii. f. 5.
Still the fine's the crown;
Whate'er the course, the end is the renown. Shakespeare.
Your daughter, ere she seems as won,
Desires this ring; appoints him an encounter;
In fine, delivers me to fill the time,
Herself most chastly absent. Shak. All's well that ends well.
The blessings of fortune are the lowest: the next are the bodily advantages of strength and health; but the superlative blessings, in fine, are those of the mind. L'Estrange.
In fine, he wears no limbs about him sound,
With sores and sicknesses beleagu'ed round. Dryden's Juv.
In fine, let there be a perfect relation betwixt the parts and the whole, that they may be entirely of a piece. Dryden.

To FINE. v. a. [from fine, the adjective.]

1. To refine; to purify.
The fining pot is for silver, and the furnace for gold. Prov.
There is a vein for the silver, and a place for gold, where they fine it. Job xxviii. 1.
  2. To embellish; to decorate. Now not in use.
Hugh Capet also, who usurp'd the crown,
To fine his title with some shews of truth,
Convey'd himself as heir to th' lady Lingare. Shakesf. H. V.
  3. To make less coarse.
It fines the grass, but makes it short, though thick. Mortim.
  4. To make transparent.
It is good also for fuel, not to omit the shavings of it for the fining of wine. Mortimer's Husbandry.
  5. [From the substantive.] To punish with pecuniary penalty.
To fine men one third of their fortune, without any crime committed, seems very hard. Locke.
- To FINE. v. n. To pay a fine.
What poet ever fin'd for sheriff? or who
By rhymes and verse did ever lord mayor grow? Oldham.
- To FINEDRA'W. v. a. [fine and draw.] To sow up a rent with so much nicety that it is not perceived.
- FINEDRA'WER. n. f. [from finedraw.] One whose business is to sow up rents.
- FINEFINGERED. adj. [fine and finger.] Nice; artful; exquisite.
The most finestinger'd workman on the ground,
Arachne, by his means was vanquished. Spenser.
- FINELY. adv. [from fine.]
1. Beautifully; elegantly; more than justly.
Plutarch says very finely, that a man should not allow himself to hate even his enemies; because, says he, if you indulge this passion on some occasions, it will rise of itself in others.
Addison's Spectator, N<sup>o</sup>. 125.
The walls are painted, and represent the labours of Hercules: many of them look very finely, though a great part of the work has been cracked. Addison on Italy.
  2. Keenly; sharply; with a thin edge or point.
Get you black lead, sharpened finely, and put it into quills.
Peacham on Drawing.
  3. Not coarsely; not meanly; gaily.
He was alone, save that he had two persons of honour, on either hand one, finely attired in white. Bacon's New Atlantis.
  4. In small parts; subtilly; not grossly.
Saltpetre was but grossly beaten; for it should not be finely powdered. Boyle.
  5. [Ironically.] Wretchedly; in such a manner as to deserve contemptuous notice.
Let laws be made to obey, and not to be obeyed, and you will find that kingdom finely governed in a short time. South.
For him she loves:
She nam'd not me; that may be Torrismond,
Whom she has thrice in private seen this day:
Then I am finely caught in my own snare. Dryd. Sp. Fryar.
- FINENESS. n. f. [from fine.]
1. Elegance; beauty; delicacy.
Every thing was full of a choice fineness, that, if it wanted any thing in majesty, it supplied with increase in pleasure; and if at the first it struck not admiration, it ravished with delight. Sidney.
The softness of her sex, and the fineness of her genius, conspire to give her a very distinguishing character. Prior.
  2. Show; splendour; gaiety of appearance.
The fineness of cloaths destroys the ease: it often helps men to pain, but can never rid them of any: the body may languish under the most splendid cover. Decay of Piety.
  3. Subtility; artfulness; ingenuity.
Those, with the fineness of their souls,
By reason guide his execution. Shakesp. Troil. and Cressida.
  4. Purity; freedom from dross or base mixtures.
Our works are, indeed, nought else
But the protractive tryals of great Jove,
To find persistive constancy in men;
The fineness of which metal is not found
In fortune's love. Shakespeare's Troilus and Cressida.
I am doubtful whether men have sufficiently refined metals;
as whether iron, brass, and tin be refined to the height: but when they come to such a fineness as serveth the ordinary use, they try no farther. Bacon's Natural History.
The ancients were careful to coin their money in due weight and fineness, only in times of exigence they have diminished both the weight and fineness. Arbutnot on Coins.
- FINERY. n. f. [from fine.] Show; splendour of appearance;
gaiety of colours.
Dress up your houses and your images,
And put on all the city's finery,
To consecrate this day a festival. Southern.
The capacities of a lady are sometimes apt to fall short in cultivating cleanliness and finery together. Swift.
Don't chuse your place of study by the finery of the prospects, or the most various scenes of sensible things. Watts.
- FINE'SSE.

FIN

FINE'SSE. n. f. [French.] Artifice; stratagem: an unnecessary word which is creeping into the language.

A circumstance not much to be stood upon, in case it were not upon some finess. Hayward.

FINER. n. f. [from fine.] One who purifies metals.

Take away the dross from the silver, and there shall come forth a vessel for the finer. Prov. xxv. 4.

FINGER. n. f. [finger, Saxon, from fangan, to hold.]

1. The flexible member of the hand by which men catch and hold.

The fingers and thumb in each hand consist of fifteen bones, there being three to each finger: they are a little convex and round towards the back of the hand, but hollow and plain towards the palm, except the last, where the nails are. The order of their dispositions is called first, second, and third phalanx: the first is longer than the second, and the second longer than the third. The upper extremity of the first bone on each finger has a little sinus, which receives the round head of the bones of the metacarpus. The upper extremity of the second and third bones of each finger hath two small sinuses, parted by a small protuberance; and the lower extremity of the first and second bones of each finger has two protuberances, divided by a small sinus: the two protuberances are received into the two sinuses of the upper extremity of the second and third bones; and the small sinus receives the little protuberance of the same end of the same bones. The first bone of the thumb is like the bones of the metacarpus, and it is joined to the wrist and second of the thumb, as they are to the wrist and first of the fingers. The second bone of the thumb is like the first bones of the fingers, and it is joined to the first and third, as they are to the bones of the metacarpus and second of the fingers. The fingers are moved sideways only upon their first joint. Besides these there are some small bones, called ossa sesamoidea, because they resemble sesamum grains: they are reckoned about twelve in each hand: they are placed at the joint of the fingers, under the tendons of the flexors, to which they serve as pulleys. Quincy.

You seem to understand me,

By each at once her choppy finger laying
Upon her skinny lips. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Diogenes, who is never said,
For aught that ever I could read,
To whine, put finger i' th' eye and sob,
Because h' had ne'er another tub. Hudibras.

The hand is divided into four fingers bending forward, and one opposite to them bending backwards, and of greater strength than any of them singly, which we call the thumb, to join with them severally or united; whereby it is fitted to lay hold of objects of any size or quantity. Ray on the Creat.

A hand of a vast extension, and a prodigious number of fingers playing upon all the organ pipes of the world, and making every one sound a particular note. Keil against Burnet.

Poor Peg sewed, spun, and knit for a livelihood, 'till her finger ends were sore. Arbuthnot's Hist. of John Bull.

2. A small measure of extension.

Go now, go trust the wind's uncertain breath,
Remov'd four fingers from approaching death;
Or seven at most, when thickest is the board, Dryd. Juv.
One of these bows with a little arrow did pierce through a piece of steel three fingers thick. Wilkins's Math. Mag.

3. The hand; the instrument of work; manufacture; art.

Fool, that forgets her stubborn look
This softness from thy finger took. Waller.

TO FIN'GER. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To touch lightly; to toy with.

Go, get you gone, and let the papers lie;
You would be fingering them to anger me. Shakespeare.
One that is covetous is not so highly pleased with the meer fight and fingering of money, as with the thoughts of his being considered as a wealthy man. Grew's Cosmol. Sac.

2. To touch unseasonably or thievishly.

His ambition would needs be fingering the scepter, and hoisting him into his father's throne. South's Sermons.

3. To touch an instrument of musick.

She hath broke the lute;
I did but tell her she mistook her frets,
And bow'd her hand to teach her fingering. Shakespeare.

4. To perform any work exquisitely with the fingers.

Not any skill'd in loops of fingering fine,
With this so curious net-work might compare. Spenser.

FINGLEFANGLE. n. f. [from fangle.] A trifle: a burlesque word.

We agree in nothing but to wrangle,
About the flightest finglefangle. Hudibras, p. iii. cau. 3.

FINICAL. adj. [from fine.] Nice; foppish; pretending to superfluous elegance.

A whorson, glassgazing, superserviceable, finical rogue.
Shakespeare's King Lear.

I cannot hear a finical fop romancing, how the king took him aside at such a time; what the queen said to him at another.
L'Estrange, Fable 34.

FINICALLY. adv. [from finical.] Foppishly.

FIN

FINICALNESS. n. f. [from finical.] Superfluous nicety; foppery.

TO FINISH. v. a. [finir, French; finio, Latin.]

1. To bring to the end purposed; to complete.

For which of you, intending to build a tower, sitteth not down first and counteth the cost, whether he have sufficient to finish it? Luke xiv. 28.

As he had begun, so he would also finish in you the same grace. 2 Cor. viii. 6.

A poet uses episodes; but episodes, taken separately, finish nothing. Notes on the Odyssey.

2. To perfect; to polish to the excellency intended.

Though here you all perfection should not find,
Yet is it all th' Eternal Will design'd;
It is a finish'd work, and perfect in his kind. Blackmore.
I would make what bears your name as finished as my last work ought to be; that is, more finished than the rest. Pope.

3. To end; to put an end to.

FINISHER. n. f. [from finish.]

1. Performer; accomplisher.

He that of greatest works is finisher,
Oft does them by the weakest minister. Shakespeare.

2. One that puts an end; ender.

This was the plain condition of those times; the whole world against Athanasius, and Athanasius against it: half an hundred of years spent in doubtful trials which of the two, in the end, would prevail; the side which had all, or else that part which had no friend but God and death, the one a defender of his innocence, the other a finisher of all his troubles.
Hooker, b. v. f. 42.

3. One that completes or perfects.

The author and finisher of our faith. Hebrews.
O prophet of glad tidings! finisher
Of utmost hope! Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xii.

FINITE. adj. [finitus, Latin.] Limited; bounded; terminated.

Servius conceives no more thereby than a finite number for indefinite. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iv. c. 12.

Finite of any magnitude holds not any proportion to infinite. Locke.

That supposed infinite duration will, by the very supposition, be limited at two extremes, though never so remote asunder, and consequently must needs be finite. Bentley's Serm.

FINITELESS. adj. [from finite.] Without bounds; unlimited.

It is ridiculous unto reason, and finiteless as their desires. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

FINITELY. adv. [from finite.] Within certain limits; to a certain degree.

They are creatures still, and that sets them at an infinite distance from God; whereas all their excellencies can make them but finitely distant from us. Stillingsfleet.

FINITENESS. n. f. [from finite.] Limitation; confinement within certain boundaries.

I ought now to unbay the current of my passion, and love without other boundary than what is set by the finiteness of my natural powers. Norris.

FINITUDE. n. f. [from finite.] Limitation; confinement within certain boundaries.

Finitude, applied to natural or created things, imports the proportions of the several degrees of affections, or properties of these things to one another; infinitude, the unboundedness of these degrees of affections, or properties. Cheyne.

FINLESS. adj. [from fin.] Without fins.

He angers me
With telling of the moldwarp and the ant,
And of a dragon and a finless fish. Shakefp. Henry IV.

FINLIKE. adj. [fin and like.] Formed in imitation of fins.

In shipping such as this, the Irish kern
And untaught Indian, on the stream did glide;
Ere sharp-keel'd boats to stem the flood did learn,
Or finlike oars did spread from either side. Dryd. Ann. Mir.

FINNED. adj. [from fin.] Having broad edges spread out on either side.

They plow up the turf with a broad finned plough. Mortim.

FINNY. adj. [from fin.] Furnished with fins; formed for the element of water.

High o'er the main in wat'ry pomp he rides,
His azure car and finny coursers guides;
Proteus his name. Dryden's Virg. Georg. b. iv.

New herds of beasts he sends the plains to share;
New colonies of birds to people air;
And to their oozy beds the finny fish repair. Dryd. Ovid.

While black with storms the ruffled ocean rolls,
And from the fisher's art defends her finny shoals. Blackmore.

With hairy springes we the birds betray;
Slight lines of hair surprize the finny prey. Pope.

FINTOED. adj. [fin and toe.] Palmipedous; having a membrane between the toes.

Such creatures as are whole footed, or fintoed, viz. some birds and quadrupeds, are naturally directed to go into the water and swim there. Ray on the Creation.

FINOCHIO.

FENOCHIO. n. f. See FENNEL, of which plant it is a species.

FIPPLE. n. f. [from fibula, Latin.] A stopper.

You must know, that in recorders, which go with a gentle breath, the concave of the pipe, were it not for the fipple that straitneth the air, much more than the simple concave, would yield no sound. Bacon's Natural History.

FIR. n. f. [fyr, Welsh; furn, Saxon; fyr, Danish.] The tree of which deal-boards are made.

It is ever green: the leaves are single, and for the most part produced on every side of the branches: the male flowers, or catkins, are placed at remote distances from the fruit on the same tree. The seeds are propagated on cones, which are squamose. See PINE-TREE. Miller.

He covered the floor of the house with planks of fir. 1 Kings.

The 'spiring fir and stately box adorn. Pope.

FIRE. n. f. [fyr, Saxon; fewr, German.]

1. The igneous element.

2. Any thing burning.

A little fire is quickly trodden out,
Which, being suffer'd, rivers cannot quench. Shakesp. H. VI.

Where two raging fires meet together,

They do consume the thing that feeds their fury. Shakesp.

So contraries on Etna's top conspire;

Here hoary frosts, and by them breaks out fire. Cowley.

3. A conflagration of towns or countries.

There is another liberality to the citizens, who had suffered damage by a great fire. Arbuthnot on Coins.

Though safe thou think'st thy treasure lies,

Conceal'd in chests from human eyes,

A fire may come, and it may be

Bury'd, my friend, as far from thee. Granville.

4. Flame; light; lustre.

Stars, hide your fires!

Let not night see my black and deep desires! Shakesp. Macb.

5. Torture by burning.

Did Shadrach's zeal my glowing breast inspire,

To weary tortures, and rejoice in fire? Prior.

6. The punishment of the damned.

Who among us shall dwell with the devouring fire? Who among us shall dwell with everlasting burnings? Isa. xxxiii.

7. Any thing provoking; any thing that inflames the passions.

What fire is in my ears? Can this be true?

Stand I condemn'd for pride and scorn so much? Shakesp.

8. Ardour of temper; violence of passion.

He had fire in his temper, and a German bluntness; and, upon provocations, might strain a phrase. Atterbury.

9. Liveliness of imagination; vigour of fancy; intellectual activity; force of expression; spirit of sentiment.

Nor can the snow that age does shed

Upon thy rev'rend head,

Quench or allay the noble fire within,

But all that youth can be thou art. Cowley.

They have no notion of life and fire in fancy and in words, and any thing that is just in grammar and in measure is good oratory and poetry to them. Felton on the Classics.

He brings

The reasoner's weapons and the poet's fire. Blackmore.

Exact Racin, and Corneille's noble fire,

Taught us that France had something to admire. Pope.

The bold Longinus all the nine inspire,

And warm the critic with a poet's fire. Pope.

Oh may some spark of your celestial fire,

The last, the meanest of your sons inspire. Pope.

10. The passion of love.

Love various hearts does variously inspire,

It stirs in gentle bosoms gentle fire,

Like that of incense on the altar laid;

But raging flames tempestuous souls invade;

A fire which every windy passion blows,

With pride it mounts, and with revenge it glows. Dryden.

The fire of love in youthful blood,

Like what is kindled in brush-wood,

But for a moment burns. Shadwell.

The god of love retires;

Dim are his torches, and extinct his fires. Pope.

New charms shall still increase desire,

And time's swift wing shall fan the fire. Moore's Fables.

11. Eruptions or imposthumations: as, St. Anthony's fire.

12. To set FIRE on, or set on FIRE. To kindle; to inflame.

Hermosilla courageously set upon the horsemen, and set fire also upon the stables where the Turks horses stood. Knolles.

He that set a fire on a plane-tree to spite his neighbour, and the plane-tree set on his neighbour's house, is bound to pay all the loss, because it did all rise from his own ill intention.

Taylor's Rule of living holy.

FIREARMS. n. f. [fire and arms.] Arms which owe their efficacy to fire; guns.

Nor had they ammunition to supply their few firearms: horses they had, and officers they had, which made all their shew. Clarendon, b. ii.

Before the use of firearms there was infinitely more scope for personal valour than in the modern battles. Pope.

FIREBALL. f. n. [fire and ball.] Grenado; ball filled with combustibles, and bursting where it is thrown.

Judge of those insolent boasts of conscience, which, like so many fireballs, or mouth grenadoes, are thrown at our church. South's Sermon.

The same great man hath sworn to make us swallow his coin in fireballs. Swift.

FIREBRUSH. n. f. [fire and brush.] The brush which hangs by the fire to sweep the hearth.

When you are ordered to stir up the fire, clean away the ashes from betwixt the bars with the firebrush. Swift.

FIREBRAKE. n. f. [fire and drake.] A fiery serpent: I suppose the prester.

By the hissing of the snake,

The rustling of the firebrake,

I charge thee thou this place forsake,

Nor of queen Mab be prattling. Drayton's Nymphia.

FIRENEW. adj. [fire and new.] New from the forge; new from the melting-house.

Armado is a most illustrious wight,

A man of firenew words, fashion's own knight. Shakesp.

Some excellent jests, firenew from the mint. Shakespeare.

Upon the wedding-day I put myself, according to custom, in another suit firenew, with silver buttons to it. Addis. Guard.

FIREPAN. n. f. [fire and pan.] Vessel of metal to carry fire.

His firepans, and all the vessels thereof, thou shalt make of brass. Ex. xxvii. 3.

Pour of it upon a firepan well heated, as they do rosewater and vinegar. Bacon's Natural History.

FIRER. n. f. [from fire.] An incendiary.

Others burned Mouffel, and the rest marched as a guard for defence of these firers. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

FIRESIDE. n. f. [fire and side.] The hearth; the chimney; the focus.

My judgment is, that they ought all to be despised, and ought to serve but for Winter talk by the fireside. Bacon.

By his fireside he starts the hare,

And turns her in his wicker chair:

His feet, however lame, you find,

Have got the better of his mind. Prior.

What art thou asking of them, after all? Only to sit quietly at thy own fireside. Arbuthnot's Hist. of John Bull.

FIRESTICK. n. f. [fire and stick.] A lighted stick or brand.

Children, when they play with firesticks, move and whirl them round so fast, that the motion will cozen their eyes, and represent an intire circle of fire to them. Digby on Bodies.

FIREWORK. n. f. [fire and work.] Shows of fire; pyrotechnical performances.

The king would have me present the princess with some delightful ostentation, or pageant, or antick, or firework. Shak.

We represent also ordnance, and new mixtures of gunpowder, wildfires burning in water and unquenchable; and also fireworks of all variety. Bacon's New Atlantis.

The ancients were imperfect in the doctrine of meteors,

by their ignorance of gunpowder and fireworks. Brown.

In fireworks give him leave to vent his spite;

Those are the only serpents he can write. Dryden.

Our companion proposed a subject for a firework, which he thought would be very amusing. Addison's Guardian.

Their fireworks are made up in paper. Tatler, N<sup>o</sup>. 88.

TO FIRE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To set on fire; to kindle.

They spoiled many parts of the city, and fired the houses of those whom they esteemed not to be their friends; but the rage of the fire was at first hindered, and then appealed by the fall of a sudden shower of rain. Hayward.

The breathless body, thus bewail'd, they lay,

And fire the pile. Dryden.

A second Paris, diff'ring but in name,

Shall fire his country with a second flame. Dryden's Æn.

2. To inflame the passions; to animate.

Yet, if desire of fame, and thirst of pow'r,

A beauteous princess, with a crown in dow'r,

So fire your mind, in arms assert your right. Dryden.

3. To drive by fire.

He that parts us, shall bring a brand from heav'n

And fire us hence. Shakespeare's King Lear.

The neighbours are coming out with forks and fireshovels, and spits, and other domestick weapons. Dryd. Span. Fryar.

FIRESTONE. n. f. [fire and stone.]

The firestone, or pyrites, is a compound metallick fossil, composed of vitriol, sulphur, and an unmetallick earth, but in very different proportions in the several masses. The most common sort, which is used in medicine, is a greenish shapeless kind found in our clay-pits, out of which the green vitriol or copperas is procured. It has its name of pyrites, or firestone, from its giving fire on being struck against a steel much more freely than a flint will do; and all the sparks burn a longer time, and grow larger as they fall, the inflammable matter struck from off the stone burning itself out before the spark becomes extinguished. Hill's Mat. Med.

Firestone is a kind of stone called also Rygate stone, from the place whence it is chiefly brought, being very good for firehearth, ovens, and stoves. Builder's Dict.

Firestone, if broke small, and laid on cold lands, must be of advantage. Mortimer's Husband y.

FIREWOOD. n. f. [fire and wood.] Wood to burn; fewel.

And firm believes. Milt. Paradise Lost.

The great encouragement is the assurance of a future reward, the firm persuasion whereof is enough to raise us above any thing in this world. Tillotson, Sermon 6.

The man that's resolute and just,

Firm to his principles and trust,

Nor hopes nor fears can blind.

Walsh.

TO FIRM. v. a. [firmo, Latin.]

1. To settle; to confirm; to establish; to fix.

He declared the death of the emperor; which after they had seen to be true, they by another secret and speedy messenger advertised Solyman again thereof, firming those letters with all their hands and seals. Knolles's History of the Turks.

'Tis ratify'd above by every god,

And Jove has firm'd it with an awful nod. Dryd. Albion.

The pow'rs, said he,

To you, and your's, and mine, propitious be,

And firm our purpose with their augury. Dryden's Æn.

Oh thou, who free'st me from my doubtful state,

Long lost and wilder'd in the maze of fate!

Be present still: oh goddess, in our aid

Proceed, and firm those omens thou hast made. Pope's Stat.

2. To fix without wandering.

He on his card and compass *firm*s his eye,

The masters of his long experiment. Fairy Queen, b. ii.

Doth reach, and all the firmament doth fill. Spenser.

I am constant as the northern star,

Of whose true, fixt, and resting quality,

There is no fellow in the firmament. Shakesp. Jul. Cæsar.

The Almighty, whose hieroglyphical characters are the unnumbered stars, sun and moon, written on these large volumes of the firmament. Raleigh's History of the World.

The firmament expanse of liquid, pure,

Transparent, elemental air, diffus'd

In circuit to the uttermost convex

Of this great round. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vii.

The steeds climb up the first ascent with pain;

And when the middle firmament they gain,

If downward from the heavens my head I bow,

And see the earth and ocean hang below,

Ev'n I am seiz'd with horror. Addison's Ovid's Metamorph.

What an immensurable space is the firmament, wherein a great number of stars, lesser and lesser, and consequently farther and farther off, are seen with our naked eye, and many more discovered with our glasses! Derham's Astro-Theology.

FIRMAMENTAL. adj. [from firmament.] Celestial; of the upper regions.

An hollow crystal pyramid he takes,

In firmamental waters dipt above. Dryden's Ann. Mirab.

FIRMLY. adv. [from firm.]

1. Strongly; impenetrably; immoveably.

Thou shalt come of force,

Though thou art firm ier fasten'd than a rock. Milt. Agonist.

How very hard particles, which touch only in a few points, can stick together so firmly, without something which causes them to be attracted towards one another, is difficult to conceive. Newton's Opt.

2. Steadily; constantly.

Himself to be the man the fates require;

I firmly judge, and what I judge desire. Dryden's Æn. b. vii.

The goddess favour'd him, and favours yet.

Pope's Dunciad.

FISH-HOOK. n. f. [from fish and hook.] A hook baited, with which fish are caught.

A sharp point, bended upward and backward, like a fish-hook.

Grew's Museum.

FISH-POND. n. f. [from fish and pond.] A small pool for fish.

Fish-ponds are no small improvement of watry boggy lands.

Mortimer's Husbandry.

Fish-ponds were made where former forests grew,

And hills were levell'd to extend the view.

Prior.

After what I have said of the great value the Romans put upon fishes, it will not appear incredible that C. Hirrius should sell his fish-ponds for quadragies H. S. 32,291 l. 13 s. 4 d.

Arbutnot on Coins.

FISHER. n. f. [from fish.] One who is employed in catching fish.

In our fight the three were taken up

By fishermen of Corinth, as we thought:

At length another had seiz'd on us,

And would have reft the fishers of their prey,

Had not they been very slow of sail.

Shakesf. Comedy of Err.

We know that town is but with fishers fraught,

Where Theseus govern'd and where Plato taught.

Sandys.

Lest he should suspect it, draw it from him,

As fishers do the bait, to make him follow it.

Denham.

A soldier now he with his coat appears;

A fisher now, his trembling angle bears;

Each shape he varies.

Pope.

FISHERBOAT. n. f. [from fisher and boat.] A boat employed in catching fish.

FISHERMAN. n. f. [from fisher and man.] One whose employment and livelihood is to catch fish.

How fearful

And dizzy 'tis to cast one's eyes so low!

The fishermen that walk upon the beach

Appear like mice.

Shakespeare's King Lear.

At length two monsters of unequal size,

Hard by the shore, a fisherman espies.

Waller.

Do scales and fins bear price to this excess?

You might have bought the fisherman for less.

Dryd. Juven.

FISHERTOWN. n. f. [from fisher and town.] A town inhabited by fishermen.

Others of them, in that time, burned that fishertown Mousehole.

Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

Clarendon, b. vii.

FISHERS-COAT. n. f. [from fisher and coat.] A coat worn by a fisher.

When Simon-Peter heard that it was the Lord, he girt his fishers-coat unto him, for he was naked, and did cast himself into the sea.

Jo. xxi. 7.

FISHERY. n. f. [from fisher.] The business of catching fish.

We shall have plenty of mackerel this season: our fishery will not be disturbed by privateers.

Addison's Spectator.

FISHFUL. adj. [from fish.] Abounding with fish; stored with fish.

Thus mean in state, and calm in sprite,

My fishful pond is my delight.

Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

It is walled and guarded with the ocean, most commodious for traffick to all parts of the world, and watered with pleasant, fishful and navigable rivers.

Camden's Remains.

To FISHIFY. v. a. [from fish.] To turn to fish: a cant word.

Here comes Romeo.

—Without his roe, like a dried herring:

O flesh, flesh, how art thou fishified!

Shak. Rom. and Juliet.

FISHING. n. f. [from fish.] Commodity of taking fish.

There also would be planted a good town, having both a good haven and a plentiful fishing.

Spenser on Ireland.

FISHKETTLE. n. f. [from fish and kettle.] A caldron made long for the fish to be boiled without bending.

It is probable that the way of embalming amongst the Egyptians was by boiling the body, in a long caldron like a fish-kettle, in some kind of liquid balsam.

Grew's Museum.

FISHMEAL.

FISHMEAL. n. f. [fish and meal.] Diet of fish; abstemious diet.

Thin drink doth overcool their blood, and making many fishmeals, they fall into a kind of male greensickness. Sharp.

FISHMONGER. n. f. [from fish.] A dealer in fish; a seller of fish.

I fear to play the fishmonger; and yet so large a commodity may not pass in silence. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

The surgeon left the fishmonger to determine the controversy between him and the pike. L'Estrange.

FISHY. adj. [from fish.]

1. Consisting of fish.

My absent mates

Roam the wild isle in search of rural cates,
Bait the barb'd steel, and from the fishy flood Appease th' afflictive fierce desire of food. Pope's Odyssey.

2. Having the qualities of fish.

Few eyes have escaped the picture of mermaids, that is, according to Horace, a monster with a woman's head above, and fishy extremity below. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

FISSILE. adj. [fissilis, Latin.] Having the grain in a certain direction, so as to be cleft

This crystal is a pellucid fissile stone, clear as water or crystal of the rock, and without colour; enduring a red heat without losing its transparency; and in a very strong heat calcining without fusion. Newton's Opt.

FISSILITY. n. f. from fissile.] The quality of admitting to be cleft.

FISSURE. n. f. [fissura, Latin; fissure, French.] A cleft; a narrow chasm where a breach has been made.

The stone and other terrestrial matter was distinguished into strata or layers, as it is in England: those strata were divided by parallel fissures, that were inclosed in the stone. Woodward's Natural History.

I see

The gaping fissures to receive the rain. Thomson's Autumn.

TO FISSURE. v. a. [from the noun.] To cleave; to make a fissure.

By a fall or blow the skull may be fissured or fractured. Wife.

FIST. n. f. [fytt, Saxon.] The hand clenched with the fingers doubled down, in order to give a blow, or keep hold.

She quick and proud, and who did Pas despise;

Up with her fist, and took him on the face;

Another time, quoth she, become more wise;

Thus Pas did kiss her hand with little grace. Sidney.

And being down, the villain fore did beat

And bruise with clownish fists his manly face. Fairy Queen.

Anger causeth paleness in some; in others trembling, swelling, foaming at the mouth, stamping, and bending the fist. Bacon's Natural History, N<sup>o</sup>. 716.

And the same hand into a fist may close,

Which instantly a palm expanded shows. Denham.

Tyrreus, the foster-father of the beast,

Then clench'd a hatchet in his horny fist. Dryden's Æn.

TO FIST. v. a.

1. To strike with the fist.

I saw him spurning and fisting her most unmercifully. Dryd.

2. To gripe with the fist.

We have been down together in my sleep,

Unbuckling helms, fisting each other's throat,

And wak'd half dead with nothing. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

FISTINUT. n. f. A pistachio nut.

FISTICUFFS. n. f. [fist and cuff.] Battle with the fist; blows with the fist.

Naked men belabouring one another with snagged sticks, or dully falling together by the ears at fisticuffs. More.

She would seize upon John's commons; for which they were sure to go to fisticuffs. Arbuthn. History of John Bull.

My invention and judgment are perpetually at fisticuffs, 'till they have quite disabled each other. Swift.

FISTULA. n. f. [Latin; fistule, French.]

1. A sinuous ulcer callous within; any sinuous ulcer.

That fistula which is recent is the easiest of cure: those of a long continuance are accompanied with ulcerations of the gland and caries in the bone. Wise's Surgery.

2. FISTULA Lachrymalis. A disorder of the canals leading from the eye to the nose, which obstructs the natural progress of the tears, and makes them trickle down the cheek; but this is only the first and mildest stage of the disease: in the next there is matter discharged with the tears from the puncta

lachrymalia, and sometimes from an orifice broke through the skin between the nose and angle of the eye. The last and worst degree of it is when the matter of the eye, by its long continuance, has not only corroded the neighbouring soft parts, but also affected the subjacent bone. Sharp's Surgery.

FISTULAR. adj. [from fistula.] Hollow like a pipe.

FISTULOUS. adj. [from fistula; fistuleux, French.] Having the nature of a fistula; callous or sinuous like a fistula.

How these sinuous ulcers become fistulous, I have shewn

you. Wise's Surgery.

FIT. n. f. [from fight, Skinner, every fit of a disease being a struggle of nature; from viit, in Flemish, frequent, Juvius.]

1. A paroxysm or exacerbation of any intermittent distemper.

Small stones and gravel collect and become very large in the kidneys, in which case a fit of the stone in that part is the cure. Sharp's Surgery.

2. Any short return after intermission; interval.

Sometimes 'tis grateful to the rich to try

A short vicissitude, and fit of poverty. Dryden's Horace.

Men that are habitually wicked may now and then, by fits and starts, feel certain motions of repentance. L'Estrange.

By fits my swelling grief appears,

In rising sighs and falling tears. Addison on Italy.

Thus o'er the dying lamp th' unsteady flame

Hangs quivering on a point, leaps off by fits,

And falls again as loth to quit its hold. Addison's Cato.

Religion is not the business of some fits only and intervals of our life, to be taken up at certain days and hours, and laid aside for the rest of our time; but a system of precepts to be regarded in all our conduct. Rogers's Sermons.

All fits of pleasure we balanced by an equal degree of pain or languor: 'tis like spending this year part of the next year's revenue. Swift.

3. Any violent affection of mind or body.

The life did flit away out of her nest,

And all his senses were with deadly fit oppress'd. Fairy Queen.

An ambitious man subjects himself to others, and puts it in the power of every malicious tongue to throw him into a fit of melancholy. Addison's Spectator.

4. Disorder; distemperature.

For your husband,

He's noble, wise, judicious, and best knows

The fits o' th' season. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

5. It is used, without an epithet of discrimination, for the hysterical disorders of women, and the convulsions of children; and by the vulgar for the epilepsy.

Mrs. Bull was so much enraged, that she fell downright into a fit. Arbuthnot's History of John Bull.

FIT. adj. [vitten, Flemish, Juvius.]

1. Qualified; proper: with for before the noun, and to before the verb.

Mighty men of valour, fit to go out for war and battle.

I Chron. vii. 11.

He lends him vain Goliath's sacred sword,

The fittest help just fortune could afford. Cowley's Davideis.

This fury fit for her intent she chose,

One who delights in wars and human woes. Dryden's Æn.

It is a wrong use of my understanding to make it the rule and measure of another man's; a use which it is neither fit for, nor capable of. Locke.

2. Convenient; meet; proper; right.

Since we have said it were good not to use men of ambitious natures; except it be upon necessity, it is fit we speak in what cases they are so. Bacon, Essay 37.

See how thou could'st judge of fit and meet. Milt. P. L.

It is fit for a man to know his own abilities and weaknesses, and not think himself obliged to imitate all that he thinks fit to praise. Boyle.

If our forefathers thought fit to be grave and serious, I hope their posterity may laugh without offence. Addison.

TO FIT. v. a. [vitten, Flemish, Juvius.]

1. To accommodate to any thing; to suit one thing to another.

The carpenter marketh it out with a line: he fitteth it with planes. Is. xlv. 13.

Would fate permit

To my desires I might my fortune fit,

Troy I would raise. Denham.

2. To accommodate a person with any thing: as, the taylor fits his customer.

A trussmaker fitted the child with a pair of boddice, stiffened on the lame side. Wise's Surgery.

3. To be adapted to; to suit any thing.

She shall be our messenger to this poultry knight: trust me

I thought on her; she'll fit it. Shakespeare.

As much of the stone as was contiguous to the marcasite, fitted the marcasite so close as if it had been formerly liquid. Bo.

4. TO FIT out. To furnish; to equip; to supply with necessaries or decoration.

A play, which if you dare but twice fit out,

You'll all be slander'd, and be thought devout. Dryden.

The English fleet could not be paid and manned, and fitted out, unless we encouraged trade and navigation. Addison's Freeb.

5. TO FIT up. To furnish; to make proper for the use or reception of any.

He has fitted up his farm. Pope to Swift.

TO FIT. v. n. To be proper; to be fit.

Nor fits it to prolong the heavenly feast,

Timeless, indecent, but retire to rest. Pope's Odyssey. b. iii.

FITCH. n. f. [A colloquial corruption of vetch.] A small kind of wild pea.

Now is the season

For sowing of fitches, of beans, and of pease. Tusser.

FITCHAT. } n. f. [fissau, French; fisse, Dutch.] A stinking

FITCH. } little beast, that robs the henroost and warren. Skinner

Skinner calls him the stinking ferret; but he is much larger, at least as some provinces distinguish them, in which the polecat is termed a fitchat, and the stinking ferret a float.

'Tis such another fitchew! marry, a perfum'd one:

What do you mean by this haunting of me? Shakespeare.

The fitchat, the fulmart, and the like creatures, live upon the face and within the bowels of the earth. Walton's Angler.

FITFUL. adj. [fit and full.] Varied by paroxysms; disordered by change of maladies.

Duncan is in his grave;

After life's fitful fever he sleeps well. Shakesp. Macbeth.

FITLY. adv. [from fit.]

1. Properly; justly; reasonably.

Mutinous parts

That envied his receipt, even so most fitly

As you malign our senators. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

Where a man cannot fitly play his own part, if he have not a friend, he may quit the stage. Bacon, Essay 28.

I cannot fitlier compare marriage than to a lottery; for, in both, he that ventures may succeed, and may miss; and if he draw a prize, he hath a rich return of his venture: but in both lotteries there lie pretty store of blanks for every prize. Boyle.

The whole of our duty may be expressed most fitly by departing from evil. Tillotson's Sermons.

An animal, in order to be moveable, must be flexible; and therefore is fitly made of separate and small solid parts, replete with proper fluids. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. Commodiously; meetly.

To take a latitude,

Sun or stars are fitliest view'd

At their brightest; but to conclude

Of longitudes, what other way have we

But to mark when, and where the dark eclipses be. Donne.

FITNESS. n. f. [from fit.]

1. Propriety; meetness; justness; reasonableness.

In things the fitness whereof is not of itself apparent, nor easy to be made sufficiently manifest unto all, yet the judgment of antiquity, concurring with that which is received, may induce them to think it not unfit. Hooker, b. v. f. 7.

The queen being absent, 'tis a needful fitness

That we adjourn this court. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

Wer't my fitness

To let these hands obey my boiling blood,

They're apt enough to dislocate and tear

Thy flesh and bones. Shakespeare's King Lear.

2. Convenience; commodity; the state of being fit.

Nor time nor place

Did then cohere, and yet you would make both:

They've made themselves, and that their fitness now

Does unmake you. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

FITMENT. n. f. [from fit] Something adapted to a particular purpose.

Poor befeeming: 'twas a fitment for

The purpose I then follow'd. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

FITTER. n. f. [from fit.]

1. The person or thing that confers fitness for any thing.

Sowing the sandy gravelly land in Devonshire and Cornwall with French furze-seed, they reckon a great improver of their land, and a fitter of it for corn. Mortimer's Husbandry.

2. [from fetta, Italian: fetzen, German.] A small piece: as, to cut into fitters. Skinner.

FITZ. n. f. [Norman, from filz, a son, Fr.] A son. Only used in law and genealogy: as Fitzherbert, the son of Herbert; Fitzthomas, the son of Thomas; Fitzroy, the son of the king. It is commonly used of illegitimate children.

FIVE. adj. [fiſ, Saxon.] Four and one; half of ten.

And five of them were wise, and five were foolish. Mat.

No person, no incident, but must be of use to carry on the main design: all things else are like six fingers to the hand, when nature, which is superfluous in nothing, can do her work with five. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

Five herds, five bleating flocks, his pastures fill'd;

His lands a hundred yoke of oxen till'd. Dryden's Æn.

Our British youth lose their figure by that time they are five and twenty. Addison's Guardian, N<sup>o</sup>. III.

FIVELEAVED Grass. n. f. Cinquefoil; a species of clover.

FIVES. n. f.

1. A kind of play with a bowl.

2. A disease of horses.

His horse sped with spavins rayed with the yellows, past cure of the fives, and stark spoiled with the staggers. Shakesp.

TO FIX. v. a. [fixer, French; fixus, Latin.]

1. To make fast, firm, or stable.

Hell heard the unsufferable noise, hell saw

Heav'n ruining from heav'n, and would have fled

Affrighted, but that fate had fix'd too deep

Her dark foundations, and too fast had bound. Milt. P. L.

2. To settle; to establish invariably.

Brightest seraph! tell

In which of all these orbs hath man

His fixed seat, or fixed seat hath none,

But all these shining orbs his choice to dwell! Milt. P. L.

One loves fixed laws, and the other arbitrary power. Temple.

When custom hath fixed his eating to certain stated periods, his stomach will expect victuals at the usual hour. Locke.

3. To direct without variation.

Why are thine eyes fixt to the fullen earth,

Gazing at that which seems to dim thy sight! Shak. H. VI.

Thus while the Trojan prince employs his eyes,

Fix'd on the walls with wonder and surprize. Dryden's Æn.

4. To deprive of volatility.

We pronounce concerning gold, that it is fixed.

Locke.

5. To pierce; to transfix. A sense purely Latin.

While from the raging sword he vainly flies,

A bow of steel shall fix his trembling thighs. Sandys.

6. To withhold from motion.

TO FIX. v. n.

1. To settle the opinion; to determine the resolution.

If we would be happy, we must fix upon some foundation that can never deceive us. L'Estrange.

He made himself their prey,

T' impose on their belief and Troy betray;

Fix'd on his aim, and obstinately bent

To die undaunted, or to circumvent. Dryden's Æn.

Here hope began to dawn; resolv'd to try,

She fix'd on this her utmost remedy,

Death was behind; but hard it was to die. Dryden.

In most bodies, not propagated by seed, it is the colour we must fix on, and are most led by. Locke.

2. To rest; to cease to wander.

Your kindness banishes your fear,

Resolv'd to fix for ever here. Wallier.

3. To lose volatility, so as to be malleable.

In the midst of molten lead, when it beginneth to congeal, make a little dent, and put quicksilver, wrapped in a piece of linen, in that hole, and the quicksilver will fix and run no more, and endure the hammer. Bacon's Natural History.

FIXATION. n. f. [French.]

1. Stability; firmness; steadiness.

Your fixation in matters of religion will not be more necessary for your soul's than your kingdom's peace. King Charles.

2. Residence in a certain place.

To light, created in the first day, God gave no proper place or fixation. Raleigh's History of the World.

3. Confinement; forbearance of excursion.

They are subject to errors from a narrowness of soul, a fixation and confinement of thought to a few objects. Watts.

4. Want of volatility; destruction of volatility.

Upon the compound body three things are chiefly to be observed; the colour, the fragility or plianthness, and the volatility or fixation, compared with the simple bodies. Bacon.

It is more difficult to make gold of other metals less ponderous and less materiate, than, via versa, to make silver of lead or quicksilver, both which are more ponderous than silver; so that they need rather a degree of fixation than any condensation. Bacon's Natural History.

5. Reduction from fluidity to firmness.

Salt dissolved, upon a fixation returns to its affected cubes. Glanv. Sceps. c. 7.

FIXEDLY. adv. [from fixed.] Certainly; firmly; in a manner settled and established.

If we pretend that the distinction of species, or sorts, is fixedly established by the real and secret constitutions of things. Locke.

FIXEDNESS. n. f. [from fixed.]

1. Stability; firmness.

2. Want or loss of volatility.

Fixedness, or a power to remain in the fire unconsumed, is an idea that always accompanies our complex idea signified by the word gold. Locke.

3. Solidity; coherence of parts.

All matter is either fluid or solid, to comprehend all the middle degrees between extreme fixedness and coherency, and the most rapid intestine motion of the particles of bodies. Bentley's Sermons.

4. Steadiness; settled opinion or resolution.

A fixedness in religion will not give my conscience leave to consent to innovations. King Charles.

FIXIDITY. n. f. [from fixed.] Coherence of parts, opposed to volatility. A word of Boyle.

Bodies mingled by the fire are differing as to fixidity and volatility, and yet are so combined by the first operation of the fire, that itself does scarce afterwards separate them. Boyle.

FIXITY. n. f. [fixité, French.] Coherence of parts, opposed to volatility.

And are not the sun and fixed stars great earths vehemently hot, whose heat is conserved by the greatness of the bodies, and the mutual action and reaction between them, and the light which they emit, and whose parts are kept from fuming away, not only by their fixity, but also by the vast weight and density of the atmospheres incumbent upon them? Newt. Opt.

FIXURE.

FIXURE. n. f. [from fix.]

1. Position.

The fixure of her eye hath motion in't,
As we were mock'd with art. Shakesp. Winter's Tale.

2. Stable pressure.

The firm fixure of thy foot would give an excellent motion to thy gait. Shakesp. Merry Wives of Windsor.

3. Firmness; stable state.

Frights, changes, horrors,
Divert and crack, rend and deracinate
The unity and married calm of states
Quite from their fixure. Shakespeare's Troil. and Cressida.

FRIZGIG. n. f. A kind of dart or harpoon with which seamen strike fish.

FLABBY. adj. [flaccidus, Latin.] Soft; not firm; easily shaking or yielding to the touch.

Paleness, a weak pulse, palpitations of the heart, flabby and black flesh, are symptoms of weak fibres. Arbuthnot.

Pulls out the rags contriv'd to prop

Her flabby dugs, and down they drop. Swift.

FLABILE. adj. [flabilis, Latin.] Blown about by the wind; subject to be blown. Dist.

FLACCID. adj. [flaccidus, Latin.] Weak; limber; not stiff; lax; not tense.

The bowing and inclining the head is found in the great flower of the sun: the cause I take to be, is, that the part against which the sun beateth waxeth more faint and flaccid in the stalk, and thereby less able to support the flower. Bacon.

They whose muscles are weak or flaccid, are unapt to pronounce the letter r. Holder's Elements of Speech.

The surgeon ought to vary the diet as he finds the fibres are too flaccid and produce funguses, or as they harden and produce callosities. Arbuthnot on Diet.

FLACCIDITY. n. f. [from flaccid.] Laxity; limberness; want of tension; want of stiffness.

There is neither fluxion nor pain, but flaccidity joined with insensibility. Wigeman's Surgery.

TO FLAG. v. n. [flaggeren, Dutch; pleogan, Saxon, to fly.]

1. To hang loose without stiffness or tension.

Beds of cotton wool hung up between two trees, not far from the ground; in the which, flagging down in the middle, men, wives and children lie together. Abbot.

The jades

That drag the tragick melancholy night,
Who with their drowsy, slow, and flagging wings
Clip dead men's graves. Shakespeare's Henry VI.

It keeps those slender aerial bodies separated and stretched out, which otherwise, by reason of their flexibleness and weight, would flag or curl. Boyle's Spring of the Air.

Like a fiery meteor sunk the sun,

The promise of a storm; the shifting gales
Forsoke by fits, and fill the flagging sails. Dryden.

2. To grow spiritless or dejected.

My flagging soul flies under her own pitch,
Like fowl in air too damp, and lags along
As if she were a body in a body:
My senses too are dull and stupify'd,
Their edge rebated: sure some ill approaches. Dryd. D. Seb.

The pleasures of the town begin to flag and grow languid, giving way daily to cruel inroads from the spleen. Swift.

3. To grow feeble; to lose vigour.

Juice in language is somewhat less than blood; for if the words be but becoming and signifying, and the sense gentle, there is juice: but where that wanteth, the language is thin, flagging, poor, starved, scarce covering the bone, and shews like stones in a sack: some men, to avoid redundancy, run into that; and while they strive to hinder ill blood or juice, they lose their good. Ben. Johnson's Discoveries.

His stomach will expect victuals at the usual hour, and grow peevish if he passes it; either fretting itself into a troublesome excess, or flagging into a downright want of appetite. Locke.

There must be a noble train of actions to preserve his fame in life and motion; for, when it is once at a stand, it naturally flags and languishes. Addison's Spectator, N<sup>o</sup>. 256.

If on sublimer wings of love and praise,

My love above the starry vault I raise,
Lur'd by some vain conceit of pride or lust,
I flag, I drop, and flutter in the dust. Arbuthnot.

He sees a spirit hath been raised against him, and he only watches 'till it begins to flag: he goes about watching when to devour us. Swift.

TO FLAG. v. a.

1. To let fall; to suffer to droop.

Take heed, my dear, youth flies apace;
As well as Cupid, Time is blind:
Soon must those glories of thy face
The fate of vulgar beauty find:
The thousand loves, that arm thy potent eye,
Must drop their quivers, flag their wings, and die. Prior.

2. [From flag, a species of stone.] To lay with broad stone.

The sides and floor are all flagged with excellent marble. Sandys.

A white stone used for flagging floors. Woodward on Fossils.

FLAG. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A water plant with a broad bladed leaf and yellow flower, so called from its motion in the wind.

She took an ark of bulrushes, and laid it in the flags by the river's brink. Ex. ii 3.

Can bulrushes but by the river grow?

Can flags there flourish where no waters flow. Sandys.

There be divers fishes that cast their spawn on flags or stones. Walton's Angler.

Cut flag roots, and the roots of other weeds. Mortimer.

2. The colours or ensign of a ship or land forces, by which signals are made at sea, or regiments are distinguished in the field.

These flags of France that are advanced here,

Before the eye and prospect of your town;

Have hither march'd to your endamage. Shak. K. J. bn.

He hangs out as many flags as he descrieth vessels; square, if ships; if gallies, pendants. Sandys's Travels.

Let him be girt

With all the grisly legions that troop

Under the sooty flag of Acheron,

Harpies and hydras, or all the monstrous forms

'Twixt Africa and Inde, I'll find him out,

And force him to restore his purchase back,

Or drag him by the curls to a foul death. Milton.

The French and Spaniard, when your flags appear,

Forget their hatred, and consent to fear. Waller.

The interpretation of that article about the flag is a ground at pleasure for opening a war. Temple.

In either's flag the golden serpents bear,

Erecting crests alike, like volumes rear,

And mingle friendly hissings in the air. Dryden's Aurengz.

Then they, whose mothers, frantick with their fear,

In woods and wilds the flags of Bacchus bear,

And lead his dances with dishevell'd hair. Dryden's Æn.

3. A species of stone used for smooth pavements. [flèche, old French]

Part of two flags striated, but deeper on one side than the other. Woodward on Fossils.

Flagstone will not split, as slate does, being found formed into flags, or thin plates, which are no other than so many strata. Woodward's Met. Foss.

FLAG-BROOM. n. f. [from flag and broom] A broom for sweeping flags or pavements, commonly made of birch-twigs, or of the leaves of the dwarf palm, imported from Spain.

FLAG-OFFICER. n. f. [flag and officer.] A commander of a squadron.

Her grandfather was a flag-officer. Addison's Spectator.

FLAG-SHIP. n. f. [flag and ship.] The ship in which the commander of a fleet is.

FLAG-WORM. n. f. [flag and worm.] A grub bred in watry places among flags or sedge.

He will in the three hot months bite at a flag-worm, or a green gentle. Walton's Angler.

FLAGELET. n. f. [flageolet, French.] A small flute; a small instrument of wind musick.

Play us a lesson on your flagelet. More's Divine Dialogues.

FLAGELLA'TION. n. f. [from flagello, Latin] The use of the scourge.

By Bridewell all descend,

As morning pray'r and flagellation end. Garth's Dispens.

FLAGGINESS. n. f. [from flaggy.] Laxity; limberness; want of tension.

FLAGGY. adj. [from flag.]

1. Weak; lax; limber; not stiff; not tense.

His flaggy wings, when forth he did display,

Were like two sails, in which the hollow wind

Is gather'd full, and worketh speedy way. Fairy Queen, b. i.

That basking in the sun thy bees may lye,

And resting there, their flaggy pinions dry. Dryden's Virgil.

2. Weak in taste; insipid.

Graft an apple-cion upon the stock of a colewort, and it will bear a great flaggy apple. Bacon's Natural History.

FLAGITIOUS. adj. [from flagitius, Latin.] Wicked; vil-laneous; atrocious.

No villany or flagitious action was ever yet committed, but, upon a due enquiry into the causes of it, it will be found that a lye was first or last the principal engine to effect it. South.

There's no working upon a flagitious and perverse nature by kindness and discipline. L'Estrange.

First, those flagitious times,

Pregnant with unknown crimes,

Conspire to violate the nuptial bed. Roscommon.

Perjury is a crime of so flagitious a nature, we cannot be too careful in avoiding every approach towards it. Addison.

But if in noble minds some dregs remain,

Not yet purg'd off, of spleen and sour disdain,

Discharge that rage on more provoking crimes,

Nor fear a dearth in these flagitious times. Pope.

FLAGITIOUSNESS. n. f. [from flagitius.] Wickedness; villainy.

FLAGON. n. f. [fflaccet, Welsh; flaxe, Saxon; flaske, Danish; flacon, French; flajer, Italian; flasco, Spanish.] A vessel of drink with a narrow mouth.

A mad rogue! he pour'd a flagon of Rhenish on my head once. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

More had sent him by a suitor in Chancery two silver flagons. Bacon's Apophth.

Did they coin pispots, bowls, and flagons

Int' officers of horse and dragoons? Hudibras, p. i. cant. 2.

His trusty flagon, full of potent juice,

Was hanging by, worn thin with age and use. Roscommon.

One flagon walks the round, that none should think

They either change, or stint him of his drink. Dryd. Juv.

FLAGRANCY. n. f. [flagrantia, Latin.] Burning; heat; fire.

Lust causeth a flagrancy in the eyes, as the sight and the touch are the things desired, and therefore the spirits resort to those parts. Bacon's Natural History.

FLAGRANT. adj. [flagrans, Latin.]

1. Ardent; burning; eager.

A thing which filleth the mind with comfort and heavenly delight, stirreth up flagrant desires and affections, correspondent unto that which the words contain. Hooker, b. v. f. 39.

2. Glowing; flushed.

See Sapho, at her toilet's greasy task,

And issuing flagrant to an evening mask:

So morning insects, that in muck begun,

Shine, buz, and fly-blow in the setting sun. Pope's Epistles.

3. Red; imprinted red.

Their common loves, a lewd abandon'd pack,

The beadle's lash still flagrant on their back. Prior.

4. Notorious; flaming.

When fraud is great, it furnishes weapons to defend itself; and at worst, if the crimes be so flagrant that a man is laid aside out of perfect shame, he retires loaded with the spoils of the nation. Swift.

With equal poize let steddly justice sway,

And flagrant crimes with certain vengeance pay;

But, 'till the proofs are clear, the stroke delay. Smith.

FLAGRATION. n. f. [flagro, Latin.] Burning. Dist.

FLAGSTAFF. n. f. [flag and staff.] The staff on which the flag is fixed.

The duke, less numerous, but in courage more,

On wings of all the winds to combat flies:

His murdering guns a loud defiance roar,

And bloody crosses on his flagstaff's rise. Dryd. Ann. Mirab.

FLAIL. n. f. [flagellum, Latin; flegel, German.] The instrument with which grain is beaten out of the ear.

Our soldiers, like the night owl's lazy flight,

Or like a lazy thresher with a flail,

Fell gently down as if they struck their friends. Sh. H. VI.

When in one night, ere glimpse of morn,

His shadowy flail hath thresh'd the corn,

That ten day-labourers could not end,

Then lies him down the lubbar-fend. Milton.

In this pile should reign a mighty prince,

Born for a scourge of wit, and flail of sense. Dryden.

The dextrous handling of the flail, or the plough, and being good workmen with these tools, did not hinder Gideon's and Cincinnatus's skill in arms, nor make them less able in the arts of war and government. Locke.

The thresher, Duck, could o'er the queen prevail;

The proverb says, no fence against a flail. Swift.

FLAKE. n. f. [floccus, Latin.]

1. Any thing that appears loosely held together, like a flock of wool.

O crimson circles, like red flakes in the element, when the weather is hottest. Sidney, b. ii.

And from his wide devouring oven sent

A flake of fire, that flushing in his beard,

Him all amaz'd, and almost made affear'd. Fairy Queen.

The earth is sometimes covered with snow two or three feet deep, made up only of little flakes or pieces of ice. Burn.

Small drops of a misling rain, descending through a freezing air, do each of them shoot into one of those figured icicles; which, being ruffled by the wind, in their fall are broken, and clustered together into small parcels, which we call flakes of snow. Grew's Cosmolog. Sacr. b. i. c. 3.

Upon throwing in a stone the water boils for a considerable time, and at the same time are seen little flakes of scurf rising up. Addison on Italy.

2. A stratum; layer; lamina.

The flakes of his tough flesh so firmly bound,

As not to be divorced by a wound. Sandys.

A labourer in his left hand holding the head of the center-pin, and with his right drawing about the beam and teeth, which cut and tore away great flakes of the metal, 'till it received the perfect form the teeth would make. Moxon.

TO FLAKE. v. a. [from the noun.] To form in flakes or bodies loosely connected.

From the bleak pole no winds inclement blow,

Mold the round hail, or flake the fleecy snow. Pope's Odysse.

FLAKEY. adj. [from flake.]

1. Loosely hanging together.

The silent hour steals on,

And flaky darkness breaks within the East. Shakesp. Ri. b. III.

The trumpet roars, long flaky flames expire,

With sparks that seem to set the world on fire. Pope.

Hence, when the snows in Winter cease to weep,

And undissolv'd their flaky texture keep,

The banks with ease their humble streams contain,

Which swell in Summer, and those banks disdain. Blackm.

2. Lying in layers or strata; broken into laminæ.

FLAM. n. f. [A cant word of no certain etymology.] A falsehood; a lye; an illusory pretext.

A flam more senseless than the rog'ry

Of old aruspicy and aug'ry. Hudibras, p. ii. cant. 3.

'Till these men can prove the things, ordered by our church, to be either intrinsically unlawful or indecent, all pretences or pleas of conscience to the contrary are nothing but cant and cheat, flam and delusion. South's Sermons.

What are most of the histories of the world but lyes? Lyes immortalized and consigned over as a perpetual abuse and flam upon posterity. South's Sermons.

FLAM. n. f. [from the French flamme, a flame.] A transient blaze; a sudden explosion of flame from fat or dripping: and so in Scotland transferred to any thing glozing and flashily illusory.

TO FLAM. v. a. [from the noun.] To deceive with a lye. Merely cant.

For so our ignorance was flam'd,

To damn ourselves t' avoid being damn'd. Hudibras, p. iii.

God is not to be flam'd off with lyes, who knows exactly what thou can'st do, and what not. South's Sermons.

FLAMBEAU. n. f. [French.] A lighted torch.

The king seiz'd a flambeau with zeal to destroy. Dryden.

As the attendants carried each of them a flambeau in their hands, the sultan, after having ordered all the lights to be put out, gave the word to enter the house, find out the criminal, and put him to death. Addison's Guardian.

FLAME. n. f. [flamma, Latin; flamme, French]

1. Light emitted from fire.

Is not flame a vapour, fume, or exhalation heated red hot, that is, so hot as to shine? For bodies do not flame without emitting a copious fume, and this fume burns in the flame. Newton's Opt.

What flame, what lightning e'er

So quick an active force did bear!

2. Fire. Cowley.

Jove, Prometheus' theft allow;

The flames he once stole from thee, grant him now. Cowley.

3. Ardour of temper or imagination; brightness of fancy; vigour of thought.

Of all our elder plays,

This and Philaster have the loudest fame;

Great are their faults, and glorious is their flame:

In both our English genius is express,

Lofty and bold, but negligently dress. Waller.

4. Ardour of inclination.

Smit with the love of kindred arts we came,

And met congenial, mingling flame with flame. Pope.

5. Passion of love.

My heart's on flame, and does like fire

To her aspire. Cowley.

Come arm'd in flames; for I would prove

All the extremities of love. Cowley.

No warning of th' approaching flame;

Swiftly like sudden death it came:

I lov'd the moment I beheld. Granville.

TO FLAME. v. n. [from the noun]

1. To shine as fire; to burn with emission of light.

Can you think to blow out the intended fire your city is ready to flame in, with such weak breath as this? Shakesp.

He fell flaming through th' ethereal sky

To bottomless perdition. Milton.

Hell all around

As one great furnace flam'd. Milton.

2. To shine like flame.

Behold it like an ample curtain spread,

Now streak'd and glowing with the morning red;

Anon at noon in flaming yellow bright,

And chusing fable for the peaceful night. Prior.

3. To break out in violence of passion.

FLAMECOLOURED. adj. [flame and colour.] Of a bright yellow colour.

'Tis strong, and it does indifferent well in flamecoloured stockings. Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.

August shall bear the form of a young man of a fierce and cholerick aspect, in a flamecoloured garment. Peacham.

FLAMEN. n. f. [Latin.] A priest; one that officiates in solemn offices.

Then first the flamen tasted living food;

Next his grim idol smear'd with human blood. Pope.

FLAMMATION.

FLAMMATION. n. f. [flammatio, Latin.] The act of setting on flame.

White or crystalline arsenick, being artificial, and sublimed with salt, will not endure flammation. Brown's Vulgar Err.

FLAMMABILITY. n. f. [flamma, Latin.] The quality of admitting to be set on fire.

In the sulphur of bodies torrifed, that is, the oily, fat and unctuous parts, consist the principles of flammability. Brown.

FLAMMEOUS. adj. [flammeus, Latin.] Consisting of flame; resembling flame.

This flammeous light is not over all the body. Brown.

FLAMMI'FEROUS. adj. [flammiifer, Lat.] Bringing flame. Dict.

FLAMMI'VOMOUS. adj. [flamma and vomo, Latin.] Vomiting out flame. Dict.

FLA'MY. adj. [from flame.]

1. Inflamed; burning; flaming.

My thoughts imprison'd in my secret woes;

With flamy breaths do issue oft in sound. Sidney, b. ii.

2. Having the nature of flame.

The vital spirits of living creatures are a substance compounded of an airy and flamy matter; and though air and flame, being free, will not well mingle, yet bound in by a body they will. Bacon's Natural History.

FLANK. n. f. [flanc, French, according to Menage, from λαγών; more probably from latus, Latin.]

1. That part of the side of a quadruped near the hinder thigh.

The belly shall be eminent by shadowing the flank. Peach.

2. [In men.] The lateral part of the lower belly.

He said, and, pois'd in air, the jav'lin sent:

Through Paris shield the forceful weapon went,

His corset pierces, and his garment rends,

And glancing downward near his flank descends. Pope.

3. The side of any army or fleet.

Great ordnance and small shot thundered and showered upon our men from the rampier in front, and from the galleys that lay at sea in flank. Bacon's War with Spain.

The other half of the battle, and the whole flank of the rear, was closed by the carriages. Hayward.

Gray was appointed to stand on the left side, in such sort as he might take the flank of the enemy. Hayward.

To right and left the front

Divided, and to either flank retir'd. Milton's Paradise Lost.

4. [In fortification.] That part of the bastion which reaches from the curtain to the face, and defends the opposite face, the flank and the curtain. Harris.

TO FLANK. v. a.

1. To attack the side of a battalion or fleet.

2. To be posted so as to overlook or command any pass on the side; to be on the side.

With fates averse, against their king's command,

Arm'd on the right, and on the left they stand,

And flank the passage. Dryden's Æn.

By the rich scent we found our perfum'd prey,

Which, flank'd with rocks, did close in covert lay. Dryden.

FLA'NKER. n. f. [from flank.] A fortification jutting out so as to command the side of a body marching to the assault.

The Turks, discouraged with the loss of their fellows, and fore beaten by the Spaniards out of their flankers, were enforced to retire. Knolles's History of the Turks.

TO FLA'NKER. v. a. [flanquer, French.] To defend by lateral fortifications.

FLA'NNEL. n. f. [gwlanen, Welch, from gwlan, wool, Davies.]

A soft nappy stuff of wool.

I cannot answer the Welch flannel.

Shakespeare.

FLAP. n. f. [lœppe, Saxon.]

1. Any thing that hangs broad and loose, fastened only by one side.

There is a peculiar provision for the windpipe, that is, a cartilaginous flap upon the opening of the larynx, which hath an open cavity for the admission of the air. Brown's Vulg. Err.

Some surgeons make a crucial incision, upon the supposition that the wound will more easily heal by turning down the flaps. Sharp's Surgery.

2. The motion of any thing broad and loose.

3. [A disease in horses.]

When a horse is said to have the flaps, you may perceive his lips to be swelled on both sides of his mouth; and that which is in the blisters is like the white of an egg: you must, to cure it, cut some flashes with a knife, and rub it once with salt, and it will cure. Farrier's Dict.

TO FLAP. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To beat with a flap, as flies are beaten.

A hare, hard put to it by an eagle, took sanctuary in a ditch with a beetle: the eagle flapt off the former, and devoured the other. L'Estrange.

Yet let me flap this bug with gilded wings,

This painted child of dirt, that stinks and stings. Pope.

2. To move with a flap or noise made by the stroke of any thing broad.

The dira flapping on the shield of Turnus, and fluttering about his head, disheartened him in the duel. Dryden's Æn. Dedicat.

With fruitless toil

Flap filmy pinions oft, to extricate

Their feet in liquid shackles bound. Philips.

Three times, all in the dead of night;

A bell was heard to ring;

And shrieking at her window thrice

The raven flapp'd his wing; Tickell.

TO FLAP. v. n.

1. To ply the wings with noise.

'Tis common for a duck to run flapping and fluttering away, as if maimed, to carry people from her young. L'Estrange.

2. To fall with flaps; or broad parts depending.

When suffocating mists obscure the morn;

Let thy worst wig, long us'd to storms, be worn;

This knows the powder'd footman, and with care

Beneath his flapping hat secures his hair. Gay's Trivia.

FLA'PDRAGON. n. f.

1. A play in which they catch raisins out of burning brandy, and, extinguishing them by closing the mouth, eat them.

2. The thing eaten at flapdragon.

He plays at quoits well, and eats conger and fennel; and drinks candles ends for flapdragons, and rides the wild mare with the boys. Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. ii.

TO FLA'PDRAGON. v. a. [from the noun.] To swallow; to devour.

But to make an end of the ship, to see how the sea flap-dragoned it. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

FLA'PEARED. adj. [flap and ear.] Having loose and broad ears.

A whorlson, beetleheaded, flapeared knave. Shakespeare.

TO FLARE. v. n. [from fladeren, to flutter, Dutch, Skinner; perhaps accidentally changed from glare.]

1. To flutter with a splendid show.

She shall be loose enrob'd;

With ribbands pendant flaring 'bout her head. Shakespeare.

2. To glitter with transient lustre.

Doctrine and life, colours and light, in one

When they combine and mingle, bring

A strong regard and awe; but speech alone

Doth vanish like a flaring thing,

And in the ear, not conscience, ring. Herbert.

3. To glitter offensively.

When the sun begins to fling

His flaring beams, me, goddess, bring

To arched walks of twilight groves. Milton.

4. To be in too much light.

I cannot stay

Flaring in sunshine all the day. Prior.

FLASH. n. f. [φλαξ, Minshew.]

1. A sudden, quick, transitory blaze.

When the cross blue lightning seem'd to open

The breast of heav'n, I did present myself

Ev'n in the aim and very flash of it. Shakesp. Jul. Caesar.

We see a flash of a piece is seen sooner than the noise is heard. Bacon's Natural History, N° 210.

One with a flash begins, and ends in smok;

The other out of smok brings glorious light. Roscommon.

And as Ægeon, when with heaven he strove,

Defy'd the forky lightning from afar,

At fifty mouths his flaming breath expires,

And flash for flash returns, and fires for fires. Dryd. Æn.

2. Sudden burst of wit or merriment.

Where be your gibes now? your gambols? your songs? your flashes of merriment, that were wont to set the table in a roar? Shakespeare's Hamlet.

Wicked men prefer the light flashes of a wanton mirth, which for a while suspend reflection, and hide the sinner from himself, to such discourses as awaken conscience. Rogers.

3. A short transient state.

The Persians and Macedonians had it for a flash. Bacon.

4. A body of water driven by violence.

TO FLASH. v. n.

1. To glitter with a quick and transient flame.

This salt powdered, and put into a crucible, was, by the injection of well kindled charcoal, made to flash divers times almost like melted nitre. Boyle.

2. To burst out into any kind of violence.

By day and night he wrongs me; ev'ry hour

He flashes into one gross crime or other,

That sets us all at odds. Shakespeare's King Lear.

3. To break out into wit, merriment, or bright thought.

They flash out sometimes into an irregular greatness of thought. Felton on the Classics.

TO FLASH. v. a. To strike up large bodies of water from the surface.

With his raging arms he rudely flash'd

The waves about, and all his armour swept,

That all the blood and filth away was wash'd. Fairy Queen.

If the sea-water be flashed with a stick or oar, the same casteth a shining colour, and the drops resemble sparkles of fire. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

FLA'SHER. n. f. [from flash.] A man of more appearance of wit than reality. Diët.

FLA'SHILY. adv. [from flashy.] With empty show; without real power of wit or solidity of thought.

FLA'SHY. adj. [from flash.]

1. Empty; not solid; showy without substance.

Flashy wits cannot fathom the whole extent of a large discourse. Digby on the Soul, Dedicat.

When they list, their lean and flashy songs

Grate on their scrannel pipes of wretched straw. Milton.

This mean conceit, this darling mystery,

Which thou think'st nothing, friend! thou shalt not buy;

Nor will I change for all the fleshy wit. Dryden's Pers. Sat.

2. [From flaccidus, Skinner.] Insipid; without force or spirit.

Distilled books are, like common distilled waters, flashy things. Bacon, Essay 51.

Another plac'd

The silver stands, with golden flaskets grac'd. Pope's Odyss.

FLAT. adj. [plat, French.]

1. Horizontally level without inclination.

Thou all-shaking thunder,

Strike flat the thick rotundity o' th' world. Shak. K. Lear.

The houses are flat roofed to walk upon, so that every bomb that fell on them would take effect. Addison on Italy.

2. Smooth; without protuberances.

In the dawning of the next day we might plainly discern it was a land flat to our sight, and full of bosage. Bacon.

3. Without elevation.

Cease t' admire, and beauty's plumes

Fall flat, and shrink into a trivial toy,

At every sudden slighting quite abasht. Milton's Par. Lost.

4. Level with the ground.

In them is plainest taught, and easiest learnt,

What makes a nation happy, and keeps it so,

What ruins kingdoms, and lays cities flat. Milt. Par. Reg.

That Christ-church stands above ground, and that the church of Westminster lies not flat upon it, is your lordship's commendation. South.

5. Lying horizontally prostrate; lying along.

The wood-born people fall before her flat,

And worship her as goddesses of the wood. Fairy Queen, b. i.

That lamentable wound,

Which laid that wretched prince flat on the ground. Daniel.

6. [In painting.] Without relief; without prominence of the figures.

7. Tasteless; insipid; dead.

He, like a puling cuckold, would drink up

The lees and dregs of a flat tamed piece. Sh. Troil. and Cref.

Taste so divine! that what of sweet before

Hath touch'd my sense, flat seems to this and harsh. Milton.

The miry fields,

Rejoicing in rich mold, most ample fruit

Of beauteous form produce; pleasing to sight,

But to the tongue inelegant and flat. Phillips.

8. Dull; unanimated; frigid.

Short speeches fly abroad like darts, and are thought to be shot out of secret intentions; but as for large discourses, they are flat things, and not so much noted. Bacon, Essay 16.

Some short excursions of a broken vow

He made indeed, but flat insipid stuff. Dryd. Don Sebastian.

9. Depressed; spiritless; dejected.

My hopes all flat, nature within me seems

In all her functions weary of herself. Milton's Agonistes.

10. Unpleasing; tasteless.

How weary, stale, flat and unprofitable

Seem to me all the uses of this world! Shakesp. Hamlet.

To one firmly persuaded of the reality of heavenly happiness, and earnestly desirous of obtaining it, all earthly satisfactions must needs look little, and grow flat and unfavoury. Atterbury's Sermons.

11. Peremptory; absolute; downright.

His horse with flat tiring taught him, that discrete flays make speedy journeys. Sidney.

It is a flat wrong to punish the thought or purpose of any before it be enacted; for true justice punisheth nothing but the evil act or wicked word. Spenser's State of Ireland.

As it is in the nature of all men to love liberty, so they become flat libertines, and fall to all licentiousness. Spenser.

You start away,

And lend no ear unto my purposes;

Those prisoners you shall keep:

—I will, that's flat. Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. i.

Thus repuls'd, our final hope

Is flat despair: we must exasperate

Th' Almighty Victor to spend all his rage,

And that must end us. Milton's Paradise Lost, l. ii.

If thou sin in wine or wantonness,

Boast not thereof, nor make thy shame thy glory;

Frailty gets pardon by submissiveness:

But he that boasts, shuts that out of his story:

He makes flat war with God, and doth defy

With his meer clod of earth the spacious sky. Herbert.

You had broke and robb'd his house,

And stole his talismanique louse;

And all his new-found old inventions,

With flat felonious intentions. Hudibras, p. iii. cant. 1.

12. Not shrill; not acute; not sharp in sound.

If you stop the holes of a hawk's bell it will make no ring, but a flat noise or ratt'e. Bacon's Natural History.

The upper end of the windpipe is endued with several cartilages and muscles to contract or dilate it, as we would have our voice flat or sharp. Ray on the Creation.

FLAT. n. f.

1. A level; an extended plane.

The strings of a lute, viol, or virginals, give a far greater sound, by reason of the knot, board and concave underneath, than if there were nothing but only the fat of a board to let in the upper air into the lower. Bacon's Nat Hist.

Because the air receiveth great tincture from the earth, expose flesh or fish, both upon a stake of wood some height above the earth, and upon the flat of the earth. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

It comes near an artificial miracle to make divers distinct eminences appear a flat by force of shadows, and yet the shadows themselves not to appear. Wotton's Architecture.

He has cut the side of the rock into a flat for a garden; and by laying on it the waste earth, that he has found in several of the neighbouring parts, furnished out a kind of luxury for a hermit. Addison on Italy.

2. Even ground; not mountainous.

Now pile your dust upon the quick and dead,

'Till of this flat a mountain you have made,

T' o'ertop old Pelion, or the skyish head

Of blue Olympus. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

The way is ready and not long,

Beyond a row of myrtles, on a flat,

Fast by a mountain. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ix.

3. A smooth low ground exposed to inundations.

The ocean, overpeering of his list,

Eats not the flats with more impetuous haste,

Than young Laertes, in a riotous head,

O'erbears your officers. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

All the infections, that the sun sucks up

From bogs, fens, flats, on Prospero fall. Shakesp. Tempest.

Half my pow'rs this night,

Passing these flats, are taken by the tide;

These Lincoln washes have devoured them. Shak. K. John.

4. Shallow; strand; place in the sea where the water is not deep enough for ships.

I should not see the sandy hour-glass run,

But I should think of shallows and of flats. Shakespeare.

The difficulty is very great to bring them in or out through so many flats and sands, if wind and weather be not very favourable. Raleigh's Essays.

Having newly left these grammatick flats and shallows, where they stuck unreasonably, to learn a few words with lamentable constructions, we are now on the sudden turmoiled with their unballasted wits in fathomless and unquiet deeps of controversy. Milton on Education.

Full in the prince's passage hills of sand,

And dang'rous flats, in secret ambush lay,

Where the false tides skim o'er the cover'd land,

And seamen with dissembled depths betray. Dryden.

The sea could not be narrower than it is, without a great loss to the world; and must we now have an ocean of mere flats and shallows, to the utter ruin of navigation? Bentley.

5. The broad side of a blade.

A darted mandate came

From that great will which moves this mighty frame,

Bid me to thee, my royal charge, repair,

To guard thee from the dæmons of the air;

My flaming sword above 'em to display,

All keen and ground upon the edge of day,

The flat to sweep the visions from thy mind,

The edge to cut 'em through that slay behind. Dryden.

6. Depression of thought or language.

Milton's Paradise Lost is admirable; but am I therefore bound to maintain, that there are no flats amongst his elevations, when 'tis evident he creeps along sometimes for above an hundred lines together? Dryden.

7. A surface without relief, or prominences.

Are there then such ravishing charms in a dull unvaried flat, to make a sufficient compensation for the chief things of the ancient mountains, and for the precious things of the lasting hills. Bentley's Sermons.

To FLAT. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To level; to depress; to make broad and smooth.

The ancients say, if you take two twigs of several fruit-trees, and flat them on the sides, and bind them close, and set them in the ground, they will come up in one stock. Bacon.

With horrid shapes she does her sons expose,

Distends their swelling lips, and flats their nose. Creech.

2. To make vapid.

An orange, lemon and apple, wrapt in a linen cloth, being buried for a fortnight four foot deep within the earth, though in a moist place and rainy time, were become a little harder than they were; otherwise fresh in their colour, but their juice somewhat flatted. Bacon's Natural History, N<sup>o</sup>. 377.

To FLAT. v. n.

1. To grow flat: opposed to swell.

I burnt it the second time; and observed the skin shrink, and the swelling to flat yet more than at first. Temple.

2. To obstruct; retard; hinder; to render unanimated or evanid.

Nor are constant forms of prayer more likely to flat and hinder the spirit of prayer and devotion, than unpremeditated and confused variety to distract and lose it. K. Charles.

FLA'TLONG. adv. [flat and long.] With the flat downwards; not edgewise.

What a blow was there given?

—An it had not fallen flatlong. Shakespeare's Tempest.

FLA'TLY. adv. [from flat.]

1. Horizontally; without inclination.

2. Without prominence or elevation.

3. Without spirit; dully; frigidly.

4. Peremptorily; downright.

He in these wars had flatly refused his aid. Sidney, b. ii.

Thereupon they flat'y disavouch

To yield him more obedience, or support. Daniel's Ci. War.

Unjust, thou say'st,

Flatly unjust, to bind with laws the free. Milt. Parad. Lost.

Not any interpreters allow it to be spoken of such as flatly deny the being of God; but of them that believing his existence, do yet seclude him from directing the affairs of the world. Bentley's Sermons.

FLA'TNESS. n. f. [from flat]

1. Evenness; level extension.

2. Want of relief or prominence.

It appears so very plain and uniform, that one would think the coiner looked on the flatness of a figure, as one of the greatest beauties in sculpture. Addison on ancient Medals.

3. Deadness; insipidity; vapidness.

Deadness or flatness in cyder is often occasioned by the too free admission of air into the vessel. Mortimer's Husbandry.

4. Dejection of state.

The emperor of Russia was my father:

Oh, that he were alive, and here beholding

His daughter's trial! that he did but see

The flatness of my misery! Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

5. Dejection of mind; want of life; want of spirit.

6. Dulness; insipidity; frigidity.

How fast does obscurity, flatness, and impertinency flow in upon our meditations? 'Tis a difficult task to talk to the purpose, and to put life and perspicuity into our discourses. Collier.

Some of Homer's translators have swelled into fustian, and others sunk into flatness. Pope's Preface to Homer.

7. The contrary to shrillness or acuteness of sound.

Take two saucers, and strike the edge of the one against the bottom of the other within a pail of water, and you shall find the sound groweth more flat, even while part of the saucer is above the water; but that flatness of sound is joined with a harshness. Bacon's Natural History, N<sup>o</sup>. 157.

To FLA'TTEN. v. a. [flatir, French, from flat.]

1. To make even or level, without prominence or elevation.

2. To beat down to the ground.

If they should lie in it, and beat it down, or flatten it, it will rise again. Mortimer's Husbandry.

3. To make vapid.

4. To deject; to depress; to dispirit.

To FLA'TTEN. v. n.

1. To grow even or level.

2. To grow dull and insipid.

Here joys that endure for ever, fresh and in vigour, are opposed to satisfactions that are attended with satiety and surfeits, and flatten in the very tasting. L'Estrange, Fable 161.

FLA'TTER. n. f. [from flat.] The workman or instrument by which bodies are flattened.

To FLA'TTER. v. a. [flater, French.]

1. To soothe with praises; to please with blandishments; to gratify with servile obsequiousness; to gain by false compliments.

When I tell him he hates flatterers,

He says he does; being then most flattered. Shak. Jul. Cæs.

His nature is too noble for the world;

He would not flatter Neptune for his trident,

Or Jove for's power to thunder: his heart's his mouth;

What his breast forges, that his tongue must vent. Shakesp.

He that flattereth his neighbour, spreadeth a net for his feet. Prov. xxix. 5.

He flattereth himself in his own eyes, until his iniquity be found hateful. Pf. xxxvi. 2.

After this way of flattering their willing benefactors out of part, they contrived another of forcing their unwilling neighbours out of all their possessions. Decay of Piety.

Averse alike to flatter or offend. Pope.

They flatter'd ev'ry day, and some days eat. Pope.

I scorn to flatter you or any man. Dr. Newton's Ded. to Milt.

2. To praise falsely.

Flatter'd crimes of a licentious age,

Provoke our censure. Young.

3. To please; to soothe. This sense is purely Gallick.

A consort of voices supporting themselves by their different parts make a harmony, pleasingly fills the ears and flatters them. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

4. To raise false hopes.

He always vacant; always amiable,

Hopes thee; of flatt'ring gales

Unmindful. Milton.

FLA'TTERER. n. f. [from flatter.] One who flatters; a fawner; a wheedler; one who endeavours to gain favour by pleasing falsities.

When I tell him he hates flatterers,

He says he does; being then most flattered. Shak. Jul. Cæs.

Some praises proceed merely of flattery; and if he be an ordinary flatterer, he will have certain common attributes, which may serve every man: if he be a cunning flatterer; he will follow the arch flatterer, which is a man's self. But if he be an impudent flatterer, look wherein a man is conscious to himself that he is most defective, and is most out of countenance in himself, that will the flatterer entitle him to perforce. Bacon, Essay 54.

If we from wealth to poverty descend,

Want gives to know the flatt'rer from the friend. Dryden.

After treating her like a goddess, the husband uses her like a woman: what is still worse, the most abject flatterers degenerate into the greatest tyrants. Addison's Guardian, N<sup>o</sup>. 113.

The publick should know this of your ladyship; yet whoever goes about to inform them, shall be censured for a flat-terer. Swift.

FLA'TTERY. n. f. [from flatter; flaterie, French] False praise; artful obsequiousness; adulation.

Minds, by nature great, are conscious of their greatness,

And hold it mean to borrow aught from flattery. Rowe.

Simple pride for flatt'ry makes demands. Pope.

See how they beg an alms of flattery!

They languish, O! support them with a lye. Young.

FLA'TTISH. adj. [from flat.] Somewhat flat; approaching to flatness.

These are from three inches over to six or seven, and of a flattish shape. Woodward on Fossils.

FLA'TULENCY. n. f. [from flatulent.]

1. Windiness; fulness of wind; turgescence by wind confined.

Vegetable substances contain a great deal of air, which expands itself, producing all the disorders of flatulency. Arbuthn.

2. Emptiness; vanity; levity; airiness.

Whether most of them are not the genuine derivations of the hypothesis they claim to, may be determined by any that considers the natural flatulency of that airy scheme of notions. Glanville.

FLA'TULENT. adj. [flatulentus, flatius, Latin.]

1. Turgid with air; windy.

Pease are mild and demulcent; but being full of aerial particles, are flatulent, when dissolved by digestion. Arbuthnot.

Flatulent tumours are such as easily yield to the pressure of the finger; but readily return, by their elasticity, to a tumid state again: these are so light as scarce to be felt by the patient, and no otherwise incommodious than by their unsightliness or bulk. Quincy.

2. Empty; vain; big without substance or reality; puffy.

To talk of knowledge, from those few indistinct representations which are made to our grosser faculties, is a flatulent vanity. Glanv. Scept. c. 23.

How many of these flatulent writers have sunk in their reputation, after seven or eight editions of their works. Dryden.

FLATUOSITY. n. f. [flatuosité, French, from flatius, Latin.] Windiness; fulness of air.

The cause is flatuosity; for wind stirred, moveth to expel; and all purgers have in them a raw spirit or wind, which is the principal cause of tension in the stomach and belly. Bacon.

FLA'TUOUS. adj. [from flatius, Latin.] Windy; full of wind.

Rhubarb in the stomach, in a small quantity, doth digest and overcome, being not flatuous nor loathsome; and so sendeth it to the mesentery veins, and, being opening, it helpeth down urine. Bacon's Natural History, N<sup>o</sup>. 44.

FLA'TUS. n. f. [Latin.] Wind gathered in any cavities of the body, caused by indigestion and a gross internal perspiration; which is therefore dissolved by warm aromatics. Quinc.

FLA'TWISE. adj. [flat and wise: so it should be written, not flatways.] With the flat downwards; not the edge.

Its posture in the earth was flatwise, and parallel to the site of the stratum in which it was reposit. Woodward on Fossils.

To FLAUNT. v. n.

1. To make a fluttering show in apparel.

With ivy canopy'd, and interwove
With flaunting honeysuckle. Milton.

These courtiers of applause deny themselves things convenient to flaunt it out, being frequently enough fain to immolate their own desires to their vanity. Boyle.

Here, attir'd beyond our purse, we go,
For useless ornament and flaunting show:

We take on trust, in purple robes to shine,

And poor, are yet ambitious to be fine. Dryden's Juvenal.

You sot, you loiter about alehouses, or flaunt about the streets in your new-gilt chariot, never minding me nor your numerous family. Arbutnot's History of John Bull.

2. To be hung with something loose and flying. This seems not to be proper.

Fortune in men has some small difference made;

One flaunts in rags, one flutters in brocade. Pope's Essays.

FLAUNT. n. f. Any thing loose and airy.

How would he look to see his work so noble,

Wildly bound up, what would he say! or how

Should I in these my borrow'd flaunts behold

The sternness of his presence! Shakesp. Winter's Tale.

FLAVOUR. n. f.

1. Power of pleasing the taste.

They have a certain flavour, at their first appearance, from several accidental circumstances, which they may lose, if not taken early. Addison's Spectator, N<sup>o</sup>. 488.

2. Sweetness to the smell; odour; fragrance.

Myrtle, orange, and the blushing rose,

With bending heaps, so nigh their bloom disclose,

Each seems to smell the flavour which the other blows. Dry.

FLAVOUREOUS. adj. [from flavour.]

1. Delightful to the palate.

Sweet grapes degen'rate there, and fruits declin'd

From their first flav'rous taste, renounce their kind. Dryden.

2. Fragrant; odorous.

FLAW. n. f. [φλάω, to break; flöh, Saxon, a fragment; flaww, Dutch, broken in mind.]

1. A crack or breach in any thing.

This heart shall break into a thousand flaws,

Or ere I weep. Shakespeare's King Lear.

Wool, new-thorn, being laid casually upon a vessel of verjuice, after some time had drunk up a great part of the verjuice, though the vessel were whole, without any flaw, and had not the bunghole open. Bacon's Natural History.

We found it exceeding difficult to keep out the air from getting in at any imperceptible hole or flaw. Boyle.

A flaw is in thy ill-bak'd vessel found;

'Tis hollow, and returns a jarring sound. Dryden's Pers.

As if great Atlas, from his height,

Should sink beneath his heavenly weight;

And with a mighty flaw the flaming wall, as once it shall,

Should gape immense, and, rushing down, o'erwhelm this nether ball. Dryden.

Whether the nymph shall break Diana's law,

Or some frail China-jar receive a flaw. Pope.

He that would keep his house in repair, must attend every little breach or flaw, and supply it immediately, else time alone will bring all to ruin. Swift.

2. A fault; defect.

Yet certain though it be, it hath flaws; for that the scriweners and brokers do value unsound men to serve their own turn. Bacon's Essays.

Traditions were a proof alone,

Could we be certain such they were, so known:

But since some flaws in long descents may be,

They make not truth, but probability. Dryden.

And laid her dowry out in law,

To null her jointure with a flaw. Hudibras, p. iii. c. i.

Their judgment has found a flaw in what the generality of mankind admires. Addison's Spectator.

So many flaws had this vow in its first conception. Alterb.

3. A sudden gust; a violent blast. [from flō, Latin.]

Being incens'd, he's flint;

As humorous as Winter, and as sudden

As flaws congealed in the spring of day. Shakesp. Hen. IV.

Oh, that that earth, which kept the world in awe,

Should patch a wall, t' expel the Winter's flaw. Shak. Ham.

As a huge fish, laid

Near to the cold weed-gathering shore, is with a north flaw

Shoots back; so, sent against the ground, [fraid,

Was foil'd Eurialus. Chapman's Iliads.

Bursting their brazen dungeon, arm'd with ice,

And snow, and hail, and stormy gust, and flaw,

Boreas, and Cæcias, and Argettes loud,

And Thracias rend the woods, and seas upturn. Milton.

I heard the rack,

As earth and sky would mingle; but myself

Was distant; and these flaws, though mortals fear them,

As dangerous to the pillar'd frame of heav'n,

Or to the earth's dark basis underneath,

Are to the main inconsiderable. Milton's Paradise Lost.

4. A tumult; a tempestuous uproar.

And this fell tempest shall not cease to rage,

Until the golden circuit on my head

Do calm the fury of this madbrain'd flaw. Shak. Hen. VI.

The fort's revolted to the emperor,

The gates are open'd, the portcullis drawn,

And deluges of armies from the town

Came pouring in: I heard the mighty flaw;

When first it broke, the crowding ensigns saw

Which choak'd the passage. Dryden's Aurengzebe.

5. A sudden commotion of mind.

Oh these flaws and starts,

Impostors to true fear, would become

A woman's story at a Winter's fire. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

To FLAW. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To break; to crack; to damage with fissure.

But his flaw'd heart,

Alack, too weak the conflict to support,

'Twixt two extremes of passion, joy and grief,

Burst smilingly. Shakespeare's King Lear.

The cup was flawed with such a multitude of little cracks, that it looks like a white, not like a crystalline cup. Boyle.

The brazen cauldrons with the frosts are flaw'd,

The garment stiff with ice, at hearths is thaw'd. Dryden.

2. To break; to violate. Out of use.

France hath flaw'd the league, and hath attach'd

Our merchants goods. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

FLAWLESS. adj. [from flaw.] Without cracks; without defects.

A star of the first magnitude, which the more high, more vast, and more flawless, shines only bright enough to make itself conspicuous. Boyle on Colours.

FLAWN. n. f. [plena, Saxon; flan, French; vlaeye, Dutch.]

A sort of custard; a pie baked in a dish. Dist.

To FLAWTER. v. a. To scrape or pare a skin. *Ainsworth.*FLAWY. adj. [from flaw.] Full of flaws.FLAX. n. f. [pleax, plex, Saxon; vlas, Dutch.]

1. The fibrous plant of which the finest thread is made.

The leaves, for the most part, grow alternately on branches: the cup of the flower consists of one leaf, is tubulous, and divided into five parts at the top: the flower consists of five leaves, which expand in form of a clove-gilliflower: the ovary, which rises from the centre of the flowercup, becomes an almost globular fruit, which is generally pointed, and composed of many cells, in which are lodged many plain smooth seeds, which are blunt at one end, and generally sharp at the other. The species are six. The first sort is that which is cultivated for use in divers parts of Europe, and is reckoned an excellent commodity. It should be cultivated. Miller.

2. The fibres of flax cleansed and combed for the spinner.

I'll fetch some flax, and whites of eggs,

T' apply to's bleeding face. Shakespeare's King Lear.

Then on the rock a scanty measure place

Of vital flax, and turn'd the wheel apace,

And turning sung. Dryden's Ovid, b. viii.

FLAXCOMB. n. f. [flax and comb.] The instrument with which the fibres of flax are cleansed from the brittle parts.FLAXDRESSER. n. f. [flax and dress.] He that prepares flax for the spinner.FLAXEN. adj. [from flax.]

1. Made of flax.

The matron, at her nightly task,

With pensive labour draws the flaxen thread. Thomf. Winter.

The best materials for making ligatures are the flaxen thread that shoemakers use. Sharp's Surgery.

2. Fair, long and flowing, as if made of flax.

I bought a fine flaxen long wig, that cost me thirty guineas.

Addison's Guardian, N<sup>o</sup>. 97.

FLAXWEED. n. f. A plant.To FLAY. v. a. [ad flaa, Islandick; flae, Danish; vlaen, Dut.]

1. To strip of the skin.

I must have suffered famine, been eaten with wild beasts, or have fallen into the hands of the Spaniards, and been flayed alive. Raleigh's Apology.

While the old levitical hierarchy continued, it was part of the ministerial office to flay the sacrifices. South.

Then give command the sacrifice to haste;

Let the flay'd victims in the plains be cast;

And sacred vows, and mystick song, apply'd

To grisly Pluto and his gloomy bride. Pope's Odyssey, b. x.

2. To take off the skin or surface of any thing.

They flay their skin from off them, break their bones, and chop them in pieces. Mac. iii. 3.

Neither should that odious custom be allowed of cutting scraws, which is flaying off the green surface of the ground, to cover their cabins, or make up their ditches. Swift.

FLAYER. n. f. [from flay.] He that strips off the skin of any thing.FLEA. n. f. [flea, Saxon; vloye, Dutch; fleach, Scottish.] A small red insect remarkable for its agility in leaping, which sucks the blood of larger animals.

While wormwood hath seed, get a handful or twain,

To save against March to make flea to refrain:

Where chamber is sweep'd, and wormwood is strown,
No flea for his life dare abide to be known. Tuff. Husband.
Fleas breed principally of straw or mats, where there hath been a little moisture. Bacon's Natural History.

A valiant flea, that dares eat his breakfast on the lip of a lion. Shakespeare's Henry V.

TO FLEA. v. a. [from the noun.] To clean from fleas.

FLE'ABANE. n. f. [flea and bane.] A plant.

It hath undivided leaves, which, for the most part, are glutinous, and have a strong scent: the cup of the flower is for the most part scaly, and of a cylindrical form: the flower is composed of many florets, which are succeeded by seeds with a downy substance adhering to them. Miller.

FLE'ABITE. } n. f. [flea and bite.]

FLE'ABITING. }

1. Red marks caused by fleas.

The attendance of a cancer is commonly a breaking out all over the body, like a fleabiting. Wise man's Surgery.

2. A small hurt or pain like that caused by the sting of a flea.

A gout, a cholick, a cutting off an arm or leg, or searing the flesh, are but fleabites to the pains of the soul. Harvey.

The same expence that breaks one man's back, is not a flea-biting to another. L'Estrange, Fable 229.

FLE'ABITTEN. adj. [flea and bite.]

1. Stung by fleas.

2. Mean; worthless.

Fleabitten synod, an assembly brew'd

Of clerks and elders ana, like the rude

Chaos of presbyt'ry, where laymen guide,

With the tame woolpack clergy by their side. Cleaveland.

FLE'AK. v. a. [from fleccus, Latin. See FLAKE.] A small lock, thread, or twist.

The businesses of men depend upon these little long fleaks or threads of hemp and flax. More's Antidote against Atheism.

in phlebotomy.] An instrument used to bleed cattle, which is placed on the vein, and then driven by a blow.

FLE'AWORT. n. f. [flea and wort.] A plant.

This plant agrees with plantain and buckthorn-plantain in every respect, excepting that this rises up with leafy stalks, and divides into many branches; whereas both the others produce their flowers upon naked pedicles. Miller.

TO FLECK. v. a. [fleck, German, a spot, Skinner: perhaps it is derived from fleak, or fleke, an old word for a grate, hurdle, or any thing made of parts laid transverse, from the Islandick flake.] To spot; to streak; to stripe; to dapple; to variegate.

Let it not see the dawning fleck the skies;

Nor the grey morning from the ocean rise. Sandys.

Fleck'd in her face, and with disorder'd hair,

Her garments ruffled, and her bosom bare. Dryden's Juven.

Both fleck'd with white, the true Arcadian strain. Dryden.

TO FLECKER. v. a. [from fleck.] To spot; to mark with strokes or touches of different colours; to mark with red whelkes.

The grey-ey'd morn smiles on the frowning night,

Check'ring the eastern clouds with streaks of light;

And darkness flecker'd, like a drunkard, reels

From forth day's path, and Titan's burning wheels. Shakesp.

FLED. The preterite and participle not properly of fly, to use the wings, but of flee, to run away.

The truth is fled far away, and leasing is hard at hand.
2 Ezdr. xiv. 18.

In vain for life he to the altar fled;

Ambition and revenge have certain speed. Prior.

FLEDGE. adj. [flederen, to fly, Dutch.] Full-feathered; able to fly; qualified to leave the nest.

We did find

The shells of fledge souls left behind. Herbert.

His locks behind,

Illustrious on his shoulders, fledge with wings,

Lay waving round. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. iii.

TO FLEDGE. v. a. [from the adjective.] To furnish with wings; to supply with feathers.

The birds were not as yet fledged enough to shift for themselves. L'Estrange, Fable 72.

The speedy growth of birds that are hatched in nests, and fed by the old ones 'till they be fledged, and come almost to full bigness in about a fortnight, seems to me an argument of providence. Ray on the Creation.

The sandals of celestial mould,

Fledg'd with ambrosial plumes, and rich with gold,

Surround her feet. Pope's Odyssey, b. i.

TO FLEE. v. n. pret. fled. [This word is now almost universally written fly, though properly to fly, pleogan, is to move with wings, and flee, plean, to run away. They are now confounded.] To run from danger; to have recourse to shelter.

Behold, this city is near to flee unto. Gen. xix. 20.

Were men so dull they could not see

That Lyce painted; should they flee

Like simple birds into a net,

So grossly woven and ill set?

Waller.

There are none of us fall into those circumstances of danger, want, or pain, that we can have hopes of relief but from God alone; none in all the world to flee to, but him.

Tillotson, Sermon I.

FLEECE. n. f. [flyr, pler, Saxon; vleese, Dutch] As much wool as is thorn from one sheep.

Giving account of the annual increase

Both of their lambs and of their woolly fleece. Hubb. Tale.

So many days my ewes have been with young,

So many months ere I shall shear the fleece. Shak. Hen. VI.

I am shepherd to another man,

And do not shear the fleeces that I graze. Shak. As you like it.

Her sunny locks

Hang on her temples like a golden fleece. Shakespeare.

Sailors have used every night to hang fleeces of wool on the sides of their ships, towards the water; and they have crushed fresh water out of them in the morning. Bacon's Nat. History.

The sheep will prove much to the advantage of the woollen manufacture, by the fineness of the fleeces. Gulliver's Travels.

TO FLEECE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To clip the fleece off a sheep.

2. To strip; to pull; to plunder, as a sheep is robbed of his wool.

Courts of justice have a small pension, so that they are tempted to take bribes, and to fleece the people. Addison.

FLE'ECED. adj. [from fleece.] Having fleeces of wool.

As when two rams, stirr'd with ambitious pride,

Fight for the rule of the rich fleeced flock,

Their horned fronts so fierce on either side

Do meet, that with the terror of the shock

Astonied both stand senseless as a block. Fairy Queen, b. i.

FLE'ECY. adj. [from fleece.] Woolly; covered with wool.

Not all the fleecy wealth

That doth enrich these downs, is worth a thought

To that my errand. Milton.

From eastern point

Of Libra, to the fleecy star, that bears

Andromeda far off Atlantic seas. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Let her glad valleys smile with wavy corn;

Let fleecy flocks her rising hills adorn. Prior.

The good shepherd tends his fleecy care,

Seeks freshest pasture, and the purest air;

Explores the lost, the wand'ring sheep directs. Pope's Mess.

TO FLEER. v. n. [*plear*dian, to trifle, Saxon; pleardan, Scottish. Skinner thinks it formed from leer.]

1. To mock; to gibe; to jest with insolence and contempt.

You speak to Casca, and to such a man

That is no fleering tell-tale. Shakespeare's Julius Caesar.

Dares the slave

Come hither, cover'd with an antick face,

To fleer and scorn at our solemnity! Shak. Rom. and Juliet.

Do I, like the female tribe,

Think it well to fleer and gibe?

Swift.

2. To leer; to grin with an air of civility.

How popular and courteous; how they grin and fleer upon every man they meet! Burton on Melancholy.

FLEER. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Mockery expressed either in words or looks.

Encave yourself,

And mark the fleers, the gibes, and notable scorris,

That dwell in ev'ry region of his face. Shakesp. Othello.

2. A deceitful grin of civility.

If a man will but observe such persons exactly, he shall generally spy such false lines, and such a sly treacherous fleer upon their face, that he shall be sure to have a cast of their eye to warn him, before they give him a cast of their nature to betray him. South's Sermons.

FLE'ERER. n. f. [from fleer.] A mocker; a fawner. Dict.

FLEET. FLEOT. FLOT. Are all derived from the Saxon pleot, which signifies a bay or gulph. Gibson's Camden.

FLEET. n. f. [pleota, Saxon.] A company of ships; a navy.

Our pray'rs are heard; our master's fleet shall go

As far as winds can bear, or waters flow. Prior.

FLEET. n. f. [pleot, Saxon, an estuary, or arm of the sea.] A creek; an inlet of water. A provincial word, from which the Fleet-prison and Fleet-street are named.

They have a very good way in Essex of draining of lands that have land-floods or fleets running through them, which make a kind of a small creek. Mortimer's Husbandry.

FLEET. adj. [flotur, Islandick.] Swift of pace; quick; nimble; active.

Upon that shore he spied Atin stand;

There by his master left, when late he far'd

In Phædria's fleet bark. Fairy Queen.

I take him for the better dog;

—Thou art a fool: if Echo were as fleet,

I would esteem him worth a dozen such. Shakespeare.

He had in his stables one of the fleetest horses in England. Clar

His fear was greater than his haste;

For

For fear, though fleeter than the wind,
Believes 'tis always left behind. Hudibras, p. iii. cant. 3.
So fierce they drove, their coursers were so fleet,
That the turf trembled underneath their feet. Dryden.
He told us, that the welkin would be clear
When swallows fleet soar high and sport in air. Gay.
Ten thousand thousand fleet ideas
Croud fast into the mind. Thomson's Autumn.

2. [In the husbandry of some provinces.] Light; superficially fruitful.

Marl cope-ground is a cold, stiff, wet clay, unless where it is very fleet for pasture. Mortimer.

3. Skimming the surface.

Those lands must be plowed fleet. Mortimer's Husbandry.

To FLEET. v. n. [plotan, Saxon.]

1. To fly swiftly; to vanish.

How all the other passions fleet to air,
As doubtful thoughts, and rash embrac'd despair! Shakesp.
A wolf, who, hang'd for human slaughter,
Ev'n from the gallows did his fell soul fleet. Shakespeare.

2. To be in a transient state; the same with flit.

Our understanding, to make a complete notion, must add something else to this fleeting and unremarkable superficialities, that may bring it to our acquaintance. Digby on Bodies.

O fleeting joys

Of Paradise, dear-bought with lasting woes! Milt. P. Lost.

While I listen to thy voice,

Chloris! I feel my life decay:

That powerful noise

Calls my fleeting soul away. Waller.

As empty clouds by rising winds are tost,

Their fleeting forms scarce sooner-found than lost. Prior.

To FLEET. v. a.

1. To skim the water.

Who swelling sails in Caspian sea doth cros,
And in frail wood an Adrian gulph doth fleet,
Doth not, I ween, so many evils meet. Fairy Queen, b. ii.

FLESH. n. f. [flæc, flærc, Saxon; vleesch, Dutch; fleol, Erse.]

1. The body distinguished from the soul.

As if this flesh, which walls about our life,
Were brass impregnable. Shakespeare's Richard II.
A disease that's in my flesh,
Which I must needs call mine. Shakespeare's King Lear.

And thou, my soul, which turn'st with curious eye
To view the beams of thine own form divine,
Know, that thou can'st know nothing perfectly,
While thou art clouded with this flesh of mine. Davies.

2. The muscles distinguished from the skin, bones, tendons.

A spirit hath not flesh and bones. New Testament.

3. Animal food distinguished from vegetable.

Flesh should be forborne as long as he is in coats, or at least 'till he is two or three years old. Locke.

Flesh, without being qualified with acids, is too alkaliescent a diet. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

Acidity in the infant may be cured by a flesh diet in the nurse. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

4. The body of beasts or birds used in food, distinct from fishes.

There is another indictment upon thee, for suffering flesh to be eaten in thy house, contrary to the law. Shakesp. H. IV.

We mortify ourselves with the diet of fish; and think we fare coarsely, if we abstain from the flesh of other animals. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

5. Animal nature.

The end of all flesh is come before me. Gen. vi. 13.

6. Carnality; corporal appetites.

7. A carnal state; worldly disposition.

They that are in the flesh cannot please God. Rom. viii. 8.

The flesh lusteth against the spirit, and the spirit against the flesh. Gal. v. 16.

8. Near relation.

Let not our hand be upon him; for he is our flesh. Gen.

When thou seest the naked, cover him; and hide not thyself from thine own flesh. Isa. lviii. 7.

9. The outward or literal sense. The Orientals termed the immediate or literal signification of any precept or type the flesh, and the remote or typical meaning the spirit. This is frequent in St Paul.

Ye judge after the flesh. John viii. 15.

To FLESH. v. a.

1. To initiate: from the sportsman's practice of feeding his hawks and dogs with the first game that they take, or training them to pursuit by giving them the flesh of animals.

Good man boy, if you please; come, I'll flesh ye. Shakesp.

Every puny swordsman will think him a good tame quarry to enter and flesh himself upon. Government of the Tongue.

2. To harden; to establish in any practice, as dogs by often feeding on any thing.

These princes finding them so fleshed in cruelty, as not to be reclaimed, secretly undertook the matter alone. Sidney, b. ii.

The women ran all away, saving only one, who was so fleshed in malice, that neither during nor after the fight she gave any truce to her cruelty. Sidney, b. ii.

3. To glut; to satiate.

Harry from curb'd licence plucks

The muzzle of restraint; and the wild dog

Shall flesh his tooth on every innocent. Shakesp. Henry IV.

He hath perverted a young gentlewoman, and this night he fleshes his will in the spoil of her honour. Shakespeare.

The kindred of him hath been flesh'd upon us;

And he is bred out of that bloody strain,

That hunted us in our familiar paths. Shakesp. Henry V.

Full bravely hast thou flesht

Thy maiden sword. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

FLESHBROATH. n. f. [flesh and broath.] Broath made by decocting flesh.

Her leg being emaciated, I advised bathing it with fleshbroath, wherein had been decocted emollient herbs. Wise man.

FLESHCOLOUR. n. f. [flesh and colour.] The colour of flesh.

A complication of ideas together makes up the single complex idea, which he calls man, whereof white or fleshcolour in England is one. Locke.

A loose earth of a pale fleshcolour, that is, white with a blush of red, is found in small fissures of a brown soft stone in the Skrees, a mountain in Cumberland. Woodward on Fossils.

FLESHFLY. n. f. [flesh and fly.] A fly that feeds upon flesh, and deposits her eggs in it.

I would no more endure

This wooden slavery, than I would suffer

The fleshfly blow my mouth. Shakespeare's Tempest.

It is a wonderful thing in fleshflies, that a fly-maggot, in five days space after it is hatched, arrives at its full growth and perfect magnitude. Ray on the Creation.

FLESHHOOK. n. f. [flesh and hook.] A hook to draw flesh from the caldron.

All that the fleshhook brought up the priest took. 1 Sa. ii. 12.

FLESHLESS. adj. [from flesh.] Without flesh.

FLESHLINESS. n. f. [from fleshly.] Carnal passions or appetites.

When strong passions, or weak fleshlinefs

Would from the right way seek to draw him wide,

He would, through temperance and steadfastness,

Teach him the weak to strengthen, and the strong suppress. Fairy Queen, b. ii. cant. 4. Stan. 2.

Corrupt manners in living, breed false judgment in doctrine: sin and fleshlinefs bring forth sects and heresies. Ascham.

FLESHLY. adj. [from flesh.]

1. Corporeal.

Nothing resembles death so much as sleep;

Yet then our minds themselves from slumber keep,

When from their fleshly bondage they are free. Denham.

2. Carnal; lascivious.

From amid'st them rose

Belial, the dissolute'st spirit that fell,

The sensualest; and, after Asmodai,

The fleshliest incubus. Paradise Regained, b. ii.

3. Animal; not vegetable.

'Tis then for nought that mother earth provides

The stores of all she shows, and all she hides,

If men with fleshly morsels must be fed,

And chaw with bloody teeth the breathing bread. Dryden.

4. Human; not celestial; not spiritual.

Else, never could the force of fleshly arm

Ne molten metal in his flesh embue. Fairy Queen, b. i.

What time th' eternal Lord in fleshly shrine

Enwombed was, from wretched Adam's line,

To purge away the guilt of sinful crime. Fairy Queen.

Much ostentation, vain of fleshly arm,

And of frail arms, much instrument of war

Before mine eyes thou'st set. Milton's Par. Regained, b. iii.

FLESHMEAT. n. f. [flesh and meat.] Animal food; the flesh of animals prepared for food.

The most convenient diet is that of fleshmeats. Floyer.

FLEW. n. f. The large chaps of a deep-mouthed hound. Hamm.

FLEWED. adj. [from flew.] Chapped; mouthed.

My hounds are bred out of the Spartan kind,

So flew'd, so fanded, and their heads are hung

With ears that sweep away the morning dew. Shakespeare.

FLEXA'NIMOUS. adj. [flexanimus, Latin.] Having power to change the disposition of the mind. Dict.

FLEXIB'LITY. n. f. [flexibilit , French, from flexible.]

1. The quality of admitting to be bent; pliancy.

Do not the rays which differ in refrangibility differ also in flexibility? And are they not, by their different inflexions, separated from one another, so as after separation to make the colours? Newton's Opt.

Corpuscles of the same set agree in every thing; but those that are of diverse kinds differ in specific gravity, in hardness, and in flexibility, as in bigness and figure. Woodward.

2. Easiness to be persuaded; ductility of mind; compliance; facility.

Advise me to resolve rather to err by too much flexibility than too much perverseness, by meekness than by self-love.

Hammond's Pract. Catech.

FLEXIBLE. adj. [flexibilis, Latin; flexible, French.]

1. Possible to be bent; not brittle; easy to be bent; pliant; not stiff.

When splitting winds

Make flexible the knees of knotted oaks. Sh. Troil. and Cress.

Take a stock-gillyflower and tie it upon a stick, and put them both into a stoop glass full of quicksilver, so that the flower be covered: after four or five days you shall find the flower fresh, and the stalk harder and less flexible than it was.

Bacon's Natural History, N . 796.

2. Not rigid; not inexorable; complying; obsequious.

Phocyon was a man of great severity, and no ways flexible to the will of the people. Bacon.

3. Ductile; manageable.

Under whose care soever a child is put to be taught, during the tender and flexible years of his life, it should be one who thinks Latin and language the least part of education. Locke.

FLEXOR. n. f. [Latin.] The general name of the muscles which act in contracting the joints.

Flatterers, who have the flexor muscles so strong that they are always bowing and cringing, might in some measure be corrected by being tied down upon a tree by the back. Arbuth.

FLEXUOUS. adj. [flexuosus, Latin.]

1. Winding; full of turns and meanders; tortuous.

In regard of the soul, the numerous and crooked narrow cranies, and the restrained flexuous rivulets of corporeal things, are all contemptible. Digby on the Soul.

2. Bending; not strait; variable; not steady.

The trembling of a candle discovers a wind, that otherwise we do not feel; and the flexuous burning of flames doth shew the air beginneth to be unquiet. Bacon's Natural History.

FLEXURE. n. f. [flexura, Latin.]

1. The form or direction in which any thing is bent.

Contrary is the flexure of the joints of our arms and legs to that of quadrupeds: our knees bend forward, whereas the same joint of their hind legs bends backward. Ray.

2. The act of bending.

The elephant hath joints, but none for courtesy;

His legs are for necessity, not flexure. Shak. Troil. and Cress.

3. The part bent; the joint.

His mighty strength lies in his able loins,

And where the flexure of his navel joins.

Sandys.

4. Obsequious or servile cringe.

Think'st thou the fiery fever will go out

With titles blown from adulation?

Will it give place to flexure and low bends? Shak. Hen. V.

TO FLICKER. v. a. [fligheren, Dutch; flliccepan, Saxon.]

To flutter; to play the wings; to have a fluttering motion.

Under th' allowance of your grand aspect,

Whose influence, like the wreath of radiant fire,

On flickering Ph ebus' front. Shakespeare's King Lear.

'Twas ebbing darkness, past the mid' of night,

And Phosphor, on the confines of the light,

Promis'd the sun, ere day began to spring;

The tuneful lark already stretch'd her wing,

And flick'ring on her nest, made short essays to sing. Dry.

At all her stretch her little wings she spread,

And with her feather'd arms embrac'd the dead;

Then flickering to his pallid lips, she strove

To print a kiss, the last essay of love.

Dryden.

FLYER. n. f. [from fly.]

1. One that runs away; a fugitive; a runaway.

Cam'st thou from where they made the stand?

—I did;

Though you, it seems, came from the fliers. Shak. Cymbel.

The gates are ope, now prove good seconds;

'Tis for the followers fortune widens them,

Not for the fliers.

Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

Now the fliers from and forsakers of their places, carry the parliamentary power along with them. King Charles.

2. That part of a machine which, by being put into a more rapid motion than the other parts, equalizes and regulates the motion of the rest; as in a jack.

The flier, tho't had leaden feet;

Turn'd so quick, you scarce could see't.

Swift.

FLIGHT. n. f. [from To fly.]

1. The act of flying or running from danger.

And now, too late, he wishes for the fight;

That strength he wasted in ignoble flight.

Denham.

He thinks by flight his mistress must be won,

And claims the prize because he best did run. Dryd. Ind. Em.

As eager of the chace, the maid

Beyond the forest's verdant limits stray'd;

Pan saw and lov'd, and, burning with desire,

Pursu'd her flight; her flight increas'd his fire.

Pope.

2. Removal to another place.

The fury sprang above the Stygian flood;

And on her wicker wings, sublime through night,

She to the Latian palace took her flight.

Dryden's  n.

3. The act of using wings; volation.

For he so swift and nimble was of flight,

That from this lower tract he dar'd to fly

Up to the clouds, and thence with pinions light

To mount aloft unto the crystal sky. Spenser's Muirp tms.

Winds that tempest's brew,

When through Arabian groves they take their flight,

Made wanton with rich odours, lose their spite.

Dryden.

4. Removal from place to place by means of wings.
Ere the bat hath flown
His cloyster'd flight. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
The fowls shall take their flight away together. 2 Esd. v. 6.
Fowls, by Winter forc'd, forsake the floods,
And wing their hasty flight to happier lands. Dryden's Æn.
  5. A flock of birds flying together.
Flights of angels wing thee to thy rest. Shakesp. Hamlet.
They take great pride in the feathers of birds; and this they took from their ancestors of the mountains, who were invited unto it by the infinite flights of birds that came up to the high grounds. Bacon's New Atlantis.
I can at will, doubt not,
Command a table in this wilderness;
And call swift flights of angels ministrant,
Array'd in glory, on my cup t' attend. Milton's Par. Lost.
  6. The birds produced in the same season: as, the harvest flight of pigeons.
  7. A volley; a shower; as much shot as is discharged at once.
At the first flight of arrows sent,
Full threescore Scots they flew. Chevy Chase.
Above an hundred arrows discharged on my left hand, pricked me like so many needles; and besides they shot another flight into the air, as we do bombs. Gulliver's Travels.
  8. The space past by flying.
  9. Heat of imagination; fally of the soul.
Old Pindar's flights by him are reacht,
When on that gale his wings are stretcht. Denham.
He shewed all the stretch of fancy at once; and if he has failed in some of his flights, it was but because he attempted every thing. Pope's Preface to the Iliad.
Strange graces still, and stranger flights she had;
Was just not ugly, and was just not mad. Pope, Epistle ii.
Trust me, dear! good humour can prevail,
When airs and flights, and screams and scolding fail. Pope.
  10. Excursion on the wing.
If there were any certain height where the flights of ambition end, one might imagine that the interest of France were but to conserve its present greatness. Temple.
It is not only the utmost pitch of impiety, but the highest flight of folly, to deride these things. Tillotson, Sermon 2.
  11. The power of flying.
In my school-days, when I had lost one shaft,
I shot his fellow of the self-same flight
The self-same way. Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.
- FLIGHTY. adj. [from flight.]
1. Fleeting; swift.
Time, thou anticipat'st my dread exploits:
The flighty purpose never is o'ertook,
Unless the deed go with it. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
2. Wild; full of imagination.
- FLIMSY. adj. [Of this word I know not any original, and suspect it to have crept into our language from the cant of manufacturers.]
1. Weak; feeble; without strength of texture.
2. Mean; spiritless; without force.
Proud of a vast extent of flimsy lines. Pope, Epistle ii.
- TO FLINCH. v. n. [corrupted from fling. Skinner.]
1. To shrink from any suffering or undertaking; to withdraw from any pain or danger.
Every martyr could keep one eye steadily fixed upon immortality, and look death and danger out of countenance with the other; nor did they flinch from duty, for fear of martyrdom. South's Sermons.
A child, by a constant course of kindness, may be accustomed to bear very rough usage without flinching or complaining. Locke.
Oh ingratitude, that John Bull, whom I have honoured with my friendship, should flinch at last, and pretend that he can disburse no more money. Arbutnot's History of John Bull.
- 2. In Shakespeare it signifies to fail.
If I break time, or flinch in property
Of what I spoke, unpitied let me die. Shakespeare.

FLINCHER. n. f. [from the verb.] He who shrinks or fails in any matter.

TO FLING. preter. flung; part. flung or flong. v. a. [from fligo, Latin, Skinner: according to others from flying; so to fling is to set flying.]
1. To cast from the hand; to throw.
The matrons flung their gloves,
Ladies and maids their scarfs and handkerchiefs
Upon him. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
'Tis fate that flings the dice; and as she flings,
Of kings makes peasants, and of peasants kings. Dryden.
- 2. To dart; to cast with violence.
How much unlike that Hector who return'd Clad in Achilles' spoils; when he, among
A thousand ships, like Jove, his lightning flung. Denham.
- 3. To scatter.
Ev'ry beam new transient colours flings,
Colours that change whene'er they wave their wings. Pope.
- 4. To drive by violence.

- A heap of rocks, falling, would expel the waters out of their places with such a violence as to fling them among the highest clouds. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
5. To move forcibly.
The knight seeing his habitation reduced to so small com-pafs, ordered all the apartments to be flung open. Addis. Spect.
  6. To eject; to dismiss.
Cromwell, I charge thee fling away ambition;
By that sin fell the angels. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.
  7. To cast reproach.
I know thy gen'rous temper:
Fling but the appearance of dishonour on it,
It strait takes fire. Addison's Cato.
  8. To force into another condition, properly into a worse.
Squalid fortune, into baseness flong,
Doth scorn the pride of wonted ornaments. Spenser.
  9. TO FLING down. To demolish; to ruin.
These are so far from raising mountains, that they overturn and fling down some of those which were before standing. Woodward's Natural History.
  10. TO FLING off. To baffle in the chase; to defeat of a prey.
These men are too well acquainted with the chase to be flung off by any false steps or doubles. Addison's Spectator.
- TO FLING. v. n.
1. To flounce; to wince; to fly into violent and irregular motions.
The angry beast
Began to kick, and fling, and wince,
As if h' had been beside his sense. Hudibras, p. i. cant. 2.
Their consciences are galled by it, and this makes them
wince and fling as if they had some mettle. Tillotson's Sermons.
- 2. TO FLING out. To grow unruly or outrageous: from the act of any angry horse that throws out his legs.
Duncan's horses,
Turn'd wild in nature, broke their stalls, flung out,
Contending 'gainst obedience. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

FLING. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. A throw; a cast.
2. A gibe; a sneer; a contemptuous remark.
No little scribbler is of wit so bare,
But has his fling at the poor wedded pair. Addison.
I, who love to have a fling
Both at senate-house and king,
Thought no method more commodious
Than to show their vices odious. Swift.

FLINGER. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. He who throws.
2. He who jeers.

FLINT. n. f. [flintz, Saxon.]
1. A semi-pellucid stone, composed of crystal debased, of a blackish grey, of one similar and equal substance, free from veins, and naturally invested with a whitish crust. It is sometimes smooth and equal, more frequently rough: its size is various. It is well known to strike fire with steel. It is useful in glassmaking. Hill on Fossils.
Searching the window for a flint, I found
This paper. Shakespeare's Julius Caesar.
Love melts the rigour which the rocks have bred;
A flint will break upon a featherbed. Cleveland.
There is the same force and the same refreshing virtue in fire kindled by a spark from a flint, as if it were kindled by a beam from the sun. South's Sermons.
Take this, and lay your flint edg'd weapon by. Dryden.
I'll fetch quick fuel from the neighb'ring wood,
And strike the sparkling flint, and dress the food. Prior.
- 2. Any thing eminently or proverbially hard.
Your tears, a heart of flint
Might tender make. Spenser.
Throw my heart
Against the flint and hardness of my fault. Sh. Ant. and Cleop.

FLINTY. adj. [from flint.]
1. Made of flint; strong.
Tyrant custom
Hath made the flinty and steel couch of war
My thrice-driven bed of down. Shakesp. Othello.
A pointed flinty rock, all bare and black,
Grew gibbous from behind the mountain's back. Dryden.
- 2. Full of stones.
The gathering up of flints in flinty ground, and laying them on heaps, is no good husbandry. Bacon's Natural History.
- 3. Hard of heart; cruel; savage; inexorable.
I did him a desired office,
Dear almost as his life; which gratitude,
Through flinty Tartar's bosom, would peep forth,
And answer thanks. Shakespeare's All's well that ends well.

FLIPP. n. f. [A cant word.] A liquor much used in ships, made by mixing beer with spirits and sugar.
The tarpawlin and swabber is lolling at Madagascar, with some drunken sunburnt whore, over a can of flip. Dennis.

In unfurling the fan are several little flirts and vibrations, as also gradual and deliberate openings. Addison's Spectator.
Before you pass th' imaginary fights
While the spread fan o'er shades your closing eyes,
Then give one flirt, and all the vision flies. Pope.
2. A sudden trick.
Have licence to play,
At the hedge a flirt,
For a sheet or a shirt. Ben. Johnson's Gypsies.
3. A pert young hussy.
Scurvy knave, I am none of his flirt gills; I am none of his skains mates. Shakeesp. Romeo and Juliet.
Several young flirts about town had a design to cast us out of the fashionable world. Addison's Guardian, No. 109.
- FLIRTATION. n. f. [from flirt.] A quick sprightly motion. A cant word among women.
A muslin flounce, made very full, would give a very agreeable flirtation air. Pope.
- TO FLIT. v. n. [from To fleet; or from flitter, Danish, to remove.]
1. To fly away.
Likest it seemeth, in my simple wit,
Unto the fair sunshine in Summer's day,
That when a dreadful storm away is flit,
Through the broad world doth spread his goodly ray. Spens.
His grudging ghost did strive
With the frail flesh; at last it flitted is,
Whither the souls do die of men that live amiss. Fairy Qu.
2. To remove; to migrate. In Scotland it is still used for removing from one place to another at quarter-day, or the usual term.
So hardly he the flitted life does win,
Unto her native prison to return. Fairy Queen, cant. 7.
It became a received opinion, that the souls of men, departing this life, did flit out one body into some other. Hooker.
3. To flutter; to rove on the wing.
He made a glancing shot, and miss'd the dove;
Yet miss'd so narrow, that he cut the cord
Which fasten'd, by the foot, the flitting bird. Dryd. Æn.
Fear the just gods, and think of Scylla's fate!
Chang'd to a bird, and sent to flit in air. Pope.
4. To be flux or unstable.
Himself up high he lifted from the ground,
And with strong flight did forcibly divide
The yielding air, which nigh too feeble found
Her flitting parts, and element unsound. Fairy Queen, b. i.
He stopt at once the passage of his wind,
And the free soul to flitting air resign'd. Dryden's Æn.
- FLIT. adj. [from fleet.] Swift; nimble; quick.
And in his hand two darts exceeding flit,
And deadly sharp, he held; whose heads were dight,
In poison and in blood, of malice and despight. Fairy Qu.
- FLITCH. n. f. [from flie, Saxon; flycke, Danish; fleche, floche, French. Skinner.] The side of a hog salted and cured.
But heretofore 'twas thought a sumptuous feast,
On birthdays, festivals, or days of state,
A salt dry flitch of bacon to prepare;
If they had fresh meat, 'twas delicious fare. Dryden's Juv.
While he from out the chimney took
A flitch of bacon off the hook,
Cut out large slices to be fry'd. Swift.
He sometimes accompanies the present with a flitch of bacon. Addison.
- FLITTERMUSE. n. f. The bat.
- FLITTING. n. f. [from flitz, Saxon, scandal.] An offence; a fault.

- FLIXWOOD. n. f. See HEDGE-MUSTARD.
- TO FLOAT. v. n. [flotter, French.]
1. To swim on the surface of the water.
When the sea was calm, all boats alike
Shew'd mastership in floating. Shakepeare's Coriolanus.
The ark no more now floats, but seems on ground,
Fast on the top of some high mountain fix'd. Mit. P. L.
That men, being drowned and sunk, do float the ninth day, when their gall breaketh, are popular affirmations. Brown.
Three blust'ring nights, born by the southern blast,
I *float*ed; and discover'd land at last. Dryden's Æn. b. vi.
His rosy wreath was dropt not long before,
Born by the tide of wine, and floating on the floor. Dryden.
On frothy billows thousands float the stream,
In cumb'rous mail, with love of farther shore. Phillips.
Carp are very apt to float away with fresh water. Mortimer.
  2. To move without labour in a fluid.
What divine monsters, O ye gods, were these
That float in air, and fly upon the seas! Dryd. Ind. Emp.
Swift they descend, with wing to wing conjoin'd,
Stretch their broad plumes, and float upon the wind. Pope.
  3. To pass with a light irregular course.
Floating visions make not deep impressions enough to leave in the mind clear, distinct, lasting ideas. Locke.
- TO FLOAT. v. a. To cover with water.
Proud Pactolus floats the fruitful lands,
And leaves a rich manure of golden sands. Dryden's Æn.
Venice looks, at a distance, like a great town half *float*ed by a deluge. Addison's Remarks on Italy.
Now smoaks with show'rs the misty mountain-ground;
And *float*ed fields lie undistinguish'd round. Pope's Statius.
The vast parterres a thousand hands shall make:
Lo! Cobham comes, and floats them with a lake. Pope.
- FLOAT. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. The act of flowing; the flux; the contrary to the ebb. A sense now out of use.
Our trust in the Almighty is, that with us contentions are now at their highest float. Hooker, Preface.
Of this kind is some disposition of bodies to rotation, particularly from East to West; of which kind we conceive the main float and reflow of the sea is, which is by consent of the universe, as part of the diurnal motion. Bacon's Nat. History.
  2. Any body so contrived or formed as to swim upon the water.
They took it for a ship, and, as it came nearer, for a boat; but it proved a float of weeds and rushes. L'Estrange's Fables.
A passage for the weary people make;
With oser floats the standing water flow,
Of massy stones make bridges, if it flow. Dryden's Virgil.
  3. The cork or quill by which the angler discovers the bite of a fish.
You will find this to be a very choice bait, sometimes casting a little of it into the place where your float swims. Walt. n.

The hindrance to stay well is the extreme length of a ship, especially if she be floaty, and want sharpness of way forwards. Raleigh's Essays.
- FLOCK. n. f. [from flocc, Saxon.]
1. A company; usually a company of birds or beasts.
She that hath a heart of that fine frame,
To pay this debt of love but to a brother,
How will she love when the rich golden shaft
Hath kill'd the flock of all affections else
That live in her. Shakeesp. Twelfth Night.
  2. A company of sheep, distinguished from herds, which are of oxen.
The cattle in the fields, and meadows green,
Those rare and solitary; these in flocks
Pasturing at once, and in broad herds upsprung. Milton.
France has a sheep by her, not only as a sacrifice, but to shew that the riches of the country consisted chiefly in flocks and pasturage. Addison on ancient Medals.
  3. A body of men.
The heathen that had fled out of Judea came to Nicanor by flocks. 2 Mac. xiv. 14.
  4. [From floccus.] A lock of wool.
A house well furnish'd shall be thine to keep;
And, for a flock bed, I can shear my sheep. Dryden.
- TO FLOCK. v. n. [from the noun.] To gather in crowds or large numbers.
Many young gentlemen flock to him every day, and fleet the time carelessly. Shakes. As you like it.

The more inform'd, the less he understood,
And deeper sunk by flund'ring in the mud. Dryden.
He champs the bit, impatient of his loss,
And starts aside, and founders at the cross. Dryden.
He plung'd for sense, but found no bottom there;
Then writ and founder'd on, in mere despair. Pope's Dunc.
To FLO'URISH. v. n. [fioreo, floresco, Latin]

1. To be in vigour; not to fade.
The righteous shall flourish like the palm-tree. Pf. xcii. 12.
Where e'er you tread, the blushing flow'rs shall rise,
And all things flourish where you turn your eyes. Pope.
2. To be in a prosperous state.

If I could find example
Of thousands, that had struck anointed kings,
And flourish'd after, I'd not do't: but since
Nor brass, nor stone, nor parchment, bears not one,
Let villany itself forswear't. Shakefp. Winter's Tale.
Harry, that prophesied thou should'st be king,
Doth comfort thee in sleep; live thou and flourish. Shakefp.
He was the patron of my manhood, when I flourished in the opinion of the world, though with small advantage to my fortune. Dryden's Dedicat. to Lord Clifford.

3. To work with a needle into figures.
All that I shall say will be but like bottoms of thread close wound up, which, with a good needle, perhaps may be flou- rished into large works. Bacon's War with Spain.

4. To move any thing in quick circles or vibrations by way of show or triumph.

And all the powers of hell in full applause
Flourish'd their snakes, and toss'd their flaming brands. Cra.
Against the post their wicker shields they crush,
Flourish the sword, and at the plastron push. Dryden's Juv.

5. To adorn with embellishments of language; to grace with eloquence ostentatiously diffusive.
We should add the labours of Hercules, though flourished with much fabulous matter; yet it doth notably set forth the consent of all nations and ages in the approbation of the extirpating and debellating giants, monsters and tyrants. Bacon.
6. To adorn; to embellish; to grace.

To bring you thus together, 'tis no sin,
Sith that the justice of your title to him
Doth flourish the deceit. Shakef. Measure for Measure.
FLO'URISH. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Bravery; beauty.
I call'd thee then vain flourish of my fortune;
I call'd thee then poor shadow, painted queen,
The presentation of but what I was. Shakefp. Richard III.
The flourish of his sober youth,
Was the pride of naked truth. Crashaw.

2. An ostentatious embellishment; ambitious copiousness; far-fetched elegance.

This is a flourish: there follow excellent parables. Bacon.
We can excuse the duty of our knowledge, if we only bestow the flourish of poetry thereon, or those commendatory conceits which popularly set forth the eminence of this creature. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. vi. c. 5.
The apprehension is so deeply rivetted into my mind, that such rhetorical flourishes cannot at all loosen or brush it out.
More's Divine Dialogues.

Villanies have not the same countenance, when there are great interests, plausible colours, and flourishes of wit and rhetorick interposed between the sight and the object. L'Estr.

The so much repeated ornament and flourish of their former speeches was commonly the truest word they spoke, tho' least believed by them. South's Sermons.

3. Figures formed by lines curiously or wantonly drawn.
Studious to please the genius of the times,
With periods, points, and tropes he flurs his crimes;
He lards with flourishes his long harangue;
'Tis fine, say'st thou; what to be prais'd, and hang? Dryd.

3. Figures formed by lines curiously or wantonly drawn.
A child with delight looks upon emblems finely drawn and painted, and takes some pleasure in beholding the neat chaacters and flourishes of a bible curiously printed. Boyle.

They were intended only for ludicrous ornaments of nature, like the flourishes about a great letter that signify nothing, but are made only to delight the eye. More against Atheism.
FLO'URISHER. n. f. [from flourish.] One that is in prime or in prosperity.

They count him of the green-hair'd eld, they may, or in his flow'r;
For not our greatest flourisher can equal him in pow'r.

Chapman's Iliads.
To FLOUT. v. a. [fluyten, Dutch; flouwe, Frisick.] To mock; to insult; to treat with mockery and contempt.

You must flout my insufficiency. Shakespeare.
The Norweyan banners flout the sky,
And fan our people cold. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
He mock'd us when he begg'd our voices;
Certainly he flouted us downright. Shakefp. Coriolanus.
She railed at her, that she should be so immodest to write to one she knew would flout her. Shakespeare.
Phillida flouts me. Walton's Angler.

To FLOUT. v. n. To practise mockery; to behave with contempt; to sneer.

Though nature hath given us wit to flout at fortune, hath not fortune sent in this fool to cut off this argument? Shakef.
With talents well endu'd

To be scurrilous and rude;
When you perty raise your snout,
Flee and gibe, and laugh and flout. Swift.

FLOUT. n. f. [from the verb.] A mock; an insult; a word or act of contempt.

He would ask of those that had been at the other's table,
Tell truly, was there never a flout or dry blow given? Bacon.
She opened it, and read it out,

With many a smile and leering flout. Hudibras, p. iii.
Their doors are barr'd against a bitter flout;
Snarl, if you please; but you shall snarl without. Dryden.

How many flouts and jeers must I expose myself to by this repentance? How shall I answer such an old acquaintance when he invites me to an intemperate cup? Calamy's Serm.

FLO'UTER. n. j. [from flout.] One who jeers.
To FLOW. v. n. [flopan, Saxon.]

1. To run or spread as water.
The god am I, whose yellow water flows
Around these fields, and fattens as it goes. Dryden's Æn.
Fields of light and liquid ether flow,
Purg'd from the pond'rous dregs of earth below. Dryden:
Endless tears flow down in streams. Swift.

2. To run: opposed to standing waters.
With olier floats the standing water flow;
Of massy stones make bridges, if it flow. Dryden.

2. To rise; not to ebb.
This river hath thrice flow'd, no ebb between. Shakefp.

3. To melt.
Oh that thou wouldst rent the heavens, that the mountains might flow down at thy presence. If. lxiv. 1.

4. To proceed; to issue.
I'll use that tongue I have: if wit flow from 't,
I shall do good. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

The knowledge drawn from experience is quite of another kind from that which flows from speculation or discourse. South.

5. To glide smoothly without asperity: as, a flowing period.
This discourse of Cyprian, and the flowers of rhetorick in it, shew him to have been of a great wit and flowing eloquence. Hakewill on Providence.

6. To write smoothly; to speak volubly.
Virgil is sweet and flowing in his hexameters. Dryden;
Did sweeter sounds adorn my flowing tongue
Than ever man pronounc'd, or angel sung. Prior:

7. To abound; to be crowded.
The dry streets flow'd with men. Chapman.

8. To be copious; to be full.
Then shall our names,
Be in their flowing cups freshly remember'd. Shak. Hen. V.
There ev'ry eye with slumb'rous chains she bound,
And dash'd the flowing goblet to the ground. Pope's Odyssey.

9. To hang loose and waving.
He was clothed in a flowing mantle of green silk, interwoven with flowers. Spectator, N°. 425.

To FLOW. v. a. To overflow; to deluge.
In a hot dry Summer watering would be a very great advantage to hops; but it is scarce practicable, unless you have a stream at hand to flow the ground. Mortimer's Husbandry.

FLOW. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. The rise of water; not the ebb.

Some, from the diurnal and annual motion of the earth, endeavour to solve the flows and motions of these seas, illustrating the same by water in a bowl, that rises or falls according to the motion of the vessel. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

The ebb of tides, and their mysterious flow,
We as arts elements shall understand. Dryden's Ann. Mirab.

2. A sudden plenty or abundance.
The noble power of suffering bravely is as far above that of enterprising greatly, as an unblemished conscience and inflexible resolution are above an accidental flow of spirits, or a sudden tide of blood. Pope.

3. A stream of diction; volubility of tongue.

Teaching is not a flow of words, nor the draining of an hour-glass; but an effectual procuring that a man know something which he knew not before, or to know it better. South.

FLO'WER. n. f. [fleur, French; flos, flores, Latin.]

1. The part of a plant which contains the seeds.

Such are reckoned perfect flowers which have petala, a stamen, apex and stylus; and whatever flower wants either of these is reckoned imperfect. Perfect flowers are divided into simple ones, which are not composed of other smaller ones, and which usually have but one single style; and compounded, which consist of many flosculi, all making but one flower. Simple flowers are monopetalous, which have the body of the flower all of one intire leaf, though sometimes cut or divided a little way into many seeming petala, or leaves; as in borage, bugloss, &c. or polypetalous, which have distinct petala, and those falling off singly, and not all together, as the seeming petala of monopetalous flowers always do: but those are further divided into uniform and difform flowers: the former have their right and left hand parts, and the forward and backward parts all alike; but the difform have no such regularity, as in the flowers of sage, deadnettle, &c. A monopetalous difform flower is likewise further divided into, first, semi-fistular, whose upper part resembles a pipe cut off obliquely, as in the arilostochia: 2d, labiate; and this either with one lip only, as in the acanthum and scordium, or with two lips, as in the far greater part of the labiate flowers: and here the upper lip is sometimes turned upwards, and so turns the convex part downwards, as in the chamæcissus, &c. but most commonly the upper lip is convex above, and turns the hollow part down to its fellow below, and so represents a kind of helmet, or monkhood; and from thence these are frequently called galeate, cucullate, and galericulate flowers; and in this form are the flowers of the lamium, and most verticillate plants. Sometimes also the lamium is intire, and sometimes jagged or divided. 3d, Corniculate; that is, such hollow flowers as have on their upper part a kind of spur, or little horn, as in the linaria, delphinium, &c. and the carniculum, or calcar, is always impervious at the tip or point. Compounded flowers are either, first, discous or discoidal; that is, whose flosculi are set together so close, thick, and even, as to make the surface of the flower plain and flat, which therefore, because of its round form, will be like a discus; which disk is sometimes radiated, when there is a row of petala standing round in the disk, like the points of a star, as in the matricaria, chamæmelum, &c. and sometimes naked, having no such radiating leaves round the limb of its disk, as in the tanacetum: 2d, planifolious, which is composed of plain flowers, set together in circular rows round the centre, and whose face is usually indented, notched uneven and jagged, as the hieracia, &c. 3d, fistular, which is compounded of many long hollow little flowers, like pipes, all divided into large jags at the ends. Imperfect flowers, because they want the petala, are called stamineous, apetalous, and capillaceous; and those which hang pendulous by fine threads, like the juli, are by Tournefort called amentaceous, and we call them cats-tail. The term campaniformis is used for such as are in the shape of a bell, and infundibuliformis for such as are in the form of a funnel. Miller.

Good men's lives

Expire before the flowers in their caps,

Dying or ere they sicken. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

With flow'r inwoven tresses torn,

The nymphs in twilight shade of tangled thickets mourn. Milton.

Beauteous flow'rs why do we spread

Upon the monuments of the dead? Cowley.

Though the same sun with all-diffusive rays

Blush in the rose and in the diamond blaze,

We praise the stronger effort of his power,

And always set the gem above the flower. Pope.

If the blossom of the plant be of most importance, we call it a flower; such are daisies, tulips, and carnations. Watts.

2. An ornament; an embellishment.

This discourse of Cyprian, and the excellent flowers of rhetoric in it, shew him to have been a sweet and powerful orator. Hakewill on Providence.

Truth needs no flow'rs of speech. Pope.

3. The prime; the flourishing part.

Alas! young man, your days can ne'er be long:

In flow'r of age you perish for a song. Pope's Horace Impr.

4. The edible part of corn; the meal.

The bread I would have in flower, so as it might be baked still to serve their necessary want. Spenser on Ireland.

I can make my audit up, that all

From me do back receive the flow'r of all,

And leave me but the bran. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

The flowers of grains, mixed with water, will make a sort of glue. Arbutnot on Aliments.

But by thy care twelve urns of wine be fill'd,

Next these in worth, and firm those urns be seal'd;

Be twice ten measures of the choicest flour

Prepar'd, ere yet descends the evening hour. Pope's Odyssey.

5. The most excellent or valuable part of any thing; quintessence.

The choice and flower of all things profitable the Psalms do more briefly contain, and more movingly express, by reason of their poetical form. Hooker.

Thou hast slain

The flower of Europe for his chivalry. Shakesp. Henry VI.

The French monarchy is exhausted of its bravest subjects: the flower of the nation is consumed in its wars. Addison.

6. That which is most distinguished for any thing valuable.

He is not the flower of courtesy; but, I warrant him, as gentle as a lamb. Shakesp. Romeo and Juliet.

FLO'WER de Luce. n. f. A bulbous iris.

It hath a lily flower of one leaf, shaped like that of the common iris: the pointal has three leaves, and the empalement turns to a fruit shaped like that of the common iris. Its root is bulbous. Miller specifies thirty-four species of this plant; and among them the Persian flower de luce is greatly esteemed for the sweetness and beauty of its variegated flowers, which are in perfection in February, or the beginning of March.

Crop'd are the flower de luces in your arms;

Of England's coat one half is cut away. Shakesp. Henry VI.

The iris is the flower de luce. Peacham.

To FLO'WER. v. n. [fleurir, French, or from the noun.]

1. To be in flower; to be in blossom; to bloom; to put forth flowers.

So forth they marched in this goodly sort,

To take the solace of the open air,

And in fresh flowering fields themselves to sport. Fairy Qu.

Sacred hill, whose head full high,

Is, as it were, for endless memory

Of that dear Lord, who oft thereon was found,

For ever with a flow'ring garland crown'd. Fairy Queen.

Then herbs of every leaf, that sudden flower'd,

Op'ning their various colours. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vii.

Mark well the flow'ring almonds in the wood,

If od'rous blooms the bearing branches load. Dryd. Georg.

To leafless shrubs the flow'ring palms succeed,

And od'rous myrtle to the noisome weed. Pope's Messiah.

2. To be in the prime; to flourish.

Whilome in youth, when flower'd my youthful spring,

Like swallow swift, I wandered here and there;

For heat of heedless lust me did so sting,

That I of doubted danger had no fear. Spenser's Pastorals.

This cause detain'd me all my flow'ring youth,

Within a loathsome dungeon there to pine. Shak. Hen. VI.

3. To froth; to ferment; to mantle, as new bottled beer.

Those above water were the best, and that beer did flower a little; whereas that under water did not, though it were fresh. Bacon's Natural History, N<sup>o</sup>. 385.

An extreme clarification doth spread the spirits so smooth that they become dull, and the drink dead, which ought to have a little flowering. Bacon's Natural History.

4. To come as cream from the surface.

If you can accept of these few observations, which have flowered off, and are, as it were, the burnishing of many studious and contemplative years, I here give you them to dispose of. Milton on Education.

To FLO'WER. v. a. [from the noun.] To adorn with fictitious or imitated flowers.

FLO'WERAGE. n. f. [from flower.] Store of flowers. Dict.

FLO'WERET. n. f. [fleur, French.] A flower; a small flower.

Sometimes her head she fondly would aguise

With gaudy garlands, or fresh flow'rets dight,

About her neck, or rings of rushes plight. Fairy Queen.

No more shall trenching war channel her fields,

Nor bruise her flow'rets with the armed hoofs

Of hostile pacer. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

That same dew, which sometime on the buds

Was wont to swell, like round and orient pearls,

Stood now within the pretty flow'ret's eyes,

Like tears that did their own disgrace bewail. Shakespeare.

So to the sylvan lodge

They came, that like Pomona's arbour smil'd,

With flow'rets deck'd, and fragrant smells. Milt. Par. Lost.

Then laughs the childish year with flow'rets crown'd,

And lavishly perfumes the fields around;

But no substantial nourishment receives,

Infirm the stalks, unsolid are the leaves. Dryden's Fables.

FLO'WERGARDEN. n. f. [flower and garden.] A garden in which flowers are principally cultivated.

Observing that this manure produced flowers in the field, I made my gardener try those shells in my flowergarden, and I never saw better carnations or flowers. Mortimer's Husbandry.

FLO'WERINESS. n. f. [from flowery.]

1. The state of abounding in flowers.

2. Floridness

FLU

2. Floridness of speech.

FLOWERINGBUSH. n. f. A plant.

The leaves are triangular and grassy, the stalks naked, and the flowers disposed in an umbella upon the top of the stalk, each consisting of six leaves: three of them are large, and three small, which are expanded in form of a rose. Miller.

FLOWERY. adj. [from flower.] Full of flowers; adorned with flowers real or fictitious.

My mother Circe, with the syrens three,
Amidst the flow'ry kirtl'd Naiades.

Milton.

Day's harbinger

Comes dancing from the East, and leads with her
The flow'ry May, who from her green lap throws
The yellow cowslip and the pale primrose.

Milton.

O'er his fair limbs a flow'ry vest he threw. Pope's Odyssey.

To her the shady grove, the flow'ry field,

The streams and fountains, no delight could yield. Pope.

FLOWINGLY. adv. [from flow.] With volubility; with abundance.

FLOWK. n. f. [flake, Scott.] A flounder; the name of a fish.

Amongst these the flowk, sole, and plaice follow the tide up into the fresh waters. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

FLOWKWORT. n. f. The name of a plant.

FLOWN. Participle of fly, or flee, they being confounded.

1. Gone away.

For those,

Appointed to sit there, had left their charge,

Flown to the upper world. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x.

Where, my deluded sense! was reason flown?

Where the high majesty of David's throne? Prior.

2. Puffed; inflated; elate.

And when night

Darkens the streets, then wander forth the sons

Of Beliah, flown with insolence and wine. Milton's P. L.

FLUCTUANT. adj. [fluens, Latin.] Wavering; uncertain.

To be longing for this thing to-day, and for that thing to-morrow; to change likings for loathings, and to stand wishing and hankering at a venture, how is it possible for any man to be at rest in this fluctuant wandering humour and opinion?

L'Estrange.

To FLUCTUATE. v. n. [fluere, Latin.]

1. To roll to and again as water in agitation.

The fluctuating fields of liquid air,

With all the curious meteors hov'ring there,

And the wide regions of the land, proclaim

The Pow'r Divine, that rais'd the mighty frame. Blackmore.

2. To float backward and forward, as with the motion of water.

3. To move with uncertain and hasty motion.

The tempter

New part puts on; and, as to passion mov'd,

Fluctuates disturb'd. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ix.

4. To be in an uncertain state; to feel sudden vicissitudes.

As the greatest part of my estate has been hitherto of an unsteady and volatile nature, either tost upon seas, or fluctuating in funds, it is now fixed and settled in substantial acres and tenements. Addison's Spectator, No. 549.

5. To be irresolute; to be undetermined.

FLUCTUATION. n. f. [fluatio, Latin; fluctuation, French, from fluere.]

1. The alternate motion of the water.

Its fluctuations are but motions subservient, which winds, storms, shores, shelves, and every interjacency irregulates.

Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. vii. c. 17.

They were caused by the impulses and fluctuation of water in the bowels of the earth. Woodward's Natural History.

2. Uncertainty; indetermination.

It will not hinder it from making a proselyte of a person, that loves fluctuation of judgment little enough to be willing to be eased of it by any thing but error. Boyle.

FLUE. n. f. [A word of which I know not the etymology, unless it be derived from flew of fly.]

1. A small pipe or chimney to convey air, heat, or smoke.

2. Soft down or fur, such as may fly in the wind.

FLUELLIN. n. f. The herb SPEEDWELL.

FLUENCY. n. f. [from fluent.]

1. The quality of flowing; smoothness; freedom from harshness or asperity.

Fluency of numbers, and most expressive figures for the poet, morals for the serious, and pleasantries for admirers of points of wit. Garth's Preface to Ovid.

2. Readiness; copiousness; volubility.

Our publick liturgy must be cashiered, the better to please those men who gloried in their extemporary vein and fluency. King Charles.

Th' unthinking victors vainly boast their pow'rs;

Be their's the musquet, while the tongue is our's:

We reason with such fluency and fire,

The beaux we baffle, and the learned tire. Tickell.

The common fluency of speech in many men, and most women, is owing to a scarcity of matter, and a scarcity of words; for whoever is a master of language, and hath a mind full of ideas, will be apt, in speaking, to hesitate upon the choice of both. Swift's Thoughts on various Subjects.

FLU

3. Affluence; abundance. This sense is obsolete.

Those who grow old in fluency and ease,

Behold him tost on seas. Sandys's Paraphrase on Job

God riches and renown to men imparts,

Even all they wish; and yet their narrow hearts

Cannot so great a fluency receive,

But their fruition to a stranger leave. Sandys.

FLUENT. adj. [fluens, Latin.]

1. Liquid.

It is not malleable; but yet is not fluent, but stupified. Bar.

2. Flowing; in motion; in flux.

Motion being a fluent thing, and one part of its duration being absolutely independent upon another, it doth not follow that because any thing moves this moment, it must necessarily continue to do so the next. Ray on the Creation.

3. Ready; copious; voluble.

Those have some natural dispositions, which have better grace in youth than in age, such as is a fluent and luxurious speech. Bacon.

I shall lay before you all that's within me,

And with most fluent utterance. Denham's Sophy.

FLUENT. n. f. Stream; running water.

Confiding in their hands, that sed'ulous strive

To cut th' outrageous fluent; in this distress,

Ev'n in the sight of death. Phillips.

FLUID. adj. [fluidus, Latin; fluide, French.] Having parts easily separable; not solid.

Or serve they as a flow'ry verge to bind

The fluid skirts of that same wat'ry cloud,

Lest it again dissolve, and show'r the earth? Milt. P. Lost.

If particles slip easily, and are of a fit size to be agitated by heat, and the heat is big enough to keep them in agitation, the body is fluid; and if it be apt to stick to things, it is humid. Newton's Opt.

FLUID. n. f. [In physick.] Any animal juice: as the blood.

Consider how luxury hath introduced new diseases, and with them, not improbably, altered the whole course of the fluids. Arbuthnot and Pope's Mart. Scriblerus.

FLUIDITY. n. f. [fluidité, Fr. from fluid.] The quality in bodies opposite to solidity; want of adherence between the parts.

Heat promotes fluidity very much, by diminishing the tenacity of bodies: it makes many bodies fluid, which are not fluid in cold, and increases the fluidity of tenacious liquids; as of oil, balsam and honey; and thereby decreases their resistance. Newton's Opt.

A disease opposite to this spissitude is too great fluidity. Arb.

FLUIDNESS. n. f. [from fluid] That quality in bodies opposite to stability.

What if we should say that fluidness and stability depends so much upon the texture of the parts, that, by the change of that texture, the same parts may be made to constitute either a fluid or a dry body, and that permanently too? Boyle.

FLUMMERY. n. f. A kind of food made by coagulation of wheatflower or oatmeal.

Milk and flummery are very fit for children. Locke.

FLUNG. participle and preterite of fling. Thrown; cast.

Several statues the Romans themselves flung into the river, when they would revenge themselves. Addison on Italy.

FLUOR. n. f. [Latin.]

1. A fluid state.

The particles of fluids which do not cohere too strongly, and are of such a smallness as renders them most susceptible of those agitations which keep liquors in a fluor, are most easily separated and rarified into vapours. Newton's Opt.

2. Catamenia.

FLURRY. n. f.

1. A gust or storm of wind; a hasty blast.

The boat was overset by a sudden flurry from the North.

Gulliver's Travels.

2. Hurry; a violent commotion.

To FLUSH. v. n. [fluxen, Dutch, to flow; flus, or flux, Fr.]

1. To flow with violence.

The pulse of the heart he attributes to an ebullition and sudden expansion of the blood in the ventricles, after the manner of the milk, which, being heated to such a degree, doth suddenly, and all at once, flush up and run over the vessel. Ray.

It flushes violently out of the cock for about a quart, and then stops. Mortimer's Husbandry.

2. To come in haste.

If the place but affords

Any store of lucky birds,

As I make 'em to flush,

Each owl out of his bush. Ben Johnson's Owls.

3. To glow in the skin; to produce a colour in the face by a sudden afflux of blood.

Ere yet the salt of most unrighteous tears

Had left the flushing in her gauled eyes,

She married. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

Thus Eve with count'nance blithe her story told,

But in her cheek distemper flushing glow'd. Milt. Par. Lost.

What can be more significant than the sudden flushing and confusion of a blush? Collier of the Aspect.

What

FLU

What means that lovely fruit? What means, alas!
That blood, which flushes guilty in your face? Dryden.

At once, array'd

In all the colours of the flushing year,
The garden glows. Thomson's Spring, l. 95.

4. To shine. Obsolete.

A flake of fire, that flushing in his beard,
Him all amaz'd. Spenser.

To FLUSH. v. a.

1. To colour; to redden.

The glowing dames of Zama's royal court,
Have faces flush'd with more exalted charms. Addis. Cato.
Some court, or secret corner seek,

Nor flush with shame the passing virgin's cheek. Gay's Triv.

2. To elate; to elevate.

A prosperous people, flushed with great victories and successes, are rarely known to confine their joys within the bounds of moderation and innocence. Atterbury's Sermons.

FLUSH. adj.

1. Fresh; full of vigour.

He took my father grossly, full of bread,
With all his crimes broad blown, and flush as May;
And how his audit stands, who knows, save heav'n? Shak.
I love to wear cloths that are flush,
Not prefacing old rags with plush. Cleaveland.

2. Affluent; abounding. A cant word.

Lord Strut was not very flush in ready, either to go to law or clear old debts; neither could he find good bail. Arbuthnot.

FLUSH. n. f. Afflux; sudden impulse; violent flow.

Never had any man such a loss, cries a widower, in the flush of his extravagancies for a dead wife. L'Estrange.

The pulse of the arteries is not only caused by the pulsation of the heart, driving the blood through them in manner of a wave or flush, but by the coats of the arteries themselves. Ray.

Success may give him a present flush of joy; but when the short transport is over, the apprehension of losing succeeds to the care of acquiring. Rogers's Sermons.

2. Cards all of a sort.

To FLUSTER. v. a. [from To flush.] To make hot and rosy with drinking; to make half drunk.

Three lads of Cyprus, noble swelling spirits,
Have I to-night fluster'd with flowing cups,
And they watch too. Shakespeare's Othello.

FLUTE. n. f. [fluste, flute, French; fluyte, Dutch.]

1. A musical pipe; a pipe with stops for the fingers.

Th' oars were silver,

Which to the tune of flutes kept stroke. Shak. Ant. and Cleo.
The soft complaining flute

In dying notes discovers

The woes of hopeless lovers,

Whose dirge is whisper'd by the warbling lute. Dryden.

2. A channel or furrow in a pillar, like the concave of a flute split.

To FLUTE. v. a. To cut columns into hollows.

To FLUTTER. v. n. [floteran, Saxon; flotter, French.]

1. To take short flights with great agitation of the wings.

As an eagle stirreth up her nest, fluttereth over her young, and spreadeth abroad her wings, so the Lord alone did lead him. Deutr. xxxii. 11.

When your hands untie these strings,

Think you've an angel by the wings;

One that gladly will be nigh,

To wait upon each morning-sigh;

To flutter in the balmy air

Of your well-perfumed pray'r. Crashaw.

They fed, and, flutt'ring, by degrees withdrew. Dryden.

2. To move about with great show and bustle without consequence.

Excess muddies the best wit, and only makes it flutter and froth high. Grew.

No rag, no scrap of all the beau or wit,

That once so flutter'd, and that once so writ. Pope's Dunc.

3. To be moved with quick vibrations or undulations.

Ye spirits! to your charge repair;

The flutt'ring fan be Zephyretta's care.

They the tall mast above the vessel rear,

Or teach the flutt'ring sail to float in air. Pope's Odyssey.

4. To be in agitation; to move irregularly; to be in a state of uncertainty.

The relation being brought him what a glorious victory was got, and with what difficulty, and how long she fluttered upon the wings of doubtful success, he was not surpris'd.

Howel's Vocal Forest.

It is impossible that men should certainly discover the agreement or disagreement of ideas, whilst their thoughts flutter about, or stick only in founds of doubtful signification. Locke.

Esteem we these, my friends! event and chance,

Produc'd by atoms from their flutt'ring dance! Prior.

Some never arrive at any deep, solid, or valuable knowledge, because they are perpetually fluttering over the surface of things. Watts.

His thoughts are very fluttering and wandering, and cannot be fixed attentively to a few ideas successively. Watts.

To FLUTTER. v. a.

1. To drive in disorder, like a flock of birds suddenly roused.

FLY

Like an eagle in a dovecoat, I

Flutter'd your Volsians in Corioli. Shakesf. Coriolanus.

2. To hurry the mind.

3. To disorder the position of any thing.

FLUTTER. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Vibration; undulation; quick and irregular motion.

An infinite variety of motions are to be made use of in the flutter of a fan: there is the angry flutter, the modest flutter, and the timorous flutter. Addis's Spectator, N<sup>o</sup>. 102.

2. Hurry; tumult; disorder of mind.

3. Confusion; irregular position.

FLUVIA'TICK. adj. [fluvaticus, Latin.] Belonging to rivers.

FLUX. n. f. [fluxus, Latin; flux, French.]

1. The act of flowing; passage.

The most simple and primary motion of fire is a flux, in a direct line from the centre of the fuel to its circumference.

Digby on Bodies.

By the perpetual flux of the liquids, a great part of them is thrown out of the body. Arbuthnot.

2. The state of passing away and giving place to others.

The heat of the sun in animals whose parts are successive, and in a continual flux, can produce a deep and perfect gloss of blackness. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. vi. c. 10.

What the stated rate of interest should be, in the constant change of affairs, and flux of money, is hard to determine. Locke.

In the constituent matter of one body, turning naturally to another like body, the stock or fund can never be exhausted, nor the flux and alteration sensible. Woodward.

Languages, like our bodies, are in a perpetual flux, and stand in need of recruits to supply the place of those words that are continually falling through disuse. Felton on the Class.

3. Any flow or issue of matter.

Quinces stop fluxes of blood.

Arbuthnot on Diet.

4. Dysentery; disease in which the bowels are excoriated and bleed; bloody flux.

Eat eastern spice, secure

From burning fluxes and hot calenture.

Hallifax.

5. Excrement; that which falls from bodies.

Civet is the very uncleanly flux of a cat.

Shakespeare.

6. Concourse; confluence.

Left and abandon'd of his velvet friends;

'Tis right, quoth he; thus misery doth part

The flux of company.

Shakesp. As you like it.

7. The state of being melted.

8. That which mingled with a body makes it melt.

FLUX. adj. [fluxus, Latin.] Unconstant; not durable; maintained by a constant succession of parts.

To FLUX. v. a.

1. To melt.

2. To salivate; to evacuate by spitting.

He might fashionably and genteelly have been duelled or fluxed into another world. South.

FLUXILITY. n. f. [fluxus, Latin.] Easiness of separation of parts; possibility of liquefaction.

Experiments seem to teach, that the supposed aversation of nature to a vacuum is but accidental, or in consequence, partly of the weight and fluidity, or at least flexility of the bodies here below. Boyle.

FLUXION. n. f. [fluxio, Latin.]

1. The act of flowing.

2. The matter that flows.

3. [In mathematicks.] The arithmetick or analysis of infinitely small variable quantities; or it is the method of finding an infinite small or infinitely small quantity, which, being taken an infinite number of times, becomes equal to a quantity given. Harris.

A penetration into the abstruse difficulties and depths of modern algebra and fluxions, are not worth the labour of those who design the learned professions as the business of life. Watts.

To FLY. pret. flew or fled; part. fled or flown. v. n. [pleogan, Saxon. To fly is properly to use wings, and gives flew and flown. To flee is to escape, or go away, flean, Saxon, and makes fled. They are now confounded.]

1. To move through the air with wings.

Ere the bat hath flown

His cloister'd flight.

Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Fowl that may fly above the earth in the open firmament of heaven. Gen. i. 20.

These men's hastiness the warier sort of you do not commend: ye wish they had held themselves longer in, and not flown so dangerously abroad before the feathers of the cause had been grown. Hooker.

2. To pass through the air.

Man is born unto trouble, as the sparks fly upward. Job v.

3. To pass away.

Ev'n a romance, a tune, a rhyme,

Help thee to pass the tedious time,

Which else would on thy hand remain;

Though flown, it ne'er looks back again.

Prior.

4. To pass swiftly.

The scouts with flying speed

Return, and through the city spread the news.

Dryden.

Earth rolls back beneath the flying steed.

Pope.

5. To spring with violence; to fall on suddenly.
A servant hat he bred, thrill'd with remorse;
Oppos'd against the act, bending his sword
To his great master; who, thereat enrag'd,
Flew on him, and amongst them fell'd him dead. Shakesp.
Though the dogs have never seen the dog-killer, yet they will come forth, and bark and fly at him. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
No honour, no fortune, can keep a man from being miserable, when an enraged conscience shall fly at him, and take him by the throat. South's Sermons.
6. To move with rapidity.
Glad to catch this good occasion,
Most thoroughly to be winnow'd, where my chaff
And corn shall fly asunder. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.
A fair example to his master gave;
He baffles heads, to save his own, made fly;
And now, the sultan to preserve, must die. Waller.
7. To burst asunder with a sudden explosion.
Behold, a frothy substance rise;
Be cautious, or your bottle flies. Swift.
8. To break; to shiver.
9. [plean, Saxon; fliehen, German.] To run away; to attempt escape. [In this sense the verb is properly to flee, when fled is formed; but the following examples shew that they are confounded.]
Which when the valiant elf perceiv'd, he leapt,
As lion fierce, upon the flying prey. Spenser.
Macduff is fled to England. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
Ye shall flee, as ye fled from before the earthquake.
Zech. xiv. 5.
Abiathar escaped, and fled after David. i Sa. xxii. 20.
What wonder if the kindly beams he shed,
Reviv'd the drooping arts again;
If science rais'd her head,
And soft humanity, that from rebellion fled. Dryden.
He oft desir'd to fly from Israel's throne,
And live in shades with her and love alone. Prior.
I'll fly from shepherds, flocks, and flow'ry plains;
From shepherds, flocks, and plains I may remove,
Forake mankind, and all the world but love. Pope.
10. To FLY in the face. To insult.
This would discourage any man from doing you good, when you will either neglect him, or fly in his face; and he must expect only danger to himself. Swift's Drapier's Letters.
11. To act in defiance.
Fly in nature's face:
—But how, if nature fly in my face first?
—Then nature's the aggressor. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.
12. To FLY off. To revolt.
Deny to speak with me? They're sick, they're weary,
They have travell'd all the night! mean fetches;
The images of revolt, and flying off. Shakesp. King Lear.
The traitor Syphax
Flew off at once with his Numidian horse. Addison's Cato.
13. To FLY out. To burst into passion.
How easy is a noble spirit discern'd,
From harsh and sulphurous matter that flies out
In contumelies, makes a noise, and stinks. Ben. Jonns. Catil.
Passion is apt to ruffle, and pride will fly out into contumely and neglect. Collier of Friendship.
14. To FLY out. To break out into licence.
You use me like a courser spur'd and rein'd:
If I fly out, my fierceness you command. Dryden.
Papists, when unopposed, fly out into all the pageantries of worship; but in times of war, when they are hard pressed by arguments, lie close intrenched behind the council of Trent.
Dryden's Medal, Dedicat.
15. To FLY out. To start violently from any direction.
All bodies, moved circularly, have a perpetual endeavour to recede from the centre, and every moment would fly out in right lines, if they were not restrained. Bentley's Sermons.
16. To let FLY. To discharge.
The noisy culverin, o'ercharg'd, lets fly,
And bursts, unaiming, in the rended sky. Granville.
17. To be light and unencumbered: as, a flying camp.
To FLY. v. a.
1. To shun; to avoid; to decline.
Love like a shadow flies, when substance love pursues;
Pursuing that which flies, and flying what pursues. Shakesp.
O Jove, I think
Foundations fly the wretched; such I mean,
Where they should be relieved. Shakespeare.
If you fly physick in health altogether, it will be too strange for your body when you shall need it. Bacon's Essays.
O whither shall I run, or which way fly
The sight of this so horrid spectacle. Milton's Agonistes.
2. To refuse association with.
Sleep flies the wretch; or when with cares oppress'd,
And his toss'd limbs are weary'd into rest,
Then dreams invade. Dryden's Juvenal, Sat. 13.
Nature flies him like enchanted ground. Dryden.
3. To quit by flight.

- Dedalus, to fly the Cretan shore;
His heavy limbs on jointed pinions bore;
The first who sail'd in air. Dryden's Æn. b. vi.
4. To attack by a bird of prey.
If a man can tame this monster, and with her fly other ravening fowl, and kill them, it is somewhat worth. Bacon.
  5. It is probable that flew was originally the preterite of fly, when it signified volation, and fled when it signified escape:
flown should be confined likewise to volation; but these distinctions are now confounded.
- FLY. n. f. [pleoge, Saxon.]
1. A small winged insect of many species.
As flies to wanton boys, are we to th' gods;
They kill us for their sport. Shakespeare's King Lear.
My country neighbours begin to think of being in general, before they come to think of the fly in their sheep, or the tares in their corn. Locke.
To prevent the fly, some propose to sow ashes with the seed. Mortimer's Husbandry.
To heedless flies the window proves
A constant death. Thomson's Summer.
  2. That part of a machine which, being put into a quick motion, regulates and equalises the motion of the rest.
If we suppose a man tied in the place of the weight, it were easy, by a single hair fastened unto the fly or balance of the jack, to draw him up from the ground. Wilkins.
  3. FLY, in a compass. That part which points how the wind blows.
To FLY' BLOW. v. a. [fly and blow.] To taint with flies; to fill with maggots.
I cannot discern any labyrinth, unless in the perplexity of his own thoughts; for I am unwilling to believe that he doth it with a design to play tricks, and to flyblow my words; to make others distaste them. Stillingsfleet.
Like a flyblown cake of tallow;
Or, on parchment, ink turn'd yellow. Swift.
So morning insects, that in muck begun,
Shine, buzz, and flyblow in the setting sun. Pope's Epistles.
  - FLY' BOAT. n. f. [fly and boat.] A kind of vessel nimble and light for sailing.
  - FLYCA'TCHER. n. f. [fly and catch.] One that hunts flies.
There was more need of Brutus in Domitian's days, to redeem or mend, than of Horace, to laugh at a flycatcher. Dry.
The swallow was a flycatcher as well as the spider. L'Estr.
  - FLY'ER. n. f. [from fly.]
  1. One that flies or runs away.
They hit one another with darts, as the others do with their hands, which they never throw counter, but at the back of the flyer. Sandys's Journey.
He grieves so many Britons should be lost;
Taking more pains, when he beheld them yield,
To save the flyers than to win the field. Waller.
  2. One that uses wings.
  3. The fly of a jack.
  4. [In architecture.] Stairs made of an oblong square figure, whose fore and back sides are parallel to each other, and so are their ends: the second of these flyers stands parallel behind the first, the third behind the second, and so are said to fly off from one another. Moxon's Mech. Exer.
  - To FLY' FISH. v. n. [fly and fish.] To angle with a hook baited with a fly.
I shall next give you some other directions for fly- fishing. Walton's Angler.
  - FOAL. n. f. [fola, Saxon.] The offspring of a mare, or other beast of burthen. The custom now is to use colt for a young horse, and foal for a young mare; but there was not originally any such distinction.
Also flew his steed,
And with his winged heels did tread the wind,
As he had been a foal of Pegasus's kind. Fairy Queen, b. i.
Twenty she-asses and ten foals. Gen. xxxii. 15.
  - To FOAL. v. a. [from the noun.] To bring forth a foal.
Give my horse to Timon: it foals me straight Ten able horses. Shakespeare's Timon.
Such colts as are
Of generous race, straight, when they first are foal'd,
Walk proudly. May's Georgicks.
About September take your mares into the house, where keep them 'till they foal. Mortimer's Husbandry.
  - FO'ALBIT. } n. f. Plants.
  - FO'ALFOOT. }
  - FOAM. n. f. [fram, Saxon.] The white substance which agitation or fermentation gathers on the top of liquors; froth; spume.
The foam upon the water. Hof. x. 7.
Whitening, down their mossy tinctur'd stream
Descends the billowy foam. Thomson's Spring.
  - To FOAM. v. n. [from the noun.]
  1. To froth; to gather foam.
What a beard of the general's cut will do among foaming bottles and ale-wash'd wits, is wonderful. Shakesp. Henry V.
Cæsar fell down in the market-place, and foam'd at mouth, and was speechless. Shakespeare's Julius Cæsar.

- To Pallas high the foaming bowl he crown'd,
And sprinkl'd large libations on the ground. Pope's Odyssey.
Upon a foaming horse
There follow'd strait a man of royal port. Rowe.
2. To be in rage; to be violently agitated.
He foameth, and gnasheth with his teeth. Mar. ix. 18.
- FO'AMY. adj. [from foam.] Covered with foam; frothy.
More white than Neptune's foamy face,
When struggling rocks he would embrace. Sidney, b. ii.
Behold how high the foamy billows ride!
The winds and waves are on the juster side. Dryden.
- FOB. n. f. [fuppe, fupsacke, German.] A small pocket.
Who pick'd a fo at holding forth,
And where a watch for half the worth
May be redeem'd. Hudibras, p. ii. cant. 3.
When were the dice with more profusion thrown?
The well-fill'd fo, not empty'd now alone. Dryd. Juven.
He put his hand into his fo, and presented me in his name with a tobacco-stopper. Addison's Spectator.
There were two pockets which we could not enter; these he called his fos: they were two large slits cut into the top of his middle cover, but squeezed close by the pressure of his belly. Gulliver's Travels.
Orphans around his bed the lawyer fees,
And takes the plaintiff's and defendant's fees;
His fellow pick-purse, watching for a job,
Fancies his fingers in the cully's fo. Swift:
- To FOB. v. a. [fuppen, German.]
1. To cheat; to trick; to defraud.
I think it is scurvy, and begin to find myself fobb'd in
it. Shakespeare's Othello.
Shall there be a gallows standing in England when thou art king, and resolution thus fobb'd as it is with the rusty curb of old father antick the law. Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. i.
He goes pressing forward, 'till he was fobbed again with another story. L'Estrange.
2. To FOB off. To shift off; to put aside with an artifice; to delude by a trick.
You must not think
To fob off our disgraces with a tale. Shakesp. Coriolanus.
For they, poor knaves, were glad to cheat,
To get their wives and children meat;
But these will not be fobb'd off so,
They must have wealth and power too. Hudibras, p. i.
By a Ravenna vintner once betray'd,
So much for wine and water mix'd I paid;
But when I thought the purchas'd liquor mine,
The rascal fobb'd me off with only wine. Addison.
Being a great lover of country-sports, I absolutely determined not to be a minister of state, nor to be fobb'd off with a garter. Addison's Freeholder, N<sup>o</sup>. 3.
- FO'CAL. adj. [from focus.] Belonging to the focus. See FOCUS.
Schelhammer demandeth whether the convexity or concavity of the drum collects rays into a focal point, or scatters them, Derham's Physico-Theology.
- FO'CIL. n. f. [focile, French.] The greater or less bone between the knee and ankle, or elbow and wrist.
The fracture was of both the focils of the left leg. Wisem.
- FOCILLA'TION. n. f. [focillo, Lat.] Comfort; support. Diët.
- FO'CUS. n. f. [Latin.]
1. [In opticks.] The focus of a glass is the point of convergence or concurrence, where the rays meet and cross the axis after their refraction by the glass. Harris:
The point from which rays diverge, or to which they converge, may be called their focus. Newton's Opt.
2. Focus of a Parabola. A point in the axis within the figure, and distant from the vertex by a fourth part of the parameter, or latus rectum. Harris.
3. Focus of an Ellipsis. A point towards each end of the longer axis; from whence two right lines being drawn to any point in the circumference, shall be together equal to that longer axis. Harris.
4. Focus of the Hyperbola. A point in the principal axis, within the opposite hyperbola's; from which if any two right lines are drawn, meeting in either of the opposite hyperbolas, the difference will be equal to the principal axis. Diët.
- FO'DDER. n. f. [foðne, foðen, Saxon.] Dry food stored up for cattle against Winter.
Their cattle, starving for want of fodder, corrupted the air. Knolles's History of the Turks.
Being not to be raised without wintering, they will help to force men into improvement of land by a necessity of fodder. Temple.
Of grass and fodder thou defraud'st the dams,
And of their mothers dugs the starving lambs. Dryd. Virgil.
- To FO'DDER. v. a. [from the noun.] To feed with dry food.
Natural earth is taken the first half spit from just under the turf of the best pasture ground, in a place that has been well foddered on. Evelyn's Kalendar.
From Winter keep,
Well fodder'd in the stalls, thy tender sheep. Dryd. Virgil.
- A farm of fifty pound hath commonly three barns, with as many cowyards to fodder cattle in. Mortimer's Husbandry.
Straw will do well enough to fodder with. Mortim. Husb.
- FO'DDERER. n. f. [from fodder.] He who fodders cattle.
- FOE. n. f. [fah, Saxon; fæe, Scottish.]
1. An enemy in war.
Ere he had established his throne,
He fought great battles with his savage foe,
In which he them defeated ever more. Fairy Queen, b. ii.
Never but one more was either like
To meet so great a foe. Milton.
2. A persecutor; an enemy in common life.
God's benison go with you, and with those
That would make good of bad, and friends of foes. Shakesf.
Forc'd by thy worth, thy foe in death become;
Thy friend has lodg'd thee in a costly tomb. Dryden's Fables:
Thy defects to know,
Make use of ev'ry friend, and ev'ry foe. Pope.
3. An opponent; an illwisher.
He that considers and enquires into the reason of things, is counted a foe to received doctrines. Watts's Imp. of the Mind.
- FO'EMAN. n. f. [from fæe and man.] Enemy in war; antagonist. An obsolete word.
Here haunts that fiend, and does his daily spoil;
Therefore henceforth be at your keeping well,
And ever ready for your foeman fell. Fairy Queen, b. i.
What valiant foemen, like to Autumn's corn,
Have we mow'd down in top of all their pride? Sh. H. VI.
- FO'ETUS. n. f. [Latin.] The child in the womb after it is perfectly formed: but before, it is called embryo. Quincy.
A foetus, in the mother's womb, differs not much from the state of a vegetable. Locke.
- FOG. n. f. [fog, Danish, a storm.] A thick mist; a moist dense vapour near the surface of the land or water.
Infect her beauty,
You sensuck'd fogs, drawn by the pow'rful sun,
To fall and blast her pride. Shakespeare's King Lear.
Lesser mists and fogs than those which covered Greece with so long darkness, present great alterations in the sun and moon. Raleigh's History of the World.
Fly, fly, prophane fogs! far hence fly away;
Taint not the pure streams of the springing day
With your dull influence: it is for you
To sit and scoule upon night's heavy brow. Crashaw: Fogs we frequently observe after sun-setting, even in our hottest months. Woodward's Natural History:
- FOG. n. f. [fogagium, low Latin. Gramen in foresta regis locatur pro fogagio. Leges forest. Scotica.] Aftergrass; grass which grows in Autumn after the hay is mown.
- FO'GGILY. adv. [from foggy.] Mistily; darkly; cloudily.
- FO'GGINESS. n. f. [from foggy.] The state of being dark or misty; cloudiness; mistiness.
- FO'GGY. adj. [from fog.]
1. Misty; cloudy; dank; full of moist vapours.
Alas! while we are wrapt in foggy mist
Of our self-love, so passions do deceive;
We think they hurt, when most they do assist. Sidney, b. ii.
And Phœbus flying so, most shameful sight,
His blushing face in foggy cloud implays;
And hides for shame. Fairy Queen, b. i. cant. 6.
Whence have they this mettle?
Is not their climate foggy, raw and dull? Shakesf. Henry V.
Let not air be too gross, nor too penetrative; not subject to any foggy noisomeness, from fens or marshes near adjoining.
About Michaelmas, the weather fair, and by no means foggy, retire your rarest plants. Evelyn's Kalendar.
2. Cloudy in understanding; dull.
- FOH. interject. [from fah, Saxon, an enemy.] An interjection of abhorrence: as if one should at sight of any thing hated cry out a foe!
Not to affect many proposed matches
Of her own clime, complexion and degree,
Whereto we see in all things nature tends,
Foh! one may smell in such a will most rank, Foul disproportions, thoughts unnatural. Shakesf. Othello.
- FO'IBLE. n. f. [French.] A weak side; a blind side; a failing.
He knew the foibles of human nature. Freind's Hist. of Physf.
The witty men sometimes have sense enough to know their own foible, and therefore they craftily shun the attacks of argument. Watts's Logick.
- To FOIL. v. a. [affoler, to wound, old French.] To put to the worst; to defeat, though without a complete victory.
Amazement seiz'd
The rebel thrones; but greater rage to see
Thus foil'd their mightiest. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vi.
Leader of those armies bright,
Which but th' omnipotent none could have fil'd! Milton.
Yet these subject not: I to thee disclose
What inward thence I feel, not therefore foil'd:
Who meet with various objects, from the sense

Variouſly repreſenting; yet ſtill free,
Approve the beſt, and follow what I approve. Milt. P. Loſt.
Strange, that your fingers ſhould the pencil foil,
Without the help of colours or of oil! Waller.
He had been foiled in the cure, and had left it to nature.

Wiſeman's Surgery.
In their conflicts with ſin they have been ſo often foiled,
That they now deſpair of ever getting the day. Calamy's Serm.
Virtue, diſdain, deſpair, I oft have try'd;
And, foil'd, have with new arms my foe defy'd. Dryden.
But I, the confort of the Thunderer,
Have wag'd a long and unſucceſſful war;
With various arts and arms in vain have toil'd,
And by a mortal man at length am foil'd. Dryden's Æn.

FOIL. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A defeat; a miſcarriage; an advantage gained without a complete conqueſt.

We of thy cunning had no diffidence;
One ſudden foil ſhall never breed diſtruſt. Shakeſ. Hen. VI.
Whoſeever overthroweth his mate in ſuch fort, as that either his back, or the one ſhoulder, and contrary heel do touch the ground, ſhall be accounted to give the fall: if he be endangered, and make a narrow eſcape, it is called a foil. Carew.
So after many a foil the tempter proud,
Renewing freſh assaults, amidſt his pride,
Fell whence he ſtood to ſee his victor fall. Milton's P. Loſt.
When age ſhall level me to impotence,
And ſweating pleaſure leave me on the foil. Southern.
Death never won a ſtake with greater toil,
Nor e'er was fate ſo near a foil. Dryden.

2. [Feuille, French.] Leaf; gilding.

A ſtately palace, built of ſquared brick,
Which cunningly was without mortar laid,
Whoſe walls were high, but nothing ſtrong nor thick;
And golden foil all over them diſplay'd. Fairy Queen, b. i.
Fame is no plant that grows on mortal foil,
Nor in the glittering foil
Set off to th' world, nor in broad rumour lies. Milton.

3. Something of another colour near which jewels are ſet to raiſe their luſtre.

As ſhe a black ſilk cap on him begun
To ſet for foil of his milk-white to ſerve. Sidney.
Like bright metal on a ſullen ground,
My reformation glittering o'er my fault;
Shall ſhew more goodly, and attract more eyes,
Than that which hath no foil to ſet it off. Shak. Hen. IV.
The ſullen paſſage of thy weary ſteps
Eſteem a foil, wherein thou art to ſet
The precious jewel of thy home. Shakeſpeare.
'Tis the property of all true diamonds to unite the foil cloſely itſelf, and thereby better augment its luſtre: the foil is a mixture of maſtich and burnt ivory. Grew's Muſæum.
Hector has a foil to ſet him off: we are perpetually oppoſing the incontinence of Paris to the temperance of Hector.
Notes on the Odyſſey.

4. [From fouiller, French.] A blunt ſword uſed in fencing.

He that plays the king ſhall be welcome; his majeſty ſhall have tribute of me: the adventurous knight ſhall uſe his foil and target. Shak. Hamlet.

FOILER. n. f. [from foil.] One who has gained advantage over another.

TO FOIN. v. n. [poindre, Fr. Skinner.] To puſh in fencing.

He hew'd, and laſh'd, and foin'd, and thunder'd blows,
And every way did ſeek into his life;
Ne plate, ne mail, could ward ſo mighty throws,
But yielded paſſage to his cruel knife. Fairy Queen, b. ii.
He cares not what miſchief he doth, if his weapon be out:
he will foin like any devil; he will ſpare neither man, woman, nor child. Shakeſpeare's Henry IV. p. i.

Then both, no moment loſt, at once advance
Againſt each other, arm'd with ſword and lance:
They laſh, they foin, they paſs, they ſtrive to bore
Their corſlets, and the thinnest parts explore. Dryden.

FOIN. n. f. [from the verb.] A thruſt; a puſh.

FOININGLY. adv. [from foin.] In a puſhing manner.

FOISON. n. f. [foiſon, Saxon.] Plenty; abundance. A word now out of uſe.

Pay juſtly thy tithes, whatſoever thou be,
That God may in bleſſing ſend foiſon to thee. Tuſſ. Huſb.
Be wilful to kill, and unſkilful to ſtore,
And look for no foiſon, I tell thee before. Tuſſer's Huſband.
Nature ſhould bring forth,
Of its own kind, all foiſon, all abundance,
To feed my innocent people. Shakeſpeare's Tempeſt.

As thoſe that feed grow full, as bloſſoming time
That from the ſeedneſs the bare fallow brings
To teeming foiſon; ſo her plenteous womb Expreſſeth his full tilth and huſbandry. Shak. Meaſ. for Meaſ.

TO FOIST. v. a. [fauffer, French.] To infer by forgery.

Left negligence or partiality might admit or foist in abuſes and corruption, an archdeacon was appointed to take account of their doings. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

Forge law, and foist it into ſome by-place

Of ſome old rotten roll.

Dryden's Den Sebastian.

FOISTINESS. n. f. [from foisty.] Fuſtineſs; mouldineſs.

Dreſs muſtard, and lay it in cellar up ſweet,

Left foiſtineſs make it for table unmeet. Tuſſ. Huſbandry.

FOISTY. adj. [See FUSTY.] Mouldy; fuſty.

FOLD. n. f. [falas, falas, Saxon.]

1. The ground in which ſheep are confined.

His eyes he open'd, and beheld a field
Part arable and tilth; whereon were ſheaves
New reap'd; the other part, ſheepwalks and folds. Milton.
In thy book record their groans,
Who were thy ſheep, and in their ancient fold Slain. Milton.

2. The place where ſheep are houſed.

Time drives the flocks from field to fold,
When rivers rage and rocks grow cold;
And Philomel becometh dumb,
And all complain of cares to come. Ra'eigh.

3. The flock of ſheep.

And this you ſee I ſcarcely drag along,
Who yeaning on the rocks has left her young,
The hope and promiſe of my failing fold. Dryden's Virgil.

4. A limit; a boundary.

Secure from meeting, they're diſtinctly roll'd;
Nor leave their ſeats, and paſs the dreadful fold. Creech.

5. [From fold, Saxon.] A double; a complication; an invo-lution; one part added to another; one part doubled upon another.

She in this trice of time

Commits a thing ſo monſtrous, to diſmantle

So many folds of favour! Shakeſpeare's King Lear.

The ancient Egyptian mummies were ſhrowded in a number of folds of linen, beſmeared with gums. Bacon's N. Hiſt.

Not with indented wave,

Prone on the ground, as ſince; but on his rear

Circular baſe of riſing folds, that tower'd

Fold above fold, a ſurging maze! Milton's Paradise Loſt.

Let the draperies be nobly ſpread upon the body, and let the folds be large: the parts ſhould be often traversed by the flowing of the folds. Dryden's Dufreſnoy.

With fear and wonder ſeiz'd, the crowd beholds

The gloves of death, with ſeven diſtinguiſh'd folds

Of tough bull hides. Dryden's Virg. Æn.

The inward coat of a lion's ſtomach has ſtronger folds than a human, but in other things not much different. Arbuthnot.

6. From the foregoing ſignification is derived the uſe of fold in composition. Fold ſignifies the ſame quantity added: as, two fold, twice the quantity; twenty fold, twenty times repeated.

But other fell into good ground, and brought forth fruit;
ſome an hundred fold, ſome ſixty fold, ſome thirty fold. Matt.

At laſt appear

Hell bounds, high reaching to the horrid roof,

And thrice three fold the gates: three folds were braſs,

Three iron, three of adamant rock. Milt. Parad. Loſt.

Their martyr'd blood and aſhes ſow

O'er all th' Italian fields, where ſtill doth ſway

The triple tyrant; that from theſe may grow

A hundred fold.

Milton:

TO FOLD. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To ſhut ſheep in the fold.

The ſtar that bids the ſhepherd fold,

Now the top of heav'n doth hold. Milton.

We ſee that the folding of ſleep helps ground, as well by their warmth as by their compoſt. Bacon's Natural Hiſtory.

She in pens his flocks will fold,

And then produce her dairy ſtore,

With wine to drive away the cold,

And unbought dainties of the poor. Dryden's Horace.

2. [palan, Saxon.] To double; to complicate.

As a veſture ſhalt thou fold them up. Heb. i. 12.

Yet a little ſleep, a little ſlumber, a little folding of the hands to ſleep. Prov. vi. 10.

They be folden together as thorns. Nab. i. 10.

I have ſeen her riſe from her bed, unlock her cloſet, take forth paper, fold it, write upon't, read it, ſeal it, and again return to bed. Shakeſpeare.

Conſcious of its own impotence, it folds its arms in deſpair, and ſits curling in a corner. Collier of Envy.

Both furl their ſails, and ſtrip them for the fight;

Their folded ſheets diſmiſs the uſeleſs air. Dryd. Ann. Mir.

3. To incloſe; to include; to ſhut.

We will deſcend and fold him in our arms. Shak. Rich. II.

Witness my ſon, now in the ſhade of death,

Whoſe bright outſhining beams thy cloudy wrath

Hath in eternal darkneſs folded up. Shakeſp. Richard III.

The fires i' th' loweſt hell fold in the people! Shak. Corio.

TO FOLD. v. n. To cloſe over another of the ſame kind; to join with another of the ſame kind.

The two leaves of the one door were folding, and the two leaves of the other door were folding. 1 Kings vi. 34.

FOLIA'CEOUS.

FOLIA'CEOUS. adj. [foliaceus, from folium, Latin.] Consisting of laminæ or leaves.

A piece of another, consisting of an outer crust, of a ruddy talky spar, and a blue talky foliaceous spar. Woodward on Foss.

FOLIAGE. n. f. [folium, Latin; feuillage, French.] Leaves; tufts of leaves; the apparel of leaves to a plant.

The great columns are finely engraven with fruits and foliage, that run twisting about them from the very top to the bottom. Addison on Italy.

When swelling buds their od'rous foliage shed,

And gently harden into fruit, the wise

Spare not the little offsprings, if they grow

Redundant.

Phillips.

TO FO'LIATE. v. a. [foliatus, folium, Latin.] To beat into laminas or leaves.

Gold foliated, or any metal foliated, cleaveth. Bacon.

If gold be foliated, and held between your eyes and the light, the light looks of a greenish blue. Newton's Opt.

FOLIA'TION. n. f. [foliatio, folium, Latin.]

1. The act of beating into thin leaves.

2. Foliation is one of the parts of the flower of a plant, being the collection of those fugacious coloured leaves called petals, which constitute the compass of the flower; and also sometimes to secure and guard the fruit which succeeds the foliation, as in apples, pears, &c. and sometimes stands within it, as in cherries, apricots, &c. for these, being of a tender and pulpy body, and coming forth in the colder parts of the Spring, would be often injured by the extremities of weather, if they were not thus protected and lodged up within their flowers. Quincy.

FO'LIATURE. n. f. [from folium, Latin.] The state of being hammered into leaves. Dict.

FO'LIO. n. f. [in folio, Latin.] A large book, of which the pages are formed by a sheet of paper once doubled.

Plumbinus and Plumeo made less progress in knowledge, though they had read over more folio's. Watts's Improvement.

FO'LIOMORT. adj. [folium mortuum, Latin.] A dark yellow; the colour of a leaf faded: vulgarly called philomort.

A flinty pebble was of a dark-green colour, and the exterior cortex of a foliomort colour. Woodward on Fossils.

FOLK. n. f. [folc, Saxon; volk, Dutch.]

1. People, in familiar language.

Never troubling him, either with asking questions, or finding fault with his melancholy, but rather fitting to his dolorous discourses of their own and other folks misfortune. Sidney.

Dorilaus having married his sister, had his marriage in short time blest, for so are folk wont to say, how unhappy soever the children after grow, with a son. Sidney.

When with greatest art he spoke,

You'd think he talk'd like other folk;

For all a rhetorician's rules

Teach nothing but to name his tools. Hudibras, p. i.

2. Nations; mankind.

Thou shalt judge the folk righteously, and govern the nations upon earth. Psalms lvi. 4.

3. Any kind of people as discriminated from others.

The river thrice hath flow'd, no ebb between;

And the old folk, time's doting chronicles,

Say it did so a little time before. Shakespeare.

Anger is a kind of baseness; as it appears well in the weakness of children, women, old folks, and sick folks. Bacon's Ess.

4. It is now used only in familiar or burlesque language.

Old good man Dobson of the green,

Remembers he the tree has seen,

And goes with folks to shew the sight. Swift.

He walk'd, and wore a threadbare cloak;

He din'd and sup'd at charge of other folk. Swift.

FO'LMOTE. n. f. [from folk and mate.]

Those hills were appointed for two special uses, and built by two several nations: the one is that which you call folk-motes, built by the Saxons, and signifies in the Saxon a meeting of folk. Spenser on Ireland.

FO'LLICLE. n. f. [folliculus, Latin.]

1. A cavity in any body with strong coats.

Although there be no eminent and circular follicle, no round bag or vesicle, which long containeth this humour; yet is there a manifest receptacle of choler from the liver into the guts. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iii. c. 2.

2. Follicle is a term in botany signifying the seed-vessels, capsula feminalis, or case, which some fruits and seeds have over them; as that of the alkengi, pedicularis, &c. Quincy.

TO FO'LLOW. v. a. [folgian, Saxon; volgen, Dutch.]

1. To go after; not before or side by side.

I had rather, forsooth, go before you like a man, than follow him like a dwarf. Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

2. To pursue as an enemy.

Wherever guilt can fly, revenge can follow. Irene.

3. To attend as a dependant.

And the three eldest sons of Jesse went and followed Saul to the battle. 1 Sa. xvii. 13.

Such smiling rogues as these soothe every passion,

That in the nature of their lords rebels:

As knowing nought, like dogs, but following. Shak. K. Lear.

Let not the muse then flatter lawless sway,

Nor follow fortune where she leads the way. Pope.

4. To pursue.

Not yielding over to old age his country delights, he was at that time following a merlin. Sidney, b. ii.

Some pious tears the pitying hero paid,

And follow'd with his eyes the fleeting shade. Dryden's Æn.

We follow fate, which does too fast pursue. Dryden.

5. To succeed in order of time.

6. To be consequential, as effects to causes.

7. To imitate; to copy.

Where Rome keepeth that which is ancients better, others, whom we much more affect, leaving it for newer, and changing it for worse, we had rather follow the perfections of them whom we like not, than in defects resemble them whom we love. Hooker, b. v. f. 28.

Ill patterns are sure to be followed more than good rules. Locke on Education.

8. To obey; to observe.

If all who do not follow oral tradition as their only rule of faith are out of the church, then all who follow the council of Trent are no Christians. Tillotson, Preface.

Most men admire

Virtue, who follow not her lore. Paradise Regain'd, b. vii.

9. To confirm by new endeavours; to keep up indefatigably.

They bound themselves to his laws and obedience; and in case it had been followed upon them, as it should have been, they should have been reduced to perpetual civility. Spenser.

10. To attend to; to be busied with.

He that undertaketh and followeth other mens business for gain, shall fall into suits. Ecclus. xxix. 9.

TO FO'LLOW. v. n.

1. To come after another.

Peter followed afar off. Luke xxii. 54.

The famine shall follow close after you. Jer. xlii. 16.

Welcome all that lead or follow

To the oracle of Apollo. Ben. Johnson.

2. To be posterior in time.

3. To be consequential, as effect to cause.

If the neglect or abuse of liberty to examine what would really and truly make for his happiness misleads him, the miscarriages that follow on it must be imputed to his own election. Locke.

To tempt them to do what is neither for their own nor the good of those under their care, great mischiefs cannot but follow. Locke.

4. To be consequential, as inference to premises.

Though there are or have been sometimes dwarfs, and sometimes giants in the world; yet it does not follow that there must be such in every age, nor in every country. Temple.

This dangerous doctrine must necessarily follow, from making all political power to be nothing else but Adam's paternal power. Locke.

5. To continue endeavours.

Then shall we know, if we follow on to know the Lord. Hof.

FO'LLOWER. n. f. [from follow.]

1. One who comes after another; not before him, or side by side.

Little gallant, you were wont to be a follower; but now you are a leader: whether had you rather lead mine eyes, or eye your master's heels? Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

No stop, no stay, but clouds of sand arise,

Spurn'd and cast backward on the follower's eyes. Dryden.

2. A dependant.

3. An attendant.

No follower, but a friend. Pope.

4. An associate; a companion.

How accompanied, can'st thou tell that?

—With Poins, and other his continual followers. Sh. H. IV.

5. One under the command of another.

I hold it no wisdom to leave unto them too much command over their kindred, but rather withdraw their followers from them as much as may be, and gather them under the command of law. Spenser's State of Ireland.

The understanding that should be eyes to the blind faculty of the will, is blind itself; and so brings all the inconveniences that attend a blind follower, under the conduct of a blind guide. South's Sermons.

And forc'd Æneas, when his ships were lost,

To leave his followers on a foreign coast. Dryden's Æn.

6. A scholar; an imitator; a copyer; one of the same sort.

Be ye followers of me, even as I am of Christ. 1 Cor. xi. 1.

The true profession of Christianity inviolably engages all its followers to do good to all men. Spratt's Sermons.

Every one's idea of identity will not be the same that Pythagoras and thousands of his followers have. Locke.

The studious head or gen'rous mind,

Follow'r of God, or friend of human kind,

Poet or patriot, rose but to restore

The faith and moral nature gave before. Pope's Essays.

FO'LLY.

FO'LLY. n. f. [f. lie, French.]

1. Want of understanding; weakness of intellect.
2. Criminal weakness; depravity of mind.

Think'st thou, that duty shall have dread to speak,
When pow'r to flattery bows? To plainness honour
Is bound, when majesty to folly falls. Shakefp. King Lear.

3. Act of negligence or passion unbecoming gravity or deep wisdom. In this sense it has a plural.

Love is blind, and lovers cannot see
The pretty follies that themselves commit;
For if they could, Cupid himself would blush
To see me thus transformed to a boy. Shakespeare.

Leave such to trifle with more grace and ease,
Whom folly pleases, or whose follies please. Pope's Horace.

TO FOMENT. v. a. [fomentor, Latin; fomenter, French.]

1. To cherish with heat.

Every kind that lives,
Fomented by his virtual power, and warm'd. Milton's P. L.

2. To bathe with warm lotions.

He fomented the head with opiates to procure sleep, and a solution of opium in water to foment the forehead. Arbuthnot.

3. To encourage; to support; to cherish.

They love their givings, and foment their deeds no less than parents do their children. Wotton.

Blame then thyself, as reason's law requires,
Since nature gave, and thou foment'st my fires. Dryden.

They are troubled with those ill humours, which they themselves infused and fomented in them. Locke.

FOMENTATION. n. f. [fomentation, Fr. from foment.]

1. A fomentation is partial bathing, called also stuping, which is applying hot flannels to any part, dipped in medicated decoctions, whereby the steams breathe into the parts, and discuss obstructed humours. Quincy.

Fomentation calleth forth the humour by vapours; but yet, in regard of the way made by the poultice, draweth gently the humours out: for it is a gentle fomentation, and hath withal a mixture of some stupefactive. Bacon's Natural History.

2. The lotion prepared to foment the parts.

The medicines were prepared by the physicians, and the lotions or fomentations by the nurses. Arbuthnot on Coins.

FOMENTER. n. f. [from foment.] An encourager; a supporter

These fatal distempers, as they did much hurt to the body politick at home, being like humours stirred in the natural without evacuation, so did they produce disadvantageous effects abroad; and better had it been, that the raisers and fomenters of them had never sprung up in Druina. Howel.

FON. n. f. [Scott. A word now obsolete.] A fool; an ideot.

Sicker I hold him for a greater fon,

That loves the thing he cannot purchase. Spenser's Past.

FOND. n. f. [fonn, Scottish. A word of which I have found no satisfactory etymology. To fonne is in Chaucer to doat, to be foolish.]

1. Foolish; silly; indiscreet; imprudent; injudicious.

This we know that the Grecians or Gentiles did account foolishness; but that they ever did think it a fond or unlikely way to seek men's conversion by sermons, we have not heard. Hooker, b. v. f. 12.

He was beaten out of all love of learning by a fond schoolmaster. Ascham.

Tell these sad women,

'Tis fond to wail inevitable strokes,
As 'tis to laugh at them. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

Grant I may never prove so fond
To trust man on his oath or bond. Shakespeare's Timon.

I am weaker than a woman's tear,
Tamer than sleep, fonder than ignorance. Shakespeare.

Fond thoughts may fall into some idle brain;
But one belief of all, is ever wise. Davies.

Thou see'st

How subtly to detain thee I devise,
Inviting thee to hear while I relate;

Fond! were it not in hope of thy reply. Milt. Paradise Lost.

So fond are mortal men,

Fall'n into wrath divine,
As their own ruin on themselves t' invite. Milton's Agonistes.

'Twas not revenge for griev'd Apollo's wrong
Those ass's ears on Midas' temples hung;

But fond repentance of his happy wish. Waller.

But reason with your fond religion fights;
For many gods are many infinites. Dryden's Tyran. Love.

This is fond, because it is the way to cheat thyself. Tillotson.

2. Trifling; valued by folly.

Not with fond shekles of the tested gold,
Or stones, whose rate are either rich or poor
As fancy values them. Shakespeare's Meas. for Measure.

3. Foolishly tender; injudiciously indulgent.

I'm a foolish fond wife. Addison.

Like Venus I'll shine,
Be fond and be fine. Addison.

4. Pleased in too great a degree; foolishly delighted.

Fame is in itself a real good, if we may believe Cicero;
who was perhaps too fond of it. Dryden's Juvenal, Dedication.

I, fond of my well-chosen seat,
My pictures, medals, books complete. Prior.

Some are so fond to know a great deal at once, and love to talk of things with freedom and boldness before they thoroughly understand them. Watts's Improvem. of the Mind.

TO FOND. v. a. [from the noun.] To treat with great
To FO'NDLE. } indulgence; to caress; to cocker.

Howe'er unjust your jealousy appear,
It does thy pity, not my anger move:

I'll fond it as the froward child of love. Dryden's Aurengz.

When amidst the fervour of the feast,
The Tyrian hugs, and fonds thee on her breast,

And with sweet kisses in her arms constrains,
Thou may'st infuse thy venom in her veins. Dryden's Æn.

They are allowed to kiss the child at meeting and parting;
but a professor, who always stands by, will not suffer them to use any fondling expressions. Gulliver's Travels.

TO FOND. v. n. To be fond of; to be in love; to doat on.

How will this sadge? My master loves her dearly;
And I, poor monster, fond as much on him;

And she, mistaken, seems to dote on me. Shakespeare.

FO'NDLER. n. f. [from fond.] One who fondles.

FO'NDLING. n. f. [from fondle.] A person or thing much fondled or caressed; something regarded with great affection.

Partiality in a parent is commonly unlucky; for fondlings are in danger to be made fools, and the children that are least cockered make the best and wisest men. L'Estrange.

The bent of our own minds may favour any opinion or action, that may shew it to be a fondling of our own. Locke.

Any body would have guessed miss to have been bred up under a cruel stepdame, and John to be the fondling of a tender mother. Arbuthnot's History of John Bull.

Bred a fondling and an heiress.
Dress'd like any lady may'refs;

Cocker'd by the servants round,
Was too good to touch the ground. Swift.

FO'NDLY. adv. [from fond.]

1. Foolishly; weakly; imprudently; injudiciously.

Most shallowly did you these arms commence,
Fondly brought here, and foolishly sent hence. Shak. H. IV.

Sorrow and grief of heart
Makes him speak fondly, like a frantick man. Shakes. R. II.

Ficinus fondly adviseth, for the prolongation of life, that a vein be opened in the arm of some wholesome young man, and the blood to be sucked. Bacon's Natural History.

The military mound
The British files transcend, in evil hour

For their proud foes, that fondly brav'd their fate. Phillips.

Some valuing those of their own side or mind,
Still make themselves the measure of mankind:

Fondly we think we merit honour then,
When we but praise ourselves in other men. Pope's Criticism.

Under those sacred leaves, secure
From common lightning of the skies,
He fondly thought he might endure
The flashes of Ardelia's eyes. Swift.

2. With great or extreme tenderness.

Ev'n before the fatal engine clos'd,
A wretched sylph too fondly interpos'd:

Fate urg'd the sheers, and cut the sylph in twain. Pope.

Fondly or severely kind. Savage.

FO'NDNESS. n. f. [from fond.]

1. Foolishness; weakness; want of sense; want of judgment.

Fondness it were for any, being free,
To covet fetters, though they golden be. Spenser's Sonnets.

2. Foolish tenderness.

My heart had still some foolish fondness for thee;
But hence! 'tis gone: I give it to the winds. Addis. Cato.

Hopeless mother!
Whose fondness could compare her mortal offspring
To those which fair Latona bore to Jove. Prior.

3. Tender passion.

Your jealousy perverts my meaning still;
My very hate is construed into fondness. A. Phill. Dist. Moth.

Corinna, with that youthful air,
Is thirty and a bit to spare:
Her fondness for a certain earl Began when I was but a girl. Swift.

4. Unreasonable liking.

They err that either through indulgence to others, or fondness to any sin in themselves, substitute for repentance any thing that is less than a sincere resolution of new obedience, attended with faithful endeavour, and meet fruits of this change.

Hammond's Fundamentals.

FONT. n. f. [fons, Latin; fonte, French.] A stone vessel in which the water for holy baptism is contained in the church.

The presenting of infants at the holy font is by their godfathers. Hooker, b. ii. f. 7.

I have

I have no name, no title;
 No, not that name was given me at the font. Shakesp. R. II.
FO'NTANEL. n. f. [fontanelle, French.] An issue; a discharge opened in the body.
 A person plethorick, subject to hot defluxions, was advised to a fontanel in her arm. Wise man of Inflammation.
FONTANGE. n. f. [from the name of the first wearer.] A knot of ribbons on the top of the head-dress. Out of use.
 These old-fashioned fontanges rose an ell above the head: they were pointed like steeples, and had long loose pieces of crape, which were fringed, and hung down their backs. Addis.
FOOD. n. f. [frædan, Sax. voeden, Dut. to feed; feed, Scott.]
 1. Viſuals; provision for the mouth.
 On my knees I beg,
 That you'll vouchsafe me raiment, bed, and food. Shakesp.
 Much food is in the tillage of the poor. Prov. xiii. 23.
 Under whose lowly roof thou hast vouchsaf'd
 To enter, and these earthly fruits to taste;
Food not of angels, yet accepted so,
 As that more willingly thou could'st not seem
 At heav'n's high feasts t' have fed. Milton's Paradise Lost.
 They give us food, which may with nectar vie,
 And wax that does the absent sun supply. Waller.
 2. Any thing that nourishes.
 Give me some musick: musick, moody food
 Of us that trade in love. Shakesp. Antony and Cleopatra.
 O dear son Edgar,
 The food of thy abused father's wrath,
 Might I but live to see thee in my touch,
 I'd say, I had eyes again. Shakespeare's King Lear.
FOO'DFUL. adj. [food and full.] Fruitful; full of food; plentifulous.
 There Tityus was to see, who took his birth
 From heav'n, his nursing from the foodful earth. Dryden.
FOO'DY. adj. [from food.] Eatable; fit for food.
 To vessels, wine she drew;
 And into well few'd sacks pour'd foody meal. Chapman.
FOOL. n. f. [ffol, Welsh; fol, Islandick; fol, French.]
 1. One whom nature has denied reason; a natural; an idiot.
 Do'st thou call me fool, boy?
 —All thy other titles thou hast given away that thou wast born with. Shakespeare's King Lear.
 The fool multitude, that chuse by show,
 Not learning more than the fond eye doth teach,
 Which pry not to the interior. Shak. Merchant of Venice.
 It may be asked, whether the eldest son, being a fool, shall inherit paternal power before the younger, a wise man. Locke.
 He thanks his stars he was not born a fool. Pope.
 2. [In Scripture.] A wicked man.
 The fool hath said in his heart there is no God. Pf. xiv. 1.
 3. A term of indignity and reproach.
 To be thought knowing, you must first put the fool upon all mankind. Dryden's J. venal, Preface.
 4. One who counterfeits folly; a buffoon; a jester.
 Where's my knave, my fool? Go you, and call my fool hither. Shakespeare's King Lear.
 I scorn, although their drudge, to be their fool or jester. Milt.
 If this disguise fit not naturally on so grave a person, yet it may become him better than that fool's coat. Denham.
 5. To play the FOOL. To play pranks like a hired jester; to jest; to make sport.
 I returning where I left his armour, found another instead thereof, and armed myself therein to play the fool. Sidney.
 6. To play the FOOL. To act like one void of common understanding.
 Well, thus we play the fools with the time,
 And the spirits of the wise sit in the clouds
 And mock us. Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. ii.
 Is it worth the name of freedom to be at liberty to play the fool, and draw shame and misery upon a man's self? Locke.
 7. To make a FOOL. To disappoint; to defeat.
 'Twere as good a deed as to drink when a man's a-hungry, to challenge him to the field, and then to break promise with him, and make a fool of him. Shakesp. Twelfth Night.
 To FOOL. v. n. [from the noun.] To trifle; to toy; to play;
 to idle; to sport.
 I, in this kind of merry fooling, am nothing to you; so you may continue and laugh at nothing still. Shakesp. Tempest.
Fool not; for all may have,
 If they dare try, a glorious life, a grave. Herbert.
 If you have the luck to be court-fools, those that have either wit or honesty, you may fool withal, and spare not. Denham:
 It must be an industrious youth that provides against age; and he that fools away the one, must either beg or starve in the other. L'Estrange.
 He must be happy that knows the true measures of fool- ing. L'Estrange, Fable 74.
 Is this a time for fooling? Dryden's Spanish Fryar.
 To FOOL. v. a.
 1. To treat with contempt; to disappoint; to frustrate; to defeat.

And shall it in more shame be further spoken,
 That you are fool'd, discarded, and shook off? Shak. H. IV.
 If it be you that stir these daughters hearts
 Against their father, fool me not so much
 To bear it tamely. Shakespeare's King Lear.
 When I am read, thou feign'st a weak applause,
 As if thou wert my friend, but lackest a cause:
 This but thy judgment fools; the other way
 Would both thy folly and thy spite betray. Ben. Johnson.
 Him over-weaning
 To over-reach; but with the serpent meeting,
Fool'd and beguil'd. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x.
 If men loved to be deceived and fooled about their spiritual estate, they cannot take a surer course than by taking their neighbour's word for that, which can be known only from their own heart. South's Sermons.
 When I consider life, 'tis all a cheat;
 For fool'd with hope, men favour the deceit.
 I'm tir'd with waiting for this chemick gold,
 Which fools us young, and beggars us when old. Dryden.
 I would advise this blinded set of men not to give credit to those, by whom they have been so often fooled and imposed upon. Addison's Freeholder, N<sup>o</sup>. 7.
 2. To infatuate.
 It were an handsome plot,
 But full of difficulties, and uncertain;
 And he's so fool'd with downright honesty,
 He'll ne'er believe it. Denham's Sophy.
 A long and eternal adieu to all unlawful pleasures: I will no longer be fooled or imposed upon by them. Calamy's Serm.
 A boor of Holland, whose cares of growing still richer and richer, perhaps fool him so far as to make him enjoy less in his riches than others in poverty. Temple.
 3. To cheat: as, to fool one of his money.
FOO'LBORN. adj. [fool and born.] Foolish from the birth.
 Reply not to me with a foolborn jest. Shakesp. Henry IV.
FOO'LERY. n. f. [from fool.]
 1. Habitual folly.
Foolery, sir, does walk about the orb like the sun; it shines every where: I would be sorry, sir, but the fool should be as oft with your master as with my mistress. Shak. Twelfth Night.
 2. An act of folly; trifling practice.
 It is mere foolery to multiply distinct particulars in treating of things, where the difference lies only in words. Watts.
 3. Object of folly.
 That Pythagoras, Plato, or Orpheus believed in any of these fooleries, it cannot be suspected. Raleigh's History.
 We are transported with fooleries, which, if we understood, we should despise. L'Estrange's Fables.
FOOLHA'PPY. adj. [fool and happy.] Lucky without contrivance or judgment.
 As when a ship, that flies fair under sail,
 An hidden rock escaped unawares,
 That lay in wait her wreck for to bewail;
 The mariner, yet half amazed, stares
 At perils past, and yet in doubt ne dares
 To joy at his foolhappy oversight. Fairy Queen, b. i. cant. 6.
FOOLHA'RDINESS. n. f. [from foolhardy.] Mad rashness; courage without sense.
 A false glozing parasite would call his foolhardiness valour, and then he may go on boldly, because blindly. South's Serm.
 There is a difference betwixt daring and foolhardiness: Lu-can and Statius often ventured them too far, our Virgil never. Dryden's Dufresnoy.
FOOLHA'RDISE. n. f. [fool and hardiesse, French.] Foolhardiness; adventurousness without judgment. Obsolete.
 More huge in strength than wife in works he was,
 And reason with foolhardise over-ran;
 Stern melancholy did his courage pass,
 And was, for terror more, all arm'd in shining brags. F. 2.
FOOLHA'RDY. adj. [fool and hardy.] Daring without judgment; madly adventurous; foolishly bold.
 One mother, when as her foolhardy child
 Did come too near, and with his talons play,
 Half dead through fear, her little babe revild. Fairy Queen.
 Some would be so foolhardy as to presume to be more of the cabinet-council of God Almighty than the angels. Hewel.
 If any yet be so foolhardy,
 T' expose themselves to vain jeopardy;
 If they come wounded off, and lame,
 No honour's got by such a maim. Hudibras, p. i. cant. 1.
FOO'LTRAP. n. f. [fool and trap.] A snare to catch fools in:
 as a flytrap.
 Betts, at the first, were fooltraps, where the wise
 Like spiders lay in ambush for the flies. Dryden.
FOO'LISH. adj. [from fool.]
 1. Void of understanding; weak of intellect.
 Thou foolish woman, seest thou not our mourning? 2 Esdr.
 He, of all the men that ever my foolish eyes looked upon, was the best deserving a fair lady. Shakesp. Merchant of Venice.
 2. Imprudent; indiscreet.
 We are come off
 Like

- Like Romans; neither foolish in our stands,
Nor cowardly in retire. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
3. Ridiculous; contemptible.
It is a foolish thing to make a long prologue, and to be short in the story itself. 2 Mac. ii. 32.
Pray do not mock me;
I am a very foolish fond old man;
I fear I am not in my perfect mind. Shakesp. King Lear.
What could the head perform alone,
If all their friendly aids were gone?
A foolish figure he must make;
Do nothing else but sleep and ake. Prior.
4. [In Scripture.] Wicked; sinful.
FOO'LISHLY. adv. [from foolish.] Weakly; without understanding. In Scripture, wickedly.
Although we boast our Winter sun looks bright,
And foolishly are glad to see it at its height;
Yet so much sooner comes the long and gloomy night. Swift.
- FOO'LISHNESS. n. f. [from foolish.]
1. Folly; want of understanding.
2. Foolish practice; actual deviation from the right.
Foolishness being properly a man's deviation from right reason, in point of practice, must needs consist in his pitching upon such an end as is unsuitable to his condition, or pitching upon means unsuitable to the compassing of his end. South.
Charm'd by their eyes, their manners I acquire,
And shape my foolishness to their desire. Prior.
- FOO'LS ONES. n. f. A plant.
The characters are: it hath an anomalous flower, consisting of six dissimilar leaves; the five uppermost of which are so disposed as to imitate in some manner a helmet. Miller.
- FOOT. n. f. plural feet. [for, Saxon; voet, Dutch; fut, Scottish.]
1. The part upon which we stand.
The queen that bore thee,
Oft'ner upon her knees than on her feet,
Died ev'ry day she liv'd. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
His affection to the church was so notorious, that he never deserted it 'till both it and he were over-run and trod under foot. Clarendon.
2. That by which any thing is supported in the nature of a foot.
3. The lower part; the base.
Yond' towers, whose wanton tops do burs the clouds,
Must kiss their own feet. Shakes. Troilus and Cressida.
Fretting, by little and little, washes away and eats out both the tops and sides and feet of mountains. Hakewill on Provid.
4. The end; the lower part.
What dismal cries are those?
—Nothing; a trifling sum of misery,
New added to the foot of thy account:
Thy wife is seiz'd by force, and born away. Dryd. Cleomen.
5. The act of walking.
Antiochus departed, weening in his pride to make the land navigable, and the sea passable by foot. 2 Mac. v. 21.
6. On Foot. Walking; without carriage.
Israel journeyed about six hundred thousand on foot. Ex. xii.
7. A posture of action.
The centurions and their charges distinctly billeted, already in the entertainment, and to be on foot at an hour's warning.
Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
8. Infantry; footmen in arms. In this sense it has no plural.
Lusias gathered threescore thousand choice men of foot, and five thousand horsemen. 1 Mac. iv. 28.
Himself with all his foot entered the town, his horse being quartered about it. Clarendon, b. viii.
Thrice horse and foot about the fires are led,
And thrice with loud laments they wail the dead. Dryden.
9. State; character; condition.
See on what foot we stand; a scanty shore,
The sea behind, our enemies before. Dryden's Æn.
In specifying the word Ireland, it would seem to insinuate that we are not upon the same foot with our fellow subjects in England. Swift's Drapier's Letters.
What colour of excuse can be for the contempt with which we treat this part of our species, that we should not put them upon the common foot of humanity, that we should only set an insignificant fine upon the man who murders them? Addis.
10. Scheme; plan; settlement.
There is no wellwisher to his country without a little hope, that in time the kingdom may be on a better foot. Swift.
I ask, whether upon the foot of our constitution, as it stood in the reign of the late king James, a king of England may be deposed? Swift.
11. A state of incipient existence.
If such a tradition were at any time set on foot, it is not easy to imagine how it should at first gain entertainment; but much more difficult how it should come to be universally propagated. Tillotson's Sermons.
12. It seems to have been once proverbially used for the level, the square, par.
Were it not for this easy borrowing upon interest, men's

- necessities would draw upon them a most sudden undoing, in that they would be forced to sell their means, be it lands or goods, far under foot. Bacon's Essays.
13. A certain number of syllables constituting a distinct part of a verse.
Feet, in our English versifying, without quantity and joints, be sure signs that the verse is either born deformed, unnatural, or lame. Ajcham's Schoolmaster.
Did'st thou hear these verses?
—O yes, I heard them all, and more too; for some o' them had in them more feet than the verses would bear. Shakespeare.
14. Motion; action.
While other jests are something rank on foot,
Her father hath commanded her to slip Away with Slender to marry. Shakesf. Mer. Wives of Winds.
In the government of the world the number and variety of the ends on foot, with the secret nature of most things to which they relate, must make a distinct remark of their congruity, in some cases very difficult, and in some unattainable. Grew.
15. A measure containing twelve inches.
When it signifies measure it has often, but vitiously, foot in the plural.
An orange, lemon, and apple, wrapt in a linnen cloth, being buried for a fortnight's space four foot deep within the earth, came forth no ways mouldy or rotten. Bacon.
16. Step.
This man's son would, every foot and anon, be taking some of his companions into the orchard. L'Estrange.
- To Foot. v. n. [from the noun.]
1. To dance; to tread wantonly; to trip.
Lonely the vale and full of horror stood;
Brown with the shade of a religious wood;
The moon was up, and shot a gleamy light;
He saw a quire of ladies in a round,
That featly footing seem'd to skim the ground. Dryden.
2. To walk; not ride; not fly.
By this the dreadful beast drew nigh to land,
Half flying, and half footing in his haste. Fairy Queen.
Take heed, have open eye; for thieves do foot by night. Sh.
The man set the boy upon the ass, and footed it himself. L'Estrange.
With them a man sometimes cannot be a penitent, unless he also turns vagabond, and foots it to Jerusalem; or wanders over this or that part of the world, to visit the shrine of such or such a pretended saint. South.
If you are for a merry jaunt, I'll try, for once, who can foot it farthest. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.
- To Foot. v. a.
1. To spurn; to kick.
You, that did void your rheum upon my beard, and foot me as you spurn a stranger cur over your threshold. Shakespeare.
2. To settle; to begin to fix.
What confed'racy have you with the traitors
Late footed in the kingdom? Shakespeare's King Lear.
3. To tread.
Saint Withold footed thrice the wold:
He met the night-mare, and her name told;
Bid her alight, and her troth plight,
And aroynt thee, witch, aroynt thee right. Shak. K. Lear.
There haply by the ruddy damsel seen,
Or shepherd boy, they featly foot the green. Tickell.
- FOO'TBALL. n. f. [foot and ball.] A ball commonly made of a blown bladder cased with leather, driven by the foot.
Am I so round with you as you with me,
That like a football you do spurn me thus? Shakespeare.
Such a Winter-piece should be beautified with all manner of works and exercises of Winter; as footballs, felling of wood, and sliding upon the ice. Peacham.
As when a sort of lusty shepherds try
Their force at football, care of victory
Makes them salute so rudely, breast to breast,
That their encounter seems too rough for jest. Waller.
One rolls along a football to his foes,
One with a broken truncheon deals his blows. Dryden.
He was sensible the common football was a very imperfect imitation of that exercise. Arbuthnot and Pope's Mart. Scribl.
- FOO'TBOY. n. f. [foot and boy.] A low menial; an attendant in livery.
Was it discretion, lords, to let this man,
This honest man, wait like a lowly footboy
At chamber-door? Shakespeare's Henry VIII.
Though I had no body to assist but a footboy, yet I made shift to try a pretty number of things. Boyle on Coiours.
Whenever he imagines advantage will redound to one of his footboys by oppression of me, he never disputes it. Swift.
- FOO'TBRIDGE. n. f. [foot and bridge.] A bridge on which passengers walk; a narrow bridge.
Palemon's shepherd, fearing the footbridge was not strong enough, loaded it so long, 'till he broke that which would have born a bigger burden. Sidney.
- FOO'TCLOATH. n. f. [foot and cloath.] A sumpter cloath.
Three

F O O

- Three times to-day my footloath horse did stumble,
And started when he look'd upon the Tower,
As loth to bear me to the slaughterhouse. Shakesp. Rich. III.
- FOO'TED. adj. [from foot.] Shaped in the foot.
Snouted and tailed like a boar, and footed like a goat. Grew.
- FOO'TFIGHT. n. f. [from foot and fight.] A fight made on foot, in opposition to that on horseback.
So began our footfight in such sort, that we were well entered to blood of both sides. Sidney, b. ii.
- FOO'THOLD. n. f. [from foot and hold.] Space to hold the foot; space on which one may tread surely.
So they all fell to work at the roots of the tree, and left it so little foothold, that the first blast of wind laid it flat upon the ground. L'Estrange.
He's never well 'till he's at the top: he has nothing above him to aspire to, nor any foothold left him to come down by. L'Estrange, Fable 6.
- FOO'TING. n. f. [from foot.]
1. Ground for the foot.
I'll read you matter deep and dangerous;
As full of peril and advent'rous spirit
As to o'erwalk a current, roaring loud,
On the unsteadfast footing of a spear. Shakesp. Henry IV.
As Noah's pigeon, which return'd no more,
Did shew the footing found, for all the flood. Davies.
In ascents, every step gained is a footing and help to the next. Holder's Elements of Speech.
  2. Foundation; basis; support; root.
Cloven stakes; and, wond'rous to behold,
Their sharpen'd ends in earth their footing place,
And the dry poles produce a living race. Dryd. Virg. Georg.
All those sublime thoughts take their rise and footing here:
the mind stirs not one jot beyond those ideas which sense or reflection have offered. Locke.
The reasoning faculties of the soul would not know how to move, for want of a foundation and footing in most men, who cannot trace truth to its fountain and original. Locke.
  3. Place.
Whether they unctuous exhalations are,
Fir'd by the sun, or seeming so alone;
Or each some more remote and slippery star,
Which loses footing when to mortals shewn. Dryden.
  4. Tread; walk.
I would outright you did no body come:
But hark, I hear the footing of a man. Shak. Merch. of Ven.
Break off, break off; I feel the different sound
Of some chaste footing near about this ground:
Run to your shrouds, within these brakes and trees;
Our number may affright. Milton.
  5. Dance.
Make holyday: your ryestraw hats put on,
And these fresh nymphs encounter every one
In country footing. Shakespeare's Tempest.
  6. Steps; road; track.
He grew strong among the Irish; and in his footing his son continuing, hath increased his said name. Spenser on Ireland.
Like running weeds, that have no certain root; or like footings up and down, impossible to be traced. Bacon's H. VII.
  7. Entrance; beginning; establishment.
Ever since our nation had any footing in this land, the state of England did desire to perfect the conquest. Davies.
The defeat of colonel Bellasis gave them their first footing in Yorkshire. Clarendon, b. viii.
No useful arts have yet found footing here;
But all untaught and savage does appear. Dryd. Ind. Emp.
  8. State; condition; settlement.
Gaul was on the same footing with Egypt, as to taxes. Arb.
- FOO'TLICKER. n. f. [from foot and lick.] A slave; an humble fawner; one who licks the foot.
Do that good mischief which may make this island
Thine own for ever; and I, thy Caliban,
For ay thy footlicker. Shakespeare's Tempest.
- FOO'TMAN. n. f. [from foot and man.]
1. A soldier that marches and fights on foot.
The numbers levied by her lieutenant did consist of footmen three millions, of horsemen one million. Raleigh's History.
  2. A low menial servant in livery.
He was carried in a rich chariot, litterwise, with two horses at either end, and two footmen on each side. Bacon.
Like footmen running before coaches,
To tell the inn what lord approaches. Prior.
  3. One who practises to walk or run.
- FOO'TMANSHIP. n. f. [from footman.] The art or faculty of a runner.
The Irish archers espying this, suddenly broke up, and committed the safety of their lives to their nimble footmanship. Hayward.
Yet, says the fox, I have baffled more of them with my wiles and shifts than ever you did with your footmanship. L'Estr.
- FOO'TPACE. n. f. [from foot and pace.]
1. Part of a pair of stairs, whereon, after four or five steps,

F O P

- you arrive to a broad place, where you make two or three paces before you ascend another step, thereby to ease the legs in ascending the rest of the stairs. Maxon's Mech. Exercises.
2. A pace no faster than a slow walk.
- FOO'TPAD. n. f. [from foot and pad.] A highwayman that robs on foot, not on horseback.
- FOO'TPATH. n. f. [from foot and path.] A narrow way which will not admit horses or carriages.
Know'st thou the way to Dover?
— Both stile and gate, horseway and footpath. Shak. K. Lear.
- FOO'TPOST. n. f. [from foot and post.] A post or messenger that travels on foot.
For carrying such letters, every thoroughfare weekly appointeth a footpost, whose dispatch is well near as speedy as the horses. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.
- FOO'TSTALL. n. f. [from foot and stall.] A woman's stirrup.
- FOO'TSTEP. n. f. [from foot and step.]
1. Trace; track; impression left by the foot.
Clear-sighted reason wisdom's judgment leads,
And sense, her vassal, in her footsteps treads. Denham.
A man shall never want crooked paths to walk in, if he thinks that he is in the right way, where ever he has the footsteps of others to follow. Locke.
  2. Token; mark; notice given.
Let us turn our thoughts to the frame of our system, if there we may trace any visible footsteps of Divine Wisdom and Beneficence. Bentley's Sermons.
  3. Example.
- FOO'TSTOOL. n. f. [from foot and stool.] Stool on which he that sits places his feet.
Thus have we swept suspicion from our seat,
And made our footstool of security. Shakesp. Henry VI.
They whose sacred office 'tis to bring
Kings to obey their God, and men their king,
By these mysterious links to fix and tye
Men to the footstool of the Deity. Denham's Sophy.
Let echoing anthems make his praises known
On earth, his footstool, as in heav'n his throne. Rescommon.
By the phrase of worshipping his footstool, no more is meant than worshipping God at his footstool. Stillingfleet.
- FOP. n. f. [A word probably made by chance, and therefore without etymology.] A simpleton; a coxcomb; a man of small understanding and much ostentation; a pretender; a man fond of show, dress, and flutter; an impertinent.
A whole tribe of fops,
Got 'tween asleep and wake. Shakespeare's King Lear.
When such a positive abandon'd fop,
Among his numerous absurdities,
Stumbles upon some tolerable line,
I fret to see them in such company. Rescommon.
The leopard's beauty, without the fox's wit, is no better than a fop in a gay coat. L'Estrange.
In a dull stream, which moving slow,
You hardly see the current flow;
When a small breeze obstructs the course,
It whirls about for want of force,
And in its narrow circle gathers
Nothing but chaff, and straws, and feathers:
The current of a female mind
Stops thus, and turns with ev'ry wind;
Thus whirling round, together draws
Fools, fops, and rakes, for chaff and straws. Swift.
- FO'PDOODLE. n. f. [from fop and doodle.] A fool; an insignificant wretch.
Where sturdy butchers broke your noddle,
And handled you like a fopdoodle. Hudibras, p. ii.
- FO'PPER. n. f. [from fop.]
1. Folly; impertinence.
Let not the sound of shallow foppery enter
My sober house. Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.
I was three or four times in the thought they were not fairies; and yet the guiltiness of my mind, the sudden surprise of my powers, drove the grossness of the foppery into a received belief, in despite of the teeth of all rhyme and reason, that they were fairies. Shakesp. Merry Wives of Windsor.
This is the excellent foppery of the world, that when we are sick in fortune, often the surfeits of our own behaviour, we make guilty of our disasters the sun, the moon and stars, as if we were villains on necessity. Shakesp. King Lear.
  2. Affectation of show or importance; showy folly.
  3. Foolery; vain or idle practice; idle affectation.
They thought the people were better let alone in their fopperies, than to be suffered to break loose from that subjection which your superstition kept them in. Stillingfleet.
But though we fetch from Italy and France
Our fopperies of tune, and mode of dance,
Our sturdy Britons scorn to borrow sense. Granville.
I wish I could say quaint fopperies were wholly absent from graver subjects. Swift to the Lord High Treasurer.
- FO'PPISH. adj. [from fop.]
1. Foolish; idle; vain.

Fools ne'er had less grace in a year;
For wise men are grown foppish,
And know not how their wits to wear;
Their manners are so apish. Shakespeare's King Lear.
2. Vain in show; foolishly ostentatious; vain of dress.
With him the present still some virtues have;
The vain are sprightly, and the stupid grave;
The slothful negligent, the foppish neat;
The lewd are airy, and the fly discreet. Garth's Dispensat.
The Romans grew extremely expensive and foppish in this article; so that the emperor Aurelian forbid men that variety of colours on their shoes, allowing it still to women. Arbut.
FO'PPISHLY. adv. [from foppish.] Vainly; ostentatiously.
FO'PPISHNESS. n. f. [from foppish.] Vanity; showy or ostentatious vanity.
FO'PPLING. n. f. [from fop.] A petty fop; an under-rate coxcomb.

Thy works in Chloe's toilet gain a part,
And, with his tailor, share the foppling's heart. Tickell.
FOR. prep. [fop, Saxon; voor, Dutch.]
1. Because of.

That which we for our unworthiness are afraid to crave, our prayer is, that God for the worthiness of his son would notwithstanding vouchsafe to grant. Hooker; b. v. f. 47.

Edward and Richard,
With fiery eyes sparkling for very wrath,
Are at our backs. Shakespeare's Henry VI. p. iii.

Speak, good Cominius;
Leave nothing out for length. Shakeesp.

For as much as the question cannot be scanned, unless the time of Abraham's journey be considered of; I will search into a tradition concerning his travels. Raleigh's Hist. of the World.

An astrologer saith, if it were not for two things that are constant, no individual would last one moment. Bacon.

For as much as it is a fundamental law in the Turkish empire, that they may, without any other provocation, make war upon Christendom for the propagation of their laws; so the Christians may at all times, as they think good, be upon the prevention. Bacon's War with Spain.

The governour, sallying out, took great store of victual and warlike provision, which the Turks had for haste left behind them. Knolles's History of the Turks.

Their offer he willingly accepted, knowing that he was not able to keep that place three days, for lack of victual. Knolles.

Quit, quit, for shame; this will not move,

This cannot take her:

If of herself she will not love,

Nothing can make her. Suckling.

Care not for frowns or smiles. Denham's Sophy, Prol.

The hypocrite or carnal man hopes, and is the wicked
for hoping. Hammond's Pract. Catech.

Let no man, for his own poverty, become more oppressing in his bargains; but quietly recommend his estate to God, and leave the success to him. Taylor.

Persons who have lost most of their grinders, having been compelled to use three or four only in chewing, wore them so low that the inward nerve lay bare, and they would no longer for pain make use of them. Ray on the Creation.

I but revenge my fate; disdain'd, betray'd,
And suff'ring death for this ungrateful maid. Dryden.

Sole on the barren sands, the suff'ring chief Roar'd out for anguish, and indulg'd his grief. Dryden.

For his long absence church and state did groan,
Madness the pulpit, faction seiz'd the throne. Dryden.

Nor with a superstitious fear is aw'd
For what befalls at home, or what abroad. Dryd. Virg. Geo.

I, my own judge, condemn'd myself before;
For pity, aggravate my crime no more. Dryden's Aurengz.

Matrons of renown,

When tyrant Nero burnt th' imperial town,
Shriek'd for the downfall in a doleful cry;

For which their guiltless lords were doom'd to die. Dryden.

Children, discountenanced by their parents for any fault, find a refuge in the caresses of foolish flatterers. Locke.

A sound mind in a sound body is a short but full description of a happy state in this world: he that has these two has little more to wish for, and he that wants either of them will be but little the better for any thing else. Locke.

The middle of the gulph is remarkable for tempests. Addis.

My open'd thought to joyous prospect raise,
And for thy mercy let me sing thy praise. Prior.

Which best or worst, you could not think;
And die you must, for want of drink. Prior.

It is a most infamous scandal upon the nation, to reproach them for treating foreigners with contempt. Swift.

We can only give them that liberty now for something, which they have so many years exercised for nothing, of railing and scribbling against us. Swift.

Your sermons would be less valuable; for want of time. Swift.

2. With respect to; with regard to.

Rather our state's defective for requital,
Than we to stretch it out. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

A paltry ring

That she did give me, whose poetry was,
For all the world, like cutlers poetry

Upon a knife; love me and leave me not. Shakespeare.

For all the world,

As thou art at this hour, was Richard then. Shakef H. IV.

It was young counsel for the persons, and violent counsel for the matters. Bacon, Essay 21.

Authority followeth old men, and favour and popularity youth; but for the moral part, perhaps, youth will have the pre-eminence, as age hath for the politick. Bacon's Essays.

Comets are rather gazed upon than wisely observed in their effects; that is, what kind of comet for magnitude or colour, produceth what kind of effects. Bacon, Essay 54.

For me, if there be such a thing as I. Waller.

He saith these honours consisted in preserving their memories, and praising their virtues; but for any matter of worship towards them, he utterly denies it. Stillington.

Our laws were for their matter foreign. Hales.

Now for the government, it is absolute monarchy; there being no other laws in China but the king's command. Temple.

For me, no other happiness I own,
Than to have born no issue to the throne. Dryd. Tyr. Love.

For me, my stormy voyage at an end,
I to the port of death securely tend. Dryden's Æn. b. xii.

After death, we sprights have just such natures
We had, for all the world, when human creatures. Dryden.

Such little wasps, and yet so full of spite;
For bulk mere insects, yet in mischief strong. Tate's Juv.

Hobbes has given us a correct explanation of the sense in general; but for particulars and circumstances, he continually lops them. Pope's Preface to the Iliad.

Lo, some are vellow; and the rest as good,
For all his lordship knows, but they are wood. Pope.

3. In this sense it has often as before it.
As for Maramaldus the general; they had no just cause to mislike him; being an old captain of great experience. Knolles.

4. In the character of.
If a man can be fully assured of any thing for a truth;
without having examined, what is there that he may not embrace for truth? Locke.

She thinks you favour'd:
But let her go, for an ungrateful woman. A. Phillips.

Say, is it fitting in this very field,
This field, where from my youth I've been a cartier;

I; in this field, should die for a deserter? Gay.

5. With resemblance of.
I hear for certain, and do speak the truth,
The gentle York is up. Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. ii.

Now, now for sure, deliverance is at hand,
The kingdom shall to Israël be restor'd. Paradise Regain'd.

The startling steed was seiz'd with sudden fright;
And, bounding, o'er the pommel cast the knight:

Forward he flew, and pitching on his head;
He quiver'd with his feet, and lay for dead. Dryden.

6. Considered as; in the place of.
Our present lot appears
For happy, though but ill; for ill, not worst,

If we procure not to ourselves more woe. Milton's Pa. Lost.

The council-table and star-chamber held for honourable that which pleased, and for just that which profited. Clarendon.

Read all the prefaces of Dryden,
For those our critics much confide in;

Though merely writ at first for filling;
To raise the volume's price a shilling. Swift.

7. In advantage of; for the sake of.
An ant is a wise creature for itself; but it is a shrewd thing in an orchard. Bacon, Essay 24.

He refused not to die for those that killed him, and shed his blood for some of those that spilt it. Boyle.

Whether some hero's fate;
In words worth dying for, he celebrate. Cowley.

Shall I think the world was made for one,
And men are born for kings, as beasts for men,

Not for protection, but to be devour'd? Dryd. Span. Fryar.

8. Conducive to; beneficial to.
It is for the general good of human society, and consequently of particular persons; to be true and just; and it is for mens health to be temperate. Tillotson, Sermon 1.

It can never be for the interest of a believer to do me a mischief, because he is sure, upon the balance of accounts, to find himself a loser by it. Addison's Spectator; N<sup>o</sup>. 186.

9. With intention of going to a certain place.
We sailed from Peru, where we had continued for the space of one whole year, for China and Japan; taking with us victuals for twelve months. Bacon's New Atlantis.

As she was brought for England, she was cast away near Harwich haven. Hayward.

We sailed directly for Genoa, and had a fair wind. Addison.

10. In comparative respect.
For tusks with Indian elephants he strove,
And Jove's own thunder from his mouth he drove. Dryden.
11. In proportion to.
As he could see clear, for those times, through superstition; so he would be blinded, now and then, by human policy. Bacon's Henry VII.
Your understandings are not bright enough for the exercise of the highest acts of reason. Tillotson, Sermon 4.
12. With appropriation to.
Shadow will serve for Summer: prick him; for we have a number of shadows to fill up the muster-book. Shakesf. H. IV.
13. After O an expression of desire.
O for a muse of fire, that would ascend
The brightest heaven of invention! Shak. H. V. Prologue.
14. In account of; in solution of.
Thus much for the beginning and progress of the deluge. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
15. Inducing to as a motive.
There is a natural, immutable, and eternal reason for that which we call virtue, and against that which we call vice. Till.
16. In expectation of.
He must be back again by one and twenty, to marry and propagate: the father cannot stay any longer for the portion, nor the mother for a new set of babies to play with. Locke.
17. Noting power or possibility.
For a holy person to be humble, for one whom all men esteem a saint, to fear lest himself become a devil, is as hard as for a prince to submit himself to be guided by tutors. Taylor.
18. Noting dependence.
The colours of outward objects, brought into a darkened room, depend for their visibility upon the dimness of the light they are beheld by. Boyle on Colours.
19. In prevention of; for fear of.
Corn being had down, any way ye allow,
Should wither as needeth for burning in mow. Tuff. Husb.
And, for the time shall not seem tedious,
I'll tell thee what befel me on a day,
In this self place. Shakespeare's Henry VI. p. iii.
There must be no alleys with hedges at the hither end, for letting your prospect upon this fair hedge from the green; nor at the farther end, for letting your prospect from the hedge through the arches upon the heath. Bacon, Essay 47.
20. In remedy of.
Sometimes hot, sometimes cold things are good for the toothach. Garretson.
21. In exchange for.
He made considerable progress in the study of the law, before he quitted that profession for this of poetry. Dryden.
22. In the place of; instead of.
To make him copious is to alter his character; and to translate him line for line, is impossible. Dryden.
We take a falling meteor for a star. Cowley.
23. In supply of; to serve in the place of.
Most of our ingenious young men take up some cried-up English poet for their model, adore him, and imitate him, as they think, without knowing wherein he is defective. Dryden.
24. Through a certain duration.
Some please for once, some will for ever please. Roscom.
Those who sleep without dreaming, can never be convinced that their thoughts are for four hours busy, without their knowing it. Locke.
The administration of this bank is for life, and partly in the hands of the chief citizens. Addison's Remarks on Italy.
Since, hir'd for life, thy servile muse must sing
Successive conquests, and a glorious king;
And bring him laurels, whatso'er they cost. Prior.
The youth transported, asks without delay
To guide the sun's bright chariot for a day. Garth's Ovid.
25. In search of; in quest of.
Some of the philosophers have run so far back for arguments of comfort against pain, as to doubt whether there were any such thing; and yet, for all that, when any great evil has been upon them, they would cry out as loud as other men. Tillotson, Sermon 5.
26. According to.
Chymists have not been able, for aught is vulgarly known, by fire alone to separate true sulphur from antimony. Boyle.
27. Noting a state of fitness or readiness.
Nay, if you be an undertaker, I am for you. Shakespeare.
If he be brave, he's ready for the stroke. Dryden.
28. In hope of; for the sake of; noting the final cause.
How quickly nature
Falls to revolt, when gold becomes her object!
For this the foolish, over-careful fathers,
Have broke their sleeps with thought, their brains with care,
Their bones with industry: for this, engross'd
The canker'd heaps of strong atchieved gold:
For this they have been thoughtful to invest
Their sons with arts and martial exercises. Shakesf. H. IV.
The kingdom of God was first rent by ill counsel; upon

- which counsel there are set, for our instruction, two marks. Bacon.
- For he writes not for money, nor for praise,
Nor to be call'd a wit, nor to wear bays. Denham.
There we shall see, a sight worthy dying for, that blessed Saviour, who so highly deserves of us. Boyle.
He is not disposed to be a fool, and to be miserable for company. Tillotson, Sermon 1.
Even death's become to me no dreadful name;
In fighting fields, where our acquaintance grew,
I saw him, and contemn'd him first for you. Dryd. Aureng.
For this, 'tis needful to prevent her art,
And fire with love the proud Phœnician's heart. Dryd. Virg.
Some pray for riches; riches they obtain;
But watch'd by robbers, for their wealth are slain. Dryden.
Let them, who truly would appear my friends,
Employ their swords like mine for noble ends. Dryd. Aureng.
Scholars are frugal of their words, and not willing to let any go for ornament, if they will not serve for use. Felton.
29. Of tendency to; towards.
It were more for his honour to raise his siege, than to spend so many good men in the winning of it by force. Knolles.
The kettle to the top was hoist;
But with the upside down, to show
Its inclination for below. Swift.
  30. In favour of; on the part of; on the side of.
Ye suppose the laws for which ye strive are found in Scripture; but those not against which we strive. Hocker, Preface.
It becomes me not to draw my pen in the defence of a bad cause, when I have so often drawn it for a good one. Dryden.
Jove was for Venus; but he fear'd his wife. Dryden.
He for the world was made, not us alone. Cowley.
They must be void of all zeal for God's honour, who do not with sighs and tears intercede with him. Smalridge's Serm.
Aristotle is for poetical justice. Dennis.
They are all for rank and foul feeding. Felton.
  31. Noting accommodation or adaptation.
Fortune, if there be such a thing as she,
Spies that I bear so well her tyranny,
That she thinks nothing else so fit for me. Donne.
A few rules of logick are thought sufficient, in this case, for those who pretend to the highest improvement. Locke.
It is for wicked men to dread God; but a virtuous man may have undisturbed thoughts, even of the justice of God. Tillotson, Sermon 4.
His country has good havens, both for the Adriatick and Mediterranean. Addison's Remarks on Italy.
Persia is commodiously situated for trade both by sea and land. Arbuthnot on Coins.
  32. With intention of.
And by that justice hast remov'd the cause
Of those rude tempests, which, for rapine sent Too oft, alas, involv'd the innocent. Waller.
Here huntsmen with delight may read
How to chuse dogs for scent or speed. Waller.
God hath made some things for as long a duration as they are capable of. Tillotson, Sermon 1.
For this, from Trivia's temple and her wood,
Are courfers driv'n, who shed their masters blood. Dryden.
Such examples should be set before them, as patterns for their daily imitation. Locke.
The next question usually is, what is it for? Locke.
Achilles is for revenging himself upon Agamemnon, by means of Hector. Pope's View of Epick Poem.
  33. Becoming; belonging to.
It were not for your quiet, nor your good,
Nor for my manhood, honesty, and wisdom,
To let you know my thoughts. Shakespeare's Othello.
Th' offers he doth make,
Were not for him to give, nor them to take. Daniel.
Jefts for Dutchmen and English boys. Cowley.
Is it for you to ravage seas and land,
Unauthoriz'd by my supreme command! Dryd. Virg. Æn.
His fire already signs him for the skies,
And marks the seat amidst the deities. Dryden's Æn.
It is a reasonable account for any man to give, why he does not live as the greatest part of the world do, that he has no mind to die as they do, and perish with them. Tillotson.
  34. Notwithstanding.
This, for any thing we know to the contrary, might be the self-same form which Philojudæus expresseth. Hooker, b. v.
God's desertion shall, for ought he knows the next minute, supervene. De ay of Picty.
Probability supposes that a thing may, or may not be so, for any thing that yet is certainly determined on either side. South's Sermons.
For any thing that legally appears to the contrary, it may be a contrivance to fright us. Swift's Drapier's Letters.
If such vast masses of matter had been situated nearer to the sun, or to each other, as they might as easily have been, for any mechanical or fortuitous agent, they must necessarily have caused a considerable disorder in the whole system. Bentley.
  35. For

35. FOR all. Notwithstanding.
Neither doubt you, because I wear a woman's apparel, I will be the more womanish; since I assure you, for all my apparel, there is nothing I desire more than fully to prove myself a man in this enterprize. Sidney.
For all the carefulness of the Christians the English bulwark was undermined by the enemy, and upon the fourth of September part thereof was blown up. Knolles's History.
But as Noah's pigeon, which return'd no more,
Did shew the footing found for all the flood. Davies.
They resolute, for all this, do proceed Unto that judgment. Daniel.
For all his exact plot, down was he cast from all his greatness, and forced to end his days in a mean condition. South.
If we apprehend the greatest things in the world of the emperor of China or Japan, we are well enough contented, for all that, to let them govern at home. Stillfleet.
I hough that very ingenious person has anticipated part of what I should say, yet you will, for all that, expect that I should give you a fuller account. Boyle on Colours.
She might have passed over all such petty businesses; but the raising of my rabble is not to be mumbled up in silence, for all her pertness. Dryden's Don Sebastian.
36. To the use of; to be used in.
The oak for nothing ill,
The osier good for twigs, the poplar for the mill. Spenser.
37. In consequence of.
For love they force through thickets of the wood;
They climb the steepy hills and stem the flood. Dryden.
38. In recompense of.
Now, for so many glorious actions done,
For peace at home, and for the publick wealth,
I mean to crown a bowl for Cæsar's health;
Besides, in gratitude for such high matters,
Know I have vow'd two hundred gladiators. Dryden's Pers.
First the wily wizard must be caught;
For unconstrain'd, he nothing tells for naught. Dryd. Virg.
39. In proportion to.
He is not very tall, yet for his years he's tall. Shakespeare.
Exalted Socrates! divinely brave!
Injur'd he fell, and dying he forgave;
Too noble for revenge. Dryden's Juven. Sat. 13.
40. By means of; by interposition of.
Moral consideration can no way move the sensible appetite, were it not for the will. Hale's Origin of Mankind.
Of some calamity we can have no relief but from God alone; and what would men do in such a case, if it were not for God? Tillotson's Sermons.
41. In regard of; in preservation of. I cannot for my life, is, I cannot if my life might be saved by it.
I bid the rascal knock upon your gate;
But could not get him for my heart. Shakespeare.
I cannot for my heart leave a room, before I have thoroughly examined the papers pasted upon the walls. Addison's Spect.
42. FOR to. In the language used two centuries ago, for was commonly used before to the sign of the infinitive mood, to note the final cause. As, I come for to see you, for I love to see you: in the same sense with the French pour. Thus it is used in the translation of the Bible. But this distinction was by the best writers sometimes forgotten; and for, by wrong use, appearing superfluous, is now always omitted.
Who shall let me now
On this vile body for to wreak my wrong? Fairy Queen.
A large posterity
Up to your happy palaces may mount,
Of blessed saints for to increase the count. Spenser.
These things may serve for to represent how just cause of fear this kingdom may have towards Spain. Bacon.
- FOR. conj.
1. The word by which the reason is given of something advanced before.
Heav'n doth with us as we with torches deal,
Not light them for themselves; for if our virtues
Did not go forth of us, 'twere all alike
As if we had them not. Shakesp. Measure for Measure.
Old husbandmen I at Sabinum know,
Who for another year dig, plough, and sow;
For never any man was yet so old,
But hop'd his life one Winter more would hold. Denham.
Tell me what kind of thing is wit?
For the first matter loves variety less. Cowley.
Thus does he who, for fear of any thing in this world, ventures to displease God; for in so doing he runs away from men, and falls into the hands of the living hand. Tillotson.
2. Because; on this account that.
I doubt not but great troops would be ready to run; yet for that the worst men are most ready to remove, I would wish them chosen by discretion of wise men. Spenser on Ireland.
Jealous souls will not be answer'd so:
They are not ever jealous for a cause,
But jealous for they're jealous. Shakespeare's Othello.
Heaven defend your good souls, that you think

- I will your serious and great business scant;
For she is with me. Shakespeare's Othello.
Nor swell'd his breast with uncouth pride,
That heav'n on him above his charge had laid;
But, for his great Creator would the same,
His will increas'd; so fire augmenteth flame. Fairfax.
Many excrescences of trees grow chiefly where the tree is dead or faded; for that the natural sap of the tree corrupteth into some preternatural substance. Bacon's Natural History.
3. FOR as much. In regard that; in consideration of.
For as much as in publick prayer we are not only to consider what is needful, in respect of God; but there is also in men that which we must regard: we somewhat incline to length, lest overquick dispatch should give occasion to deem, that the thing itself is but little accounted of. Hooker, b. v.
For as much as the thirst is intolerable, the patient may be indulged the free use of spaw water. Arbuthnot on Diet.
4. FOR why. Because; for this reason that.
Solyman had three hundred fieldpieces, that a camel might well carry one of them, being taken from the carriage; for why, Solyman purposing to draw the emperor unto battle, had brought no greater pieces of battery with him. Knolles.
- TO FORAGE. v. n. [from foris, abroad, Latin.]
1. To wander far; to rove at a distance.
Forage, and run
To meet displeasure farther from the doors,
And grapple with him, ere he come so nigh. Shak. K. John.
2. To wander in search of spoil, generally of provisions.
As in a stormy night,
Wolves, urged by their raging appetite,
Forage for prey. Denham.
There was a brood of young larks in the corn, and the dam went abroad forage for them. L'Estrange's Fables.
Nor dare they stray
When rain is promis'd, or a stormy day;
But near the city walls their wat'ring take,
Nor forage far, but short excursions make. Dryden's Virgil.
3. To ravage; to feed on spoil.
His most mighty father on a hill
Stood smiling, to behold his lion's whelp
Forage in blood of French nobility. Shakesp. Henry V.
- TO FORAGE. v. a. To plunder; to strip; to spoil.
They will both strengthen all the country round, and also be as continual holds for her majesty, if the people should revolt; for without such it is easy to forage and over-run the whole land. Spenser on Ireland.
- FORAGE. n. f. [fourage, German and French, from foris, Latin.]
1. Search of provisions; the act of feeding abroad.
One way a band select from forage drives
A herd of beeves, fair oxen, and fair kine,
From a fat meadow ground; or fleecy flock,
Ewes, and their bleating lambs, over the plains
Their booty. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xi.
2. Provisions sought abroad.
Some o'er the publick magazines preside,
And some are sent new forage to provide. Dryden's Georg.
3. Provisions in general.
Provided forage, our spent arms renew'd. Dryd. Fables.
- FORAMINOUS. adj. [from foramen, Latin.] Full of holes; perforated in many places; porous.
Soft and foraminous bodies, in the first creation of the sound, will deaden it; but in the passage of the sound they will admit it better than harder bodies. Bacon's Nat. History.
- TO FORBEAR. v. n. pret. I forbore, anciently forbare; part. forborn. [forþæran, Saxon. For has in composition the power of privation; as, forbear: or depravation; as forswear, and other powers not easily explained.]
1. To cease from any thing; to intermit.
The wolf, the lion, and the bear,
When they their prey in pieces tear,
To quarrel with themselves forbear. Denham.
2. To pause; to delay.
I pray you, tarry: pause a day or two,
Before you hazard; for in chusing wrong,
I lose your company; therefore forbear a while. Shakesp.
3. To omit voluntarily; not to do; to abstain.
He forbare to go forth. 1 Sa. xxiii. 13.
At this he started, and forbore to swear;
Not out of conscience of the sin, but fear. Dryden's Juv.
Who can forbear to admire and adore him who weighed the mountains in scales, and the hills in a balance. Cheyne.
4. To restrain any violence of temper; to be patient.
By long forbearing is a prince persuaded, and a soft tongue breaketh the bone. Prov. xxv. 15.
- TO FORBEAR. v. a.
1. To decline; to omit voluntarily.
Forbear his presence, until time hath qualified the heat of his displeasure. Shakespeare's King Lear.
So angry bulls the combat do forbear.
When from the wood a lion does appear. Waller.
2. To abstain from; to shun to do.

If it passed only by the house of peers, it should be looked upon as invalid and void, and execution should be thereupon forborn or suspended. Clarendon, b. viii.

There is not any one action whatsoever which a man ought to do, or to forbear, but the Scripture will give him a clear precept or prohibition for it. South's Sermons.

3. To spare; to treat with clemency.

With all lowliness and meekness, with long suffering, forbearing one another in love. Eph. iv. 2.

4. To withhold.

Forbear thee from meddling with God, who is with me, that he destroy thee not. 2 Chro. xxxv. 21.

FORBEARANCE. n. f. [from forbear.]

1. The care of avoiding or shunning any thing; negation of practice.

True nobleness would

Learn him forbearance from so foul a wrong. Shakesf. R. III.

This may convince us how vastly greater a pleasure is consequent upon the forbearance of sin, than can possibly accompany the commission of it. South's Sermons.

Liberty is the power a man has to do, or forbear doing, any particular action, according as its doing or forbearance has the actual preference in the mind. Locke.

2. Intermission of something.

3. Command of temper.

Have a continent forbearance, 'till the speed of his rage goes slower. Shakespeare's King Lear.

4. Lenity; delay of punishment; mildness.

Nor do I take notice of this instance of severity in our own country to justify such a proceeding, but only to display the mildness and forbearance made use of under the reign of his present majesty. Addison's Freeholder, N<sup>o</sup>. 52.

He applies to our gratitude by obligations of kindness and beneficence, of long suffering and forbearance. Rogers.

FORBEARER. n. f. [from forbear.] An intermitter; inter-ceptor of any thing.

The West as a father all goodness doth bring,

The East a forbearer, no manner of thing. Tuff. Husbandry.

To FORBID. v. a. pret. I forbade; part. forbidden or forbid. [forbeoban, Saxon; verbieden, Dutch.]

1. To prohibit; to interdict any thing.

A witch, a quean, an old cozening quean; have I not forbid her my house? Shakesf. Merry Wives of Windsor.

By tasting of that fruit forbid,

Where they sought knowledge, they did error find. Davies.

The voice of reason, in all the dictates of natural morality, ought carefully to be attended to, by a strict observance of what it commands, but especially of what it forbids. South.

All hatred of persons, by very many Christian principles, we are most solemnly and indispensably forbid. Spratt's Sermon.

The chaste and holy race

Are all forbidden this polluted place. Dryden's Æn. b. vi.

2. To command to forbear any thing.

She with so sweet a rigour forbad him, that he durst not rebel. Sidney, b. ii.

It is the shameful work of Hubert's hand,

The practice and the purpose of the king,

From whose obedience I forbid my soul. Shakespeare.

They have determined to consume all those things that God hath forbidden them to eat by his laws. Judith xi. 12.

3. To oppose; to hinder.

The moisture being forbidden to come up in the plant, stayeth longer in the root, and so dilateth it. Bacon's Nat. History.

The plaister alone would pen the humour, and so exasperate it as well as forbid new humour. Bacon's Natural History.

Thy throne is darkness in th' abyss of light,

A blaze of glory that forbids the sight!

O teach me to believe thee thus conceal'd,

And search no farther than thyself reveal'd. Dryden.

4. To accurse; to blast. Now obsolete. To bid is in old language to pray; to forbid therefore is to curse.

Sleep shall neither night nor day

Hang upon his penthouse lid;

He shall live a man forbid. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

To Fo'RBID. v. n. To utter a prohibition.

Now the good gods forbid,

That our renowned Rome

Should now eat up her own! Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

FORBIDDANCE. n. f. [from forbid.] Prohibition; edict against any thing.

How hast thou yielded to transgress

The strict forbiddance! how to violate

The sacred fruit forbidden! Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ix.

FORBIDDENLY. adv. [from forbid.] In an unlawful manner.

With all confidence he swears, as he had seen't,

That you have touch'd his queen forbiddenly. Shakespeare.

FORBIDDER. n. f. [from forbid.] One that prohibits; one that enacts a prohibition.

This was a bold accusation of God, making the fountain of good the contriver of evil, and the forbidder of the crime an abettor of the fact prohibited. Brown's Vul. Err.

Other care, perhaps,

May have diverted from continual watch

Our great forbidder! Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ix.

FO'RBIDDING. participial adj. [from forbid.] Raising abhorrence; repelling approach; causing aversion.

Tragedy was made forbidding and horrible. A. Hill.

FORCE. n. f. [force, French; fortis, Latin.]

1. Strength; vigour; might; active power.

He never could maintain his part but in the force of his will. Shakesf. Much Ado about Nothing.

A ship, which hath struck sail, doth run

By force of that force which before it won. Donne.

2. Violence.

Thus got the house of Lancaster the crown,

Which now they hold by force, and not by right. Sh. H. VI.

The shepherd Paris bore the Spartan bride

By force away, and then by force enjoy'd;

But I by free consent. Dryden.

3. Virtue; efficacy.

Manifest it is, that the very majesty and holiness of the place where God is worshipped, hath, in regard of us, great virtue, force and efficacy; for that it serveth as a sensible help to stir up devotion. Hooker, b. v. f. 16.

No definitions, no suppositions of any sect, are of force enough to destroy constant experience. Locke.

4. Validness; power of law.

A testament is of force after men are dead. Heb. ix. 17.

Not long in force this charter stood;

Wanting that seal, it must be seal'd in blood. Denham.

5. Armament; warlike preparation. Often forces in the plural.

O Thou! whose captain I account myself,

Look on my forces with a gracious eye. Shakesf. Richard III.

The secret of the power of Spain consisteth in a veteran army, compounded of miscellany forces of all nations. Bacon.

A greater force than that which here we find,

Ne'er press'd the ocean, nor employ'd the wind. Waller.

Those victorious forces of the rebels were not able to sustain your arms. Dryden.

6. Destiny; necessity; fatal compulsion.

To FORCE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To compel; to constrain.

Dangers are light, if they once seem light; and more dangers have deceived men than forced them. Bacon.

I have been forced to use the cant words of Whig and Tory. Swift's Examiner.

The actions and operations did force them upon dividing the single idea. Pope's View of Epick Poem.

2. To overpower by strength.

O that fortune

Had brought me to the field where thou art fam'd

To have wrought such wonders with an ass's jaw,

I should have forc'd thee soon with other arms. Milton.

With fates averse, the rout in arms resort,

To force their monarch and insult the court. Dryden's Æn.

3. To impel; to press.

Thou shalt not destroy the trees by forcing an ax against them. Deutr. 20. 19.

4. To draw or push by main strength.

Stooping, the spear descended on his chine;

Just where the bone distinguish'd either loin:

It stuck so fast, so deeply bury'd lay,

That scarce the victor forc'd the steel away. Dryden's Æn.

5. To enforce; to urge.

Three blust'ring nights, born by the southern blast;

I floated, and discover'd land at last:

High on a mounting wave my head I bore,

Forcing my strength, and gath'ring to the shore. Dryd. Æn.

6. To drive by violence or power.

This way of flattering their willing benefactors out of part, contrived another of forcing their unwilling neighbours out of all their possessions. Decay of Piety.

To free the ports, and ope the Punique land

To Trojan guests; lest, ignorant of fate,

The queen might force them from her town and state. Dryd.

7. To gain by violence or power.

My heart was your's; but, oh! you left it here

Abandon'd to those tyrants hope and fear:

If they forc'd from me one kind look or word,

Could you not that, nor that small part afford? Dryden.

8. To storm; to take or enter by violence.

Troy wall'd so high,

Atrides might as well have forc'd the sky. Waller.

Heav'n from all ages wisely did provide

This wealth, and for the bravest nation hide;

Who with four hundred foot, and forty horse,

Dare boldly go a new-found world to force. Dryd. Ind. Emp.

9. To ravish; to violate by force.

Force her.—I like it not. Dryden.

10. To constrain; to distort; not to obtain naturally or with ease.

Our general taste in England is for epigram, turns of wit, and forced conceits. Addison's Spectator, N<sup>o</sup>. 409.

11. To man; to strengthen by soldiers; to garrison.

Here

Here let them lye,
 'Till famine and the ague eat them up:
 Were they not forc'd with those that should be our's,
 We might have met them dareful, beard to beard. Shakesp.
 If you find that any great number of soldiers be newly sent into Oroonoke, and that the passages be already forced, then be well advised how you land. Raieigh's Apology.

11. To FORCE out. To extort.
 The tricks used in convening synods might force out an expression from him, that did not carry all the respect due to those great names. Atterbury.
 The heat of the dispute had forced out from him expressions that seemed to make his doctrine run higher than really it did. Atterbury.

To FORCE. v. n. To lay stress upon. This word I have only found in the following passage.
 That morning that he was to join battle with Harold, his armorer put on his backpiece before, and his breastplate behind; the which being espied by some that stood by, was taken among them for an ill token, and therefore advised him not to fight that day; to whom the duke answered, I force not of such fooleries; but if I have any skill in soothsaying, as in sooth I have none, it doth prognosticate that I shall change copy from a duke to a king. Camden's Remains.

FORCEDLY. adv. [from force.] Violently; constrainedly;
 unnaturally.
 This foundation of the earth upon the waters doth most aptly agree to that structure of the abyss and antediluvian earth; but very improperly and forcedly to the present form of the earth and the waters. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

FORCEFUL. adj. [from force and full.] Violent; strong; driven with great might; impetuous.
 Why, what need we
 Commune with you of this, but rather follow
 Our forceful instigation? Shakesp. Winter's Tale.
 Against the steed he threw
 His forceful spear, which, hissing as it flew,
 Pierc'd through the yielding planks. Dryden's Æn.
 Were it by chance, or forceful destiny,
 Which forms in causes first whate'er shall be,
 Assisted by a friend, one moonless night,
 This Palamon from prison took his flight. Dryden.
 He pois'd in air, the jav'lin sent,
 Through Paris' shield the forceful weapon went. Pope.

FORCEFULLY. adv. [from forceful.] Violently; impetuously.

FORCELESS. adj. [from force.] Without force; weak;
 feeble; impotent.

FORCEPS. n. s. [Latin.]
Forceps properly signifies a pair of tongs; but is used for an instrument in chirurgery, to extract any thing out of wounds, and the like occasions. Quincy.

FORCER. n. s. [from force.]
 1. That which forces, drives, or constrains.
 2. The embolus of a pump working by pulsion, in contradistinction to a sucker, which acts by attraction.
 The usual means for the ascent of water is either by suckers or forcers. Wilkins's Dædalus.

FORCIBLE. adj. [from force.]
 1. Strong; mighty: opposed to weak.
 That punishment, which hath been sometimes forcible to bridle sin, may grow afterwards too weak and feeble. Hooker.
 2. Violent; impetuous.
 3. Efficacious; active; powerful.
 Sweet smells are most forcible in dry substances, when broken; and so likewise in oranges, the ripping of their rind giveth out their smell more. Bacon's Natural History.
 4. Prevalent; of great influence.
 God hath assured us, that there is no inclination or temptation so forcible which our humble prayers and desires may not frustrate and break asunder. Raieigh's Hist. of the World.
 Jersey, belov'd by all; for all must feel
 The influence of a form and mind,
 Where comely grace and constant virtue dwell,
 Like mingl'd streams, more forcible when join'd:
 Jersey shall at thy altars stand,
 Shall there receive the azure band. Prior.

5. Done by force.
 The abdication of king James, the advocates on that side look upon to have been forcible and unjust, and consequently void. Swift.

6. Valid; binding; obligatory.

FORCIBLENESS. n. s. [from forcible.] Force; violence.

FORCIELY. adv. [from forcible.]
 1. Strongly; powerfully.
 The Gospel offers such considerations as are fit to work very forcibly upon two of the most swaying and governing passions in the mind, our hopes and our fears. Tillotson.
 2. Impetuously.
 3. By violence; by force.
 He himself with greedy great desire
 Into the castle enter'd forcibly. Fairy Queen, b. i. cant. 8.

The taking and carrying away of women forcibly, and against their will, except female wards and bondwomen, was made capital. Bacon's Henry VII.
 This doctrine brings us down to the level of horse and mule, whose mouths are forcibly holden with bit and bridle. Hamm.

FORCIPATED. adj. [from forceps.] Formed like a pair of pincers to open and inclose.
 The locusts have antennæ, or long horns before, with a long falcation or forcipated tail behind. Brown's Vulgar Err.
 When they have seized their prey, they will so tenaciously hold it with their forcipated mouth, that they will not part therewith, even when taken out of the waters. Derham.

FORD. n. s. [from Saxon, from fapan, to pass.]
 1. A shallow part of a river when it may be passed without swimming.
 Her men the paths rode through made by her sword;
 They pass the stream, when she had found the ford. Fairfax.
 2. It sometimes signifies the stream, the current, without any consideration of passage or shallowness.
 Medusa with Gorgonian terror guards
 The ford, and of itself the water flies
 All taste of living wight. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ii.
 Rise, wretched widow! rise; nor undeplor'd
 Permit my ghost to pass the Stygian ford:
 But rise, prepar'd in black to mourn thy perish'd lord. Dry.

To FORD. v. a. [from the noun] To pass without swimming.
 Adam's shin-bones must have contained a thousand fathom, and much more, if he had forded the ocean. Raieigh's Hist.

FORDABLE. adj. [from ford.] Passable without swimming.
 Pliny placeth the Schenitæ upon the Euphrates, where the same beginneth to be fordable. Raieigh's Hist. of the World.
 A countryman founded a river up and down, to try where it was most fordable; and where the water ran too smooth, he found it deepest; and, on the contrary, shallowest where it made most noise. L'Estrange.

FORE. adj. [from Saxon.] Anterior; that which comes first in a progressive motion.
 Resistance in fluids arises from their greater pressing on the fore than hind part of the bodies moving in them. Cheyne.

FORE. adv.
 1. Anteriorly; in the part which appears first to those that meet it.
 Each of them will bear six demiculverins and four saikers, needing no other addition than a slight spar deck fore and aft, which is a slight deck throughout. Raieigh's Essays.
 2. Fore is a word much used in composition to mark priority of time, of which some examples shall be given.

To FOREADVISE. v. n. [from fore and advise.] To counsel early;
 to counsel before the time of action, or the event.
 Thus to have said,
 As you were foreadvise'd, had touch'd his spirit,
 And tried his inclination. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

To FOREAPPOINT. [from fore and appoint.] To order beforehand.

To FOREARM. v. a. [from fore and arm.] To provide for attack or resistance before the time of need.
 A man should fix and forearm his mind with this persuasion, that, during his passion, whatsoever is offered to his imagination tends only to deceive. South's Sermons.
 He forearms his care
 With rules to push his fortune, or to bear. Dryden's Æn.

To FOREBODE. v. n. [from fore and bode.]
 1. To prognosticate; to foretell.
 An ancient augur, skill'd in future fate,
 With these foreboding words restrains their hate. Dryden.
 2. To foreknow; to be prescient of; to feel a secret sense of something future.
 Fate makes you deaf, while I in vain implore:
 My heart forebodes I ne'er shall see you more. Dryd. In. Emp.
 My soul forebode'd I should find the bow'r
 Of some fell monster, fierce with barb'rous pow'r. Pope.

FOREBODER. n. s. [from forebode.]
 1. A prognosticator; a soothsayer.
 Your raven has a reputation in the world for a bird of omen, and a kind of small prophet: a crow that had observed the raven's manner and way of delivering his predictions, sets up for a foreboder. L'Estrange's Fables.
 2. A foreknower.

FOREBY. prep. [from fore and by.] Near; hard by; fast by.
 Not far away he hence doth won

To FORECAST. v. a. [from fore and cast.]
 1. To scheme; to plan before execution.
 He shall forecast his devices against the strong holds. Dan. xi.
 2. To adjust; to contrive.
 The feast was serv'd; the time so well forecast,
 That just when the dessert and fruits were plac'd,
 The fiend's alarm began. Dryden's Theod. and Honoria.
 3. To foresee; to provide against.
 It is wisdom to consider the end of things before we embark, and to forecast consequences. L'Estrange, Fable 83.

To FORECA'ST. v. n. To form schemes; to contrive beforehand.

And whatso heavens in their secret doom
Ordained have, how can frail fleshy wight
Forecast, but it must needs to issue come? Spenser.

When broad awake, she finds in troublous fit,
Forecasting how his foe he might annoy. Fairy Queen, b. i.
Fo'RECAST. n. f. [from the verb.] Contrivance beforehand;
scheme; plan; antecedent policy.

Alas! that Warwick had no more forecast,
But while he thought to steal the single ten,
The king was slyly finger'd from the deck! Shak. Hen. VI.
He makes this difference to arise from the forecast and pre-determination of the gods. Addison on ancient Medals.

The last, scarce ripen'd into perfect man,
Saw helpless him from whom their life began:
Mem'ry and forecast just returns engage;
That pointed back to youth, this on to age. Pope.

FORECA'STER. n. f. [from forecast.] One who contrives beforehand.

Fo'RECASTLE. n. f. [from fore and castle.] In a ship, is that part where the foremast stands, and is divided from the rest of the floor by a bulk-head: that part of the forecastle which is aloft, and not in the hold, is called the prow. Harris.

The commodity of the new cook-room the merchants have found to be so great, as that, in all their ships, the cook-rooms are built in their forecastles, contrary to that which had been anciently used. Raleigh's Essays.

FORECHO'SEN. partic. [from fore and chosen.] Pre-elected.

FORECITED. part. [from fore and cite.] Quoted before, or above.
Greaves is of opinion, that the alteration mentioned in that forecited passage is continued. Arbuthnot on Coins.

To FORECLOSE. v. a. [from fore and close.]

1. To shut up; to preclude; to prevent.

The embargo with Spain foreclosed this trade. Carew.

2. To FORECLOSE a Mortgage, is to cut off the power of redemption.

Fo'REDECK. n. f. [from fore and deck.] The anterior part of the ship.

I to the foredeck went, and thence did look
For rocky Scylla. Chapman's Odyssey, b. xii.

To FOREDESIGN. v. a. [from fore and design.] To plan beforehand.

All the steps of the growth and vegetation both of animals and plants, have been foreseen and foredesigned by the wise Author of nature. Cheyne's Phil. Princ.

To FOREDO'. v. a. [from for and do, not fore.]

1. To ruin; to destroy. A word obsolete. Opposed to making happy.

Beseeching him, if either salves or oils,
A foredone wight from door of death might raise,
He would at her request prolong her nephew's days. Fa. Qu.
That drew on men God's hatred and his wrath,
And many souls in dolours had foredone. Fairy Queen, b. i.
This doth betoken,
The corse they follow did with desperate hand
Foredo its own life. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

This is the night

That either makes me, or foredoes me quite. Shakespeare.

2. To overdo; to weary; to harass.

Whilst the heavy plowman snoats,
All with weary task foredone. Shakespeare.

To FOREDO'OM. v. a. [from fore and doom.] To predestinate; to determine beforehand.

Through various hazards and events we move
To Latium, and the realms foredoom'd by Jove. Dryd. Æn.
The willing metal will obey thy hand,
Following with ease: if favour'd by thy fate,
Thou art foredoom'd to view the Stygian state. Dryden.
Fate foredoom'd, and all things tend
By course of time to their appointed end. Dryden.
Here Britain's statesmen oft the fall foredoom
Of foreign tyrants, and of nymphs at home. Pope.

FOREE'ND. n. f. [from fore and end.] The anterior part.

I have liv'd at honest freedom; paid
More pious debts to heaven than in all
The fore-end of my time. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.
In the fore-end of it, which was towards him, grew a small green branch of palm; and when the wise man had taken it into his boat, it opened of itself, and there were found in it a book and a letter. Bacon's New Atlantis.

FOREFA'THER. n. f. [from fore and father.] Ancestor; one who in any degree of ascending genealogy precedes another.

The custom of the people of God, and the decrees of our forefathers, are to be kept, touching those things whereof the Scripture hath neither one way or other given us charge. Hook.

If it be a generous desire in men to know from whence their own forefathers have come, it cannot be displeasing to understand the place of our first ancestor. Raleigh's History.

Conceit is still deriv'd

From some forefather grief; mine is not so. Shak. Rich. II.

Shall I not be distraught,

And madly play with my forefathers joints? Sh. Ro. and Jul.

Our great forefathers

Had left him nought to conquer but his country. Addison.
When a man sees the prodigious pains our forefathers have been at in these barbarous buildings, one cannot but fancy what miracles of architecture they would have left us, had they been instructed in the right way. Addison on Italy.

Blest peer! his great forefathers ev'ry grace

Reflecting, and reflected in his race. Pope, Epist. i.

To FOREFE'ND. v. a. [from fore and defend.]

1. To prohibit; to avert.

I would not kill thy unprepared spirit;

No, heav'ns forefend! I would not kill thy soul. Shakesp.

Perhaps a fever, which the gods forefend,

May bring your youth to some untimely end. Dryden.

2. To provide for; to secure.

Down with the nose,

Down with it flat: take the bridge quite away

Of him, that, his particular to forefend,

Smells from the gen'ral weal. Shakesp. Timon of Athens.

FOREFINGER. n. f. [from fore and finger.] The finger next to the thumb; the index.

An agate-stone

On the forefinger of an alderman. Shak. Romeo and Juliet.

Polymnia shall be drawn, as it were, acting her speech with her forefinger. Peacham on Drawing.

Some wear this on the middlefinger, as the ancient Gauls and Britons; and some upon the forefinger. Brown's Vul. Err.

FOREFOOT. n. f. plur. forefeet. [from fore and foot.] The anterior foot of a quadruped: in contempt, a hand.

Give me thy fist, thy forefoot to me give. Shak. Hen. V.

He ran fiercely, and smote at Heliodorus with his forefeet. 2 Mac. iii. 25.

I continue my line from thence to the heel; then making the breast with the eminency thereof, bring out his near forefoot, which I finish. Peacham on Drawing.

To FOREGO'. v. a. [from for and go.]

1. To quit; to give up; to resign.

Is it her nature, or is it her will,

To be so cruel to an humbled foe?

If nature, then she may it mend with skill;

If will, then she at will may will forego. Spenser, Sen. 41.

Having all before absolutely in his power, it remaineth so still, he having already neither forgiven nor foregone any thing thereby unto them, but having received something from them. Spenser's State of Ireland.

He is a great adventurer, said he,

That hath his sword through hard assay forgone;

And now hath vowed, 'till he avenged be

Of that despite, never to wearen none. Fairy Queen, b. ii.

Special reason oftentimes causeth the will to prefer one good thing before another; to leave one for another's sake, to forego meaner for the attainment of higher degrees. Hooker, b. v.

Must I then leave you? Must I needs forgo

So good, so noble, and so true a master? Shakesp. H. VIII.

Let us not forgo

That for a trifle which was bought with blood. Shakespeare.

How can I live without thee! how forego

Thy sweet converse, and love so dearly join'd,

To live again in these wild woods forlorn! Milt. Pa. Lost.

This argument might prevail with you to forego a little of your repose for the publick benefit. Dryd. Juv. Dedic.

What they have enjoyed with great pleasure at one time, has proved insipid or nauseous at another; and therefore they see nothing in it, for which they should forego a present enjoyment. Locke.

2. To go before; to be past. [from fore and go.]

By our remembrances of days foregone,

Such were our faults: O! then we thought them not. Shak.

It is to be understood of Cain, that many years foregone, and when his people were increased, he built the city of Enoch. Raleigh's History of the World.

Left what has been said of the differences between true and apparent colours be interpreted in too unlimited a sense, reflect upon the two foregoing objections. Boyle on Colours.

This foregoing remark gives the reason why imitation pleases. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

I was seated in my elbow-chair, where I had indulged the foregoing speculations, with my lamp burning by me as usual.
Addison's Spectator, No. 463.

In the foregoing part of this work I promised further proofs.
Woodward's Natural History.

3. To lose.

This is the very ecstasy of love,

Whose violent property forgoes itself,

And leads the will to desperate undertakings. Shak. Hamlet.

FO'REGOER. n. f. [from forego.] Ancestor; progenitor.

Honours best thrive,

When rather from our acts we them derive

Than our foregoers. Shakespeare's All's well that ends well.

FO'REGROUND.

FO'REGROUND. n. f. [fore and ground.] The part of the field or expanse of a picture which seems to lie before the figures.

All agree that white can subsist on the foreground of the picture: the question therefore is to know, if it can equally be placed upon that which is backward, the light being universal, and the figures supposed in an open field. Dryden.

FO'REHAND. n. f. [fore and hand.]

1. The part of a horse which is before the rider.
2. The chief part.

The great Achilles, whom opinion crowns

The finew and the forehand of our host.

Shakespeare.

FO'REHAND. adj. A thing done too soon.

You'll say she did embrace me as a husband,
And so extenuate the forehand sin.

Shakespeare.

FOREHANDED. n. f. [from fore and hand.]

1. Early; timely.

If by thus doing you have not secured your time by an early and forehanded care, yet be sure, by a timely diligence, to redeem the time. Taylor's Rule of living holy.

2. Formed in the foreparts.

Bauble, do you call him? He's a substantial true-bred beast, bravely forehanded: mark but the cleanness of his shapes too.

Dryden's Don Sebastian.

FO'REHEAD. n. f. [fore and head.]

1. That part of the face which reaches from the eyes upward to the hair.

The breast of Hecuba,

When she did suckle Hector, look'd not lovelier

Than Hector's forehead, when it spit forth blood

At Grecian swords contending. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

Some angel copy'd, while I slept, each grace,

And molded ev'ry feature from my face:

Such majesty does from her forehead rise,

Her cheeks such blushes cast, such rays her eyes. Dryden.

2. Impudence; confidence; assurance; audaciousness; audacity.

A man of confidence presseth forward upon every appearance of advantage, and thinks nothing above his management or his merit: where his force is too feeble, he prevails by dint of impudence: these men of forehead are magnificent in promises, and infallible in their prescriptions. Collier.

I would fain know to what branch of the legislature they can have the forehead to apply. Swift's Presbyterian Plea.

FOREHOLDING. n. f. [fore and hold.] Predictions; ominous accounts; superstitious prognostications.

How are superstitious men hagg'd out of their wits, with the fancy of omens, foreholdings, and old wives tales! L'Estr.

FOREIGN. adj. [forain, French; forano, Spanish, from foris, Latin.]

1. Not of this country; not domestick.

Your son, that with a fearful soul

Leads discontented steps in foreign soil,

This fair alliance quickly shall call home. Shakesp. Rich. III.

The learned correspondence you hold in foreign parts. Milt.

The positions are so far from being new, that they are commonly to be met with in both ancient and modern, domestick and foreign writers. Atterbury's Serm. Pref.

The parties and divisions amongst us may several ways bring destruction upon our country, at the same time that our united force would secure us against all the attempts of a foreign enemy. Addison's Freeholder, N<sup>o</sup>. 34.

2. Alien; remote; not allied; not belonging; without relation. It is often used with to; but more properly with from.

I must dissemble,

And speak a language foreign to my heart. Addison's Cato.

Fame is a good so wholly foreign to our natures, that we have no faculty in the soul adapted to it, nor any organ in the body to relish it, placed out of the possibility of fruition. Addis.

This design is not foreign from some people's thoughts.

Swift on the Sacramental Test.

3. Excluded; not admitted; held at a distance.

They will not stick to say you envied him;

And fearing he would rise, he was so virtuous,

Kept him a foreign man still; which so griev'd him,

That he ran mad and died. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

4. [In law.] A foreign plea, plantum forinsecum; as being a plea out of the proper court of justice.

5. Extraneous; adventitious in general.

There are who, fondly studious of increase,

Rich foreign mold in their ill-natur'd land

Induce. Phillips.

FO'REIGNER. n. f. [from foreign.] A man that comes from another country; not a native; a stranger.

Joy is such a foreigner,

So mere a stranger to my thoughts, I know

Not how to entertain him. Denham's Sophy.

To this false foreigner you give your throne,

And wrong a friend, a kinsman, and a son:

Resume your ancient care. Dryd. Æn.

Water is the only native of England made use of in punch; but the lemons, the brandy, the sugar, and the nutmegs, are all foreigners. Addison's Freeholder.

Nor could the majesty of the English crown appear in a greater lustre, either to foreigners or subjects. Swift.

FO'REIGNNESS. n. f. [from foreign.] remoteness; want of relation to something.

Let not the foreignness of the subject hinder you from endeavouring to set me right. Locke.

TO FOREIMAGINE. v. a. [fore and imagine.] To conceive or fancy before proof.

We are within compass of a foreimagined possibility in that behalf. Camden's Remains.

TO FOREJU'DGE. v. a. [fore and judge.] To judge beforehand; to be prepossessed.

TO FOREKNO'W. v. a. [fore and know.] To have prescience of; to foresee.

We foreknow that the sun will rise and set, that all men born in the world shall die again; that after Winter the Spring shall come; after the Spring, Summer and harvest; yet is not our foreknowledge the cause of any of those. Raleigh.

He foreknew John should not suffer a violent death, but go into his grave in peace. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. vii. c. 10.

Calchas the sacred seer, who had in view

Things present and the past, and things to come foreknew.

Dryden's Iliad.

Who would the miseries of man foreknow?

Not knowing, we but share our part of woe. Dryden.

FOREKNO'WABLE. adj. [from foreknow.] Possible to be known before they happen.

It is certainly foreknowable what they will do in such and such circumstances. Mere's Divine Dialogues.

FOREKNO'WLEDGE. n. f. [fore and knowledge.] Prescience; knowledge of that which has not yet happened.

Our being in Christ by eternal foreknowledge, saveth us not without our actual and real adoption into the fellowship of his saints in this present world. Hogker, b. v. f. 56.

I told him you was asleep: he seems to have a foreknowledge of that too, and therefore chuses to speak with you. Shakesp.

If I foreknew,

Foreknowledge had no influence on their fault,

Which had no less prov'd certain unforeknown. Milton.

I hope the foreknowledge you had of my esteem for you, is the reason that you do not dislike my letters. Pope.

FO'RELAND. n. f. [fore and land.] A promontory; headland; high land jutting into the sea; a cape.

As when a ship, by skilful steersman wrought,

Nigh river's mouth, or foreland, where the wind

Veers oft, as oft so steers, and shifts her sails. Milt. P. L.

TO FORELA'Y. v. a. [fore and lay.] To lay wait for; to intrap by ambush.

A serpent shoots his sting at unaware;

An ambush'd thief forelays a traveller:

The man lies murder'd, while the thief and snake,

One gains the thickets, and one thrids the brake. Dryden.

TO FORELI'FT. v. a. [fore and lift] To raise aloft any anterior part.

So dreadfully he towards him did pass,

Forelifting up aloft his speckled breast;

And often bounding on the bruised grass,

As for great joy of his new comen guest. Fairy Queen, b. i.

FO'RELOCK. n. f. [fore and lock.] The hair that grows from the forepart of the head.

Tell her the joyous time will not be staid,

Unless she do him by the forelock take. Spenser, Sonnet 70.

Hyacinthine locks

Round from his parted forelock manly hung,

Clust'ring, but not beneath his shoulders broad. Milton.

Zeal and duty are not slow,

But on occasion's forelock watchful wait. Milt. Parad. Reg.

Time is painted with a lock before, and bald behind, signifying thereby that we must take time by the forelock; for, when it is once past, there is no recalling it. Swift.

FO'REMAN. n. f. [fore and man.] The first or chief person.

He is a very sensible man, shoots flying, and has been several times foreman of the petty jury. Addison's Spectator.

FOREMENTIONED. adj. [fore and mentioned.] Mentioned or recited before. It is observeable that many participles are compounded with fore, whose verbs have no such composition.

Dacier, in the life of Aurelius, has not taken notice of the forementioned figure on the pillar. Addison on Italy.

FO'REMOST. adj. [from fore.]

1. First in place.

Our women in the foremost ranks appear;

March to the fight, and meet your mistress there. Dryden.

I stand astonish'd! what, the bold Sempronius,

That still broke foremost through the crowd of patriots,

As with a hurricane of zeal transported,

And virtuous ev'n to madness! Addison's Cato.

2. First in dignity.

All three were set among the foremost ranks of fame, for great minds to attempt, and great force to perform what they did attempt. Sidney, b. ii.

These ride foremost in the field,

As they the foremost rank of honour held.

Dryden.

FO'RENAMED.

FORENA'MED. adj. [fore and name.] Nominated before.

And such are sure ones,

As Curius, and the forenam'd Lentulus. Ben. Johnf. Catil.

FO'RENOON. n. s. [fore and noon.] The time of day reckoned from the middle point, between the dawn and the meridian, to the meridian: opposed to afternoon.

The manner was, that the forenoon they should run at tilt, the afternoon in a broad field in manner of a battle, 'till either the strangers or the country knights won the field. Sidney.

Curio, at the funeral of his father, built a temporary theatre, consisting of two parts turning on hinges, according to the position of the sun, for the conveniency of forenoon's and afternoon's diversion. Arbuthnot on Coins.

FORENO'TICE. n. s. [fore and notice.] Information of an event before it happens.

So strange a revolution never happens in poetry, but either heaven or earth gives some forenotice of it. Rymer's Tragedies.

FORE'NSICK. adj. [forensis, Latin.] Belonging to courts of judicature.

Person is a forensick term, appropriating actions and their merit; and so belongs only to intelligent agents, capable of a law, and happiness and misery. This personality extends itself beyond present existence to what is past, only by consciousness. Locke.

The forum was a publick place in Rome, where lawyers and orators made their speeches before the proper judges in matters of property, or in criminal cases: thence all sorts of disputations in courts of justice, where several persons make their distinct speeches, may come under the name of forensick disputes. Wat's Improvement of the Mind.

TO FOREORDA'IN. v. a. [fore and ordain.] To predestinate; to predetermine; to preordain.

The church can discharge, in manner convenient, a work of so great importance; by foreordaining some short collect wherein briefly to mention thanks. Hooker, b. v.

FO'REPART. n. s. [fore and part.] The anterior part.

Had it been so raised, it would deprive us of the sun's light all the forepart of the day. Raleigh's Hist. of the World.

The ribs have no cavity in them, and towards the forepart or breast are broad and thin, to bend and give way without danger of fracture. Ray on the Creation.

FOREPA'ST. adj. [fore and past.] Past before a certain time.

Now cease, ye damsels, your delights forepast;

Enough it is that all the day is your's. Spenser's Epithalam.

My forepast proofs, howe'er the matter fall,

Shall tax my fears of little vanity,

Having vainly fear'd too little.

Shakespeare.

Such is the treaty which he negotiates with us, an offer and tender of a reconciliation, an act of oblivion, of all forepast sins, and of a new covenant. Hammond on Fundamentals.

FOREPOSSE'SSED. adj. [fore and possess.] Preoccupied; prepossessed; pre-engaged.

The testimony either of the ancient fathers, or of other classical divines, may be clearly and abundantly answered, to the satisfaction of any rational man, not extremely forepossessed with prejudice. Sanderson's Judgment.

FO'RERANK. n. s. [fore and rank.] First rank; front.

Yet leave our cousin Catharine here with us;

She is our capital demand, compris'd

Within the forerank of our articles.

Shakef. Henry V.

FORERECI'TED. adj. [fore and recite.] Mentioned or enumerated before.

Bid him recount

The forerecited practices, whereof

We cannot feel too little, hear too much. Shak. Hen. VIII.

TO FORERU'N. v. a. [fore and run.]

1. To come before as an earnest of something following; to introduce as an harbinger.

Against ill chances men are ever merry;

But heaviness foreruns the good event. Shakef. Henry IV.

The sun

Was set, and twilight from the East came on,

Forerunning night. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vii.

She bids me hope: oh heav'n's, she pities me!

And pity still foreruns approaching love,

As lightning does the thunder. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

2. To precede; to have the start of.

I heard it to be a maxim at Dublin to follow, if not fore-run, all that is or will be practised in London. Graunt.

FORERU'NNER. n. s. [from forerun.]

1. An harbinger; a messenger sent before to give notice of the approach of those that follow.

The six strangers seek for you, madam, to take their leave; and there is a forerunner come from a seventh, the prince of Morocco. Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.

A cock was sacrificed as the forerunner of day and the sun, thereby acknowledging the light of life to be derived from the divine bounty, the daughter of providence. Stillingfleet.

My elder brothers, my forerunners came,

Rough draughts of nature, ill design'd, and lame:

Blown off, like blossoms, never made to bear;

'Till I came finish'd, her last labour'd care. Dryd. Aurengz.

Already opera prepares the way,

The sure forerunner of her gentle sway. Pope's Dunciad.

2. A prognostick; a sign foreshowing any thing.

O Eve! some further change awaits us nigh,

Which heav'n, by these mute signs in nature, shews

Forerunners of his purpose. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xi.

Loss of sight is the misery of life, and usually the forerunner of death. South's Sermons.

The keeping insensible perspiration up in due measure is the cause as well as sign of health, and the least deviation from that due quantity, the certain forerunner of a disease. Arbuthn.

TO FORESA'Y. v. a. [fore and say.] To predict; to prophecy; to foretell.

Let ordinance

Come as the gods foresay it.

Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

TO FORESE'E. v. a. [fore and see.] To see beforehand; to see what has not yet happened; to have prescience; to fore-know.

With Cupid she foresees and goes god Vulcan's pace. Sidney.

The first of them could things to come foresee;

The next, could of things present best advise;

The third, things past could keep in memory. Fairy Queen.

If there be any thing foreseen that is not usual, be armed for it by any hearty though a short prayer, and an earnest resolution beforehand, and then watch when it comes. Taylor.

At his foreseen approach, already quake

The Caspian kingdoms and Meotian lake:

Their seers behold the tempest from afar,

And threat'ning oracles denounce the war. Dryden's Æn.

TO FORESHA'ME. v. a. [for and shame.] To shame; to bring reproach upon.

Oh bill, foreshaming

Those rich-left heirs, that let their fathers lie

Without a monument.

Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

TO FO'RESHEW. v. a. [See FORESHOW.]

FO'RESHIP. n. s. [fore and ship.] The anterior part of the ship.

The shipmen would have cast anchors out of the fore-ship. Æt's xxvii. 30.

TO FORESHO'RTEN. v. a. [fore and shorten.] To shorten figures for the sake of shewing those behind.

The greatest parts of the body ought to appear foremost; and he forbids the foreshortenings, because they make the parts appear little. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

TO FORESHO'W. v. a. [fore and show.]

1. To discover before it happens; to predict; to prognosticate.

Christ had called him to be a witness of his death, and resurrection from the dead, according to that which the prophets and Moses had foreshowed. Hooker, b. iii. f. 8.

Next, like Aurora, Spenser rose,

Whose purple blush the day foreshows.

Denham.

You chose to withdraw yourself from publick business, when the face of heaven grew troubled, and the frequent shifting of the wind foreshowed a storm. Dryden.

2. To represent before it comes.

What else is the law but the gospel foreshowed? What other the gospel than the law fulfilled? Hooker, b. v.

FO'RESIGHT. n. s. [fore and sight.]

1. Prescience; prognostication; foreknowledge. The accent anciently on the last syllable.

Let Eve, for I have drench'd her eyes,

Here sleep below; while thou to foresight wak'ft;

As once thou slept'ft, whilst she to life was form'd. Milton.

2. Provident care of futurity.

He had a sharp foresight, and working wit,

That never idle was, ne once could rest a whit. Fai. Qu.

In matters of arms he was both skilful and industrious, and as well in foresight as resolution present and great. Hayward.

Difficulties and temptations will more easily be born or avoided, if with prudent foresight we arm ourselves against them. Rogers's Sermons.

FORESI'GHTFUL. adj. [*for*sight and full.] Prescient; provident.

Death gave him no such pangs as the foresightful care he had of his silly successor. Sidney, b. ii.

TO FORESI'GNIFY. v. a. [fore and signify.] To betoken beforehand; to foreshow; to typify.

Discoveries of Christ already present, whose future coming the Psalms did but foresignify. Hooker, b. v.

Yet as being past times noxious, where they light

On man, beast, plant, wasteful and turbulent,

They oft foresignify, and threaten ill. Milton's Par. Reg.

FO'RESKIN. n. s. [fore and skin.] The prepuce.

Their own hand

An hundred of the faithless foe shall slay,

And for a dow'r their hundred foreskins pay,

Be Michel thy reward.

Cowley's Davids.

FO'RESKIRT. n. s. [fore and skirt.] The pendulous or loose part of the coat before.

A thousand

A thousand pounds a year for pure respect!
No other obligation?
That promises more thousands: honour's train
Is longer than his forekirt. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.
To FORESLA'CK. v. a. [f. re and slack.] To neglect by idleness.

It is a great pity that so good an opportunity was omitted, and so happy an occasion forefick'd, that might have been the eternal good of the land. Spenser's State of Ireland.

To FORESLO'W. v. a. [f. re and slow.]

1. To delay; to hinder; to impede; to obstruct.
No stream, no wood, no mountain could foreflow
Their hasty pace. Fairfax, b. i.
Now the illustrious nymph return'd again,
Brings every grace triumphant in her train:
The wond'ring Nereids, though they rais'd no storm,
Foreflow'd her passage, to behold her form. Dryden.
2. To neglect; to omit.

When the rebels were on Blackheath, the king knowing well that it stood him upon, by how much the more he had hitherto protracted the time in not encountering them, by so much the sooner to dispatch with them, that it might appear to have been no coldness in foreflowing, but wisdom in chusing his time, resolved with speed to assail them. Bacon's Hen. VII.

Chremes, how many fishers do you know
That rule their boats and use their nets aright,
That neither wind, nor time, nor tide foreflow?
Some such have been: but, ah! by tempests spite
Their boats are lost; while we may sit and moan
That few were such, and now these few are none. P. Fletch.

To FORESLO'W. v. n. To be dilatory; to loiter.

This may plant courage in their quailing breasts,
For yet is hope of life and victory:
Foreflow no longer, make we hence amain. Shak. Hen. VI.

To FORESPEAK. v. n. [fore and speak.]

1. To predict; to forefay; to foreshow; to foretell.
Old Godfrey of Winchester, thinketh no ominous forespeaking to lie in names. Camden's Remains.
2. To forbid.

Thou hast forespoke my being in these wars,
And say'st it is not fit. Shakesp. Ant. and Cleopatra.

FORESPE'NT. adj. [fore and spent.]

1. Wasted; tired; spent.
After him came spurring hard
A gentleman, almost forespent with speed. Shak. Henry IV.
2. Forepassed; past.
Is not enough thy evil life forespent? Fairy Queen, b. i.
You shall find his vanities forespent,
Were but the outside of the Roman Brutus, Covering discretion with a coat of folly. Shakesp. Hen. V.
3. Bestowed before.

We must receive him
According to the honour of his sender;
And towards himself, his goodness forespent on us,
We must extend our notice. Shakespeare.

FORESPUR'RER. n. f. [fore and spur.] One that rides before.
A day in April never came so sweet,
To show how costly Summer was at hand,
As this forespurrer comes before his lord. Shakespeare.

FO'REST. n. f. [forest, French; foresta, Italian.]

1. A wild uncultivated tract of ground, with wood.
By many tribulations we enter into the kingdom of heaven, because, in a forest of many wolves, sheep cannot chuse but feed in continual danger of life. Hooker, b. v. f. 48.

Macbeth shall never vanquish'd be, until Great Birnam-wood to Dunlinane's high hill Shall come against him.
—That will never be:

Who can impress the forest, bid the tree
Unfix his earth-bound root? Shakespeare's Macbeth.

There be airs which the physicians advise their patients to remove unto, which commonly are plain champaigns, but grasing, and not overgrown with heath; or else timber-shades, as in forests. Bacon's Natural History, No. 936.

How the first forest rais'd its shady head. Roscommon.

2. [In law.] A certain territory of woody grounds and fruitful pastures, privileged for wild beasts, and fowls of forest, chase, and warren, to rest and abide in, in the safe protection of the king, for his pleasure; which territory of ground is bounded with irremovable marks, and replenished with beasts of venery or chase, and with great coverts of vert for their succour and abode: for the preservation of which place, vert, and venison, there are certain particular laws. The manner of making forests is this: the king sends out his commission, under the broad seal of England, directed to certain discreet persons, for viewing, perambulating, and bounding the place that he has a mind to afforest: which returned into Chancery, proclamation is made throughout all the country where the ground lies, that none shall hunt or chase any wild beasts within that precinct, without the king's special licence; after which he appoints ordinances, laws, and officers for the preservation of the vert and venison; and this becomes a forest by matter of record. The properties of a forest are these: a forest, as it is strictly taken, cannot be in the hands of any but the king, who hath power to grant commission to a justice in eyre for the forest; the courts; the officers for preserving the vert and venison, as the justices of the forest, the warden or keeper, the verders, the foresters, agistors, regards, bailiffs, and beadles. The chief property of a forest is the swainmote, which is no less incident to it than the court of pyepowders to a fair. Cowel.

To FORESTA'LL. v. a. [forestallan, Saxon.]

1. To anticipate; to take up beforehand.
If thou be master-gunner, spend not all
That thou can'st speak at once; but husband it,
And give men turns of speech: do not forestall
By lavishness thine own and others wit,
As if thou mad'st thy will. Herbert.

What need a man forestall his date of grief,
And run to meet what he would most avoid. Milton.

2. To hinder by preoccupation or prevention.
And though good luck prolonged hath thy date,
Yet death then would the like mishap forestall. Fairy Queen.

What's in prayer, but this twofold force
To be forestalled e're we come to fall,
Or pardon'd being down. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

May
This night forestall him of the coming day. Shak. Cymbeline.

But for my tears,
I had forestall'd this dear and deep rebuke,
Ere you with grief had spoke. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

If thou covet death, as utmost end
Of misery, so thinking to evade
The penalty pronounc'd, doubt not but God
Hath wiselier arm'd his vengeful ire, than so
To be forestall'd. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x.

- I will not forestall your judgment of the rest. Pope.
3. To seize or gain possession of before another; to buy before another in order to raise the price.

He bold spake, Sir knight, if knight thou be,
Abandon this forestalled place at erst,
For fear of further harm, I counsel thee. Fairy Queen.

FORESTA'LLER. n. f. [from forestall.] One that anticipates the market; one that purchases before others to raise the price.

Commodities, good or bad, the workman must take at his master's rate, or sit still and starve; whilst, by this means, this new sort of ingrossors or forestallers having the feeding and supplying this numerous body of workmen, set the price upon the poor landholder. Locke.

FORESTBO'RN. adj. [forest and born.] Born in a wild.

This boy is forestborn,
And hath been tutor'd in the rudiments
Of desperate studies. Shak. As you like it.

FO'RESTER. n. f. [forestier, French, from forest.]

1. An officer of the forest.
Forester, my friend, where is the bush,
That we may stand and play the murderer in?
—Here by, upon the edge of yonder copice. Shakespeare.
2. An inhabitant of the wild country.

FO'RESWAT. } adj. [from fore and swat, from sweat.] Spent FO'RESWART. } with heat.

Miso and Mopsa, like a couple of foreswat melters, were getting the pure silver of their bodies out of the ore of their garments. Sidney, b. ii.

To FORETA'STE. v. a. [fore and taste.]

1. To have antepast of; to have prescience of.
2. To taste before another.

Perhaps the fact
Is not so heinous now, foretasted fruit,
Profan'd first by the serpent, by him first Made common, and unhallow'd, ere our taste. Milt. P. L.

FO'RETASTE. n. f. Anticipation of.

A pleasure that a man may call as properly his own as his soul and his conscience, neither liable to accident, nor exposed to injury: it is the foretaste of heaven, and the earnest of eternity. South's Sermons.

To FORETE'LL. v. a. [fore and tell.]

1. To predict; to prophesy.
What art thou, whose heavy looks foretell
Some dreadful story hanging on thy tongue? Shak. H. VI.
I found

The new-created world, which fame in heaven
Long had foretold. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x.

Mercia's king,
Warn'd in a dream, his murder did fortell,
From point to point, as after it befell. Dryden.

When great Ulysses sought the Phrygian shores,
Deeds then undone my faithful tongue foretold;
Heaven seal'd my words, and you those deeds behold. Pope.

2. To foretold; to foretell.

To FORETELL. v. n. To utter prophecy.

All the prophets from Samuel, and those that follow after, have likewise foretold of these days. Aets iii. 24.

FORETELLER. n. s. [from foretell.] Predictor; foreteller.

Others are proposed, not that the foretold events should be known; but that the accomplishment that expounds them may evince, that the foreteller of them was able to foresee thee. Boyle n Colours.

To FORETHINK. v. a. [from fore and think.] To anticipate in the mind; to have prescience of.

The soul of every man

Prophetically does forethink thy fall. Shakes. Henry IV.

I do pray to thee,

Thou virtuous Dauphin, alter not the doom

Forethought by heav'n. Shak. Speare's King John.

Adam could not be ignorant of the punishments due to neglect and disobedience; and felt, by the proof thereof, in himself another terror than he had forethought, or could imagine. Releigh's History of the World.

Friday, the fatal day! when next it came,

Her soul forethought the fiend would change his game. Dryd.

To FORETHINK. v. n. To contrive beforehand.

With this you blot my name, and clear your own;

And what's my frenzy will be call'd my crime:

What then is thine? Thou cool deliberate villain!

Thou wise, forethinking, weighing politician! Smith.

FORETHOUGHT. n. s. [from forethink.]

1. Prescience; anticipation.

He that is undone, is equally undone, whether it be by spitefulness of forethought, or by the folly of oversight, or evil counsel. L'Estrange.

2. Provident care.

To FORETOKEN. v. a. [from fore and token.] To foreshow; to prognosticate as a sign.

The king from Ireland hastes; but did no good;

Whilst strange prodigious signs foretoken blood. Daniel.

FORETOKEN. n. s. [from the verb.] Prevenient sign; prognostick.

It may prove some ominous foretoken of misfortune. Sidney.

They disliked nothing more in king Edward the Confessor, than that he was Frenchified; and accounted the desire of foreign language then to be a foretoken of bringing in of foreign powers, which indeed happened. Camden's Remains.

FORETOOTH. n. s. [from fore and tooth.] The tooth in the anterior part of the mouth; the incisor.

The foreteeth should be formed broad, and with a thin sharp edge like chizzles. Ray on the Creation.

FORETOP. n. s. [from fore and top.] That part of a woman's head-dress that is forward, or the top of a periwig.

So may your hats your foretops never press,

Untouch'd your ribbons, sacred be your dress. Dryden.

FOREVOUCHED. part. [from fore and vouch.] Affirmed before; formerly told.

Sure her offence

Must be of such unnatural degree,

That monsters it; or your forevouch'd affection

Fall'n into taint. Shakespeare's King Lear.

FORWARD. n. s. [from fore and ward.] The van; the front.

They that marched in the forward were all mighty men. I Mac. ix. 11.

To FOREWARN. v. a. [from fore and warn.]

1. To admonish beforehand.

I will forewarn you whom you shall fear: fear him which, after he hath killed, hath power to cast into hell. Lu. xii. 5.

2. To inform previously of any future event.

Divine interpreter, by favour sent

Down from the empyrean, to forewarn

Us timely of what might else have been our loss

Unknown. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vii.

3. To caution against any thing beforehand.

Well I will arm me, being thus forewarn'd. Shak. H. VI.

Thy pride,

And wand'ring vanity, when least was safe,

Rejected my forewarning, and disdain'd

Not to be trusted. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x.

Tho' Phœbus had forewarned him of singing wars, yet the search of nature was free. Dryd. Virg. Dedic. to Ld. Clifford.

Young Chœrebus, who by love was led

To win renown and fair Cassandra's bed,

Had lately brought his troops to Priam's aid;

Forewarn'd in vain by the prophetick maid. Dryden's Æn.

To FOREWASTE. v. a. [from fore and waste.] To desolate; to destroy. Out of use.

Vespasian, with great spoil and rage,

Forewasted all, until Gemissa gent

Persuaded him to cease. Fairy Queen, b. ii.

High time 'gan it wex for Una fair,

To think of those her captive parents dear,

And their forewasted kingdom to repair. Fairy Queen, b. i.

To FOREWISH. part. [from fore and wish.] To desire beforehand.

The wiser sort ceased not to do what in them lay, to procure that the good commonly forewished might in time come to effect. Knolles's History of the Turks.

FOREWORN. part. [from fore and worn, from wear.] Worn out; wasted by time or use.

Neither the light was enough to read the words, and the ink was already foreworn, and in many places blotted. Sidney.

FORFEIT. n. s. [from forfeit, French; fforfed, Welsh.]

1. Something lost by the commission of a crime; something paid for expiation of a crime; a fine; a mulct.

Thy slanders I forgive, and therewithal

Remit thy other forfeits. Shak. Measure for Measure.

Th' execution leave to high disposal,

And let another hand, not thine, exact

Thy penal forfeit from thyself. Milton's Agonistes, l. 506.

Thy life, Melantius! I am come to take,

Of which foul treason does a forfeit make. Waller.

2. A person obnoxious to punishment; one whose life is forfeited by his offence. Now obsolete.

Your brother is a forfeit of the law,

And you but waste your words. Shak. Meas. for Measure.

Claudio, whom here you have warrant to execute, is no greater forfeit to the law than Angelo, who hath sentenced him. Shakespeare's Measure for Measure.

To FORFEIT. v. a. [from the noun.] To lose by some breach of condition; to lose by some offence.

If then a man, on light conditions, gain

A great estate to him, and his, for ever;

If wilfully he forfeit it again,

Who doth bemoan his heir, or blame the giver? Davies.

Men displeased God, and consequently forfeited all right to happiness. Boyle.

A father cannot alien the power he has over his child: he may perhaps to some degrees forfeit it, but cannot transfer it. Locke.

FORFEIT. participial adj. [from the verb.] Liable to penal seizure; alienated by a crime; lost either as to the right or possession, by breach of conditions.

All the souls that are, were forfeit once;

And he that might the 'vantage best have took,

Found out the remedy. Shakesp. Measure for Measure.

Beg that thou may'st have leave to hang thyself;

And yet, thy wealth being forfeit to the state,

Thou hast not left the value of a cord. Shakespeare.

This now fenceless world,

Forfeit to death. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x. l. 303.

Straight all his hopes exhal'd in empty smoke,

And his long toils were forfeit for a look. Dryd. Virg. Geor.

Methought with wond'rous ease he swallow'd down

His forfeit honour, to betray the town. Dryd. Indian Emp.

How the murderer paid his forfeit breath;

What lands so distant from that scene of death,

But trembling heard the fame! Pope's Odyssey, b. iii.

FORFEITABLE. adj. [from forfeit.] Possessed on conditions, by the breach of which any thing may be lost.

FORFEITURE. n. s. [from forfeit, French, from forfeit.]

1. The act of forfeiting; the punishment discharged by loss of something possessed.

2. The thing forfeited; a mulct; a fine.

The court is as well a Chancery to save and debar forfeitures, as a court of common law to decide rights; and there would be work enough in Germany and Italy, if Imperial forfeitures should go for good titles. Bacon's War with Spain.

Ancient privileges and acts of grace indulged by former kings, must not, without high reason, be revoked by their successors; nor forfeitures be exacted violently, nor penal laws urged rigorously. Taylor's Rule of living holy.

He fairly abdicates his throne,

He has a forfeiture incur'd. Swift.

To FORFEIND. v. a. To prevent; to forbid. Hanmer.

FORGAVE. The preterite of forgive.

FORGE. n. s. [from forge, French.]

1. The place where iron is beaten into form. In common language we use forge for large work, and smithy for small; but in books the distinction is not kept.

Now behold,

In the quick forge and working-house of thought,

How London doth pour out her citizens. Shak. Henry V.

In other part stood one, who at the forge

Labouring, two massy clods of iron and brass

Had melted. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xi.

Th' o'er-labour'd Cyclop from his task retires,

Th' Æolian forge exhausted of its fires. Pope's Statius.

2. Any place where any thing is made or shaped.

From no other forge hath proceeded a strange conceit, that to serve God with any set form of common prayer is superstitious. Hocker, b. v. f. 26.

To FORGE. v. a. [from forger, old French.]

1. To form by the hammer; to beat into shape.

The queen of martials,

FOR

And Mars himself conducted them; both which being
frg'd of gold,

Must needs have golden furniture. Chapman's Iliad, b. xviii.

Tyger with tyger, bear with bear you'll find
In leagues offensive and defensive join'd;
But lawless man the anvil dares profane,
And forge that steel by which a man is slain,
Which earth at first for plough-shares did afford,
Nor yet the smith had learn'd to form a sword. Tate's Jew.

2. To make by any means.

He was a kind of nothing, titleless,
'Till he had forg'd himself a name i' th' fire
Of burning Rome. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

His heart's his mouth:

What his breast forges, that his tongue must vent. Shakesp.

Those few names that the schools forgerd, and put into the mouths of their scholars, could never yet get admittance into common use, or obtain the licence of publick approbation. Locke.

3. To counterfeit; to falsify.

Were I king,

I should cut off the nobles for their lands:
My more having would be as fauce
To make me hunger more, that I should forge
Quarrels unjust against the good and loyal,
Destroying them for wealth. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

FORGER. n. f. [from forge.]

1. One who makes or forms.
2. One who counterfeits any thing; a falsifier.

As in stealing, if there were no receivers there would be no thieves; so in slander, if there were fewer spreaders there would be fewer forgers of libels. Government of the Tongue.

No forger of lyes willingly and wittingly furnishes out the means of his own detection. West on the Resurrection.

FORGERY. n. f. [from forge.] The crime of falsification.

Has your king married the lady Gray?

And now, to sooth your forgery and his,
Sends me a paper to persuade me patience. Shakesp. Hen. VI.
Nothing could have been easier than for the Jews, the enemies of Jesus Christ, to have disproved these facts, had they been false, to have shewn their falshood, and to have convicted them of forgery. Stephens's Sermons.

A forgery, in setting a false name to a writing, which may prejudice another's fortune, the law punishes with the loss of ears; but has inflicted no adequate penalty for doing the same thing in print, though books sold under a false name are so many forgeries. Swift.

2. Smith's work; fabrication; the act of the forge.

He ran on embattl'd armies clad in iron,
And weaponless himself,
Made arms ridiculous, useless the forgery
Of brazen shield and spear, the hammer'd cuirass,
'Chalybean temper'd steel, and frock of mail
Adamantean proof. Milton's Agonistes, l. 179.

TO FORGE'T. v. a. preter. forgôt; part. forgotten, or forgot.
[forzytan, Saxon; vergeten, Dutch.]

1. To lose memory of; to let go from the remembrance.

That is not forgot

Which ne'er I did remember; to my knowledge,
I never in my life did look on him. Shakesp. Richard II.

When I am forgotten, as I shall be,
And sleep in dull cold marble, where no mention
Of me must more be heard. Shakesp. Henry VIII.

Oh, my oblivion is a very Anthony,
And I am all forgotten. Shakesp. Anthony and Cleopatra.

Forget not thy friend in thy mind, and be not unmindful of him in thy riches? Ecclus. xxxvii. 6.

No sooner was our deliverance compleated, but we frgot
our danger and our duty. Atterbury's Sermons.

Alive, ridiculous; and dead, forgot. Pope.

2. Not to attend; to neglect.

Can a woman forget her sucking child? Yea, they may for- get; yet will I not forget thee. Isa. xlix. 5.

The mass of mean forgotten things. Anon.

FORGETFUL. adj. [from forget.]

1. Not retaining the memory of.
2. Causing oblivion; oblivious.

But when a thousand rolling years are past,
So long their punishments and penance last,
Whole droves of minds are by the driving god
Compell'd to drink the deep Lethean flood,
In large forgetful draughts to steep the cares
Of their past labours, and their irksome years. Dryd. Æn.

3. Inattentive; negligent; neglectful; careless.

Be not forgetful to entertain strangers. Hebr. xiii. 2.

The queen is comfortless, and we forgetful
In our long absence. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

Have you not love enough to bear with me,
When that rash humour, which my mother gave me,
Makes me forgetful? Shakespeare's Julius Cæsar.

FOR

I, in fact, a real interest have,
Which to my own advantage I would save;
And, with the usual courtier's trick, intend
To serve myself, forgetful of my friend. Prior.

FORGETFULNESS. n. f. [from forgetful.]

1. Oblivion; cessation to remember; loss of memory.

O gentle sleep!

Nature's soft nurse, how have I frighted thee,
That thou no more wilt weigh my eyelids down,
And steep my senses in forgetfulness? Shakesp. Henry IV.
All birds and beasts lie hush'd; sleep steals away
The wild desires of men and toils of day;
And brings, descending through the silent air,
A sweet forgetfulness of human care. Pope's Statius.

2. Negligence; neglect; inattention.

The church of England is grievously charged with forgetful- ness of her duty. Hooker, b. iv. f. 13.

FORGETTER. n. f. [from forget.]

1. One that forgets.
2. A careless person.

TO FORGIVE. v. a. [forzygan, Saxon.]

1. To pardon a person; not to punish.

Then heaven forgive him too! Shakespeare's Macbeth.

I do beseech your grace for charity;
If ever any malice in your heart
Were hid against me, now forgive me frankly.

—Sir Thomas Lovell, I as free forgive you,
As I would be frgiven: I forgive all. Shakesp. Henry VIII.
Slowly provok'd, she easily forgives. Prior.

2. To pardon a crime.

The people that dwell therein shall be forgiven their iniquity. Is. xxxiii. 24.

3. To remit; not to exact debt or penalty.

The lord of that servant was moved with compassion, loosed him, and forgave him the debt. Mat. xviii. 27.

FORGIVENESS. n. f. [forzyghennysse, Saxon.]

1. The act of forgiving.

To the Lord our God belong mercies and forgivenesses. Dan.

2. Pardon of an offender.

Thou hast promised repentance and forgiveness to them that have sinned against thee. Prayer of Manass.

Exchange forgiveness with me, noble Hamlet;
Mine and my father's death come not on thee,
Nor thine on me. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

Forgiveness to the injur'd does belong;
But they ne'er pardon who commit the wrong. Dryden.

3. Pardon of an offence.

God has certainly promised forgiveness of sin to every one who repents. South's Sermons.

4. Tenderness; willingness to pardon.

Here are introduced more heroick principles of meekness, forgiveness, bounty and magnanimity, than all the learning of the heathens could invent. Sprat's Sermons.

Mercy above did hourly plead

For her resemblance here below;

And mild forgiveness interceded

To stop the coming blow.

Dryden.

The bow is bent and drawn: make from the shaft.

—Let it fall rather, though the fork invade

The region of my heart. Shakespeare's King Lear.

3. A point of a fork.

Several are amazed at the wisdom of the ancients that represented a thunderbolt with three forks, since nothing could have better explained its triple quality of piercing, burning, and melting. Addison on ancient Medals.

TO FORK. v. n. [from the noun.] To shoot into blades, as corn does out of the ground.

The

The corn beginneth to fork. Mortimer's Husbandry.

FO'RKED. adj. [from fork.] Opening into two or more parts.

When he was naked he was, for all the world, like a forked radish, with a head fantastically carved upon it with a knife.

Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. ii.

Sometimes we see a cloud that's dragonish,

A forked mountain, or blue promontory. Shakespeare.

Come, shall we go and kill us venison?

And yet it irks me the poor dappled fools

Should, in their own confines, with forked heads,

Have their round haunches goar'd. Shakesp. As you like it.

He would have spoke;

But his for his return'd, with forked tongue

To forked tongue. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x.

Ye dragons, whose contagious breath

Peoples the dark retreats of death,

Change your fierce hissing into joyful song,

And praise your maker with your forked tongue. Roscommon.

Estfoons it fled away, and might no where be seen. Fa. Qu.

FO'RKY. adj. [from fork] Forked; furcated; opening into two parts.

The smiling infant in his hand shall take

The crested basilisk and speckled snake;

Pleas'd the green lustre of the scales survey,

And with their forky tongue and pointless sting shall play:

Pope's Messiah.

FORLO'RE. [The preterite and participle of the Saxon forleornan, in Dutch verloren.] Deserted; forsook; forsaken.

Such as Diana by the sandy shore

Of swift Eurotas, or on Cynthus' green,

Where all the nymphs have her forlore. Fairy Queen, b. ii.

That wretched world he 'gan for to abhor,

And mortal life 'gan loath, as thing forlore. Fairy Queen.

Thus fell the trees, with noise the desarts roar;

The beasts their caves, the birds their nests forelore. Fairf.

FORLO'RN. adj. [forloren, from forleornan, Saxon; verloren, Dutch.]

1. Deserted; destitute; forsaken; wretched; helpless; solitary.

Make them seek for that they wont to scorn;

Of fortune and of hope at once forlorn. Hubberd's Tale.

Tell me, good Hobinol, what gars thee greet?

What! hath some wolf thy tender lambs ytornd?

Or is thy bagpipe broke, that sounds so sweet?

Or art thou of thy loved lass forlorne? Spenser's Pastorals.

In every place was heard the lamentation of women and children; every thing shewed the heaviness of the time, and seemed as altogether lost and forlorn. Knolles's History.

How can I live without thee! how forego

Thy sweet converse, and love so dearly join'd,

To live again in these wild woods forlorn! Milt. Par. Lost.

Their way

Lies through the perplex'd paths of this drear wood;

The nodding horror of whose shady brows,

Threats the forlorn and wand'ring passenger. Milton.

My only strength and stay! forlorn of thee,

Whither shall I betake me, where subsist! Milt. Par. Lost.

Like a declining statesman, left forlorn

To his friends pity and pursuers scorn. Denham.

The good old man, forlorn of human aid,

For vengeance to his heav'nly patron pray'd. Dryd. Iliad.

Philomel laments forlorn. Fenton.

As some sad turtle his lost love deplores,

Thus, far from Delia, to the winds I mourn;

Alike unheard, unpity'd, and forlorn. Pope's Autumn.

2. Lost; desperate.

What is become of great Acrates' son?

Or where hath he hung up his mortal blade,

That hath so many haughty conquests won?

Is all his force forlorn, and all his glory done? Fairy Queen.

3. Small; despicable: in a ludicrous sense.

He was so forlorn, that his dimensions to any thick sight were invincible. Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. ii.

FORLO'RN. n. f. A lost, solitary, forsaken man.

Henry

And forc'd to live in Scotland a forlorn. Shakesp. Henry VI.

2. FORLORN Hope. The soldiers who are sent first to the attack, and are therefore doomed to perish.

Criticks in plume,

Who lolling on our foremost benches sit,

And still charge first, the true forlorn of wit. Dryden.

FORLO'RNNESS. n. f. [from forlorn.] Destitution; misery; solitude.

Men displeased God, and consequently forfeited all right to happiness; even whilst they completed the forlornness of their condition by the lethargy of not being sensible of it. Boyle.

To FO'RLYE. v. n. [from for and lye.] To lye across.

Knit with a golden baldric, which forlay

Athwart her snowy breast, and did divide

Her dainty paps, which, like young fruit in May,

Now little 'gan to swell; and being ty'd,

Through her thin weed, their places only signify'd. Fa. Qu.

FORM. n. f. [forma, Latin; forme, French.]

1. The external appearance of any thing; representation; shape.

Nay, women are frail too.

—Ay, as the glasses where they view themselves,

Which are as easy broke as they make forms. Shakespeare.

It stood still; but I could not discern the form thereof. Job.

Gold will endure a vehement fire, without any change, and after it has been divided by corrosive liquors into invisible parts; yet may presently be precipitated, so as to appear again in its form. Grew's Cosmol. Sac. b. i.

Matter, as wise logicians say,

Cannot without a form subsist;

And form, say I as well as they,

Must fail, if matter brings no grift.

Swift.

2. Being, as modified by a particular shape.

When noble benefits shall prove

Not well dispos'd, the mind grown once corrupt,

They turn to vicious form, ten times more ugly

Than ever they were fair. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

Here toils and death, and death's half-brother, sleep,

Forms terrible to view, their sentry keep;

With anxious pleasures of a guilty mind,

Deep frauds before, and open force behind. Dryden's Æn.

3. Particular model or modification.

He that will look into many parts of Asia and America, will find men reason there perhaps as acutely as himself, who yet never heard of a syllogism, nor can reduce any one argument to those forms. Locke.

It lengthens out every act of worship, and produces more lasting and permanent impressions in the mind, than those which accompany any transient form of words that are uttered in the ordinary method of religious worship. Addison.

4. Beauty; elegance of appearance.

He hath no form nor comeliness.

Isa. liii. 2;

5. Regularity; method; order.

What he spoke, though it lack'd form a little,

Was not like madness.

Shakespeare's Hamlet.

6. External appearance without the essential qualities; empty show.

Then those whom form of laws

Condemn'd to die, when traitors judg'd their cause. Dryden.

They were young heirs sent only for form from schools, where they were not suffered to stay three months in the year. Swift's Essay on Modern Education.

7. Ceremony; external rites.

Though well we may not pass upon his life,

Without the form of justice; yet our pow'r

Shall do a court'ry to our wrath, which men

May blame, but not controul. Shakespeare's King Lear.

A long table, and a square table, or seat about the walls, seem things of form, but are things of substance; for at a long table, a few at the upper end, in effect, sway all the business; but in the other form, there is more use of the counsellors opinions that sit lower. Bacon, Essay 21.

That the parliaments of Ireland might want no decent or honourable form used in England, he caused a particular act to pass that the lords of Ireland should appear in parliament robes. Davies in Ireland.

Their general used, in all dispatches made by himself, to observe all decency in their fo ms. Clarendon, b. viii.

How am I to interpret, sir, this visit?

Is it a compliment of form, or love? A. Phill. Dist. Moth.

8. Stated method; established practice.

He who affirmeth speech to be necessary amongst all men, throughout the world, doth not thereby import that all men must necessarily speak one kind of language; even so the necessity of polity and regimen in all churches may be held, without holding any one certain form to be necessary in them all. Hooker, b. iii. f. 2.

Nor are constant forms of prayer more likely to flat and hinder the spirit of prayer and devotion, than unpremeditated and confused variety to distract and lose it. King Charles.

Nor seek to know

Their process, or the forms of law below. Dryden's Æn.

9. A long seat.

If a chair be defined a seat for a single person, with a back belonging to it, then a stool is a seat for a single person without a back; and a form is a seat for several persons, without a back. Watts's Logick.

I was seen with her in the manorhouse, sitting with her upon the form, and taken following her into the park. Shakesp.

10. A class; a rank of students.

It will be necessary to see and examine those works which have have given so great a reputation to the masters of the first form. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

11. The seat or bed of a hare.
Now for a clod-like hare in form they peer;
Now bolt and cudgel, squirrels leap do move;
Now the ambitious lark, with mirror clear,
They catch, while he, fool! to himself makes love. Sidn.
Have you observ'd a sitting hare,
Lift'ning, and fearful of the storm
Of horns and hounds, clap back her ear,
Afraid to keep or leave her form. Prior:

12. Form is the essential, specifical, or distinguishing modification of the matter of which any thing is composed, so as thereby to give it such a peculiar manner of existence. Harris.

In definitions, whether they be framed larger to augment, or stricter to abridge the number of sacraments, we find grace expressly mentioned as their true essential form, and elements as the matter whereunto that form doth adjoin itself. Hooker.

They inferred, if the world were a living creature, it had a soul and spirit, by which they did not intend God, for they did admit of a deity besides, but only the soul or essential form of the universe. Bacon's Natural History.

13. A formal cause; that which gives essence.

To FORM. v. a. [formo, Latin.]

1. To make out of materials.
God formed man of the dust of the ground. Gen. ii. 7.
She form'd the phantom of well-bodied air. Pope.

2. To model to a particular shape.
3. To modify; to scheme; to plan.

Lucretius taught him not to form his heroe, to give him piety or valour for his manners. Dryden's Æn. Dedicat.

4. To arrange; to combine in any particular manner: as, he formed his troops.

5. To adjust; to settle.
Our differences with the Romanists are thus formed into an interest, and become the design not of single persons; but of corporations and successions. Decay of Piety.

6. To contrive; to coin.
The defeat of the design is the routing of opinions formed for promoting it. Decay of Piety.

He dies too soon;

And fate, if possible, must be delay'd:

The thought that labours in my forming brain,

Yet crude and immature, demands more time. Rowe.

7. To model by education or institution.
Let him to this with easy pains be brought,
And seem to labour when he labours not:
Thus form'd for speed, he challenges the wind,
And leaves the Scythian arrow far behind. Dryd. Virg. Ges.

FORMAL. adj. [formel, French; formalis, Latin.]

1. Ceremonious; solemn; precise; exact to affectation:
The justice,
In fair round belly, with good capon lin'd,
With eyes severe, and beard of formal cut,
Full of wise saws and modern instances,
And so he plays his part. Shakespeare's As you like it.

Formal in apparel,

In gait and countenance surely like a father. Shakespeare.

Ceremonies especially be not to be omitted to strangers and formal natures; but the exalting them above the mean is not only tedious, but doth diminish the credit of him that speaks. Bacon, Essay 53.

2. Done according to established rules and methods; not irregular; not sudden; not extemporaneous.

There is not any positive law of men, whether it be general or particular, received by formal express consent, as in councils; or by secret approbation, as in customs it cometh to pass, but the same may be taken away, if occasion serve. Hooker, b. iv. f. 14.

As there are formal and written leagues, respective to certain enemies; so there is a natural and tacit confederation amongst all men against the common enemy of human society, so as there needs no intimation or denunciation of the war; but all these formalities the law of nature supplies, as in the case of pyrates. Bacon's Holy War.

3. Regular; methodical.
The formal stars do travel so,
As we their names and courses know;
And he that on their changes looks,
Would think them govern'd by our books. Waller.

4. External; having the appearance but not the essence.
Of formal duty, make no more thy boast;
Thou disobey'st where it concerns me most. Dryd. Aureng.

5. Depending upon establishment or custom.
Still in constraint your suffering sex remains,
Or bound in formal or in real chains. Pope.

6. Having the power of making any thing what it is; constituent; essential.

Of letters the material part is breath and voice: the formal is constituted by the motions and figure of the organs of speech affecting breath with a peculiar sound, by which each letter is discriminated. Holder's Elements of Speech.

Bellarmino agrees in making the formal act of adoration to be subjection to a superior; but withal he makes the mere apprehension of excellency to include the formal reason of it: whereas mere excellency, without superiority, doth not require any subjection, but only estimation. Stillingtonfleet.

The very life and vital motion, and the formal essence and nature of man, is wholly owing to the power of God. Bentl.

7. Retaining its proper and essential characteristic.
Thou shou'dst come like a fury cover'd with snakes,
Not like a formal man. Shakesp. Ant. and Cleopatra.
I will not let him stir,

'Till I have us'd th' approved means I have;

With wholesome syrups, drugs, and holy prayers,

To make of him a formal man again. Shakesp. Com. of Err.

FO'RMALIST. n. f. [formaliste, French, from form.] One who practises external ceremony; one who prefers appearance to reality; one who seems what he is not.

It is a ridiculous thing, and fit for a satyr to persons of judgment, to see what shifts formalists have, and what prospectives to make superficies to seem a body that hath depth and bulk. Bacon, Essay 27.

A grave, stanch, skilfully managed face, set upon a grasping aspiring mind, having got many a fly formalist the reputation of a primitive and severe piety. South's Sermons.

FORMALITY. n. f. [formalité, French, from form.]

1. Ceremony; established mode of behaviour.
The attire, which the minister of God is by order to use at times of divine service, is but a matter of mere formality, yet such as for comeliness sake hath hitherto been judged not unnecessary. Hooker, b. v. f. 29.

Formalities of extraordinary zeal and piety are never more studied and elaborate than in desperate designs. King Charles.

Many a worthy man sacrifices his peace to formalities of compliment and good manners. L'Estrange, Fable 184.

Nor was his attendance on divine offices a matter of formality and custom, but of conscience. Atterbury's Sermons.

2. Solemn order, habit, or dress.
If men forswear the deeds and bonds they draw,
Though sign'd with all formality of law;
And though the signing and the seal proclaim
The barefac'd perjury, and fix the shame. Dryden's Juven.
The pretender would have infallibly landed in our northern parts, and found them all sat down in their formalities, as the Gauls did the Roman senators. Swift.

3. Essence; the quality by which any thing is what it is.
To fix on God the formality of faculties, or affections, is the imposture of our fancies, and contradictory to his divinity. Glanv. Sceps. c. 13.

May not a man vow to A. and B. that he will give a hundred pound to an hospital? Here the vow is made both to God and to A. and B. But here A. and B. are only witnesses to the vow; but the formality of the vow lies in the promise made to God. Stillingtonfleet's Def. of Disc. on Rom. Idol.

To FO'RMALIZE. v. a. [formaliser, French, from formal.]

1. To model; to modify. A word not now in use.
The same spirit which anointed the blessed soul of our Saviour Christ, doth so formalize, unite, and actuate his whole race, as if both he and they were so many limbs compacted into one body. Hooker, b. v. f. 56.

2. To affect formality; to be fond of ceremony.

FO'RMALLY. adv. [from formal.]
1. According to established rules, methods, ceremonies or rites.
Formally, according to our law,
Depose him. Shakespeare's Richard II.

2. Ceremoniously; stiffly; precisely.
To be stiff and formally reserved, as if the company did not deserve our familiarity, is a downright challenge of homage. Collier on Pride.

3. In open appearance; with visible and apparent show.
You and your followers do stand formally divided against the authorized guides of the church, and the rest of the people. Hooker.

4. Essentially; characteristically.
This power and dominion is not adequately and formally the image of God, but only a part of it. South's Sermons.

The Heathens and the Christians may agree in material acts of charity; but that which formally makes this a Christian grace, is the spring from which it flows. Smalridge's Sermons.

FORMA'TION. n. f. [formation, French, from formo, Latin.]

1. The act of forming or generating.
The matter discharged forth of vulcano's, and other spiracles, contributes to the formation of meteors. Woodward's Nat. Hist.

The solids are originally formed of a fluid, from a small point, as appears by the gradual formation of a foetus. Arbuth.

Complicated ideas, growing up under observation, give not the same confusion, as if they were all offered to the mind at once, without your observing the original and formation of them. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

2. The manner in which a thing is formed.
The chorion, a thick membrane obscuring the formation, the dam doth tear asunder. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

FORMATIVE. adj. [from formo, Latin.] Having the power of giving form; plaitick.

As we have established our assertion of the seminal production of all kinds of animals; so likewise we affirm, that the meanest plant cannot be raised without seed, by any formative power residing in the soil. Bentley's Sermons.

FORMER. n. s. [from frm.] He that forms; maker; contriver; planner.

The wonderful art and providence of the contriver and former of our bodies, appears in the multitude of intentions he must have in the formation of several parts for several uses. Ray on the Creation.

FORMER. adj. [from forma, Saxon, first; whence former, and formost now commonly written foremost, as if derived from before. Formost is generally applied to place, rank, or degree, and former only to time; for when we say, the last rank of the procession is like the former, we respect time rather than place, and mean that which we saw before, rather than that which had precedence in place]

1. Before another in time.

Thy air,

Thou other gold-bound brow, is like the first:

—A third is like the former. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

2. Mentioned before another.

A bad author deserves better usage than a bad critick: a man may be the former merely through the misfortune of an ill judgment; but he cannot be the latter without both that and an ill temper. Pope.

3. Past: as, this was the custom in former times.

FORMERLY. adv. [from former.] In times past.

The places mentioned were all of them formerly the cool retirements of the Romans, where they used to hide themselves among the woods and mountains, during the excessive heats of their Summer. Addison on Italy.

As an animal degenerates by diseases, the animal salts, formerly benign, approach towards an alkaline nature. Arbutnot.

FORMIDABLE. adj. [formidabilis, Latin; formidable, Fr.] Terrible; dreadful; tremendous; terrific; to be feared.

I swell my preface into a volume, and make it formidable, when you see so many pages behind. Dryden's A. n. Dedicat.

They seem'd to fear the formidable fight,

And roll'd their billows on, to speed his flight. Dryden.

FORMIDABLENESS. n. s. [from formidable.]

1. The quality of exciting terror or dread.

2. The thing causing dread.

They rather chuse to be shewed the formidableness of their danger, than, by a blind embracing it, to perish in it. Decay of Piety.

FORMIDABLY. adv. [from formidable] In a terrible manner.

Behold! e'en to remoter shores,

A conquering navy proudly spread;

The British cannon formidably roars. Dryden.

FORMLESS. adj. [from form.] Shapeless; without regularity of form.

All form is formless, order orderless,

Save what is opposite to England's love. Shakesp. K. John.

FORMULARY. n. s. [formulaire, French, from formule.] A book containing stated and prescribed models or set forms.

FORMULE. n. s. [formule, French; formula, Latin.] A set or prescribed model.

TO FORNIFICATE. v. a. [from fornix, Latin.] To commit lewdness.

It is a new way to fornicate at a distance. Brown's Vul. Err.

FORNICATION. n. s. [fornication, French; fornicatio, Latin.]

1. Concubinage or commerce with an unmarried woman.

Bless me! what a fry of fornication is at the door. Shakesp.

The law ought to be strict against fornications and adulteries; for, if there were universal liberty, the increase of mankind would be but like that of foxes at best. Graunt.

2. In Scripture, sometimes idolatry.

Thou didst trust in thine own beauty, and playedst the harlot, because of thy renown, and pouredst out thy fornications, on every one that passed by. Ezek. xvi. 15.

FORNICATOR. n. s. [fornicateur, French, from fornix, Latin.]

One that has commerce with unmarried women.

A fornicator or adulterer steals the soul as well as dishonours the body of his neighbour. Taylor's Rule of living holy.

FORNICATRESS. n. s. [from fornicator.] A woman who without marriage cohabits with a man.

See you the fornicatress be remov'd;

Let her have needful but not slavish means. Shakespeare.

TO FORSAKE. v. a. preter. forsook; part. pass. forsook, or forsoke. [versaken, Dutch.]

1. To leave in resentment, neglect, or dislike.

'I was now the time when first Saul God forsook,

God Saul; the room in's heart wild passions took. Cowley.

Orestes comes in time

To save your honour: Pyrrhus cools apace;

Prevent his falsehood, and forsake him first:

I know you hate him. A. Phillips's Distress'd Mother.

Daughter of Jove! whose arms in thunder wield

Th' avenging bolt, and shake the dreadful shield,

Forsook by thee, in vain I fought thy aid. Pope's Odyssey.

2. To leave; to go away from; to depart from.

Unwilling I forsook your friendly state,

Commanded by the gods, and forc'd by fate. Dryden's Aen.

3. To desert; to fail.

Truth, modesty, and shame the world forsook;

Fraud, avarice, and force their places took. Dryd. Ovid.

When ev'n the flying sails were seen no more,

7 heir purple majesty,

And all those outward shows which we call greatness,

Languish and droop, seem empty and forsoke,

And draw the wond'ring gazers eyes no more. Rowe.

FORSAKER. n. s. [from forsoke.] Deserter; one that forsakes.

Thou didst deliver us into the hands of lawless enemies, most hateful forsoakers of God. Apocrypha.

FORSOOTH. adv. [forsoðe, Saxon.]

1. In truth; certainly; very well. It is used almost always in an ironical or contemptuous sense.

Wherefore doth Lysander

Deny your love, so rich within his soul,

And tender me, forsooth, affection? Shakespeare.

A fit man, forsooth, to govern a realm, who had so goodly government in his own estate. Hayward.

Unlearned persons use such letters as justly express the power or sound of their speech; yet forsooth, we say, write not true English, or true French. Holder's Elem. of Speech.

In the East-Indies a widow, who has any regard to her character, throws herself into the flames of her husband's funeral pile, to shew, forsooth, that she is faithful to the memory of her deceased lord. Addison's Freeholder.

She would cry out murder, and disturb the whole neighbourhood; and when John came running down the stairs to enquire what the matter was, nothing, forsooth, only her maid had stuck a pin wrong in her gown. Arbutnot. Hist. of J. Bull.

Some question the genuineness of his books, because, forsooth, they cannot discover in them that fumen orationis that Cicero speaks of. Baker's Reflections on Learning.

2. It is supposed to have been once a word of honour in address to women. It is probable that an inferior, being called, shewed his attention by answering in the word yes, forsooth, which in time lost its true meaning; and instead of a mere exclamatory interjection, was supposed a compellation. It appears in Shakespeare to have been used likewise to men.

Our old English word forsooth has been changed for the French madam. Guardian.

TO FORSWEAR. v. a. pret. forsovere; part. forsover. [for-swæran, Saxon.]

1. To renounce upon oath.

I firmly vow

Never to wooe her more; but do forsovere her,

As one unworthy all the former favours,

That I have fondly flatter'd her withal. Shakespeare.

2. To deny upon oath.

And that self chain about his neck,

Which he forsovere most monstrously to have. Shakespeare.

Observe the wretch who hath his faith forsook,

How clear his voice, and how assur'd his look!

Like innocence, and as serenely bold

As truth, how loudly he forsovere thy gold! Dryd. Juven.

3. With the reciprocal pronoun: as, to forsovere himself; to be perjured; to swear falsely.

To leave my Julia, shall I be forsover?

To love fair Silvia, shall I be forsover?

To wrong my friend, shall I be much forsover?

And ev'n that power which gave me first my oath,

Provokes me to this threefold perjury. Shakespeare.

One says, he never should endure the sight

Of that forsover, that wrongs both land and laws. Daniel.

I too have sworn, ev'n at the altar sworn,

Eternal love and endless faith to Theseus;

And yet am false, forsover: the hallow'd shrine,

That heard me swear, is witness to my falsehood. Smith.

TO FORSWEAR. v. n. To swear falsely; to commit perjury.

Take heed; for he holds vengeance in his hand,

To hurl upon their heads that break his law.

—And that same vengeance doth hurl on thee,

For false forsovere, and for murder too. Shakesp. Rich. III.

FORSWEARER. n. s. [from forsovere.] One who is perjured.

FORT. n. s. [fort, French.] A fortified house; a castle.

They erected a fort, which they called the fort de l'or; and from thence they bolted like beasts of the forest. Bacon.

Now to their fort they are about to send

For the loud engines which their isle defend. Waller.

He that views a fort to take it,

Plants his artillery 'gainst the weakest part. Denham's Sophy.

My fury does, like jealous forts, pursue

With death, ev'n strangers who but come to view. Dryden.

FORTED. adj. [from fort.] Furnished or guarded by forts. Not used now.

F O R

Your desert speaks loud, and I should wrong
To lock it in the wards of covert bosom,
When it deserves with characters of brass
A forted residence, 'gainst the tooth of time
And rasure of oblivion. Shakesf. Measure for Measure.

FORTH. adv. [fopð, Saxon; whence further and furtherst.]

1. Forward; onward in time.

From that day forth I lov'd that face divine;
From that day forth I cast in careful mind
To seek her out. Fairy Queen, b. i. cant. 9.

When Winter past, and Summer scarce begun,
Invites them forth to labour in the sun. Dryden's Virg. Æn.

4. Out away; beyond the boundary of any place.

They will privily relieve their friends that are forth; they will send the enemy secret advertisements; and they will not also stick to draw the enemy privily upon them. Spenser.

Even that sunshine brew'd a show'r for him,
That wash'd his father's fortunes forth of France. Shakesp.

5. Out into publick state; publick view.

You may set fo th the same with farmhouses. Peacham.

But when your troubled country call'd you forth,
Your flaming courage, and your matchless worth,
To fierce contention gave a prosp'rous end. Waller.

6. Thoroughly; from beginning to end.

You, cousin,
Whom it concerns to hear this matter forth,
Do with your injuries as seems you best. Shakesp.

7. To a certain degree.

Hence we learn, how far forth we may expect justification and salvation from the sufferings of Christ; no further than we are wrought on by his renewing grace. Hammond.

8. On to the end.

I repeated the Ave Maria: the inquisitor bad me say f.rth;
I said I was taught no more. Memoir in Strype.

FORTH. prop. Out of.

And here's a prophet, that I brought with me
From forth the streets of Pomfret. Shakespeare.

Some forth their cabbins peep,
And trembling ask what news, and do hear so
As jealous husbands, what they would not know. Donne.

FORTHCOMING. adj. [forth and coming.] Ready to appear;
not absconding; not lost.

Carry this mad knave to jail: I charge you see that he be forthcoming. Shakespeare's Taming of the Shrew.

FORTHISSUING. adj. [forth and issue.] Coming out; coming forward from a covert.

Forthissuing thus, she gave him first to wield
A weighty axe, with truest temper steel'd,
And double edg'd. Pope's Odyssey, b. v.

FORTHRIGHT. adv. [forth and right.] Strait forward; without flexions.

He ever going so just with the horse, either forthright or turning, that it seemed as he borrowed the horse's body, so he lent the horse his mind. Sidney, b. ii.

The river not running forthright, but almost continually winding, as if the lower streams would return to their spring, or that the river had a delight to play with itself. Sidney, b. ii.

Arrived there, they pass'd in forthright;
For still to all the gate stood open wide. Fairy Queen, b. i.

Here's a maze trod, indeed,
Through forthrights and meanders. Shakespeare's Tempest.

Thither f.rthright he rode to rouse the prey,
That shaded by the fern in harbour lay,
And thence dislodg'd. Dryden's Knight's Tale.

FORTHWITH. adv. [forth and with.] Immediately; without delay; at once; strait.

Forthwith he runs, with feigned faithful haste,
Unto his guest; who, after troublous fights

And dreams, 'gan now to take more sound repast. Fa. Qu.

Few things are so restrained to any one end or purpose, that the same being extinct, they should forthwith utterly become frustrate. Hooker, b. v. f. 42.

Neither did the martial men dally or prosecute the service faintly, but did forthwith quench that fire. Davies on Ireland.

Forthwith began these fury-moving sounds,
The notes of wrath, the musick brought from hell,
The rattling drums. Daniel's Civil War.

The winged heralds, by command
Of sov'reign pow'r, throughout the host proclaim
A solemn council f.rthwith to be held At Pandæmonium. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. i.

F O R

In his passage thither one put into his hand a note of the whole conspiracy, desiring him to read it forthwith, and to remember the giver of it as long as he lived. South's Sermons.
FO'RTIETH. adj. [from forty.] The fourth tenth; next after the thirty-ninth.

What doth it avail

To be the fortieth man in an entail? Donne.

Burnet says, Scotland is not above a fortieth part in value to the rest of Britain; and, with respect to the profit that England gains from hence, not the forty thousandth part. Swift.

FO'RTIFIABLE. adj. [from fortify.] What may be fortified.

FORTIFICATION. n. f. [fortification, French, from fortify.]

1. The science of military architecture.

Fortification is an art shewing how to fortify a place with ramparts, parapets, moats, and other bulwarks; to the end that a small number of men within may be able to defend themselves, for a considerable time, against the assaults of a numerous army without; so that the enemy, in attacking them, must of necessity suffer great loss. It is either regular or irregular; and, with respect to time, may be distinguished into durable and temporary. Harris.

The Phœacians, tho' an unwarlike nation, yet understood the art of fortification. Notes on the Odyssey.

2. A place built for strength.

Excellent devices were used to make even their sports profitable; images, battles, and fortifications being then delivered to their memory, which, after stronger judgments, might dispense some advantage. Sidney, b. ii.

FO'RTIFIER. n. f. [from fortify.]

1. One who erects works for defence.

The fortifier of Pendennis made his advantage of the commodity afforded by the ground. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

2. One who supports or secures; one who upholds.

He was led forth by many armed men, who often had been the fortifiers of wickedness, to the place of execution. Sidney.

TO FO'RTIFY. v. a. [fortify, French.]

1. To strengthen against attacks by walls or works.

Great Dunfinane he strongly fortifies. Shakesf. Macbeth.

He fortified the city against besieging. Ecclef. l. 4.

2. To confirm; to encourage.

It greatly fortified her desires, to see that her mother had the like desires. Sidney, b. ii.

3. To fix; to establish in resolution.

But in-born worth that fortune can controul,

New-strung and stiffer bent her foster soul:

The heroine assum'd the woman's place,

Confirm'd her mind, and fortify'd her face. Dryden.

A young man, before he leaves the shelter of his father's house, should be fortified with resolution to secure his virtues. Locke.

FORTILAGE. n. f. [from fort.] A little fort; a blockhouse.

In all straits and narrow passages there should be some little fortilage, or wooden castle set, which should keep and command the strait. Spenser on Ireland.

FO'RTIN. n. f. [French.] A little fort raised to defend a camp, particularly in a siege. Hammer.

Thou hast talk'd

Of palisadoes, fortins, parapets. Shakesf. Henry IV. p. i.

FO'RTITUDE. n. f. [fortitudo, Latin.]

1. Courage; bravery; magnanimity; greatness of mind; power of acting or suffering well.

The king-becoming graces,

Devotion, patience, courage, fortitude,

I have no relish of them. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

The better fortitude

Of patience, and heroick martyrdom

Unfing. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ix.

Fortitude is the guard and support of the other virtues; and without courage, a man will scarce keep steady to his duty, and fill up the character of a truly worthy man. Locke.

2. Strength; force. Not in use.

He wrongs his fame,

Despairing of his own arm's fortitude,

To join with witches and the help of hell! Shakesf. H. VI.

FO'RTLET. n. f. [from fort.] A little fort.

FO'RTNIGHT. n. f. [contracted from fourteen nights, peoppe'tyne night, Saxon. It was the custom of the ancient northern nations to count time by nights: thus we say, this day seven- night. So Tacitus, Non dierum numerum ut nos, sed noctium computant.] The space of two weeks.

She would give her a lesson for walking so late, that should make her keep within doors for one fortnight. Sidney, b. ii.

Hanging in a deep well, somewhat above the water, for some fortnights space, is an excellent means of making drink fresh and quick. Bacon's Natural History.

About a fortnight before I had finished it, his majesty's declaration for liberty of conscience came abroad. Dryden.

He often had it in his head, but never, with much apprehension, 'till about a fortnight before. Swift.

FO'RTRESS. n. f. [forte'esse, French.] A strong hold; a fortified place; a castle of defence.

Breaking forth like a sudden tempest, he over-ran all, breaking down all the holds and fortresses. Spenser on Ireland.

The trump of death sounds in their hearing shrill;

Their weapon, faith; their fortresses was the grave. Fairfax.
God is our fortress, in whose conqu'ring name

Let us resolve to scale their flinty bulwarks. Shak. Hen. VI.

There is no such way to give defence to absurd doctrines, as to guard them round about with legions of obscure and undefined words; which yet makes these retreats more like the dens of robbers, or holes of foxes, than the fortresses of fair warriors. Locke.

FORTUITOUS. adj. [fortuit, French; fortuitus, Lat.] Accidental; casual; happening by chance.

A wonder then it must be, that there should be any man found so stupid as to persuade himself that this most beautiful world could be produced by the fortuitous concurrence of atoms. Ray on the Creation.

If casual concurrence did the world compose,

And things and acts fortuitous arose,

Then any thing might come from any thing;

For how from chance can constant order spring. Blackmore.

FORTUITOUSLY. adv. [from fortuitous.] Accidentally; casually; by chance.

It is partly evaporated into air, and partly diluted into water, and fortuitously shared between all the elements. Rogers.

FORTUITOUSNESS. n. f. [from fortuitous.] Accident; chance; hit.

FORTUNATE. adj. [fortunatus, Latin.] Lucky; happy; successful; not subject to miscarriage. Used of persons or actions.

I am most fortunate thus accidentally to encounter you: you have ended my business, and I will merrily accompany you home. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

He sigh'd; and could not but their fate deplore,

So wretched now, so fortunate before. Dryd. Knight's Tale.

No, there is a necessity in fate

Why still the brave bold man is fortunate:

He keeps his object ever full in sight,

And that assurance holds him firm and right:

'True, 'tis a narrow path that leads to bliss,

But right before there is no precipice;

Fear makes men look aside, and so their footing miss. Dry.

FORTUNATELY. adv. [from fortunate.] Happily; successfully.

Bright Eliza rul'd Britannia's state,

And boldly wise, and fortunately great. Prior.

FORTUNATENESS. n. f. [from fortunate.] Happiness; good luck; success.

O me, said she, whose greatest fortunateness is more unfortunate than my sister's greatest unfortunateness. Sidney, b. ii.

FORTUNE. n. f. [fortuna, Latin; fortune, French.]

1. The power supposed to distribute the lots of life according to her own humour.

Fortune, that arrant whore,

Ne'er turns the key to th' poor. Shakespeare's King Lear.

Though fortune's malice overthrow my state,

My mind exceeds the compass of her wheel. Shak. H. VI.

2. The good or ill that befalls man.

Rejoice, said he, to-day;

In you the fortune of Great Britain lies:

Among so brave a people you are they

Whom heav'n has chose to fight for such a prize. Dryden.

The adequate meaning of chance, as distinguished from fortune, in that the latter is understood to befall only rational agents, but chance to be among inanimate bodies. Bentley.

3. The chance of life; means of living.

His father dying, he was driven to London to seek his fortune. Swift.

4. Event; success good or bad.

This terrestrial globe has been surrounded by the fortune and boldness of many navigators. Temple.

No, he shall eat, and die with me, or live;

Our equal crimes shall equal fortune give. Dryd. Innocence.

5. Estate; possessions.

If thou do'st

As this instructs thee, thou do'st make thy way

To noble fortunes. Shakespeare's King Lear.

That eyeless head of thine was first fram'd flesh

To raise my fortunes. Shakespeare's King Lear.

But tell me, Tityrus, what heav'nly power

Preserv'd your fortunes in that fatal hour? Dryd. Virg. Past.

The fate which governs poets, thought it fit

He should not raise his fortunes by his wit. Dryden.

He was younger son to a gentleman of a good birth, but small fortune. Swift.

6. The portion of a man or woman: generally of a woman.

I am thought some heiress rich in lands,

Fled to escape a cruel guardian's hands;

Which may produce a story worth the telling,

Of the next sparks that go a fortune stealing. Prol. to Orphan.

The fortune hunters have already cast their eyes upon her, and take care to plant themselves in her view. Spectator.

When miss delights in her spinnet,

A fiddler may a fortune get. Swift.

7. Futurity; future events.

You who mens fortunes in their faces read,

To find out mine, look not, alas, on me:

But mark her face, and all the features heed;

For only there is writ my destiny. Cowley's Mistress.

TO FORTUNE. v. n. [from the noun.] To befall; to fall out; to happen; to come casually to pass.

It fortun'd, as fair it then befell,

Behind his back, unweeting, where he stood,

Of ancient time there was a springing well,

From which fast trickled forth a silver flood. Fairy Queen.

It fortun'd the same night that a Christian, serving a Turk in the camp, secretly gave the watchmen warning that the Turks prepared the next day to give a general assault. Knolles.

I'll tell you as we pass along,

That you will wonder what hath fortun'd. Shakespeare.

Here fortun'd Curl to slide. Pope's Dunciad.

FORTUNED. adj. Supplied by fortune.

Not th' imperious shew

Of the full fortun'd Cæsar ever shall

Be brook'd with me. Shakesp. Ant. and Cleopatra.

FORTUNEBOOK. n. f. [fortune and book.] A book consulted to know fortune or future events.

Thou know'st a face, in whose each look

Beauty lays ope love's fortunebook;

On whose fair revolutions wait

The obsequious motions of love's fate. Crashaw.

FORTUNEHUNTER. n. f. [fortune and hunt.] A man whose employment is to enquire after women with great portions to enrich himself by marrying them.

We must, however, distinguish between fortunehunters and fortunestealers. Spectator, N<sup>o</sup>. 312.

TO FORTUNETELL. v. n. [fortune and tell.]

1. To pretend to the power of revealing futurity.

We are simple men; we do not know what's brought to pass under the profession of fortunetelling. Shakespeare.

I'll conjure you, I'll fortunetell you. Shakespeare.

The gypsies were to divide the money got by stealing linen, or by fortunetelling. Walton's Angler.

2. To reveal futurity.

Here, while his canting drone-pipe scan'd

The mystick figures of her hand,

He tipples palmistry, and dines

On all her fortunetelling lines. Cleaveland.

FORTUNETELLER. n. f. [fortune and teller.] One who cheats common people by pretending to the knowledge of futurity.

They brought one Pinch, a hungry lean-fac'd villain,

A thread-bare juggler, and a fortuneteller. Shakespeare.

A Welchman being at a sessions-house, and seeing the prisoners hold up hands at the bar, related to some of his acquaintance that the judges were good fortunetellers; for if they did but look upon their hand, they could certainly tell whether they should live or die. Bacon's Apophthegms.

Hast thou given credit to vain predictions of men, to dreams or fortunetellers, or gone about to know any secret things by lot? Duppa's Rules for Devotion.

There needs no more than impudence on one side, and a superstitious credulity on the other, to the setting up of a fortuneteller. L'Estrange, Fable 94.

Long ago a fortuneteller

Exactly said what now befell her. Swift.

FORTY. adj. [feopertig, Saxon.] Four times ten.

On fair ground I could beat forty of them. Shak. Coriol.

He that upon levity quits his station, in hopes to be better,

'tis forty to one loses. L'Estrange.

FORUM. n. f. [Latin.] Any publick place.

The forum was a publick place in Rome, where lawyers and orators made their speeches before the proper judge in matters of property, or in criminal cases, to accuse or excuse, to complain or defend. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

Close to the bay great Neptune's fane adjoins,

And near a forum flank'd with marble shines,

Where the bold youth, the numerous fleets to store,

Shape the broad sail, or smooth the taper oar. Pope.

TO FORWA'NDER. v. a. [for and wander.] To wander wildly and wearily.

The better part now of the ling'ring day

They travelled had, when as they far espy'd

A weary wight forwand'ring by the way. Fairy Queen, b. i.

FORWARD. adv. [forpeard, Saxon.] Towards; to a part or place before; onward; progressively.

When fervent sorrow flaked was,

She up arose, resolving him to find

Alive or dead, and forward forth doth pass. Fairy Queen.

From smaller things the mind of the hearers may go forward to the knowledge of greater, and climb up from the lowest to the highest things. Hooker, b. v. f. 20.

He that is used to go forward, and findeth a stop, falleth of his own favour, and is not the thing he was. Bacon's Essays.

FORWARD.

FORWARD. adj. [from the adverb.]

1. Warm; earnest.

They would that we should remember the poor, which I also was forward to do. Gal. ii. 10.

2. Ardent; eager; hot; violent.

You'll still be too forward. Shakesp. Two Gent. of Verona.

Unskill'd to dart the pointed spear,

Or lead the forward youth to noble war. Prior.

3. Ready; confident; presumptuous.

Old Butes' form he took, Anchises' squire,

Now left to rule Ascanius by his fire;

And thus salutes the boy, too forward for his years. Dryd.

4. Not reserved; not over modest.

'Tis a per'ous boy,

Bold, quick, ingenious, forward, capable;

He's all the mother's from the top to toe. Shakesp. Rich. III.

5. Premature; early ripe.

Short Summer lightly has a forward Spring. Sh. R. III.

6. Quick; ready; hasty.

The mind makes not that benefit it should of the information it receives from civil or natural historians, in being too forward or too slow in making observations on the particular facts recorded in them. Locke.

Had they, who would persuade us that there are innate principles, considered separately the parts out of which these propositions are made, they would not perhaps have been so forward to believe they were innate. Locke.

7. Antecedent; anterior: opposed to posterior.

Let us take the instant by the forward top;

For we are old, and on our quick'nt decrees

Th' inaudible and noiseless foot of time

Steals, ere we can effect them. Shakespeare.

8. Not behindhand; not inferior.

My good Camillo,

She is as forward of her breeding, as

She is i' th' rear o' our birth. Shakesp. Winter's Tale.

TO FORWARD. v. a. [from the adverb.]

1. To hasten; to quicken; to accelerate in growth or improvement.

As we house hot country plants, as lemons, to save them; so we may house our own country plants to forward them, and make them come in the cold seasons. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

Whenever I shine,

I forward the grafts and I ripen the vine. Swift.

2. To patronise; to advance.

FORWARDER. n. s. [from forward.] He who promotes any thing.

FORWARDLY. adv. [from the adjective.] Eagerly; hastily; quickly.

The sudden and surprising turns we ourselves have felt, should not suffer us too forwardly to admit presumption. Atter.

FORWARDNESS. n. s. [from forward.]

1. Eagerness; ardour; readiness to act.

Absolutely we cannot discommend, we cannot absolutely approve either willingness to live, or forwardness to die. Hook.

Is it so strange a matter to find a good thing furthered by ill men of a sinister intent and purpose, whose forwardness is not therefore a bridle to such as favour the same cause with a better and sincere meaning. Hooker, b. iv. f. 9.

If the great ones were in forwardness, the people were in fury, entertaining this airy phantasm with incredible affection. Bacon's Henry VII.

2. Quickness; readiness.

He had such a dextrous proclivity, as his teachers were fain to restrain his forwardness; to the end that his brothers, who were under the same training, might hold pace with him. Wotton.

3. Earliness; early ripeness.

4. Confidence; assurance; want of modesty.

In France it is usual to bring their children into company, and to cherish in them, from their infancy, a kind of forwardness and assurance. Addison on Italy.

FORWARDS. adv. Straight before; progressively.

The Rhodian ship passed through the whole Roman fleet, backwards and forwards several times, carrying intelligence to Drepanum. Arbutnot on Coins.

FO'SSET. See FAUCET.

FO'SSEWAY. n. s. [fosse and way.] One of the great Roman inroads through England, so called from the ditches on each side.

FOSSIL. adj. [fossilis, Latin; fossile, French.] That which is dug out of the earth.

The fossil shells are many of them of the same kinds with those that now appear upon the neighbouring shores; and the rest such as may be presumed to be at the bottom of the adjacent seas. Woodward's Natural History.

Fossil or rock salt, and sal gemm, differ not in nature from each other; nor from the common salt of salt springs, or that of the sea, when pure. Woodward's Natural History.

It is of a middle nature, between fossil and animal, being produced from animal excrements, intermixed with vegetable salts. Arbutnot on Aliments.

FOSSIL. n. s.

In this globe are many other bodies, which, because we discover them by digging into the bowels of the earth, are called by one common name fossils; under which are comprehended metals and minerals. Locke.

Many kinds of fossils are very oddly and elegantly shaped.

Bentley's Sermons.

By the word fossil, used as a denomination of one of three general divisions of natural productions, we understand bodies formed usually within the earth, sometimes on its surface, and sometimes in waters; of a plain and simple structure, in which there is no visible difference of parts, no distinction of vessels and their contents, but every portion of which is similar to and perfect as the whole. Hill's Mat. Med.

TO FOSTER. v. a. [from for and trian, Saxon.]

1. To nurse; to feed; to support; to train up.

Thy threat'ning colours now wind up,

And tame the savage spirit of wild war;

That, like a lion foster'd up at hand,

It may lie gently at the foot of peace. Shakesp. King John.

Some say that ravens foster forlorn children. Shakespeare.

Our kingdom's earth should not be foil'd

With that dear blood, which it hath fostered. Shakesp. R. II.

That base wretch,

Bred on alms, and foster'd with cold dishes,

With scraps o' th' court. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

Fostering has always been a stronger alliance than blood. Davies on Ireland.

No more let Ireland brag her harmless nation

Fosters no venom, since that Scots plantation. Cleaveland.

The son of Mulciber,

Found in the fire, and foster'd in the plains;

A shepherd and a king at once he reigns. Dryd. Æn. b. vii.

2. To pamper; to encourage.

A prince of great courage and beauty, but fostered up in blood by his naughty father. Sidney, b. iii.

3. To cherish; to forward.

Ye fostering breezes, blow;

Ye softening dews, ye tender showers descend. Thomson.

FOSTERAGE. n. s. [from foster.] The charge of nursing; alterage.

Some one adjoining to this lake had the charge and fosterage of this child, who being, perchance, but some base and obscure creature, was cast from the top of her temple into the lake adjoining; and, as the poets have feigned, changed by Venus into a fish, all but her face. Raleigh's History.

FOSTERBROTHER. n. s. [from for and trian, Saxon.] One bred at the same pap; one fed by the same nurse.

FOSTERCHILD. n. s. [from for and trian, Saxon.] A child nursed by a woman not the mother, or bred by a man not the father.

The fosterchildren do love and are beloved of their foster-fathers. Davies on Ireland.

The goddess thus beguil'd,

With pleasant stories, her false fosterchild. Addis. Ov. Met.

FOSTERDAM. n. s. [from foster and dam.] A nurse; one that performs the office of a mother by giving food to a young child.

There, by the wolf, were laid the martial twins:

Intrepid on her swelling dugs they hung;

The fosterdam loll'd out her fawning tongue. Dryden's Æn.

FOSTEREARTH. n. s. [from foster and earth.] Earth by which the plant is nourished, though it did not grow at first in it.

In vain, the nursing grove

Seems fair a while, cherish'd with fosterearth;

But when the alien compost is exhaust,

Its native poverty again prevails!

Phillips.

FOSTERER. n. s. [from foster.] A nurse; one who gives food in the place of a parent.

It hath been observed by several, that the surface of the earth hath been broke, and the parts of it dislocated; but more particularly several parcels of nature retain still the evident marks of fraction and ruin. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

2. A broken part of an integral.

Neither the motion of the moon, whereby months are computed, nor the sun, whereby years are accounted, consisteth of whole numbers, but admits of fractions and broken parts. *Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iv. c. 13.*Pliny put a round number near the truth, rather than a fraction. *Arbutnot on Coins.FRA'CTIONAL. adj. [from fraction.] Belonging to a broken number.We make a cypher the medium between increasing and decreasing numbers, commonly called absolute or whole numbers, and negative or fractional numbers. *Cocker's Arithmetick.FRA'CTURE. n. f. [fractura, Latin.]

1. Breach; separation of continuous parts.

That may do it without any great fracture of the more stable and fixed parts of nature, or the infringement of the laws thereof. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

2. The separation of the continuity of a bone in living bodies.

But thou wilt sin and grief destroy,

That so the broken bones may joy,

And tune together in a well-set song,

Full of his praises,

Who dead men raises;

Fractures well cur'd, make us more strong.Herbert.Fractures

Fractures of the skull are dangerous, not in consequence of the injury done to the cranium itself, but as the brain becomes affected. Sharp's Surgery.

TO FRACTURE. v. a. [from the noun.] To break a bone.

The leg was dressed, and the fractured bones united together. Wise's Surgery.

FRA'GILE. adj. [fragile, French; fragilis, Latin.]

1. Brittle; easily snapped or broken.

To ease them of their griefs,

Their pangs of love, and other incident throes;

That nature's fragile vessel doth sustain

In life's uncertain voyage.

Shakespeare's Timon.

The stalk of ivy is tough, and not fragile. Bacon's N. Hist.

When subtle wits have spun their threads too fine,

'Tis weak and fragile, like Arachne's line.

Denham.

A dry stick will be easily broken, when a green one will maintain a strong resistance; and yet in the moist substance there is less rest than in what is drier and more fragile. Glanv.

2. Weak; uncertain; easily destroyed.

Much ostentation, vain of fleshly arms,

And fragile arms, much instrument of war,

Long in preparing, soon to nothing brought,

Before mine eyes thou'lt set. Milton's Paradise Regain'd.

FRAGILITY. n. f. [from fragile.]

1. Brittleness; easiness to be broken.

To make an induration with toughness, and less fragility, decoct bodies in water for two or three days. Bacon's N. Hist.

2. Weakness; uncertainty; easiness to be destroyed.

Fearing the uncertainty of man's fragility, the common chance of war, the violence of fortune. Knolles's History.

3. Frailty; lability to fault.

All could not be right, in such a state, in this lower age of fragility. Wotton.

FRA'GMENT. n. f. [fragmentum, Latin.] A part broken from the whole; an imperfect piece.

He who late a sceptre did command,

Now grasps a floating fragment in his hand.

Dryden.

Cowley, in his unfinished fragment of the Davids, has shewn us this way to improvement. Watts's Improvement.

If a thinned or plated body, which, being of an even thickness, appears all over of one uniform colour, should be slit into threads, or broken into fragments of the same thickness with the plate, I see no reason why every thread or fragment should not keep its colour. Newton's Opt.

FRA'GMENTARY. adj. [from fragment.] Composed of fragments. A word not elegant, nor in use.

She, she is gone; she's gone: when thou know'lt this,

What fragmentary rubbish this world is,

Thou know'lt, and that it is not worth a thought;

He knows it too too much that thinks it nought. Donne.

FRA'GOR. n. f. [Latin.] A noise; a crack; a crash.

Pursu'd by hideous fragors, as before

The flames descend, they in their breaches roar. Sandys.

FRA'GRANCE. n. f. [fragrantia, Lat.] Sweetness of smell;

FRA'GRANCY. n. f. [from fragrant.] pleasing scent; grateful odour.

Eve separate he spies,

Veil'd in a cloud of fragrance, where she stood

Half-spy'd.

Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ix.

I am more pleas'd to survey my rows of coleworts and cabbages springing up in their full fragrancy and verdure, than to see the tender plants of foreign countries kept alive by artificial heats. Addison's Spectator, N<sup>o</sup>. 47.

Not lovelier seem'd Narcissus to the eye;

Nor, when a flower, could boast more fragrancy. Garth.

Such was the wine; to quench whose fervent steam

Scarce twenty measures from the living stream

To cool one cup suffic'd: the goblet crown'd,

Breath'd aromatick fragrancies around. Pope's Odyssey, b. ix.

FRA'GRANT. adj. [fragrans, Latin.] Odorous; sweet of smell.

The nymph vouchsaf'd to place

Upon her head the various wreath:

The flow'rs, less blooming than her face;

Their scent, less fragrant than her breath.

Prior.

FRA'GRANTLY. adv. [from fragrant.] With sweet scent.

As the hops begin to change colour, and smell fragrantly, you may conclude them ripe. Mortimer's Husbandry.

FRAIL. n. f.

1. A basket made of rushes.

2. A rush for weaving baskets.

FRAIL. adj. [fragilis, Latin.]

1. Weak; easily decaying; subject to casualties; easily destroyed.

I know my body's of so frail a kind,

As force without, fevers within can kill.

Davies.

When with care we have rais'd this imaginary treasure of happiness, we find, at last, that the materials of the structure are frail and perishing, and the foundation itself is laid in the sand. Rogers, Sermon 5.

2. Weak of resolution; liable to error or seduction.

The truly virtuous do not easily credit evil that is told them of their neighbours; for if others may do amiss, then may these also speak amiss: man is frail, and prone to evil, and therefore may soon fail in words. Taylor's Guide to Devotion.

FRA'ILNESS. n. f. [from frail.] Weakness; instability.

There is nothing among all the frailnesses and uncertainties of this sublunary world so tottering and unstable as the virtue of a coward. Norris.

FRA'ILTY. n. f. [from frail.]

1. Weakness of resolution; instability of mind; infirmity.

Though Page be a secure fool, and stands so firmly on his wife's frailty, yet I cannot put off my opinion so easily. Shak.

Nor should'st thou have trusted that to woman's frailty:

Ere I to thee, thou to thyself wast cruel. Milton's Agonistes.

God knows our frailty, pities our weakness, and requires of us no more than we are able to do. Locke.

2. Fault proceeding from weakness; sins of infirmity.

Love did his reason blind;

And love's the noblest frailty of the mind. Dryd. Ind. Emp.

Kind wits will those light faults excuse;

Those are the common frailties of the muse. Dryden.

Death, only death, can break the lasting chain;

And here, ev'n then, shall my cold dust remain;

Here all its frailties, all its flames resign,

And wait, 'till 'tis no sin to mix with thine. Pope.

FRAISCHEUR. n. f. [French.] Freshness; coolness. A word foolishly innovated by Dryden.

Hither in Summer-ev'nings you repair,

To taste the fraîsheur of the purer air. Dryden.

FRAISE. n. f. [French, the caul of an animal.] A pancake with bacon in it.

TO FRAME. v. a.

1. To form or fabricate by orderly construction and union of various parts.

The double gates he findeth locked fast;

The one fair fram'd of burnish'd ivory,

The other all with silver overcast. Spenser.

2. To fit one to another.

They rather cut down their timber to frame it, and to do other such necessities to their convenient use, than to fight.

Abbot's Description of the World.

Hew the timber, saw it out, frame it, and set it together.

Mortimer's Husbandry.

3. To make; to compose.

Then chusing out few words most horrible;

Thereof did verses frame.

Spenser.

Fight valiantly to-day;

And yet I do thee wrong to mind thee of it;

For thou art fram'd of the firm truth of valour. Shakespeare.

4. To regulate; to adjust.

Let us not deceive ourselves by pretending to this excellent knowledge of Christ Jesus our Lord, if we do not frame our lives according to it. Tillotson.

5. To form to any rule or method by study or precept.

Thou art their soldier, and, being bred in broils,

Hast not the soft way; but thou wilt frame

Thyself forsooth hereafter theirs. Shakespeare. Coriolanus.

I have been a truant to the law;

I never yet could frame my will to it,

And therefore frame the law unto my will. Shakespeare. H. VI.

6. To form and digest by thought.

The most abstruse ideas are only such as the understanding frames to itself, by joining together ideas that it had either from objects of sense, or from its own operations about them. Locke.

Full of that flame his tender scenes he warms,

And frames his goddess by your matchless charms. Glanv.

Urge him with truth to frame his sure replies;

And sure he will; for wisdom never lies. Pope's Odyssey.

How many excellent reasonings are framed in the mind of a man of wisdom and study in a length of years? Watts.

7. To contrive; to plan.

Unpardonable the presumption and insolence in contriving and framing this letter was. Clarendon, b. viii.

8. To settle; to scheme out.

Though I cannot make true wars,

I'll frame convenient peace. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

9. To invent; to fabricate, in a bad sense: as, to frame a story or lie.

Astronomers, to solve the phenomena, framed to their conceit eccentricks and epicycles. Bacon.

FRAME. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A fabrick; any thing constructed of various parts or members.

If the frame of the heavenly arch should dissolve itself, if celestial spheres should forget their wonted motions, and by irregular volubility turn themselves any way, as it might happen. Hooker, b. i. f. 3.

Castles made of trees upon frames of timber, with turrets and arches, were anciently matters of magnificence. Bacon.

These are thy glorious works, parent of good!

Almighty! thine this universal frame. Milt. Parad. Lost.

Divine Cecilia came,

Inventress of the vocal frame.

Dryden.

The gate was adamant; eternal frame,
Which, hew'd by Mars himself, from Indian quarries came,
The labour of a god; and all along
Tough iron plates were clench'd to make it strong. Dryd.
We see this vast frame of the world, and an innumerable multitude of creatures in it; all which we, who believe a God, attribute to him as the author. Tillotson, Sermon 1.

2. Any thing made so as to inclose or admit something else.

Put both the tube and the vessel it leaned on into a convenient wooden frame, to keep them from mischances. Boyle.
His picture scarcely would deserve a frame. Dryden's Juvenal.

A globe of glass, about eight or ten inches in diameter, being put into a frame where it may be swiftly turned round its axis, will, in turning, shine, where it rubs against the palm of one's hand. Newton's Opt.

3. Order; regularity; adjusted series or disposition.

A woman, that is like a German clock,
Still a repairing, ever out of frame,
And never going aright.

Shakespeare.

Your stiddy soul preserves her frame;
In good and evil times the same.

Swift.

4. Scheme; order.

Another party did resolve to change the whole frame of the government in state as well as church. Clarendon.

5. Contrivance; projection.

John the Bastard,

Whose spirits toil in frame of villanies.

Shakespeare.

6. Mechanical construction.

7. Shape; form; proportion.

A bear's a savage beast,
Whelp'd without form, until the dam
Has lick'd it into shape and frame.

Hudibras.

FRA'MER. n. f. [from frame; framman, Saxon.] Maker; former; contriver; schemer.

The forger of his own fate, the framer of his fortune, should be improper, if all his actions were predetermined.

Hammond's Fundamentals.

There was want of accurateness in experiments in the first original framer of those medals. Arbuthnot on Coins.

FRA'MPOLD. n. f. [This word is written by Dr. Hacket frampul. I know not its original.] Peevish; boisterous; rugged; crossgrained.

Her husband! Alas, the sweet woman leads an ill life with him: she leads a very frampold life with him. Shakespeare.

The frampul man could not be pacified.

Hacket's Life of Williams.

FRANCHISE. n. f. [franchise, French.]

1. Exemption from any onerous duty.

2. Privilege; immunity; right granted.

They granted them markets, and other franchises, and erected corporate towns among them. Davies on Ireland.

His gracious edict the same franchise yields.

To all the wild increase of woods and fields.

Dryden.

3. District; extent of jurisdiction.

There are other privileges granted unto most of the corporations, that they shall not be travelled forth of their own franchises. Spenser's State of Ireland.

To FRANCHISE. v. a. [from the noun.] To enfranchise; to make free; to keep free.

I lose no honour

In seeking to augment it; but still keep

My bosom franchis'd, and allegiance clear. Shak. Macbeth.

FRA'NGIBLE. adj. [frango, Latin.] Fragile; brittle; easily broken.

Though it seem the solidest wood, if wrought before it be well seasoned, it will shew itself very frangible. Boyle.

FRA'NION. n. f. [Of this word I know not the derivation.] A paramour; a boon companion.

First, by her side did sit the bold Sansloy,

Fit mate for such a mincing minion,

Who in her looseness took exceeding joy,

Might not be found a franker franion. Fairy Queen, b. ii.

FRANK. adj. [franc, French.]

1. Liberal; generous; not niggardly.

The moister sorts of trees yield little moss, which is for the reason of the frank putting up of the sap into the boughs.

Bacon's Natural History.

They were left destitute, either by narrow provision, or by their frank hearts and their open hands, and their charity towards others. Spratt's Sermons.

'Tis the ordinary practice of the world to be frank of civilities that cost them nothing. L'Estrange.

2. Open; ingenuous; sincere; not reserved.

3. Without conditions; without payment.

Thou hast it won; for it is of frank gift,

And he will care for all the rest to shift. Hubbard's Tale.

4. Not restrained; licentious.

Might not be found a franker franion.

Spenser.

FRANK. n. f. [from the adjective.]

1. A place to feed hogs in; a sty: so called from liberality of food.

Where sups here? Doth the old boar feed in the old frank? Shakespeare's Henry IV.

You'll have immediately, by several franks, my epistle to lord Cobham. Pope to Swift.

3. A French coin.

To FRANK. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To shut up in a frank or sty. Hammer.

Tell Richmond this from me,

That in the sty of this most bloody boar,

My son George Stanly is frank'd up in hold:

If I revolt, off goes young George's head. Shak. Rich. III.

2. To feed high; to fat; to cram. Junius and Ainsworth.

3. [From the adjective.] To exempt letters from postage.

My lord Orrery writes to you to-morrow; and you see I send this under his cover, or at least franked by him. Swift.

Gazettes sent gratis down, and frank'd,

For which thy patron's weekly thank'd.

Pope.

FRANKALMOI'GNE. n. f. The same which we in Latin call libera eleemosyna, or free alms in English; whence that tenure is commonly known among our English lawyers by the name of a tenure in frank aumone, or frankalmoigne, which, according to Britton, is a tenure by divine service. Ayliffe's Parerg.

FRA'NKINCENSE. n. f. [frank and incense; so called perhaps from its liberal distribution of odour.]

Frankincense is a dry resinous substance in pieces or drops, of a pale yellowish white colour; a strong smell, but not disagreeable, and a bitter, acrid, and resinous taste. It is very inflammable. The earliest histories inform us, that frankincense was used among the sacred rites and sacrifices, as it still continues to be in many different parts of the world. As well however as the world has at all times been acquainted with the drug itself, we are still uncertain as to the place whence frankincense is brought, and much more so as to the tree which produces it. It is commended against disorders in the head and breast, and against diarrhoeas and dysenteries. Hill.

Take unto thee sweet spices, with pure frankincense. Exod.

I find in Dioscorides record of frankincense gotten in India. Brerewood on Languages.

Black ebony only will in India grow,

And od'rous frankincense on the Sabæan bough. Dryd. Virg.

Cedar and frankincense, an od'rous pile,

Flam'd on the hearth, and wide perfum'd the isle. Pope.

FRA'NKLIN. n. f. [from frank.] A steward; a bailiff of land. It signifies originally a little gentleman, and is not improperly Englished a gentleman servant.

A spacious court they see,

Both plain and pleasant to be walked in,

Where them does meet a franklin fair and free. Fai. Queen.

FRA'NKLY. adv. [from frank.]

1. Liberally; freely; kindly; readily.

Oh, were it but my life,

I'd throw it down for your deliverance,

As frankly as a pin. Shakespeare's Measure for Measure.

If ever any malice in your heart

Were hid against me, now forgive me frankly. Sh. H. VIII.

When they had nothing to pay, he frankly forgave them both. Lu. vii. 42.

By the toughness of the earth the sap cannot get up to spread so frankly as it should do. Bacon's Natural History.

I value my garden more for being full of blackbirds than cherries, and very frankly give them fruit for their songs. Spect.

2. Without constraint; without reserve.

The lords mounted their servants upon their own horses; and they, with the volunteers, who frankly lifted themselves, amounted to a body of two hundred and fifty horse. Clarend.

He entered very frankly into those new designs, which were contrived at court. Clarendon, b. viii.

FRA'NKNESS. n. f. [from frank.]

1. Plainness of speech; openness; ingenuoufness.

When the conde duke had some eclairsissement with the duke, in which he made all the protestations of his sincere affection, the other received his protestations with all contempt; and declared, with a very unnecessary frankness, that he would have no friendship with him. Clarendon.

Tom made love to a woman of sense, and always treated her as such during the whole time of courtship: his natural temper and good breeding hindered him from doing any thing disagreeable, as his sincerity and frankness of behaviour made him converse with her before marriage in the same manner he intended to do afterwards. Addison's Guardian.

2. Liberality; bounteousness.

3. Freedom from reserve.

Upon occasion of the pictures present, he delivered with the frankness of a friend's tongue, as near as he could, word by word, what Kalander had told him touching the strange story. Sidney.

The ablest men that ever were, have had all an openness and frankness of dealing, and a name of certainty and veracity. Bacon, Essay 6.

FRANKPLEDGE. n. f. [franciplegium, Latin, of franc, i. e. liber & pleige, i. e. filii iussor.] A pledge or surety for freedom. For the ancient custom of England, for the preservation of the publick peace, was that every freeborn man at fourteen years of age, religious persons, clerks, knights and their eldest sons excepted, should find security for his fidelity to the king, or else be kept in prison: whence it became customary for a certain number of neighbours to be bound for one another, to see each man of their pledge forthcoming at all times, or to answer the transgression of any one absenting himself. This was called frankpledge, and the circuit thereof was called decenna, because it commonly consisted of ten households; and every particular person, thus mutually bound, was called decennier. This custom was so strictly observed, that the sheriffs, in every county, did from time to time take the oaths of young ones as they grew to the age of fourteen years, and see that they combined in one dozen or other: whereupon this branch of the sheriff's authority was called visus franciplegii, view of frankpledge. Cowel.

FRANTICK. adj. [corrupted from phrenetick, phreneticus, Latin; Φρενῆτικος.]

1. Mad; deprived of understanding by violent madness; outrageously and turbulently mad.

Far off, he wonders what makes them so glad;
Of Bacchus merry fruit they did invent,
Or Cebel's frantick rites have made them mad. Fairy Queen.

2. Transported by violence of passion; outrageous; turbulent. Esteeming, in the frantick error of their minds, the greatest madness in the world to be wisdom, and the highest wisdom foolishness. Hooker, b. iii. f. 8.

The lover, frantick,
Sees Helen's beauty in a brow of Egypt. Shakespeare.
To such height their frantick passion grows,
That what both love, both hazard to destroy. Dryden.
She tears her hair, and, frantick in her griefs, Calls out Lucia. Addison's Cato.

FRANTICKLY. adv. [from frantick.] Madly; outrageously.

Fie, fie, how frantickly I square my talk! Shakespeare.

FRANTICKNESS. n. f. [from frantick.] Madness; fury of passion.

FRATERNAL. adj. [fraternel, French; fraternus, Latin.] Brotherly; pertaining to brothers; becoming brothers.

One shall rise
Of proud ambitious heart; who, not content
With fair equality, fraternal state,
Will arrogate dominion undeserv'd,
Over his brethren. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xii.

The admonitions, fraternal or paternal, of his fellow Christians, or of the governors of the church, then more publick reprehensions; and upon their unsuccessfulness, the censures of the church, until he reform and return. Hammond's Fundam.

Plead it to her,
With all the strength and heats of eloquence
Fraternal love and friendship can inspire. Addison's Cato.

Government of the Tongue.

2. [frayer, French.] To rub.

FREAK. n. f. [freh, German; saucy, petulant; fræc, Saxon, fugitive.]

1. A sudden and causeless change of place.

2. A sudden fancy; a humour; a whim; a capricious prank.

O! but I fear the fickle freaks, quoth she,

Of fortune, and the odds of arms in field. Fairy Queen.

When that freak has taken possession of a fantastical head, the distemper is incurable. L'Estrange, Fable 100.

She is so restless and peevish that she quarrels with all about her, and sometimes in a freak will instantly change her habitation. Spectator, N<sup>o</sup>. 427.

F R E

To vex me more, he took a freak
 To slit my tongue, and make me speak. Swift.
 To FREAK. v. a. [A word, I suppose, Scotch, brought into England by Thomson.] To variegate; to checquer.
 There furry nations harbour:
 Sables of glossy black, and dark embrown'd,
 Or beauteous, freak'd with many a mingled hue. Thomson.
 FRE'AKISH. adj. [from freak.] Capricious; humourfome.
 It may be a question, whether the wife or the woman was the more freakish of the two; for she was still the same uneasy
 fop. L'Estrange, Fable 173.
 FRE'AKISHLY. adv. [from freakish.] Capriciously; humour-somely.
 FRE'AKISHNESS. n. f. [from freakish.] Capriciousness; humourfomness; whimsicalness.
 To FREAM. v. n. [fremere, Lat. fremir, French.] To growl or grunt as a boar. Bailey.
 FRE'CKLE. n. f. [flech, a spot, German; whence fleckle,
freckle.]
 1. A spot raised in the skin by the sun.
 Ruddy his lips, and fresh and fair his hue;
 Some sprinkled freckles on his face were seen,
 Whose dusk set off the whiteness of the skin. Dryden.
 2. Any small spot or discoloration.
 The cowslips tall her pensioners be;
 In their gold coats spots you see:
 Those be rubies fairy favours;
 In those freckles live their favours. Sh. Midf. Night's Dream.
 The farewell frosts and easterly winds now spot your tulips;
 therefore cover such with mats, to prevent freckles. Evelyn.
 FRE'CKLED. adj. [from freckle.] Spotted; maculated; discoloured with small spots.
 Sometimes we'll angle at the brook,
 The freckled trout to take
 With silken worms. Drayton's Cynthia.
 The even mead, that erst brought sweetly forth
 The freckled cowslip,
 Wanting the scythe, all uncorrected, rank,
 Conceive by idleness. Shakespeare's Henry V.
 Now thy face charms ev'ry shepherd,
 Spotted over like a leopard;
 And, thy freckled neck display'd,
 Envy breeds in ev'ry maid. Swift.
 FRE'CKLY. adj. [from freckle.] Full of freckles.
 FRED. The same with peace; upon which our forefathers called their sanctuaries fredstole, i. e. the seats of peace. So Frederic is powerful, or wealthy in peace; Winfred, victorious peace; Reinfred, sincere peace. Gibson's Camden.
 FREE. adj. [freah, Saxon; vry, Dutch.]
 1. At liberty; not a vassal; not enslaved; not a prisoner; not dependant.
 Do faithful homage, and receive free honours,
 All which we pine for now. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
 A free nation is that which has never been conquered, or thereby entered into any conditions of subjection. Temple.
Free, what, and fetter'd with so many chains? Dryden.
 How can we think any one freer than to have the power to do what he will? Locke.
 This wretched body trembles at your pow'r:
 Thus far could fortune; but she can no more:
Free to herself my potent mind remains,
 Nor fears the victor's rage, nor feels his chains. Prior.
 Set an unhappy pris'ner free,
 Who ne'er intended harm to thee. Prior.
 2. Uncompelled; unrestrained.
 Their use of meats was not like unto our ceremonies, that being a matter of private action in common life, where every man was free to order that which himself did; but this is a publick constitution for the ordering of the church. Hooker.
 It was free, and in my choice whether or no I should publish these discourses; yet the publication being once resolved, the dedication was not so indifferent. South.
 3. Not bound by fate; not necessitated.
 Freely they stood who stood, and fell who fell:
 Not free, what proof could they have giv'n sincere
 Of true allegiance, constant faith, or love,
 Where only what they needs must do, appear'd;
 Not what they would? Milton's Paradise Lost, b. iii.
 4. Permitted; allowed.
 Why, sir, I pray, are not the streets as free
 For me as for you? Shakesp. Taming of the Shrew.
 Defaming as impure what God declares
 Pure; and commands to some, leaves free to all. Milton.
 5. Licentious; unrestrained.
 O conspiracy!
 Sham'st thou to shew thy dang'rous brow by night,
 When evils are most free? Shak. Julius Caesar.
 Physicians are too free upon the subject, in the conversation of their friends. Temple.
 The critics have been very free in their censures. Felton.
 I know there are to whose presumptuous thoughts
 Those freer beauties, ev'n in them, seem faults. Pope.

F R E

6. Open; ingenious.
 'Tis not to make me jealous;
 To say my wife is fair, feeds well, loves company,
 Is free of speech, sings, plays, and dances well,
 Where virtue is, these make more virtuous. Shak. Othello.
 Castlio, I have doubts within my heart;
 Will you be free and candid to your friend? Otway's Orph.
 7. Acquainted; conversing without reserve.
 Being one day very free at a great feast, he suddenly broke forth into a great slaughter. Hakewill on Providence.
Free and familiar with misfortune grow,
 Be us'd to sorrow, and inur'd to woe. Prior.
 8. Liberal; not parsimonious.
 Glo'ter too, a foe to citizens,
 O'ercharging your free purses with large fines,
 That seeks to overthrow religion. Shakespeare's Henry IV.
 No statute in his favour says,
 How free or frugal I shall pass my days;
 I, who at sometimes spend as others spare. Pope's Horace.
 Alexandrian verses, of twelve syllables, should never be allowed but when some remarkable beauty or propriety in them atones for the liberty: Mr. Dryden has been too free of these in his latter works. Pope.
 9. Frank; not gained by importunity; not purchased.
 We wanted words to express our thanks: his noble free offers left us nothing to ask. Bacon's New Atlantis.
 10. Clear from distress.
 Who alone suffers, suffers most i' th' mind,
 Leaving free things and happy shows behind. Shak. K. Lear.
 11. Guiltless; innocent.
 Make mad the guilty, and appall the free,
 Confound the ign'rant. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
 My hands are guilty, but my heart is free. Dryden.
 12. Exempt.
 These
 Are such allow'd infirmities, that honesty
 Is never free of. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.
 Who fears not to do ill, yet fears the name;
 And free from conscience, is a slave to fame. Denham.
 Let envy, then, those crimes within you see,
 From which the happy never must be free. Dryden.
 Their steeds around,
Free from the harness, graze the flow'ry ground. Dryden.
 The will, free from the determination of such desires, is left to the pursuit of nearer satisfactions. Locke.
 13. Invested with franchises; possessing any thing without vassalage; admitted to the privileges of any body.
 He therefore makes all birds of every sect
Free of his farm, with promise to respect
 Their several kinds alike, and equally protect. Dryden.
 Friend!
 What do'st thou make a shipboard? To what end
 Art thou of Bethlem's noble college free?
 Stark-staring mad, that thou shou'd'st tempt the sea? Dryd.
 14. Without expence; by charity, as a free school.
 To FREE. v. a. [from the adjective.]
 1. To set at liberty; to rescue from slavery or captivity; to manumit; to loose.
 The child was prisoner to the womb, and is
 By law and process of great nature thence Free'd and enfranchis'd; not a party to
 The anger of the king, nor guilty of,
 If any be, the trespass of the queen. Shakesp. Winter's Tale.
 He recovered the temple, free'd the city, and upheld the laws which were going down. 2 Mac. ii. 22.
 Can'st thou no other master understand,
 Than him that free'd thee by the pretor's wand? Dryden.
 Should thy coward tongue
 Spread its cold poison through the martial throng,
 My jav'lin shall revenge so base a part,
 And free the soul that quivers in thy heart. Pope.
 2. To rid from; to clear from any thing ill.
 It is no marvel, that he could think of no better way to be free'd of these inconveniencies the passions of those meetings gave him, than to dissolve them. Clarendon.
 Hercules
Free'd Erymanthus from the foaming boar. Dryden.
 Our land is from the rage of tygers free'd. Dryden's Virg.
 3. To clear from impediments or obstructions.
 The chaste Sibylla shall your steps convey,
 And blood of offer'd victims free the way. Dryden.
 Fierce was the fight; but hast'ning to his prey,
 By force the furious lover free'd his way. Dryden.
 4. To banish; to send away; to rid.
 We may again
 Give to our tables meat, sleep to our nights,
Free from our feasts and banquets bloody knives. Shakespeare.
 5. To exempt.
 For he that is dead is free'd from sin. Rom. vi. 7.
 6. To unlock; to open.
 This master-key
 Frees every lock, and leads us to his person. Dryden.
 FREEBO'OTER.

FREEBO'OTER. n. f. [free and booty.] A robber; a plunderer; a pillager.

The Kentishmen, perceiving that Perkin was not followed by any English of name, and that his forces consisted mostly of base people and freebooters, fitter to spoil a coast than to recover a kingdom, professed their loyalty to the king. Bacon.

The earl of Warwick had, as often as he met with any Irish frigates, or such freebooters as sailed under their commission, taken all the seamen who became prisoners to them of that nation, and bound them back to back, and thrown them overboard into the sea. Clarendon, b. viii.

FREEBOO'TING. n. f. Robbery; plunder; the act of pillaging.

Under it he may cleanly convey any fit pillage, that cometh handsomely in his way; and when he goeth abroad in the night on freebooting, it is his best and surest friend. Spenser.

FREEBORN. n. f. [free and born] Not a slave; inheriting liberty.

O baseness, to support a tyrant's throne,

And crush your freeborn brethren of the world! Dryden.

I shall speak my thoughts like a freeborn subject, such things perhaps as no Dutch commentator could, and I am sure no Frenchman durst. Dryden's Æn. Dedication.

Shall freeborn men, in humble awe,

Submit to servile shame;

Who from consent and custom draw

The same right to be rul'd by law,

Which kings pretend to reign? Dryden.

FREECHA'PPEL. n. f. [free and chappel.] Such chappels as are of the king's foundation, and by him exempted from the jurisdiction of the ordinary. The king may also license a subject to found such a chappel, and by his charter exempt it from the ordinary's visitation. Cowel.

FREECOST. n. f. [free and cost.] Without expence; free from charges.

We must not vouch any man for an exact master in the rules of our modern policy, but such a one as has brought himself so far to hate and despise the absurdity of being kind upon freecost, as not so much as to tell a friend what it is o'clock for nothing. South's Sermons.

FREEDMAN. n. f. [freed and man.] A slave manumitted. Libertus.

The freedman jostles, and will be preferr'd;

First come, first serv'd, he cries. Dryden's Juv. Sat. 1.

FREEDOM. n. f. [from free.]

1. Liberty; exemption from servitude; independence.

The laws themselves they do specially rage at, as most repugnant to their liberty and natural freedom. Spenser on Ireland.

O freedom! first delight of human kind!

Not that which bondmen from their masters find,

The privilege of doles; nor yet t' inscribe

Their names in this or t'other Roman tribe:

That false enfranchisement with ease is found;

Slaves are made citizens by turning round. Dryden's Pers.

2. Privileges; franchises; immunities.

By our holy Sabbath have I sworn

To have the due and forfeit of my bond:

If you deny it, let the danger light

Upon your charter, and your city's freedom. Shakespeare.

3. Power of enjoying franchises.

This prince first gave freedom to servants, so as to become citizens of equal privileges with the rest, which very much increased the power of the people. Swift.

4. Exemption from fate, necessity, or predetermination.

I else must change

Their nature, and revoke the high decree

Unchangeable, eternal, which ordain'd

Their freedom; they themselves ordain'd their fall. Milton.

In every sin, by how much the more free will is in its choice, by so much is the act the more sinful; and where there is nothing to importune, urge, or provoke the will to any act, there is so much an higher and perfecter degree of freedom about that act. South's Sermons.

5. Unrestraint.

I will that all the feasts and sabbaths shall be all days of immunity and freedom for the Jews in my realm. 1 Mac. x.

6. The state of being without any particular evil or inconvenience.

7. Ease or facility in doing or showing any thing.

FREEFO'OTED. adj. [free and foot.] Not restrained in the march.

We will fetters put upon this fear,

Which now goes too freefooted. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

FREEHE'ARTED. adj. [free and heart.] Liberal; unrestrained.

Love must freehearted be, and voluntary;

And not enchanted, or by fate constrain'd. Davies.

FREEHO'LD. n. f. [free and hold.] That land or tenement which a man holdeth in fee, fee-tail, or for term of life.

Freehold in deed is the real possession of lands or tenements in fee, fee-tail, or for life. Freehold in law is the right that a man has to such land or tenements before his entry or seizure. Freehold is sometimes taken in opposition to villenage. Land, in the time of the Saxons, was called either bockland, that is, holden by book or writing, or soleland, that is, holden without writing. The former was held by far better conditions, and by the better sort of tenants, as noblemen and gentlemen; being such as we now call freehold. The latter was commonly in the possession of clowns, being that which we now call at the will of the lord. Cowel.

No alienation of lands holden in chief should be available, touching the freehold or inheritance thereof, but only where it were made by matter of record, to be found in some of her majesty's treasuries. Bacon's Office of Alienation.

There is an unspeakable pleasure in calling any thing one's own: a freehold, though it be but in ice and snow, will make the owner pleased in the possession, and stout in the defence of it. Addison's Freeholder, N<sup>o</sup>. 1.

My friends here are very few, and fixed to the freehold, from whence nothing but death will remove them. Swift.

I should be glad to possess a freehold that could not be taken from me by any law to which I did not give my own consent. Swift to Lord Middleton.

FREEHO'LDER. n. f. [from freehold.] One who has a freehold.

As extortion did banish the old English freeholder, who could not live but under the law; so the law did banish the Irish lord, who could not live but by extortion. Davies.

FREE'LY. adv. [from free.]

1. At liberty; without vassalage; without slavery; without dependence.

2. Without restraint; lavishly.

If my son were my husband, I would freelier rejoice in that absence wherein he won honour, than in the embraces of his bed, where he would shew most love. Shakesp. Coriolan.

I pledge your grace; and if you knew what pains

I have bestow'd to breed this present peace,

You would drink freely. Shakesp. Henry IV.

3. Without scruple; without reserve.

Let such teach others who themselves excel,

And censure freely who have written well. Pope's Ess. on Crit.

4. Without impediment.

To follow rather the Goths in rhyming than the Greeks in true versifying, were even to eat acorns with swine; when we may freely eat wheat-bread among men. Ascham's Schoolmaster.

The path to peace is virtue: what I show,

Thyself may freely on thyself bestow:

Fortune was never worshipp'd by the wife;

But, set aloft by fools, usurps the skies. Dryden's Juv. Sat.

5. Without necessity; without predetermination.

Freely they stood who stood; and fell who fell. Milton.

He leaves us to chuse with the liberty of reasonable beings: they who comply with his grace, comply with it freely; and they who reject it, do also freely reject it. Rogers's Sermons.

6. Frankly; liberally.

By nature all things have an equally common use: nature freely and indifferently opens the bosom of the universe to all mankind. South's Sermons.

7. Spontaneously; of its own accord.

FRE'EMAN. n. f. [free and man.]

1. One not a slave; not a vassal.

Had you rather Cæsar were living, and die all slaves, than that Cæsar were dead, to live all freemen? Shakesp. Jul. Cæsar.

If to break loose from the conduct of reason, and to want that restraint of examination and judgment which keeps us from chusing or doing the worse, be liberty, true liberty, mad men and fools are only the freemen. Locke.

2. One partaking of rights, privileges, or immunities.

He made us freemen of the continent,

Whom nature did like captives treat before. Dryden.

What this union was is expressed in the preceding verse, by their both having been made freemen on the same day. Addison's Remarks on Italy.

FREEM'NDED. adj. [free and mind.] Unconstrained; without load of care.

To be freeminded, and cheerfully disposed at hours of meat, sleep, and exercise, is one of the best precepts of long lasting. Bacon's Essay 31.

FRE'ENESS. n. f. [from free.]

1. The state or quality of being free.

2. Openness; unreservedness; ingenuousness; candour.

The reader may pardon it, if he please; for the freeness of the confession. Dryden.

3. Generosity; liberality.

I hope it will never be said that the laity, who by the clergy are taught to be charitable; shall in their corporations exceed the clergy itself, and their sons, in freeness of giving. Sprat.

FREESCHO'OL. n. f. [free and school.] A school in which learning is given without pay.

To give a civil education to the youth of this land in the time to come, provision was made by another law, that there should be one free-school at least erected in every diocese. Davies.

Two clergymen stood candidates for a small free-school in —shire, where a gentleman of interest in the country, who happened to have a better understanding than his neighbours, procured the place for him who was the better scholar. Swift.

FREESPO'KEN. adj. [free and spoken.] Accustomed to speak without reserve.

Nerva one night supped privately with some six or seven; amongst whom there was one that was a dangerous man, and began to take the like courses as Marcellus and Regulus had done: the emperor fell into discourse of the injustice and tyranny of the former time, and, by name, of the two accusers; and said, what should we do with them, if we had them now? One of them that was at supper, and was a free-spoken senator, said, Marry, they should sup with us. Bacon.

FRE'ESTONE. n. f. [free and stone.] Stone commonly used in building.

Freestone is so named from its being of such a constitution as to be wrought and cut freely in any direction. Woodward.

I saw her hand: she has a leathern hand, a freestone-coloured hand. Shakespeare's As you like it.

The streets are generally paved with brick or freestone, and always kept very neat. Addison on Italy.

FREETHINKER. n. f. [free and think.] A libertine; a contemner of religion.

Atheist is an old-fashion'd word: I'm a freethinker, child. Addison's Drummer.

Of what use is freedom of thought, if it will not produce freedom of action, which is the sole end, how remote soever in appearance, of all objections against Christianity? And therefore the freethinkers consider it as an edifice, wherein all the parts have such a mutual dependance on each other, that if you pull out one single nail, the whole fabrick must fall to the ground. Swift's Argument against abolishing Christianity.

FREEWILL. n. f. [free and will.]

1. The power of directing our own actions without constraint by necessity or fate.

We have a power to suspend the prosecution of this or that desire: this seems to me the source of all liberty; in this seems to consist that which is improperly called freewill. Locke.

2. Voluntariness; spontaneity.

I make a decree, that all they of the people of Israel in my realm, which are minded of their own freewill to go up to Jerusalem, go with thee. Ezr. vii. 13.

FREWO'MAN. n. f. [free and woman.] A woman not enslaved.

All her ornaments are taken away of a freewoman; she is become a bondslave. 1 Mac. ii. 11.

TO FREEZE. v. n. preter. froze. [vriesen, Dutch.]

1. To be congealed with cold.

The aqueous humour of the eye will not freeze, which is very admirable, seeing it hath the perspicuity and fluidity of common water. Ray on the Creation.

The freezing of water, or the blowing of a plant, returning at equidistant periods in all parts of the earth, would as well serve men to reckon their years by as the motions of the sun. Locke.

2. To be of that degree of cold by which water is congealed.

Orpheus with his lute made trees

And mountain tops, that freeze,

Bow themselves when he did sing. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

Thou art all ice, thy kindness freezes. Shakesf. Rich. III.

Heav'n froze above severe, the clouds congeal,

And thro' the crystal vault appear'd the standing hail. Dryd.

TO FREEZE. v. a. pret. froze; part. frozen or froze.

1. To congeal with cold.

2. To kill by cold.

When we both lay in the field,

Frozen almost to death, how did he lap me,

Ev'n in his garments!

Shakespeare's Richard III.

My master and mistress are almost frozen to death. Shakesp.

3. To chill by the loss of power or motion.

I have a faint cold fear thrills through my veins,

That almost freezes up the heat of life. Sh. Rom. and Juliet.

Death came on amain,

And exercis'd below his iron reign;

Then upward to the seat of life he goes;

Sense fled before him, what he touch'd he froze. Dryden.

TO FREIGHT. v. a. preter. freighted; part. fraught; which being now used as an adjective, freighted is adopted. [fretter, French.]

1. To load a ship or vessel of carriage with goods for transportation.

The princes

Have to the port of Athens sent their ships,

Fraught with the ministers and instruments

Of cruel war. Shak. Troilus and Cressida, Prol. gue.

Nor is, indeed, that man less mad than these,

Who freights a ship to venture on the seas;

With one frail interposing plank to save

From certain death, roll'd on by ev'ry wave. Dryden's Juv.

Freighted with iron, from my native land

I steer my voyage.

Pope's Odyssey, b. i.

2. To load as the burthen; to be the thing with which a vessel is freighted.

I would

Have sunk the sea within the earth, or ere

It should the good ship so have swallow'd, and

The freighting souls within her.

Shakespeare's Tempest.

FREIGHT. n. f.

1. Any thing with which a ship is loaded.

He clears the deck, receives the mighty freight;

The leaky vessel groans beneath the weight. Dryden's Æn.

2. The money due for transportation of goods.

FRE'IGHTER. n. f. [fretteur, French.] He who freights a vessel.

FREN. n. f. A worthless woman. An old word wholly forgotten.

But now from me his madding mind is start,

And woos the widow's daughter of the glen;

And now fair Rosalind hath bred his smart,

So now his friend is changed for a fren. Spenser's Past.

FRENCH Chalk. n. f.

French chalk is an indurated clay, extremely dense, of a smooth glossy surface, and soft and unctuous to the touch; of a greyish white colour, variegated with a dusky green. Hill.

French chalk is unctuous to the touch, as steatites is, but harder, and nearer approaching the consistence of stone. Wood.

TO FRE'NCHIFY. v. a. [from French.] To infect with the manner of France; to make a coxcomb.

They disliked nothing more in king Edward the Confessor than that he was Frenchified; and accounted the desire of foreign language then to be a foretoken of bringing in foreign powers, which indeed happened. Camden's Remains.

Has he familiarly disliked

Your yellow starch, or said your doublet

Was not exactly Frenchified. Shakespeare's As you like it.

FRE'NETICK. adj. [frenetique, French; Φρενιτικός; generally therefore written phrenetick.] Mad; distracted.

He himself impotent,

By means of his frenetick malady. Daniel's Civil War.

FRE'NZY. n. f. [Φρενίτις; phrenitis, Latin: whence phrenetisy, phrenetisy, phrenzy, or frenzy.] Madness; distraction of mind; alienation of understanding; any violent passion approaching to madness.

That knave, Ford, hath the finest mad devil of jealousy in him that ever governed frenzy. Shakesf. Mer. Wives of Windsor.

True fortitude is seen in great exploits,

That justice warrants, and that wisdom guides;

All else is touring frenzy and distraction. Addison's Cato.

Why such a disposition of the body induceth sleep, another disturbs all the operations of the soul, and occasions a lethargy or frenzy: this knowledge exceeds our narrow faculties. Bent.

FRE'QUENCE. n. f. [frequence, Fr. frequentia, Latin.] Crowd; concourse; assembly.

The frequence of degree,

From high to low throughout.

Shakespeare's Timon.

He, in full frequence bright

Of angels, thus to Gabriel smiling spake. Paradise Reg.

FRE'QUENCY. n. f. [frequentia, Latin.]

1. Common occurrence; the condition of being often seen or done.

Should a miracle be indulged to one, others would think themselves equally intitled to it; and if indulged to many, it would no longer have the effect of a miracle; its force and influence would be lost by the frequency of it. Atterb.

2. Concourse; full assembly.

Thou cam'st e're while into this senate: who

Of such a frequency, so many friends

And kindred thou hast here, saluted thee? Ben. Johnf. Catil.

FRE'QUENT. adj. [frequent, French; frequens, Latin.]

1. Often done; often seen; often occurring.

An ancient and imperial city falls;

The streets are fill'd with frequent funerals. Dryden's Æn.

Frequent heres shall besiege your gates.

Pope.

2. Used often to practise any thing.

Every man thinks he may pretend to any employment, provided he has been loud and frequent in declaring himself hearty for the government. Swift.

3. Full of concourse.

Frequent and full.

Milton.

TO FRE'QUENT. v. a. [frequentio, Latin; frequenter, French.]

To visit often; to be much in any place; to resort often to.

Latter day,

Finding in it fit ports for fishers trade,

'Gan more the same frequent, and further to invade. F. 2.

There were synagogues for men to resort unto: our Saviour himself, and after him the apostles, frequented them. Hooker, b. v. f. 11.

This fellow here, this thy creature,

By night frequents my house.

Shakespeare's Timon.

At

At that time this land was known and frequented by the ships and vessels. Bacon.

With tears

Wat'ring the ground, and with our sighs the air
Frequenting, sent from hearts contrite, in sign
Of sorrow unfeign'd, and humiliation meek. Milt. P. L.

To serve my friends, the senate I frequent;
And there what I before digested, vent. Denham.

That he frequented the court of Augustus, and was well received in it, is most undoubted. Dryden's Ovid, Preface.

FREQUENTABLE. adj. [from frequent.] Conversable; accessible. A word not now used, but not inelegant.

While youth lasted in him, the exercises of that age and his humour, not yet fully discovered, made him somewhat the more frequentable and less dangerous. Sidney, b. ii.

FREQUENTATIVE. adj. [frequentatif, French; frequentativus, Latin.] A grammatical term applied to verbs signifying the frequent repetition of an action.

FREQUENTER. n. f. [from frequent.] One who often resorts to any place.

Persons under bad imputations are no great frequenters of churches. Swift.

FREQUENTLY. adv. [frequenter, Latin.] Often; commonly; not rarely; not seldom; a considerable number of times; manifold times.

I could not, without much grief, observe how frequently both gentlemen and ladies are at a loss for questions and answers. Swift's Introduction to Genteel Conversation.

FRESCO. n. f. [Italian.]

1. Coolness; shade; duskiness, like that of the evening or morning.

Hellish sprites

Love more the fresco of the nights. Prior.

2. A picture not drawn in glaring light, but in dusk:
Here thy well-study'd marbles fix our eye;
A fading fresco here demands a sigh. Pope.

FRESH. adj. [frerc, Saxon; fraiche, French.]

1. Cool; not vapid with heat.

I'll cull the farthest mead for thy repast;
The choicest herbs I to thy board will bring,
And draw thy water from the freshest spring. Prior.

2. Not salt.

They keep themselves unmixt with the salt water; so that, a very great way within the sea, men may take up as fresh water as if they were near the land. Abbot's Desc. of the World.

3. New; not impaired by time.

This second source of men, while yet but few,
And while the dread of judgment past remain
Fresh in their minds, fearing the Deity,
With some regard to what's just and right,
Shall lead their lives. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xii.

That love which first was set, will first decay;
Mine of a fresher date will longer stay. Dryd. Indian Emp.

4. In a state like that of recentness.

We will revive those times, and in our memories
Preserve and still keep fresh, like flowers in water. Denham.

With such a care

As roses from their stalks we tear,
When we would still preserve them new;
And fresh as on the bush they grew. Waller.

Thou sun, said I, fair light!
And thou enlighten'd earth, so fresh and gay! Milt. R. L.

5. Recent; newly come.

Amidst the spirits Palinurus press'd;
Yet fresh from life, a new admitted guest. Dryden's Æn.

Fresh from the fact, as in the present case,
The criminals are seiz'd upon the place;
Stiff in denial, as the law appoints,
On engines they distend their tortur'd joints. Dryden.

6. Repaired from any loss or diminution.

Nor lies she long; but, as her fates ordain,
Springs up to life, and fresh to second pain;
Is sav'd to-day, to-morrow to be slain. Dryden.

7. Florid; vigorous; chearful; unfaded; unimpaired.

This pope is decrepid, and the bell goeth for him: take order that when he is dead there be chosen a pope of fresh years, between fifty and threescore. Bacon's holy War.

Two swains,

Fresh as the morn, and as the season fair. Pope.

8. Healthy in countenance; ruddy.

Tell me,

Hast thou beheld a fresher gentlewoman,
Such war of white and red within her cheeks? Shakespeare.

It is no rare observation in England to see a fresh coloured lusty young man yoked to a consumptive female, and him soon after attending her to the grave. Harvey on Consumptions.

They represent to themselves a thousand poor, tall, innocent, fresh coloured young gentlemen. Addison's Spectator.

9. Brisk; strong; vigorous.

As a fresh gale of wind fills the sails of a ship. Holder.

10. Fastening: opposed to eating or drinking. A low word.

11. Sweet: opposed to stale or stinking.

FRESH. n. f. Water not salt.

He shall drink nought but brine; for I'll not shew him
Where the quick freshes are. Shakespeare's Tempest.

To FRE'SHEN. v. a. [from fresh.] To make fresh.

Prelusive drops let all their moisture flow

In large effusion o'er the freshen'd world. Thomson's Spring.

To FRE'SHEN. v. n. To grow fresh.

A freshening breeze the magick power supply'd,

While the wing'd vessel flew along the tide. Pope's Odyssey.

FRE'SHET. n. f. [from fresh.] A pool of fresh water.

All fish from sea or shore,

Freshet or purling brook, or shell or fin. Milt. Parad. Lost.

FRE'SHLY. adv. [from fresh.]

1. Coolly.

2. Newly; in the former state renewed.

The weeds of heresy being grown unto such ripeness as that was, do, even in the very cutting down, scatter oftentimes those seeds which for a while lie unseen and buried in the earth; but afterwards freshly spring up again, no less pernicious than at the first. Hooker, b. v. f. 42.

Then shall our names,

Familiar in their mouth as household words;
Be in their flowing cups freshly remember'd. Shak. Hen. V:
They are now freshly in difference with them. Bacon.

3. With a healthy look; ruddily.

Looks he as freshly as he did the day he wrestled? Shakesp.

FRE'SHNESS. n. f. [from fresh.]

1. Newness; vigour; spirit; the contrary to vapidness.

Most odours smell best broken or crushed; but flowers pressed or beaten, do lose the freshness and sweetness of their odour. Bacon's Natural History.

2. Freedom from diminution by time; not staleness.

For the constant freshness of it, it is such a pleasure as can never cloy or overwork the mind; for surely no man was ever weary of thinking that he had done well or virtuously. South.

3. Freedom from fatigue; newness of strength.

The Scots had the advantage both for number and freshness of men. Hayward.

4. Coolness.

There are some rooms in Italy and Spain for freshness, and gathering the winds and air in the heats of Summer; but they be but penning of the winds, and enlarging them again, and making them reverberate in circles. Bacon.

Say, if she please, she hither may repair,
And breathe the freshness of the open air. Dryden's Aureng.

And to the winds expos'd her glowing breast;
To take the freshness of the morning air. Addison on Italy.

5. Ruddiness; colour of health.

The secret venom, circling in her veins,
Works through her skin, and bursts in bloating stains;
Her cheeks their freshness lose and wonted grace,
And an unusual paleness spreads her face. Granville.

6. Freedom from saltiness.

FRESHWATER. [A compound word of fresh and water, used as an adjective.] Raw; unskilled; unacquainted. A low term borrowed from the sailors, who stigmatise those who come first to sea as freshwater men or novices.

The nobility, as freshwater soldiers which had never seen but some light skirmishes, in their vain bravery made light account of the Turks. Knolles's History of the Turks.

FRET. n. f. [Of this word the etymology is very doubtful: some derive it from phretan, to eat; others from phretpan, to adorn; some from phritto; Skinner more probably from fremo, or the French fretiller: perhaps it comes immediately from the Latin fretum.]

1. A frith, or strait of the sea, where the water by confinement is always rough.

Euripus generally signifieth any strait, fret, or channel of the sea, running between two shores. Brown's Vulg. Errors.

2. Any agitation of liquors by fermentation, confinement, or other cause.

The channel of this river is white with rocks, and the surface covered with froth and bubbles; for it runs along upon the fret, and is still breaking against the stones that oppose its passage. Addison's Remarks on Italy.

The blood in a fever, if well governed, like wine upon the fret, dischargeth itself of all heterogeneous mixtures. Derham's Physico-Theology.

3. That stop of the musical instrument which causes or regulates the vibrations of the string.

It requireth good winding of a string before it will make any note; and in the tops of lutes, &c. the higher they go, the less distance is between the frets. Bacon's Nat. History.

The harp

Had work, and rested not: the solemn pipe
And dulcimer, all organs of sweet stop,
All sounds on fret by string or golden wire,
Temper'd soft tunings, intermix'd with voice
Choral or unison. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vii.

They are fitted to answer the most variable harmony: two or three pipes to all those of a church-organ, or to all the strings and frets of a lute. Grew's Cosmolog. Sac. b. i.

4. Work rising in protuberances.

The frets of houses, and all equal figures, please; whereas unequal figures are but deformities. Bacon's Natural History.

We take delight in a prospect well laid out, and diversified with fields and meadows, woods and rivers, in the curious fret works of rocks and grottos. Spectator, N<sup>o</sup>. 414.

5. Agitation of the mind; commotion of the temper; passion.

Calmness is great advantage: he that lets Another chafe, may warm him at his fire,
Mark all his wand'rings, and enjoy his frets,
As cunning fencers suffer heat to tire. Herbert.

The incred'lous Pheac, having yet
Drank but one round, reply'd in sober fret. Tate's Juven.

You, too weak the slightest loss to bear,
Are on the fret of passion, boil and rage. Creech's Juven.

Yet then did Dennis rave in furious fret;
I never answer'd, I was not in debt. Pope, Epistle ii.

To FRET. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To rub against any thing; to agitate violently.

You may as well forbid the mountain pines
To wag their high tops, and to make a noise
When they are fretted with the gusts of heav'n. Shakespeare.

2. To wear away by rubbing.

Drop them still upon one place,
'Till they have fretted us a pair of graves
Within the earth. Shakespeare's Richard II.

In the banks of rivers, with the washing of the water, there were divers times fretted out big pieces of gold. Abbot.

Before I ground the object metal on the pitch, I always ground the putty on it with the concave copper, 'till it had done making a noise; because, if the particles of the putty were not made to stick fast in the pitch, they would, by rolling up and down, grate and fret the object metal, and fill it full of little holes. Newton's Opt.

3. To hurt by attrition.

The better part with Mary and with Ruth
Chosen thou hast; and they that over-ween,
And at thy growing virtues fret their spleen,
No anger find in thee, but pity and ruth. Milton.

4. To corrode; to eat away.

It is fret inward, whether it be bare within or without.
Lev. xiii. 55:

The painful husband, plowing up his ground,
Shall find all fret with rust, both pikes and shields,
And empty helms under his harrow sound. Hakewill.

5. To form into raised work.

Nor did there want
Cornice or freeze, with bossy sculptures grav'n;
The roof was fretted gold. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. i.

6. To variegate; to diversify.

Yon grey lines,
That fret the clouds, are messengers of day. Shak. Jul. Cæs.

7. To make angry; to vex.

Antony
Is valiant and dejected; and, by starts,
His fretted fortunes give him hope and fear
Of what he has and has not. Shakesp. Ant. and Cleopatra.
Because thou hast fretted me in all these things, behold I will recompense thy way upon thine head. Ezek. xvi. 43.

Such an expectation, cries one, will never come to pass:
therefore I'll even give it up, and go and fret myself. Collier.
Injuries from friends fret and gall more, and the memory of them is not so easily obliterated. Arbuthn. Hist. of John Bull.

To FRET. v. n.

1. To be in commotion; to be agitated.

No benefits whatsoever shall ever alter or allay that diabolical rancour, that frets and ferments in some hellish breasts, but that upon all occasions it will foam out at its foul mouth in slander and invective. South's Sermons.

Th' adjoining brook, that purls along
The vocal grove, now fretting o'er a rock,
Now scarcely moving through a reedy pool. Thomf. Suinn.

2. To be worn away; to be corroded.

Take a piece of gloves leather that is very thin, and put your gold therein, binding it close, and then hang it up: the sal armoniack will fret away, and the gold remain behind.
Peacham on Drawing.

3. To make way by attrition.

These do but indeed scrape off the extuberances, or fret into the wood, and therefore they are very seldom used to soft wood. Moxon's Mech. Exer.

It inflamed and swelled very much; many wheals arose, and fretted one into another with great excoriation. Wiseman.

4. To be angry; to be peevish; to vex himself.

They trouble themselves with fretting at the ignorance of such as withstand them in their opinion. Hooker, b. v. f. 22.

We are in a fretting mind at the church of Rome, and with angry disposition enter into cogitation. Hooker.

Helpless, what may it boot

To fret for anger, or for grief to moan! Fairy Queen.

Their wounded steeds

Fret fetlock deep in gore, and with wild rage
Yerk out their armed heels at their dead masters Sh. H. V.

Be lion-mettled, proud, and take no care
Who chafes, who frets, or where conspirers are. Sh. Macb.

His heart fretteth against the Lord. Prov. xix. 3.

Hudibras fretting

Conquest should be so long a-getting,
Drew up his force. Hudibras, b. i. cant. 2.

He swells with wrath, he makes outrageous moan,
He frets, he fumes, he stares, he stamps the ground. Dryd.

How should I fret to mangle ev'ry line,
In rev'rence to the sins of thirty-nine. Pope.

FRET'FUL. adj. [from fret.] Angry; peevish; in a state of vexation.

Thy knotty and combined locks to part,
And each particular hair to stand on end,
Like quills upon the fretful porcupine. Shakesp. Hamlet.

Where's the king?

—Contending with the fretful elements;
Bids the wind blow the earth into the sea. Shakesp. K. Lear.

They are extremely fretful and peevish, never well at rest;
but always calling for this or that, or changing their posture of lying or sitting. Harvey on Consumptions.

Are you positive and fretful?

Heedless, ignorant, forgetful? Swift.

FRET'FULLY. adv. [from fretful.] Peevishly.

FRET'FULNESS. n. f. [from fretful.] Passion; peevishness.

FRET'TY. adj. [from fret.] Adorned with raised work.

FRIABILITY. n. f. [from friable.] Capacity of being reduced to powder.

Hardness, friability, and power to draw iron, are qualities to be found in a loadstone. Locke.

FRIABLE. adj. [friable, French; friabilis, Latin.] Easily crumbled; easily reduced to powder.

A spongy excrescence groweth upon the roots of the laser-tree, and sometimes on cedar, very white, light, and friable, which we call agarick. Bacon's Natural History.

The liver, of all the viscera, is the most friable, and easily crumbled or dissolved. Arbuthn. on Diet.

FRIAR. n. f. [A corruption of frere, French.] A religious;
a brother of some regular order.

Holy Franciscan friar! brother! ho! Sh. Rom. and Jul.

All the priests and friars in my realm,
Shall in procession sing her endless praise. Shakesp. H. VI.

He says he's but a friar, but he's big enough to be a pope.
Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

Many jesuits and friars went about, in the disguise of Presbyterian and Independent ministers, to preach up rebellion. Swift.

A friar would needs shew his talent in Latin. Swift.

FRIARLIKE. adj. [from friar.] Monastick; unskilled in the world.

Their friarlike general would the next day make one holy-day in the Christian calendars, in remembrance of thirty thousand Hungarian martyrs slain of the Turks. Knolles's History.

FRIARLY. adv. [friar and like.] Like a friar, or man untaught in life.

Seek not proud riches, but such as thou may'st get justly, use soberly, distribute cheerfully, and leave contentedly; yet have no abstract nor friarly contempt of them. Bacon's Essays.

FRIARSCOWL. n. f. [friar and cowl.] A plant.

It agrees with the dragon and arum, from both which it differs only in having a flower resembling a cowl.

FRIARY. n. f. [from friar.] A monastery or convent of friars.

FRIARY. adj. Like a friar.

Francis Cornfield did scratch his elbow when he had sweetly invented to signify his name, St. Francis, with a friary cowl in a cornfield. Camden's Remains.

To FRIBBLE. v. n. To trifle.

Though cheats, yet more intelligible
Than those that with the stars do fribble. Hudibras, p. ii.

FRIBBLER. n. f. [from the verb.] A trifler.

A fribbler is one who professes rapture for the woman, and dreads her consent. Spectator, N<sup>o</sup>. 288.

FRICASSE. n. f. [French.] A dish made by cutting chickens or other small things in pieces, and dressing them with strong sauce.

Oh, how would Homer praise their dancing dogs,
Their stinking cheese, and fricacy of frogs!

He'd raise no fables, sing no flagrant lye,
Of boys with custard choak'd at Newberry. King.

FRICATION. n. f. [fricatio, Latin.] The act of rubbing one thing against another.

Gentle frication draweth forth the nourishment, by making the parts a little hungry, and heating them: this frication I wish to be done in the morning. Bacon's Natural History.

Resinous or unctuous bodies, and such as will flame, attract vigorously, and most thereof without frication, as good hard wax,

wax, which will convert the needle almost as actively as the loadstone. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. ii. c. 4.

FRICTION. n. f. [friction, Fr. frictio, from frico, Latin.]

1. The act of rubbing two bodies together.

Do not all bodies which abound with terrestrial parts, and especially with sulphureous ones, emit light as often as those parts are sufficiently agitated, whether the agitation be made by heat, friction, percussion, putrefaction, or by any vital motion? Newton's Opt.

2. The resistance in machines caused by the motion of one body upon another.

3. Medical rubbing with the fleshbrush or cloaths.

Frictions make the parts more fleshy and full, as we see both in men and in the currying of horses; for that they draw a greater quantity of spirits to the parts. Bacon.

FRI'DAY. n. f. [frige dæg, Saxon.] The sixth day of the week, so named of Freya, a Saxon deity.

An' she were not kin to me, she would be as fair on Friday as Helen is on Sunday. Shakespeare's Troilus and Cressida.

For Venus, like her day, will change her cheer,

And seldom shall we see a Friday clear. Dryden.

FRIEND. n. f. [friend, Dutch; freond, Saxon.] This word, with its derivatives, is pronounced friend, friendly: the i totally neglected.

1. One joined to another in mutual benevolence and intimacy: opposed to foe or enemy.

Friends of my soul, you twain

Rule in this realm, and the god's state sustain. Shakesp.

Some man is a friend for his own occasion, and will not abide in the day of thy trouble. Ecclus. vi. 8.

God's benison go with you, and with those

That would make good of bad, and friends of foes. Shakesp.

Wonder not to see this soul extend

The bounds, and seek some other self, a friend. Dryden.

2. One without hostile intentions.

Who comes so fast in silence of the night?

—A friend.

—What friend? your name? Shakesp. Merchant of Venice.

3. One reconciled to another: this is put by the custom of the language somewhat irregularly in the plural number.

He's friends with Cæsar,

In state of health thou say'st, and thou say'st free. Shakesp.

My son came then into my mind; and yet my mind

Was then scarce friends with him. Shak. King Lear.

4. An attendant, or companion.

The king ordains their entrance, and ascends

His regal seat, surrounded by his friends. Dryden's Æn.

5. Favourer; one propitious.

Aurora riding upon Pegasus, sheweth her swiftness, and how she is a friend to poetry and all ingenious inventions. Peacham.

6. A familiar compellation.

Friend, how camest thou in hither? Mat. xxii. 12.

What supports me, do'st thou ask?

The conscience, friend, t'have lost mine eyes o'erply'd
In liberty's defence. Milton.

TO FRIEND. v. a. [from the noun.] To favour; to befriend; to countenance; to support.

I know that we shall have him well to friend. Shakesp.

When vice makes mercy, mercy's so extended,

That, for the fault's love, is th' offender *friend*ed. Shakesp.

FRIENDLESS. adj. [from friend.]

1. Wanting friends; wanting support; without countenance; destitute; forlorn.

Alas! I am a woman, friendless, hopeless. Shak. H. VIII.

Woe to him that is alone, is verified upon none so much as upon the friendless person. South's Sermons.

To some new clime, or to thy native sky,

Oh friendless and forsaken virtue fly. Dryden's Aurengzebe.

To what new clime, what distant sky,

Forsaken, friendless, will ye fly?

Say, will ye bless the bleak Atlantick shore,

Or bid the furious Gaul be rude no more? Pope.

2. FRIENDLESS Man. The Saxon word for him whom we call an outlaw, because he was, upon his exclusion from the king's peace and protection, denied all help of friends.

FRIENDLINESS. n. f. [from friendly.]

1. A disposition to friendship.

Such a liking and friendliness as hath brought forth the effects. Sidney.

2. Exertion of benevolence.

Let all the intervals be employed in prayers, charity, friendliness and neighbourhood, and means of spiritual and corporal health. Taylor's Rule of holy living.

FRIENDLY. adj. [from friend.]

1. Having the temper and disposition of a friend; kind; favourable; benevolent.

They gave them thanks, desiring them to be friendly still unto them. 2 Mac. xii. 31.

Thou to mankind

Be good, and friendly still, and oft return! Milton's P. Lost.

How art thou

To me so friendly grown above the rest

Of brutal kind? Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ix.

Let the Nassau-star in rising majesty appear,

And guide the prosperous mariner

With everlasting beams of friendly light. Prior.

2. Disposed to union.

Like friendly colours found our hearts unite,

And each from each contract new strength and light. Pope.

3. Salutary; homogeneal.

Not that Nepentes, which the wife of Thone

In Egypt gave to Jove-born Helena,

Is of such power to stir up joy as this,

To life so friendly, or so cool to thirst. Milton.

FRIENDLY. adv. In the manner of friends; with appearance of kindness.

Here between the armies,

Let's drink together *friendl*y, and embrace;

That all their eyes may bear those tokens home

Of our restored love and amity. Shakesp. Henry IV. p. ii.

FRIENDSHIP. n. f. [viendschap, Dutch.]

1. The state of minds united by mutual benevolence.

There is little friendship in the world, and least of all between equals, which was wont to be magnified: that that is, is between superior and inferior, whose fortunes may comprehend the one the other. Bacon, Essay 49.

He lived rather in a fair intelligence than any friendship with the favourites. Clarendon.

My sons, let your unseemly discord cease,

If not in friendship, live at least in peace. Dryd. Ind. Emp.

2. Highest degree of intimacy.

His friendships, still to few confin'd,

Were always of the middling kind. Swift.

3. Favour; personal kindness.

Raw captains are usually sent only preferred by friendship, and not chosen by sufficiency. Spenser on Ireland.

4. Assistance; help.

Gracious, my lord, hard-by here is a hovel:

Some friendship will it lend you 'gainst the tempest;

Repose you there. Shakespeare's King Lear.

5. Conformity; affinity; correspondence; aptness to unite.

We know those colours which have a friendship with each other, and those which are incompatible, in mixing together those colours of which we would make trial. Dryd. Dufresnoy.

FRIEZE. n. f. [drap de frieze, French.] A coarse warm cloath, made perhaps first in Friesland.

If all the world

Should in a pet of temperance feed on pulse,

Drink the clear stream, and nothing wear but frieze,

The All-giver would be unthank'd. Milton.

The captive Germans, of gigantick size,

Are rank'd in order, and are clad in frieze. Dryd. Pers.

He could no more live without his frieze coat than without his skin. Addison's Guardian, N<sup>o</sup>. 102.

See how the double nation lies,

Like a rich coat with skirts of frieze;

As if a man, in making poesies,

Should bundle thistles up with roses. Swift.

FRIEZE. } n. f. [In architecture.] A large flat member which

FRIZE. } separates the architrave from the cornice; of which there are as many kinds as there are orders of columns. Harr.

No jutting frieze,

Buttrice, nor coigne of 'vantage, but this bird

Hath made his pendant-bed, and procreant cradle. Shakesp.

Nor did there want

Cornice or frieze with bossy sculptures grav'n;

The roof was fretted gold. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. i.

Polydore designed admirably well, as to the practical part, having a particular genius for friezes. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

FRIEZED. adj. [from frieze.] Shagged or napped with frieze.

FRIEZELIKE. adj. [frieze and like.] Resembling a frieze.

I have seen the figure of Thalia, the comick muse, sometimes with an entire headpiece and a little frieze-like tower, running round the edges of the face, and sometimes with a mask for the face only. Addison's Remarks on Italy.

FRIGAT. n. f. [frigate, French; fregata, Italian.]

1. A small ship. Ships under fifty guns are generally termed frigats.

The treasure they fought for was, in their view, embezzled in certain frigats. Raleigh's Apology.

On high-raisd decks the haughty Belgians ride,

Beneath whose shade our humble frigats go. Dryden.

2. Any small vessel on the water.

Behold the water work and play

About her little frigate, therein making way. Fairy Queen.

FRIGEFAC'TION. n. f. [frigus and facio, Latin.] The act of making cold.

TO FRIGHT. v. a. [frightran, Saxon.] To terrify; to disturb with fear; to shock with fear; to daunt.

The herds

Were strongly clam'rous in the frighted fields. Shak. H. IV.

Nor exile or danger can fright a brave spirit,

With innocence guarded,

With virtue rewarded,

I make of my sufferings a merit. Dryden's Albion.

The mind frights itself with any thing reflected on in gross, and at a distance: things thus offered to the mind, carry the shew of nothing but difficulty. Locke.

Whence glaring oft with many a broaden'd orb,
He frights the nations. Thomson's Autumn.

FRIGHT. n. f. [from the verb.] A sudden terrour.

You, if your goodness does not plead my cause,

May think I broke all hospitable laws,

To bear you from your palace-yard by might,

And put your noble person in a fright. Dryden.

TO FRIGHTEN. v. a. To terrify; to shock with dread.

The rugged bear's, or spotted lynx's brood,

Frighten the valleys and infest the wood. Prior.

FRIGHTFUL. adj. [from fright.]

1. Terrible; dreadful; full of terrour.

Tetchy and wayward was thy infancy,

Thy schooldays frightful, desp'rate, wild, and furious. Shak.

Without aid you durst not undertake

This frightful passage o'er the Stygian lake. Dryden's Æn.

2. A cant word among women for any thing unpleasing.

FRIGHTFULLY. adv. [from frightful.]

1. Dreadfully; horribly.

This will make a prodigious mass of water, and looks frightfully to the imagination; 'tis huge and great. Burnet.

2. Disagreeably; not beautifully. A woman's word.

Then to her glass; and Betty, pray,

Don't I look frightfully to-day? Swift.

FRIGHTFULNESS. n. f. [from frightful.] The power of impressing terrour.

FRIGID. adj. [from frigidus, Latin.]

1. Cold; without warmth. In this sense it is seldom used but in science.

In the torrid zone the heat would have been intolerable, and in the frigid zones the cold would have destroyed both animals and vegetables. Cheyne's Phil. Princ.

2. Without warmth of affection.

3. Impotent; without warmth of body.

4. Dull; without fire of fancy.

If justice Phillip's costive head

Some frigid rhymes disburles,

They shall like Persian tales be read,

And glad both babes and nurses. Swift.

FRIGIDITY. n. f. [from frigiditas, Latin.]

1. Coldness; want of warmth.

2. Dulness; want of intellectual fire.

Driving at these as at the highest elegancies, which are but the frigidities of wit. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. i. c. 9.

Of the two extremes, one would sooner pardon phrenzy than frigidity. Pope's Preface to the Iliad.

3. Want of corporeal warmth.

The boiling blood of youth agitating the fluid air, hinders that serenity which is necessary to so severe an intentness; and the frigidity of decrepit age is as much its enemy, by reason of its dulling moisture. Glanv. Scops. c. 14.

4. Coldness of affection.

FRIGIDLY. adv. [from frigid.] Coldly; dully; without affection.

FRIGIDNESS. n. f. [from frigid.] Coldness; dulness; want of affection.

FRIGORIFICK. adj. [from frigorificus, frigus and facio, Lat.] Causing cold. A word used in science.

Frigorifick atoms or particles mean those nitrous salts which float in the air in cold weather, and occasion freezing. Quincy.

TO FRILL. v. a. [from frilleux, French.] To quake or shiver with cold. Used of a hawk; as, the hawk frills. Dict.

FRINGE. n. f. [from friggio, Italian; frange, French.] Ornamental appendages added to dress or furniture.

Those offices and dignities were but the facings or fringes of his greatness. Wotton.

The golden fringe ev'n set the ground on flame,

And drew a precious trail. Dryden's Flower and Leaf.

The shadows of all bodies, in this light, were bordered with three parallel fringes, or bands of coloured light, whereof that which was contiguous to the shadow was broadest and most luminous; and that which was remote from it was narrowest, and so faint as not easily to be visible. Newton's Opt.

TO FRINGE. v. a. [from the noun.] To adorn with fringes; to decorate with ornamental appendages.

Either side of the bank, fringed with most beautiful trees, resisted the sun's darts. Sidney, b. ii.

Of silver wings he took a shining pair,

Fringed with gold. Fairfax, Stan. 14.

Here, by the sacred bramble ting'd,

My petticoat is doubly fring'd. Swift.

FRIPPERER. n. f. [from frippier, French.] One who deals in old things vamped up.

FRIPPERY. n. f. [from fripperie, French; fripperia, Italian.]

1. The place where old cloaths are sold.

Oh, oh, monster, we know what belongs to a frippery. Shakespeare's Tempest.

Lurana is a frippery of bankrupts, who fly thither from Druina to play their after-game. Howel's Vocal Forrest.

2. Old cloaths; cast dresses; tattered rags.

Poor poet ape, that would be thought our chief,

Whose works are e'en the frippery of wit;

From brocade is become so bold a thief,

As we, the robb'd, leave rage, and pity it. Ben. Johnson.

The fighting-place now seamen's rage supply,

And all the tackling is a frippery. Donne.

Ragfair is a place near the Tower of London, where old cloaths and frippery are sold. Notes to Pope's Dunciad.

TO FRISK. v. n. [from frizzare, Italian.]

1. To leap; to skip.

Put water into a glass, and wet your finger, and draw it round about the lip of the glass, pressing it somewhat hard; and after drawing it some few times about, it will make the water frisk and sprinkle up in a fine dew. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

The fish fell a frisking in the net. L'Estrange's Fables.

Whether every one hath experimented this troublesome intrusion of some frisking ideas, which thus importune the understanding, and hinder it from being better employed, I know not. Locke.

2. To dance in frolick or gaiety.

We are as twinn'd lamb, that did frisk i' th' fun,

And bleat the one at the other: what we chang'd,

Was innocence for innocence; we knew not

The doctrine of ill-doing. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

About them frisking play'd

All beasts of th' earth. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. iv.

A wanton heifer frisked up and down in a meadow, at ease and pleasure. L'Estrange.

Watch the quick motions of the frisking tail,

Then serve their fury with the rushing male. Dryd. Virgil.

So Bacchus through the conquer'd Indies rode,

And beasts in gambols frisk'd before their honest god. Dryd.

Oft to the mountains airy tops advanc'd,

The frisking satyrs on the summits danc'd. Addison.

Those merry blades,

That frisk it under Pindus' shades. Prior.

Peg faints at the sound of an organ, and yet will dance and frisk at the noise of a bagpipe. Arbuthn. Hist. of John Bull.

Sly hunters thus, in Borneo's isle,

To catch a monkey by a wile,

The mimick animal amuse;

They place before him gloves and shoes;

Which when the brute puts aukward on,

All his agility is gone:

In vain to frisk or climb he tries;

The huntsmen seize the grinning prize: Swift.

FRISK. n. f. [from the verb.] A frolick; a fit of wanton gaiety.

FRISKER. n. f. [from frisk.] A wanton; one not constant or settled.

Now I will wear this, and now I will wear that;

Now I will wear I cannot tell what:

All new fashions be pleasant to me:

Now I am a frisker, all men on me look;

What should I do but set cock on the hoop? Camden.

FRISKINESS. n. f. [from frisk.] Gaiety; liveliness. A low word.

FRISKY. adj. [from frisque, French, from frisk.] Gay; airy. A low word.

FRIT. n. f. [Among chymists.] Ashes or salt baked or fried together with sand. Dict.

FRITH. n. f. [from fretum, Latin.]

1. A strait of the sea where the water being confined is rough.

What desp'rate madman then would venture o'er

The frith, or haul his cables from the shore? Dryd. Virg.

Batavian fleets

Defraud us of the glittering finny swarms

That heave our friths, and crowd upon our shores. Thomson.

2. A kind of net. I know not whether this sense be now retained.

The Wear is a frith, reaching through the Ose, from the land to low water mark, and having in it a bunt or cod with an eye-hook; where the fish entering, upon their coming back with the ebb, are stoppt from issuing out again. Carew.

FRITILLARY. n. f. [from fritillaire, French.] A plant.

The flower consists of six leaves, and is of the bell-shaped lily flowers, pendulous, naked, and, for the most part, chequered: the style of the flower becomes an oblong fruit, divided into three cells, and filled with flat seeds, lying in a double row: the root consists of two fleshy knobs, for the most part semi-globular, betwixt which arises the flower-stalk. Miller.

FRITINANCY. n. f. [from fritinnio, Latin.] The scream of an insect, as the cricket or cicada.

The note or fritinancy thereof is far more shrill than that of the locust, and its life short. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

FRITTTER. n. f. [from friture, French.]

1. A small piece cut to be fried.

Maids, fritters and pancakes ynow see ye make;

Let Slut have one pancake for company sake. Tuss. Husb.

2. A fragment; a small piece.

Sense and putter! have I lived to stand in the taunt of one that makes fritters of English! Shak. Merry Wives of Windsor.

If you strike a solid body that is brittle, as glass or sugar, it breaketh not only where the immediate force is, but breaketh all about into shivers and fritters; the motion, upon the pressure, searching all ways, and breaking where it findeth the body weakest. Bacon's Natural History.

The ancient errant knights

Won all their ladies hearts in fights;

And cut whole giants into fritters,

To put them into amorous twitters.

Hudibras, p. iii.

3. A cheesecake; a wigg.

Ainsworth.

To FRITTER. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To cut meat into small pieces to be fried.

2. To break into small particles or fragments.

Joy to great chaos! let division reign!

My racks and tortures soon shall drive them hence,

Break all their nerves, and fritter all their sense. Dunciad.

How prologues into prefaces decay,

And these to notes are fritter'd quite away. Pope's Dunciad.

FRIVOLOUS. adj. [frivolus, Latin; frivole, Fr.] Slight; trifling; of no moment.

It is frivolous to say we ought not to use bad ceremonies of the church of Rome, and presume all such bad as it pleaseth themselves to dislike. Hooker, b. iv. f. 4.

These seem very frivolous and fruitless; for, by the breach of them, little damage can come to the commonwealth. Spenser.

She tam'd the brinded lioness,

And spotted mountain pard; but set at nought

The frivolous bolt of Cupid.

Milton.

Those things which now seem frivolous and slight,

Will be of serious consequence to you,

When they have made you once ridiculous. Roscommon.

All the impeachments in Greece and Rome seem to have agreed in a notion they had of being concerned, in point of honour, to condemn whatever person they impeached, however frivolous the articles, or however weak the surmises, whereon they were to proceed in their proofs. Swift.

I will not defend any mistake, and do not think myself obliged to answer every frivolous objection. Arbutnot.

FRIVOLOUSNESS. n. f. [from frivolous.] Want of importance; triflingness.

FRIVOLOUSLY. adv. [from frivolous.] Triflingly; without weight.

To FRIZLE. v. a. [friser, Fr.] To curl in short curls like nap of frieze.

Th' humble shrub

And bush, with frizl'd hair implicit. Milton's Parad. Lost.

They frizled and curled their hair with hot irons. Hakewill.

I doff'd my shoe, and swear

Therein I spy'd this yellow frizled hair. Gay's Pastorals.

FRIZLER. n. f. [from frizle.] One that makes short curls.

FRO. adv. [of fna, Saxon.]

1. Backward; regressively. It is only used in opposition to the word to; to and fro, backward and forward.

The Carthaginians, in all the long Punick war, having spoiled all Spain, rooted out all that were affected to the Romans; and the Romans, having recovered that country, did cut off all that favoured the Carthaginians: so betwixt them both, to and fro, there was scarce a native Spaniard left. Spens.

As when a heap of gather'd thorns is cast,

Now to, now fro, before th' autumnal blast,

Together clung, it rolls around the field. Pope's Odyssey.

2. It is a contraction of from: not now used.

They turn round like grindstones,

Which they dig out fro' the delves,

For their bairns bread, wives and selves. Ben. Johnson.

FROCK. n. f. [froc, French.]

1. A dress; a coat.

That monster, custom, is angel yet in this,

That to the use of actions fair and good,

He likewise gives a frock or livery,

That aptly is put on.

Shakespeare's Hamlet.

Chalybean temper'd steel, and frock of mail

2. A kind of close coat for men.

I strip my body of my shepherd's frock.

Dryden.

3. A kind of gown for children.

FROG. n. f. [frozza, Saxon.]

1. A small animal with four feet, living both by land and water, and placed by naturalists among mixed animals, as partaking of beast and fish. There is likewise a small green frog that perches on trees, said to be venomous.

Poor Tom, that eats the swimming frog, the toad, the toad-pole. Shakespeare's King Lear.

Auster is drawn with a pot or urn, pouring forth water, with which shall descend frogs. Peacham on Drawing.

2. The hollow part of the horse's hoof.

FROGBIT. n. f. [frog and bit.] An herb. Ainsworth.

FROGLETTUCE. n. f. [frog and lettuce.] A plant.

FROISE. n. f. [from the French froisser, as the pancake is crisped or crimped in frying.] A kind of food made by frying bacon inclosed in a pancake.

FROLICK. adj. [vrolijk, Dutch.] Gay; full of levity; full of pranks.

We fairies, that do run

By the triple Hecate's team,

From the presence of the sun,

Following darkness like a dream,

Now are frolick. Shakespeare's Midsum. Night's Dream.

Whether, as some sages sing,

The frolick wind that breathes the Spring,

Zephyr with Aurora playing,

As he met her once a Maying;

There on beds of violets blue,

And fresh-blown roses wash'd in dew,

Fill'd her with thee a daughter fair,

So buxom, blithe, and debonnaire. Milton.

Who ripe, and frolick of his full-grown age,

Roving the Celtick and Iberian fields,

At last betakes him to this ominous wood. Milton.

The gay, the frolick, and the loud. Waller.

FROLICK. n. f. [from the adjective.] A wild prank; a flight of whim and levity.

He would be at his frolick once again,

And his pretensions to divinity. Roscommon.

Alcibiades, having been formerly noted for the like frolicks and excursions, was immediately accused of this. Swift.

While rain depends, the pensive cat gives o'er

Her frolicks, and pursues her tail no more. Swift.

To FROLICK. v. n. [from the noun.] To play wild pranks; to play tricks of levity and gaiety.

Then to her new love let her go,

And deck her in golden array;

Be finest at ev'ry fine show,

And frolick it all the long day. Rowe.

FROLICKLY. adv. [from frolick.] Gaily; wild'y.

FROLICKSOME. adj. [from frolick.] Full of wild gaiety.

FROLICKSOMENESS. n. f. [from frolicksome.] Wildness of gaiety; pranks.

FROLICKSOMELY. adv. [from frolicksome.] With wild gaiety.

FROM. prep. [fram, Saxon and Scottish.]

1. Away; noting privation.

Your slighting Zulema, this very hour

Will take ten thousand subjects from your power. Dryden.

In fetters one the barking porter ty'd,

And took him trembling from his sov'reign's side. Dryden.

Clarissa drew, with tempting grace,

A two-edg'd weapon from the shining case. Pope.

2. Noting reception.

What time would spare from steel receives its date. Pope.

3. Noting procession, descent, or birth.

Thus the hard and stubborn race of man

From animated rock and flint began. Blackmore's Creation.

The song began from Jove.

Succeeding kings rise from the happy bed. Irene.

4. Noting transmission.

The messengers from our sister and the king. Shakesp.

5. Noting abstraction; vacation from.

I shall find time

From this enormous state, and seek to give

Losses their remedies. Shakespeare's King Lear.

6. With to following; noting succession.

These motions we must examine from first to last, to find out what was the form of the earth. Burn. Theo. of the Earth.

He bid her from time to time be comforted. Addis. Spectat.

7. Out of; noting emission.

When the most high

Eternal Father, from his secret cloud

Amidst, in thunder utter'd thus his voice. Milt. Par. Lost.

Then pierc'd with pain, she shook her haughty head,

Sigh'd from her inward soul, and thus she said. Dryd. Æn.

8. Noting progress from premises to inferences.

If an objection be not removed, the conclusion of experience from the time past to the time present will not be found and perfect. Bacon's War with Spain.

This is evident from that high and refined morality, which shined forth in some of the ancient heathens. South's Sermons.

9. Noting the place or person from whom a message is brought.

The king is coming, and I must speak with him from the bridge.—How now, Fluellen, cam'st thou from the bridge? Shakespeare's Henry V.

10. Out of: noting extraction.

From high Meonia's rocky shores I came,

Of poor descent; Acates is my name. Addis. Ovid. Met.

11. Because of. Noting the reason or motive of an act or effect.

You are good, but from a nobler cause;

From your own knowledge, not from nature's laws. Dryden.

David celebrates the glory of God from the consideration of the greatness of his works. Tillotson, Sermon 4.

We sicken soon from her contagious care;

Grieve for her sorrows, groan for her despair. Prior.

Relaxations

- Relaxations from plenitude is cured by spare diet, and from any cause by that which is contrary to it. Arbutnot on Alim.
12. Out of. Noting the ground or cause of any thing.
They who believe that the praises which arise from valour are superiour to those which proceed from any other virtues, have not considered. Dryden's Virg. Æn. Dedication.
What entertainment can be raised from so pitiful a machine?
We see the success of the battle from the very beginning. Dryd.
'Tis true from force the strongest titles spring. Dryden.
13. Not near to. Noting distance.
His regiment lies half a mile at least
South from the mighty power of the king. Shak. Rich. III.
14. Noting separation or recession.
To die by thee, were but to die in jest;
From thee to die, were torture more than death. Sh. H. VI.
By the sacred radiance of the sun,
The mysteries of Hecate, and the night;
By all the operations of the orbs,
From whom we do exist, and cease to be,
Here I disclaim all my paternal care. Shakesp. King Lear.
Hast thou beheld, when from the goal they start,
The youthful charioteers, with heaving heart,
Rush to the race, and, panting, scarcely bear
Th' extremes of feverish hope and chilling fear. Dryd. Virg.
15. Noting exemption or deliverance.
From jealousy's tormenting strife,
For ever be thy bosom free. Prior.
16. At a distance. Noting absence.

Of differences, which I best thought it fit
To answer from our home. Shakespeare's King Lear.
17. Noting derivation.
I lay the deep foundations of a wall,
And Enos, nam'd from me, the city call. Dryden's Æn.
18. Since. Noting distance from the past.
The flood was not the cause of mountains, but there were mountains from the creation. Raleigh's History of the World.
I had, from my childhood, a wart upon one of my fingers.
Bacon's Natural History, N<sup>o</sup>. 997.
The other had been trained up from his youth in the war of Flanders. Clarendon, b. viii.
The milk of tygers was his infant food,
Taught from his tender years the taste of blood. Dryden.
Were there, from all eternity, no memorable actions done
'till about that time? Tillotson, Sermon I.
19. Contrary to.
Any thing so overdone is from the purpose of playing;
whose end, both at the first and now, was and is to hold, as
'twere, the mirror up to nature. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
Do not believe,
That from the sense of all civility,
I thus would play and trifle with your reverence. Shakesp.
Did you draw bonds to forfeit? Sign, to break?
Or must we read you quite from what we speak,
And find the truth out the wrong way? Donne.
20. Noting removal.
Thrice from the ground she leap'd. Dryden's Æn. b. ii.
21. From is very frequently joined by an ellipsis with adverbs:
as, from above, from the parts above; from below, from the places below; of which some are here exemplified.
22. FROM above.
He, which gave them from above such power, for miraculous confirmation of that which they taught, endued them also with wisdom from above, to teach that which they so did confirm. Hooker, b. iii. f. 8.
No sooner were his eyes in slumber bound,
When, from above, a more than mortal sound
Invades his ears. Dryden's Æn. b. viii.

From far the town and lofty tow'rs survey. Dryden's Æn.
27. FROM high.
Then heav'n's imperious queen shot down from high. Dryd.
28. FROM thence. Here from is superfluous.
In the necessary differences which arise from thence, they rather break into several divisions than join in any one publick interest; and from hence have always risen the most dangerous factions, which have ruined the peace of nations. Clarendon.
29. FROM whence. From is here superfluous.
- While future realms his wand'ring thoughts delight,
His daily vision, and his dream by night,
Forbidden Thebes appears before his eye,
From whence he sees his absent brother fly. Pope's Statius.
30. FROM where.
From where high Ithaca o'erlooks the floods,
Brown with o'er-arching shades and pendent woods,
Us to these shores our filial duty draws. Pope's Odyssey.
31. FROM without.
When the plantation grows to strength, then it is time to plant it with women as well as with men, that it may spread into generations, and not be pieced from without. Bacon.
If native power prevail not, shall I doubt
To seek for needful succour from without. Dryden's Æn.
32. From is sometimes followed by another preposition, with its proper case.
33. FROM amidst.
Thou too shalt fall by time or barb'rous foes,
Whose circling walls the sev'n fam'd hills enclose;
And thou, whose rival tow'rs invade the skies,
And, from amidst the waves, with equal glory rise. Addison.
34. FROM among.
Here had new begun
My wand'ring, had not he, who was my guide
Up hither, from among the trees appear'd,
Presence divine! Milton's Paradise Lost, b. viii.
35. FROM beneath.
My worthy wife our arms mislaid,
And from beneath my head my sword convey'd. Dryd. Æn.
36. FROM beyond.
There followed him great multitudes of people from Galilee, and from beyond Jordan. Mat. iv. 25.
37. FROM forth.
Young Aretus, from forth his bridal bow'r,
Brought the full laver o'er their hands to pour,
And canisters of consecrated flour. Pope's Odyssey.
38. FROM off.
The sea being constrained to withdraw from off certain tracts of lands, which lay 'till then at the bottom of it. Woodw.

Of envy, discord, and of cruel deeds. Dryden's Æn. b. vii.
Strong god of arms, whose iron sceptre sways
The freezing North and hyperborean seas,
Terror is thine; and wild amazement, flung
From out thy chariot, withers ev'n the strong. Dryden.
40. FROM out of.
Whatsoever such principle there is, it was at the first found out by discourse, and drawn from out of the very bowels of heaven and earth. Hooker, b. i. f. 8.
41. FROM under.
He, though blind of sight,
Despis'd, and thought extinguish'd quite,
With inward eyes illuminated,
His fiery virtue rous'd
From under ashes into sudden flame. Milton's Agonistes.
42. FROM within.
From within
The broken bowels, and the bloated skin,
A buzzing noise of bees his ears alarms. Dryd. Virg. Geor.
- FROMWARD.* prep. [fram and peap, Saxon.] Away from;
the contrary to the word towards.
As cheerfully going towards as Pyrocles went froward
fromward his death. Sidney.
The common horizontal needle is continually varying towards East and West; and so the dipping or inclining needle is varying up and down, towards or fromwards the zenith,

- FRONDI'FEROUS.* adj. [frondifer, Lat.] Bearing leaves. Dist.
- FRONT.* n. f. [frons, Latin; front, French.]
1. The face.
His front yet threatens, and his frowns command. Prior.
They stand not front to front, but each doth view
The other's tail, pursu'd as they pursue. Creech's Manilius.
The patriot virtues that distend thy thought,
Spread on thy front, and in thy bosom glow. Thomson.
2. The face, in a sense of censure or dislike: as, a hardened front; a fierce front. This is the usual sense.
3. The face as opposed to an enemy.
His forward hand, inur'd to wounds, makes way
Upon the sharpest fronts of the most fierce. Daniel's C. W.
4. The part or place opposed to the face.

The access of the town was only by a neck of land: our men had shot that thundered upon them from the rampier in front, and from the galleys that lay at sea in flank. Bacon.

5. The van of an army.

'Twixt host and host but narrow space was left,

A dreadful interval! and front to front

Presented, stood in terrible array. Milton's Paradise Lost.

6. The forepart of any thing, as of a building.

Both these sides are not only returns, but parts of the front; and uniform without, though severally partitioned within, and are on both sides of a great and stately tower, in the midst of the front. Bacon, Essay 46.

Palladius adviseth the front of his edifice should so respect the South, that in its first angle it receive the rising rays of the Winter sun, and decline a little from the Winter setting thereof. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. vi.

The prince approach'd the door,

Possess'd the porch, and on the front above

He fix'd the fatal bough. Dryden's Æn. b. vi.

One sees the front of a palace covered with painted pillars of different orders. Addison's Remarks on Italy.

7. The most conspicuous part or particular.

To FRONT. v. a. [from the noun]

1. To oppose directly, or face to face; to encounter.

You four shall front them in the narrow lane; we will walk lower: if they 'scape from your encounter, then they light on us. Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. i.

Can you, when you have push'd out of your gates the very defender of them, think to front his revenges with easy groans. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

Some are either to be won to the state in a fast and true manner, or fronted with some other of the same party that may oppose them, and so divide the reputation. Bacon's Essays.

I shall front thee, like some staring ghost,

With all my wrongs about me. Dryden's Don Sebastian.

2. To stand opposed or overagainst any place or thing.

The square will be one of the most beautiful in Italy when this statue is erected, and a townhouse built at one end to front the church that stands at the other. Addison on Italy.

To FRONT. v. n. To stand foremost.

I front but in that file,

Where others tell steps with me. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

FRONTAL. n. f. [frontale, Lat. frontal, Fr.] Any external form of medicine to be applied to the forehead, generally composed amongst the ancients of coolers and hypnoticks. Quincy.

We may apply intercipients upon the temples of mastick: frontales may also be applied. Wise man's Surgery.

The torpedo, being alive, stupifies at a distance; but after death produceth no such effect; which had they retained, they might have supplied opium, and served as frontals in phrenies. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. iii.

FRONTATED. adj. [from frons, Latin.] In botany, the frontated leaf of a flower grows broader and broader, and at last perhaps terminates in a right line: used in opposition to cuspated, which is, when the leaves of a flower end in a point. Quincy.

FRONTBOX. n. f. [front and box.] The box in the playhouse from which there is a direct view to the stage.

How vain are all these glories, all our pains,

Unless good sense preserve what beauty gains!

That men may say, when we the frontbox grace,

Behold the first in virtue, as in face. Pope's Ra of the Lock.

FRONTED. adj. [from front.] Formed with a front.

Part fronted brigades form.

Milton.

FRONTIER. n. f. [frontiere, French.] The marches; the limit; the utmost verge of any territory; the border: properly that which terminates not at the sea, but fronts another country.

Draw all the inhabitants of those borders away, or plant garrisons upon all those frontiers about him. Spenser on Ireland.

I upon my frontiers here

Keep residence,

That little which is left so to defend. Milton's Paradise Lost.

FRONTIER. adj. Bordering.

A place there lies on Gallia's utmost bounds,

Where rising seas insult the frontier grounds. Addison.

FRONTISPIECE. n. f. [frontispicium, id quod in fronte conspiciatur; frontispice, French.] That part of any building or other body that directly meets the eye.

With frontispiece of diamond and gold

Embellish'd, thick with sparkling orient gems

The portal shone. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. iii.

Who is it has informed us that a rational soul can inhabit no tenement, unless it has just such a sort of frontispice? Locke.

The frontispiece of the townhouse has pillars of a beautiful black marble, streaked with white. Addison on Italy.

FRONTLESS. adj. [from front.] Without blushes; without shame; without diffidence.

Thee, frontless man, we follow'd from afar,

Thy instruments of death and tools of war. Dryd. Iliad.

For vice, though frontless and of harden'd face,

Is daunted at the sight of awful grace. Dryden.

Strike a blush through frontless flattery. Pope.

FRONTLET. n. f. [from frons, Latin; fronteau, French.] A bandage worn upon the forehead.

How now, daughter, what makes that frontlet on? You are too much of late i' th' frown. Shakespeare's King Lear.

They shall be as frontlets between thine eyes. Dextr. vi. 8.

To the forehead frontlets were applied, to restrain and intercept the influx. Wise man's Surgery.

FRONTROOM. n. f. [front and room.] An apartment in the forepart of the house.

If your shop stands in an eminent street, the frontrooms are commonly more airy than the backrooms; and it will be inconvenient to make the frontroom shallow. Moxon's Mech. Ex.

FRORE. adj. [bevroren, Dutch, frozen.] Frozen. This word is not used since the time of Milton.

The parching air

Burns fore, and cold performs th' effect of fire. Milt. P. L.

FRORNE. adj. [bevroren, frozen, Dutch.] Frozen; congealed with cold. Obsolete.

O, my heart-blood is well nigh frorne I feel,

And my galage grown fast to my heel. Spenser's Pastora's.

FROST. n. f. [frost, Saxon.]

1. The last effect of cold; the power or act of congelation.

This is the state of man: to-day he puts forth

The tender leaves of hopes, to-morrow blossoms,

And bears his blushing honours thick upon him;

The third day comes a frost, a killing frost,

And when he thinks, good easy man, full surely

His greatness is a ripening, nips his root,

And then he falls. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

When the frost seizes upon wine, only the more waterish parts are congealed: there is a mighty spirit which can retreat into itself, and within its own compass lie secure from the freezing impression. South's Sermons.

2. The appearance of plants and trees sparkling with congelation of dew.

Behold the groves that shine with silver frost,

Their beauty wither'd, and their verdure lost. Pope's Winter.

FROSTBITTEN. adj. [frost and bitten.] Nipped or withered by the frost.

The leaves, gathered somewhat before they are too much frostbitten, make excellent mattresses. Mortimer.

FROSTED. adj. [from frost.] Laid on in inequalities like those of the hoar frost upon plants.

The rich brocaded silk unfold,

Where rising flow'rs grow stiff with frosted gold. Gay.

FROSTILY. adv. [from frosty.]

1. With frost; with excessive cold.

2. Without warmth of affection.

Courtling, I rather thou should'st utterly

Dispraise my work, than praise it frostily. Ben. Johnson.

FROSTINESS. n. f. [from frosty.] Cold; freezing cold.

FROSTNAIL. n. f. [frost and nail.] A nail with a prominent head driven into the horse's shoes, that it may pierce the ice.

The claws are strait only to take hold, for better progression; as a horse that is shod with frostnails. Grew's Cysmol.

FROSTWORK. n. f. [frost and work.] Work in which the substance is laid on with inequalities, like the dew congealed upon shrubs.

By nature shap'd to various figures, those

The fruitful rain, and these the hail compose;

The snowy fleece and curious frostwork these,

Produce the dew, and those the gentle breeze. Blackmore.

FROSTY. adj. [from frost.]

1. Having the power of congelation; excessive cold.

For all my blood in Rome's great quarrel shed,

For all the frosty nights that I have watch'd,

Be pitiful to my condemned sons. Shakesp. Titus Andronicus.

The air, if very cold, irritateth the flame, and maketh it burn more fiercely; as fire scorseth in frosty weather. Bacon.

A gnat, half starved with cold and hunger, went out one frosty morning to a bee-hive. L'Estrange.

2. Chill in affection; without warmth of kindness or courage.

What a frosty spirited rogue is this! Shakesp. Henry IV.

3. Hoary; gray-haired; resembling frost.

Where is loyalty?

If it be banish'd from the frosty head,

Where shall it find a harbour in the earth? Shak. H. VI.

FROTH. n. f. [fro, Danish and Scottish.]

1. Spume; foam; the bubbles caused in liquors by agitation.

His hideous tail then hurled he about,

And therewith all enwrap the nimble thighs

Of his froth foamy steed. Fairy Queen, b. i. cant. 11.

When wind expireth from under the sea, as it causeth some resounding of the water, so it causeth some light motions of bubbles, and white circles of froth. Bacon's Nat. History.

Surging waves against a solid rock,

Though all to shivers dash'd, th' assault renew;

Vain batt'ry, and in froth or bubbles end. Milton's Pa. Reg.

The useless froth swims on the surface, but the pearl lies covered with a mass of waters. Glanv. Sceps. c. 9.

F R O

The scatter'd ocean flies;
Black sands, discolour'd froth, and mingled mud arise. Dry.

They were the froth my raging folly mov'd
When it boil'd up; I knew not then I lov'd, Yet then lov'd most. Dryden's Aurengzebe.

If now the colours of natural bodies are to be mingled, let water, a little thickened with soap, be agitated to raise a froth; and after that froth has stood a little, there will appear, to one that shall view it intently, various colours every where in the surfaces of the several bubbles; but to one that shall go so far off that he cannot distinguish the colours from one another, the whole froth will grow white, with a perfect whiteness.

Newton's Opt.

A painter, having finished the picture of a horse, excepting the loose froth about his mouth and his bridle; and after many unsuccessful essays, despairing to do that to his satisfaction, in a great rage threw a sponge at it, all besmeared with the colours, which fortunately hitting upon the right place, by one bold stroke of chance most exactly supplied the want of skill in the artist. Bentley's Sermons.

2. Any empty or senseless show of wit or eloquence.
3. Any thing not hard, solid, or substantial.

Who eateth his veal, pig and lamb being froth,
Shall twice in a week go to bed without broth. Tuss. Husb.
To FROTH. v. n. [from the noun.] To foam; to throw out spume; to generate spume.

He frets within, froths treason at his mouth,
And churns it through his teeth. Dryden's Don Sebastian.

FRO'THILY. adv. [from frothy.]

1. With foam; with spume.
2. In an empty trifling manner.

FRO'THY. adj. [from froth.]

1. Full of foam, froth, or spume.

The sap of trees is of differing natures; some watery and clear, as vines, beeches, pears; some thick, as apples; some gummy, as cherries; and some frothy, as elms. Bacon.

Behold a frothy substance rise;

Be cautious, or your bottle flies. Swift.

2. Soft; not solid; wafting.

Their bodies are so solid and hard as you need not fear that bathing should make them frothy. Bacon's Natural History.

3. Vain; empty; trifling.

What's a voluptuous dinner, and the frothy vanity of discourse that commonly attends these pompous entertainments? What is it but a mortification, to a man of sense and virtue? L'Estrange, Fable 185.

Though the principles of religion were never so clear and evident, yet they may be made ridiculous by vain and frothy men; as the gravest and wisest person in the world may be abused by being put in a fool's coat. Tillotson, Sermon 1.

FROUNCE. n. f. A word used by falconers for a distemper, in which white spittle gathers about the hawk's bill.

Skinner and Ainsworth.

To FROUNCE. v. a. [from the noun.] To frizzle or curl the hair about the face. This word was at first probably used in contempt.

Some frounce their curled hair in courtly guise,

Some prank their ruffs, and others timely dight

Their gay attire. Fairy Queen, b. i. cant. 4.

Some warlike sign must be used; either a slovenly buskin, or an overfaring frounced head. Ascham's Schoolmaster.

Thus, night, oft see me in thy pale career,

'Till civil suited morn appear;

Not trick'd and frounc'd as she was wont,

With the Attick boy to hunt. Milton.

FRO'UZY. adj. [A cant word.] Dim; foetid; musty.

Petticoats in frouzy heaps. Swift.

When first Diana leaves her bed,

Vapours and steams her looks disgrace;

A frouzy dirty-colour'd red

Sits on her cloudy wrinkled face. Swift.

FRO'WARD. adj. [framweard, Saxon.] Peevish; ungovernable; angry; perverse: the contrary to toward.

The froward pain of mine own heart made me so delight to punish him, whom I esteemed the chiefest let in the way. Sidney.

She's not froward, but modest as the dove:

She is not hot, but temperate as the morn. Shakespeare.

Whose ways are crooked, and they froward in their paths.

Prov. ii. 15.

Time moveth so round, that a froward retention of custom is as turbulent a thing as innovation. Bacon, Essay 25.

'Tis with froward men, and froward factions too, as 'tis with froward children; they'll be sooner quieted by fear than by any sense of duty. L'Estrange.

They help or occasion sleep, as we find by the common use and experience of rocking froward children in cradles. Temple.

FRO'WARDLY. adv. [from froward.] Peevishly; perversely.

I hid me and was wroth, and he went frowardly in the way of his heart. Jf. lvii. 17.

F R U

FRO'WARDNESS. n. f. [from froward.] Peevishness; perverseness.

How many frowardnesses of ours does he smother? how many indignities does he pass by? how many affronts does he put up at our hands? South's Sermons.

We'll mutually forget

The warmth of youth and frowardness of age. Addis. Cato.

FRO'WER. n. f. [I know not the etymology.] A cleaving tool.

A frower of iron for cleaving of lath,

With roll for a sawpit, good husbandry hath. Tuss. Husb.

To FROWN. v. a. [from frowner, old French, to wrinkle. Skinner.] To express displeasure by contracting the face to wrinkles; to look stern.

Say, that she frowns; I'll say, she looks as clear

As morning roses newly wash'd with dew. Shakespeare.

They chuse their magistrate;

And such a one as he, who puts his shall,

His popular shall, against a graver bench

Than ever frown'd. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

How now, daughter, what makes that frontlet on? You are too much of late i' th' frown.

—Thou wast a pretty fellow, when thou hadst no need to care for her frowning. Shakespeare's King Lear.

Heroes in animated marble frown. Pope.

The wood,

Whose shady horrors on a rising brow

Wav'd high, and frown'd upon the stream below. Pope.

FROWN. n. f. [from the verb.] A wrinkled look; a look of displeasure.

Patiently endure that frown of fortune, and by some notable exploit win again her favour. Knolles's History of the Turks.

In his half-clos'd eyes

Stern vengeance yet and hostile terror stand;

His front yet threatens, and his frowns command. Prior.

FRO'WNINGLY. adv. [from frown.] Sternly; with a look of displeasure.

What, look'd he frowningly?

—A count'nance more in sorrow than in anger. Shak. Ham.

FRO'WY. adj. Musty; mossy. This word is now not used; but instead of it frouzy.

But if they with thy gores should yede,

They soon might be corrupted;

Or like not of the frowy fede,

Or with the weeds be glutted. Spenser's Pastorals.

FRO'ZEN. part. pass. of freeze.

Against whom was the fine frozen knight, frozen in despair; but his armour so naturally representing ice, and all his furniture so lively answering thereto, as yet did I never see any thing that pleased me better. Sidney, b. ii.

How dire a tempest from Mycenæ pour'd,

Our plains, our temples, and our town devour'd:

What was the waste of war, what fierce alarms

Shook Asia's crown with European arms;

Ev'n such have heard, if any such there be,

Whose earth is bounded by the frozen sea. Dryden's Æn.

Fierce Boreas, with his offspring, issues forth

T' invade the frozen waggon of the North. Dryd. Ovid.

A cheerful blaze arose, and by the fire

They warm'd their frozen feet, and dry'd their wet attire.

Dryden's Flower and Leaf.

F. R. S. Fellow of the Royal Society.

Who this profess,

Shine in the dignity of F. R. S. Pope.

FRU'CTIFEROUS. adj. [from fructifer, Latin.] Bearing fruit. Ains.

To FRU'CTIFY. v. a. [from fructifier, French.] To make fruitful; to fertilise.

The legal levies the sovereign raises, are as vapours which the sun exhales, which fall down in sweet showers to fructify the earth. Howel's Vocal Forest.

Where e'er she looks, behold some sudden birth

Adorns the trees, and fructifies the earth. Cranville.

To FRU'CTIFY. v. n. To bear fruit.

It watereth the heart, to the end it may fructify; maketh the virtuous, in trouble, full of magnanimity and courage; and serveth as a most approved remedy against all doleful and heavy accidents which befall men in this present life. Hooker.

Thus would there nothing fructify, either near or under them, the sun being horizontal to the poles. Brown's Vul. Err.

FRUCTIFICATION. n. f. [from fructify.] The act of causing or of bearing fruit; fecundation; fertility.

That the sap doth powerfully rise in the Spring, to put the plant in a capacity of fructification, he that hath beheld how many gallons of water may be drawn from a birch-tree, hath slender reason to doubt. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. ii.

FRU'CTUOUS. adj. [from fructueux, Fr. from fructify.] Fruitful; fertile; impregnating with fertility.

Here to the light

Apples of price, and plenteous sheaves of corn

Oft interlac'd occur; and both imbibe

Fitting congenial juice, so rich the soil,

So much does fructuous moisture o'erabound! Phillips.

FRUGAL.

FRUGAL. adj. [frugalis, Latin; frugal, Fr.] Thrifty; sparing; parsimonious; not prodigal; not profuse; not lavish.

If through mists he shoots his fullen beams,
Frugal of light, in loose and straggling streams,
Suspect a drizzling day. Dryden's Virgil's Georgicks.

FRUGALLY. adv. [from frugal.] Parsimoniously; sparingly; thriftily.

Mean time young Pasimond his marriage press'd,
And frugally resolv'd, the charge to thun,
To join his brother's bridal with his own. Dryden.

FRUGALITY. n. f. [frugalité, French; frugalitas, Latin.] Thrift; parsimony; good husbandry.

As for the general sort of men, frugality may be the cause of drinking water; for that is no small saving, to pay nothing for one's drink. Bacon.

Frugality and bounty too,
Those differing virtues, meet in you. Waller.

In this frugality of your praises, some things I cannot omit. Dryden's Fables, Dedication.

The boundaries of virtues are indivisible lines: it is impossible to march up close to the frontiers of frugality, without entering the territories of parsimony. Arbuthnot's John Bull.

FRUGIFEROUS. adj. [frugifer, Latin.] Bearing fruit. Ains.

FRUIT. n. f. [fructus, Latin; frwyth, Welsh; fruit, French.]

1. The product of a tree or plant in which the seeds are contained

The strawberry grows underneath the nettle,
And wholesome berries thrive and ripen best,
Neighbour'd by fruit of baser quality. Shakesp. Henry V.

2. That part of a plant which is taken for food.

By tasting of that fruit forbid,
Where they sought knowledge, they did error find. Davies.
See how the rising fruits the gardens crown,
Imbibe the sun, and make his light their own. Blackmore.

3. Production.

The fruit of the spirit is in all goodness and righteousness, and truth. Ez. v. 9.

4. The offspring of the womb; the young of any animal.

Can't thou their reck'nings keep? the time compute,
When their swol'n bellies shall enlarge their fruit. Sandys.

5. Advantage gained by any enterprise or conduct.

What is become of all the king of Sweden's victories?
Where are the fruits of them at this day? Or of what benefit will they be to posterity? Swift.

Another fruit, from considering things in themselves, will be, that each man will pursue his thoughts in that method which will be most agreeable to the nature of the thing, and to his apprehension of what it suggests to him. Locke.

6. The effect or consequence of any action.

She blush'd when she considered the effect of granting; she was pale, when she remembered the fruits of denying. Sidney.
They shall eat of the fruit of their own way. Prov. i. 31.
If I live in the flesh, this is the fruit of my labour Philip i.

FRUITAGE. n. f. [fruitage, French.] Fruit collectively; various fruits.

In heav'n the trees
Of life ambrosial fruitage bear, and vines Yield nectar. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. v.

Greedily they pluck'd

The fruitage, fair to sight, like that which grew Near that bituminous lake where Sodom flam'd. Milton.

What is more ordinary with them than the taking in flowers and fruitage for the garnishing of their work? More.

FRUITBEARER. n. f. [fruit and bearer.] That which produces fruit.

Trees, especially fruitbearers, are often infected with the measles. Mortimer's Husbandry.

FRUITBEARING. adj. [fruit and bear.] Having the quality of producing fruit.

By this way graft trees of different kinds one on another, as fruitbearing trees on those that bear not. Mort. Husbandry.

FRUITERER. n. f. [fruitier, French.] One who trades in fruit.

I did fight with one Sampson Stockfish, a fruiterer, behind Gray's-inn. Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. ii.

Walnuts the fruit'er's hand in Autumn stain;

Blue plumbs and juicy pears augment his gain. Gay.

FRUITERY. n. f. [fruiterie, French.]

1. Fruit collectively taken.

Oft, notwithstanding all thy care
To help thy plants, on the small fruitery
Exempt from ills, an oriental blast
Disastrous flies. Phillips.

2. A fruit loft; a repository for fruit.

FRUITFUL. adj. [fruit and full.]

1. Fertile; abundantly productive; liberal of product.

If he continued cruel, he could no more sustain his life than the earth remain fruitful in the sun's continual absence. Sidney, b. ii.

2. Actually bearing fruit.

Adonis' gardens,

That one day bloom'd, and fruitful were the next. Shakesp.

3. Prolifick; childbearing; not barren.

Hear, nature, hear; dear goddess, hear a father!
Suspend thy purpose, if thou did'st intend
To make this creature fruitful:

Into her womb convey sterility. Shakespeare's King Lear.

I have copied nature, making the youths amorous and the damsels fruitful. Gay's Preface to the What d'ye Call it.

4. Plenteous; abounding in any thing.

While you, my lord, the rural shades admire,
And from Britannia's publick posts retire,
Me into foreign realms my fate conveys,
Through nations fruitful of immortal lays. Addison.

FRUITFULLY. adv. [from fruitful.]

1. In such a manner as to be prolific.

How sacred seeds of sea, and air, and earth,
And purer fire through universal night,
And empty space, did fruitfully unite. Roscommon.

2. Plenteously; abundantly.

You have many opportunities to cut him off: if your will want not, time and place will be fruitfully offered. Shakesp.

FRUITFULNESS. n. f. [from fruitful.]

1. Fertility; fecundity; plentiful production.

Neither can we ascribe the same fruitfulness to any part of the earth, nor the same virtue to any plant thereon growing;
that they had before the flood. Raleigh's Hist. of the World.

2. The quality of being prolific.

The goddess, present at the match she made,
So bless'd the bed, such fruitfulness convey'd,
That ere ten moons had sharpen'd either horn,
To crown their bliss, a lovely boy was born. Dryd. Ovid.

3. Exuberant abundance.

The remedy of fruitfulness is easy, but no labour will help the contrary: I will like and praise some things in a young writer, which yet, if he continues in, I cannot but justly hate him for. Ben. Johnson's Discoveries.

FRUITGROVES. n. f. [fruit and groves.] Shades, or close plantations of fruit trees.

The faithful slave,
Whom to my nuptial train Icarus gave,
To tend the fruitgroves? Pope's Odyssey, b. iv.

FRUITION. n. f. [fruor, Latin.] Enjoyment; possession; pleasure given by possession or use.

Man doth not seem to rest satisfied either with fruition of that wherewith his life is preserved, or with performance of such actions as advance him most deservedly in estimation. Hooker, b. i.

I am driv'n, by breath of her renown,
Either to seek shipwreck, or arrive
Where I may have fruition of her love. Shakesp. Henry VI.

God riches and renown to men imparts,
Ev'n all they wish; and yet their narrow hearts
Cannot so great a fluency receive,
But their fruition to a stranger leave. Sandys's Paraphrase.

Affliction generally disables a man from pursuing those vices in which the guilt of men consists: if the affliction be on his body, his appetites are weakened, and capacity of fruition destroyed. Rogers's Sermons.

Wit once, like beauty, without art or dress,
Naked and unadorn'd, could find success;
'Till by fruition, novelty destroy'd,

The nymph must find new charms to be enjoy'd. Granv.

FRUITIVE. adj. [from the noun.] Enjoying; possessing;

having the power of enjoyment.

To whet our longings for fruitive or experimental knowledge, it is reserved among the prerogatives of being in heaven to know how happy we shall be, when there. Boyle.

FRUITLESS. adj. [from fruit.]

1. Barren of fruit; not bearing fruit.

The Spaniards of Mexico, for the first forty years, could not make our kind of wheat bear seed; but it grew up as high as the trees, and was fruitless. Raleigh's History.

2. Vain; productive of no advantage; idle; unprofitable.

O! let me not, quoth he, return again
Back to the world, whose joys so fruitless are;
But let me here for ay in peace remain,
Or straightway on that last long voyage fare. Fairy Queen.

Serpent! we might have spar'd our coming hither;
Fruitless to me, though fruit be here t' excess. Milt. P. L.

3. Without offspring.

Upon my head they plac'd a fruitless crown,
And put a barren scepter in my gripe;
No son of mine succeeding. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

FRUITLESSLY. adv. [from fruitless.] Vainly; idly; unprofitably.

After this fruit curiosity fruitlessly enquireth, and confidence blindly determineth. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. viii.

Walking they talk'd, and fruitlessly divin'd

What friend the priests by those words design'd. Dryden.

FRUIT-TIME. n. f. [fruit and time.] The Autumn; the time for gathering fruit.

FRUIT-TREE. n. f. [fruit and tree.] A tree of that kind whose principal value arises from the fruit produced by it.

Lady,

FRY

Lady, by yonder blessed moon I vow,
That tips with silver all these fruittree tops. Shakespeare.
They took strong cities, possessed houses full of all goods, wells digged, vineyards and oliveyards, and fruittrees in abundance. Neb. ix. 25.

All with a border of rich fruittrees crown'd,
Whose loaded branches hide the lofty mound. Waller.
FRUMENTA'CIOUS. adj. [from frumentum, Latin.] Made of grain. Diët.

FRUMENTY. n. f. [frumentum, corn, Latin.] Food made of wheat boiled in milk.

TO FRUMP. v. a. To mock; to browbeat. Skinner. Ainsw.
TO FRUSH. v. a. [fruffer, French.] To break, bruise, or crush. Hammer.

I like thy armour well;
I'll frush it, and unlock the rivets all,
But I'll be master of it. Shakespeare's Troilus and Cressida.
FRUSH. n. f. [from the verb.] A sort of tender horn that grows in the middle of the sole, and at some distance from the toe: it divides into two branches, running towards the heel, in the form of a fork. Farrier's Diët.

FRUSTRA'NEOUS. adj. [frustra, Latin.] Vain; useless; unprofitable; without advantage.

Their attempts being so frustraneous, and the demonstrations to the contrary so perspicuous, it is a marvel that any man, virtuously and piously disposed, should be so partially and zealously affected in a cause that has neither truth nor any honest usefulness in it. More's Divine Dialogues.

He timely withdraws his frustraneous baffled kindneses, and sees the folly of endeavouring to stroke a tyger into a lamb, or to court an Ethiopian out of his colour. South's Sermons.

TO FRUSTRA'IE. v. a. [frustror, Latin; frustrer, Fr.]

1. To defeat; to disappoint; to balk.
It is an axiom of nature, that natural desire cannot utterly be frustrate. Hooker, b. i.

I survive,
To mock the expectations of the world;
To frustrate prophecies, and to raze out
Rotten opinion, which hath writ me down
After my seeming. Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. ii.
Stern look'd the fiend, as frustrate of his will;
Not half suffic'd, and greedy yet to kill. Dryden.
Not more almighty to resist our might,
Than wise to frustrate all our plots and wiles. Milt. P. Lost.

2. To make null; to nullify.
The act of parliament which gave all his lands to the queen, did cut off and frustrate all such conveyances. Spenser.

Now thou hast aveng'd
Supplanted Adam; and by vanquishing
Temptation, hast regain'd lost paradise,
And frustrated the conquest fraudulent. Milton's Par. Reg.
The peculiar strength of the motive may of itself perhaps contribute to frustrate the efficacy of it, rendering it liable to be suspected by him to whom it is addressed. Atterbury's Serm.

FRUSTRATE. participial adj. [from the verb.]

1. Vain; ineffectual; useless; unprofitable.
He is drown'd
Whom thus we stray to find, and the sea mocks
Our frustrate search on land. Shakespeare's Tempest.

The ruler of the province of Judea being by Julian bused in the re-edifying of this temple, flaming balls of fire issuing near the foundation, and oft consuming the workmen, made the enterprise frustrate. Raleigh's History.
All at once employ their thronging darts;
But out of order thrown, in air they join,
And multitude makes frustrate the design. Dryden's Ovid.

2. Null; void.
Few things are so restrained to any one end or purpose, that,
the same being extinct, they should forthwith utterly become
frustrate. Hooker, b. v. f. 42.

FRUSTRA'TION. n. f. [frustratio, Latin, from frustrate.] Disappointment; defeat.

In states notoriously irreligious, a secret and irresistible power countermands their deepest projects, splits their counsels, and smites their most refined policies with frustration and a curse. South's Sermons.

FRUSTRATIVE. adj. [from frustrate.] Fallacious; disappointing. Ainsworth.

FRUSTRATORY. adj. [from frustrate.] That which makes any procedure void; that which vacates any former process.

Bartolus restrains this to a frustratory appeal. Ayliffe's Par.

FRUSTUM. n. f. [Latin.] A piece cut off from a regular

FRY. n. f. [from froe, foam, Danish. Skinner.]

1. The swarm of little fishes just produced from the spawn.
They come to us, but us love draws;
He swallows us, and never chaws:
By him, as by chain'd shot, whole ranks do die;
He is the tyrant pike, and we the fry. Donne.

Forthwith the founts and seas, each creek and bay,
With fry innumerable swarm, and shoals

FUE

Of fish, that with their fins and shining scales
Glide under the green wave in sculls, that oft Bank the mid-sea. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vii.
The angler had the hap to draw up a very little fish from among the fry. L'Estrange.

So close behind some promontory lie
The huge leviathans, t' attend their prey;
And give no chase, but swallow in the fry,
Which through their gaping jaws mistake the way. Dryd.

2. Any swarm of animals; or young people in contempt.
Out of the fry of these rakehell horseboys, growing up in knavery and villany, are their kern continually supplied and maintained. Spenser on Ireland.

Them before the fry of children young,
Their wanton sports and childish mirth did play,
And to the maidens founding timbrels sung. Fairy Queen.

Draw me no constellations there,
Nor dog, nor goat, nor bull, nor bear;
Nor any of that monstrous fry
Of animals that stock the sky. Oldham.

The young fry must be held at a distance, and kept under the discipline of contempt. Collier on Pride.

FRY. n. f. A kind of sieve.
He dresseth the dust from malt, by running it through a fan or fry. Mortimer's Husbandry.

TO FRY. v. a. [frigo, Lat. ffrio, Welsh; frijck, Esle.] To dress food by roasting it in a pan on the fire.

TO FRY. v. n.
1. To be roasted in a pan on the fire.
2. To suffer the action of fire.

So when with crackling flames a cauldron fries,
The bubbling waters from the bottom rise;
Above the brims they force their fiery way,
Black vapours climb aloft, and cloud the day. Dryd. Æn.

3. To melt with heat.
Spices and gums about them melting fry,
And, phenix like, in that rich nest they die. Waller.

4. To be agitated like liquor in the pan on the fire.
Oil of sweet almonds, newly drawn with sugar, and a little spice, spread upon bread toasted, is an excellent nourisher;
but then, to keep the oil from frying in the stomach, drink mild beer after it. Bacon's Natural History.

Where no ford he finds, no water fries,
Nor billows with unequal murmurs roar,
But smoothly slide along, and swell the shoar,
That course he steer'd. Dryden's Æn.

FRY. n. f. [from the verb.] A dish of things fried.
FRY'INGPAN. n. f. [fry and pan.] The vessel in which meat is roasted on the fire.

If I pass by sea, I may chance to fall from the fryingpan into the fire. Howel's Vocal Forest.
We understand by out of the fryingpan into the fire, that things go from bad to worse. L'Estrange.

A freeman of London has the privilege of disturbing a whole street, for an hour together, with the twanking of a brass kettle or a fryingpan. Addison's Spectator.

TO FUB. v. a. To put off; to delay by false pretences; to cheat. It is generally written fob. See FOB.
A hundred mark is a long lone for a poor lone woman to bear; and I have borne, and borne, and borne, and have been fubb'd off and fubb'd off from this day to that day, that it is a shame to be thought on. Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. ii.

FUB. n. f. A plump chubby boy. Ainsworth.
FUCATED. adj. [fucatus, Latin.]

1. Painted; disguised with paint.
2. Disguised by false show.

FUCUS. n. f. [Latin.] Paint for the face.
Women chat
Of fucus this, and fucus that. Ben. Johnson.

Those who paint for debauchery should have the fucus pulled off, and the coarseness underneath discovered. Collier.

TO FUD'DLE. v. a. [Of unknown etymology.] To make drunk.

Earneft brimming bowls
Leave every foul the table floating round,
And pavement faithless to the fuddled feet. Thomf. Autumn

TO FUD'DLE. v. n. To drink to excess.
Men, we see, will be whoring and fuddling on still. L'Estr.

FUEL. n. f. [from feu, fire, French.] The matter or aliment of fire.

This shall be with burning and fuel of fire. Ij. ix. 5.
This spark will prove a raging fire,
If wind and fuel be brought to feed it with. Shak. H. VI.

Mov'd by my charms, with them your love may cease;
And as the fuel sinks, the flame decrease. Pri. r.

TO FUEL. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To feed fire with combustible matter.
And yet she cannot waste by this,
Nor long endure this torturing wrong;
For more corruption needful is,
To fuel such a fever long. Donne.

Never,

FUG

Never, alas! the dreadful name
That fuels the infernal flame Cowley.
The fuel'd chimney blazes wide. Thomson's Autumn.

2. To store with firing.
Some are plainly oeconomical, as that the seat be well watered, and well fuel'd. Wotton's Architecture.

FUE'ILLEMORTE. [French.] Corruptly pronounced and written philomot.
Fueilemorte colour signifies the colour of withered leaves in Autumn. Locke.

FUGA'CIOUSNESS. n. f. [fugax, Latin.] Volatility; the quality of flying away.

FUGA'CITY n. f. [fugax, Latin.]

1. Volatility; quality of flying away.
Spirits and salts, which, by their fugacity, colour, smell, taste, and divers experiments that I purposely made to examine them, were like the salt and spirit of urine and foot. Boyle.

2. Uncertainty; instability.

FUGH. interj. [perhaps from φῦ.] An expression of abhorrence.

A very filthy fellow: how odiously he smells of his country garlick! fugt, how he stinks of Spain! Dryd. Don Sebastian.

FUGITIVE. adj. [fugitif, French; fugitivus, Latin.]

1. Not tenable; not to be held or detained.
Our idea of infinity is a growing and fugitive idea, still in a boundless progression, that can stop no where. Locke.

Happiness, object of that waking dream,
Which we call life, mistaking: fugitive theme
Of my pursuing verse, ideal shade,
Notional good, by fancy only made. Prior.

2. Unsteady; unstable; not durable.

3. Volatile; apt to fly away.
The more tender and fugitive parts, the leaves, of many of the more sturdy vegetables, fall off for want of the supply from beneath: those only which are more tenacious, making a shift to subsist without such recruit. Woodward's Nat. History.

4. Flying; running from danger.
Whilst yet with Parthian blood thy sword is warm,
The fugitive Parthians follow. Shakesf. Ant. and Cleopatra.

The Trojan chief
Thrice fugitive about Troy wall. Milton.

5. Flying from duty; falling off.
Can a fugitive daughter enjoy herself, while her parents are in tears? Clarissa.

6. Wandering; runagate; vagabond.
It was the most malicious surmise that had ever been brewed, howsoever countenanced by a libellous pamphlet of a fugitive physician. Wotton.

FUGITIVE. n. f. [from the adjective.]

1. One who runs from his station or duty.
Unmarried men are best friends, best masters, best servants, but not always best subjects; for they are light to run away, and almost all fugitives are of that condition. Bacon, Essay 8.

Back to thy punishment,
False fugitive! and to thy speed add wings,
Left with a whip of scorpions I pursue Thy ling'ring. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ii.
We understand by some fugitives that he hath commanded
The generals to return with victory, or expect A shameful death. Denham's Sophy.

2. One who takes shelter under another power from punishment.

There are also in this realm of England too many, which, being men of good inheritance, are fled beyond the seas, where they live under princes which are her majesty's professed enemies; and converse and are confederates with other traitors and fugitives, which are there abiding. Spenser on Ireland.

Your royal highness is too great and too just a monarch either to want or to receive the homage of rebellious fugitives. Dryden.

FUGITIVENESS. n. f. [from fugitive]

1. Volatility; fugacity.
That divers salts, emerging upon the analysis of many concretes, are very volatile, is plain from the fugitiveness of salt and of hartshorn ascending in distillation. Boyle.

2. Instability; uncertainty.

FUGUE. n. f. [French, from fuga, Latin.] In musick, some point consisting of four, five, six, or any other number of notes begun by some one single part, and then seconded by a third, fourth, fifth and sixth part, if the composition consists of so many; repeating the same, or such like notes, so that the several parts follow, or come in one after another in the same manner, the leading parts still flying before those that follow. Harris.

The reports and fugues have an agreement with the figures in rhetoric of repetition and traduction. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

The skilful organist plies his grave and fancied descant in lofty fugues; or through the whole symphony artful and unimagined touches adorn and grace the well-studied chords of some choice composer. Milton on Education.

His volant touch
Instinct through all proportions, low and high,

FUL

Fled, and pursu'd transverse the resonant fugue. Milt. P. L.

Long has a race of heroes fill'd the stage,
That rant by note, and through the gamut rage;
In songs and airs express their martial fire,
Combat in trills, and in a fu-ue expire. Addison.

FULCIMENT. n. f. [fulcimen, fulcimentum, Latin.] That on which a body rests, which acts or is acted upon at each end, as a balance or a lever.

The power that equiponderates with any weight, must have the same proportion unto it as there is betwixt their several distances from the center or fulciment. Wilkins.

TO FULFIL. v. a. [ful and fil]

1. To fill till there is no room for more. This sense is now not used.

Six gates i' th' city, with massy staples,
And corresponsive and fulfilling bolts,
Sparre up the sons of Troy. Shak. Troil. and Cressida, Prol.

2. To answer any prophecy or promise by performance.
They knew him not, nor yet the voices of the prophets which are read every sabbath-day, they have fulfilled them in condemning him. Acts xiii. 27.

The fury bath'd them in each other's blood;
Then, having fix'd the fight, exulting flies,
And bears fulfill'd her promise to the skies. Dryden's Æn.

3. To answer any purpose or design.
Here nature seems fulfill'd in all her ends. Milt. P. L. st.

4. To answer any desire by compliance or gratification.
If on my wounded breast thou drop'st a tear,
Think for whose sake my breast that wound did bear;
And faithfully my last desires fulfil,
As I perform my cruel father's will. Dryden's Ovid.

5. To answer any law by obedience.
Love worketh no ill to his neighbour, therefore love is the fulfilling of the law. Ro. xiii. 10.

This I my glory account,
My exaltation, and my whole delight,
That thou in me well-pleas'd declar'st thy will Fulfil'd, which to fulfil is all my bliss. Milton's Par. Lost.

FULFRAUGHT. adj. [full and fraught.] Fully stored.
Thy fall hath left a kind of blot

To mark the fulfraught man, the best endu'd,
With some suspicion. Shakespeare's Henry V.

FULGENCY. n. f. [fulgens, Latin.] Splendour; glitter. Dict.

FULGENT. adj. [fulgens, Latin.] Shining; dazzling; exquisitely bright.

As from a cloud, his fulgent head,
And shape star-bright, appear'd. Milton's Paradise Lost.

The illumination is not so bright and fulgent as to obscure or extinguish all perceptibility of reason. More's Divine Dial.

FULGID. adj. [fulgidus, Latin.] Shining; glittering; dazzling

FULGIDITY. n. f. [from fulgid.] Splendour; dazzling glitter. Dict.

FULGOUR. n. f. [fulgor, Latin.]

1. Splendour; dazzling brightness like that of lightning.
Glow-worms alive project a lustre in the dark; which fulgour, notwithstanding, ceaseth after death. Brown.

When I set my eyes on this side of things, there shines from them such an intellectual fulgour, that methinks the very glory of the Deity becomes visible through them. More.

FULGURATION. n. f. [fulgurati, Latin.] The act of lightening.

FULHAM. n. f. A cant word for false dice. Hanmer.

Let vultures gripe thy guts, for gourd and Fulham's hold,
And high and low beguile the rich and poor. Shakespeare.

FULIGINOUS. adj. [fuliginex-se, Fr. fuliginosus, Lat.] Sooty; smoky.

The leaf of burrage hath an excellent spirit to repress the fuliginous vapours of dusky melancholy, and so cure madness. Bacon's Natural History.

Whereas history should be the torch of truth, he makes her in divers places a fuliginous link of lies. Howel.

FULIMART. n. f. [This word, of which Skinner observes that he found it only in this passage, seems to mean the same with foat.] A kind of stinking ferret.

The fchat, the fulimart, and the ferret, live upon the face, and within the bowels of the earth. Walton's Angler.

FULL. adj. [fulle, Saxon; vol, Dutch.]

1. Replete; without vacuity; without any space void.
Better is an handful with quietness than both the hands full with travel and vexation of spirit. Eccl. iv. 6.

2. Abounding in any quality good or bad.
With pretence from Strephon her to guard,
He met her full, but full of warefulness. Sidney.

You should tread a course
Pretty and full of view. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

Followers, who make themselves as trumpets of the commendation of those they follow, are full of inconvenience; for they taint business through want of secrecy, and they export honour from a man, and make him a return in envy. Bacon, Essay 49.

In that sweet season, as in bed I lay,
9 Y I turn'd

- I turn'd my weary side, but still in vain,
Though full of youthful health and void of pain. Dryden.
He is full of wants which he cannot supply, and compass'd about with infirmities which he cannot remove. Tillotson's Sermon.
From yon bright heaven our author fetch'd his fire,
And paints the passions that your eyes inspire;
Full of that flame, his tender scenes he warms,
And frames his goddesses by your matchless charms. Granville.
3. Stored with any thing; well supplied with any thing.
Full of days was he;
Two ages past, he liv'd the third to see. Tickell.
4. Plump; sated; fat.
A gentleman of a full body having broken his skin by a fall, the wound inflamed. Wifeman's Surgery.
5. Saturated; fated.
I am full of the burnt offerings of rams. Isa. i. 11.
The alteration of scenes feeds and relieves the eye, before it be full of the same object. Bacon.
6. Crowded in the imagination or memory.
Every one is full of the miracles done by cold baths on de-cayed and weak constitutions. Locke.
7. That which fills or makes full; large; great in effect.
Water digesteth a full meal sooner than any other liquor.
Arbuthnot on Aliments.
8. Complete; such as that nothing further is desired or wanted.
That day had seen the full accomplishment
Of all his travels. Daniel's Civil War.
Being tried at that time only with a promise, he gave full credit to that promise, and still gave evidence of his fidelity as fast as occasions were offered. Hammond's Pract. Catechism.
The resurrection of Jesus from the dead hath given the world full assurance of another life. Tillotson, Sermon 5.
9. Complete without abatement; at the utmost degree.
At the end of two full years Pharaoh dreamed. Genesis.
After hard riding plunge the horses into water, and allow them to drink as they please; but gallop them full speed, to warm the water in their bellies. Swift's Direct. to the Groom.
10. Containing the whole matter; expressing much.
Where my expressions are not so full as his, either our language or my art were defective; but where mine are fuller than his, they are but the impressions which the often reading of him hath left upon my thoughts. Denham.
Should a man go about with never so set study to describe such a natural form of the year before the deluge as that which is at present established, he could scarcely do it in so few words, so fit and proper, so full and express. Woodward.
11. Strong; not faint; not attenuated.
I did never know so full a voice issue from so empty a heart;
but the saying is true, the empty vessel makes the greatest found. Shakespeare's Henry V.
Barrels placed under the floor of a chamber, make all noises in the same more full and resounding. Bacon's Nat. History.
Dryden taught to join
The varying verse, the full resounding line. Pope.
12. Mature; perfect.
In the sultanry of the Mamalukes, slaves reigned over families of free men; and much like were the case, if you suppose a nation, where the custom were that after full age the sons should expulse their fathers and mothers out of their possessions. Bacon's Holy War.
13. [Applied to the moon.] Complete in its orb.
Towards the full moon, as he was coming home one morning, he felt his legs falter. Wifeman's Surgery.
14. Noting the conclusion of any matter, or a full stop.
Therewith he ended, making a full point of a hearty sigh. Sidney.
15. Spread to view in all dimensions.
'Till about the end of the third century, I do not remember to have seen the head of a Roman emperor drawn with a full face: they always appear in profile. Addison on Medals.
FULL. n. f. [from the adjective.]
1. Complete measure; freedom from deficiency.
When we return,
We'll see those things effected to the full. Shak. Henry VI.

full of the moon. Bacon's Natural History.
FULL. adv.
1. Without abatement.
In the unity of place they are full as scrupulous; for many of their criticks limit to that very spot of ground where the play is supposed to begin. Dryden's Dramatick Poesy.
A modest blush he wears, not form'd by art;
Free from deceit his face, and full as free his heart. Dryden.
The most judicious writer is sometimes mistaken after all his care; but the hasty critick, who judges on a view, is full as liable to be deceived. Dryden's Aurengz. Preface.
Since you may
Suspect my courage, if I should not lay,
The pawn I proffer shall be full as good. Dryd. Virg. Past.
2. With the whole effect.
'Tis the pencil, thrown luckily full upon the horse's mouth to express the foam, which the painter, with all his skill, could not perform without it. Dryden's Dufresnoy.
From harmony, from heavenly harmony,
This universal frame began:
From harmony to harmony,
Through all the compass of the notes it ran,
The diapason closing full in man. Dryden.
3. Exactly.
Full in the centre of the sacred wood,
An arm ariseth of the Stygian flood. Addison on Italy.

A shoal of nineteen dolphins round her play. Addis. Ovid.
4. Directly.
He met her full, but full of warefulness. Sidney.
He then confronts the bull,
And on his ample forehead aiming full,
The deadly stroke descending pierc'd the skull. Dryden.
At length resolv'd, he throws with all his force
Full at the temples of the warrior horse. Dryden's Æn.
5. It is placed before adverbs and adjectives, to intend or strengthen their signification.
Why on your shield, so goodly scor'd,
Bear ye the picture of that lady's head?
Full lively is the semblant, though the substance dead. F. 2.
I was set at work
Among my maids; full little, God knows, looking Either for such men or such business. Shakesp. Henry VIII.
Full well ye reject the commandment. Mar. vii. 9.
Adam was all in tears, and to his guide
Lamenting turn'd full sad. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xi.
You full little think that you must be the beginner of the discourse yourself. More's Divine Dialogues.
Full little thought of him the gentle knight. Dryden.
Full well the god his sister's envy knew,
And what her aims and what her arts pursue. Dryden.
There is a perquisite full as honest, by which you have the best part of a bottle of wine for yourself. Swift.
FULL is much used in composition to intimate any thing arrived at its highest state, or utmost degree.
FULL-BLOWN. adj. [full and blown.]
1. Spread to the utmost extent, as a perfect blossom.
My glories are past danger; they're full-blown:
Things, that are blasted, are but in the bud. Denh. Sophy.
My full-blown youth already fades apace;
Of our short being 'tis the shortest space! Dryden's Juven.
2. Stretched by the wind to the utmost extent.
He who with bold Cratinus is inspir'd,
With zeal and equal indignation fir'd;
Who at enormous villany turns pale,
And steers against it with a full-blown sail. Dryd. Pers. Sat.
FULL-BOTTOMED. adj. [full and bottom.] Having a large bottom.
I was obliged to sit at home in my morning-gown, having pawned a new suit of cloaths and a full-bottomed wig for a sum of money. Guardian, N<sup>o</sup>. 166.
FULL-EARED. [full and ear.] Having the heads full of grain.
As flames roll'd by the winds conspiring force,
O'er full-ear'd corn, or torrents raging course. Denham.
FULL-EYED. [full and eye.] Having large prominent eyes.
FULL-FED. [full and fed.] Sated; fat; sated.
All as a partridge plump, full-fed and fair,
She form'd this image of well-bodied air. Pope's Dunciad.
FULL-LADEN. [full and laden.] Laden 'till there can be no more.
It were unfit that so excellent a reward as the Gospel promises should stoop down, like fruit upon a full-laden bough, to be plucked by every idle and wanton hand. Tillotson's Sermon.

FULL-SPREAD. [full and spread.] Spread to the utmost extent.

How easy 'tis, when destiny proves kind,
With full-spread fails to run before the wind;
But those that 'gainst stiff gales lavinging go,
Must be at once resolv'd and skilful too. Dryden.

FULL-SUMMED. [full and summed.] Complete in all its parts.

The time was that the cedar stretched forth his imperial branches as far as the mountains of the moon, and that the king of birds nested within his leaves, thick feathered, and with full-summed wings fastening his talons East and West;
but now the eagle is become half naked. Howel's Voc. Forest.

TO FULL. v. a. [fullo, Latin.] To cleanse cloath from its oil or grease.

FULLAGE. n. f. [from full.] The money paid for fulling or cleansing cloath.

FULLER. n. f. [fullo, Latin.] One whose trade is to cleanse cloath.

The clothiers have put off

The spinsters, carders, fulers, weavers. Shakes. H. VIII.

His raiment became shining, exceeding white as snow; so as no fuller on earth can whiten them. Mar. ix. 3.

FULLERS Earth. n. f.

Fullers earth is a marl of a close texture, extremely soft and unctuous to the touch: when dry it is of a greyish brown colour, in all degrees, from very pale to almost black, and generally has something of a greenish cast in it. The finest fullers earth is dug in our own island. Hill's Mat. Medica.

The fullers earth of England is very various, and it very much exceeds any yet discovered abroad in goodness; which is one great reason why the English surpass all other nations in the woollen manufacture. Woodward on Fossils.

FULLERY. n. f. [from fuller.] The place where the trade of a fuller is exercised.

FULLINGMILL. n. f. [full and mill.] A mill where the water raises hammers which beat the cloath 'till it be cleansed.

By large hammers, like those used for paper and fulling-mills, they beat their hemp. Mortimer.

FULLY. adv. [from full.]

1. Without vacuity.

2. Completely; without lack; without more to be desired.

There are many graces for which we may not cease hourly to sue, graces which are in bestowing always, but never come to be fully had in this present life; and therefore, when all things here have an end, endless thanks must have their beginning in a state which bringeth the full and final satisfaction of all such perpetual desires. Hooker, b. v. f. 43.

He fully possessed the entire revelation he had received from God, and had thoroughly digested it. Locke.

The goddess cry'd

It is enough, I'm fully satisfy'd. Addison's Ovid's Metam.

FULMINANT. adj. [fulminant, Fr. fulminans, Latin.] Thundering; making a noise like thunder.

TO FULMINATE. v. n. [fulmino, Lat. fulminer, French.]

1. To thunder.

2. To make a loud noise or crack.

Whilst it was in fusion we cast into it a live coal, which presently kindled it, and made it boil and flash for a pretty while: after which we cast in another glowing coal, which made it fulminate afresh. Boyle.

In damps one is called the suffocating, and the other the fulminating damp. Woodward's Natural History.

3. To issue out ecclesiastical censures.

TO FULMINATE. v. a. To throw out as an object of terror.

As excommunication is not greatly regarded here in England, as now fulminated; so this constitution is out of use among us in a great measure. Ayliffe's Parergon.

FULMINATION. n. f. [fulminatio, Latin; fulmination, French, from fulminate.]

1. The act of thundering.

2. Denunciations of censure.

The fulminations from the vatican were turned into ridicule. Ayliffe's Parergon.

FULMINATORY. adj. [fulmineus, Latin; from fulminate.] Thundering; striking horror.

FULNESS. n. f. [from full.]

1. The state of being filled so as to have no part vacant.

Your heave-offering shall be reckoned the fulness of the wine-press. Numb. xviii. 27.

To the houses I wished nothing more than safety, fulness, and freedom. King Charles.

2. The state of abounding in any quality good or bad.

3. Completeness; such as leaves nothing to be desired.

Your enjoyments are so complete, I turn wishes into gratulations, and congratulating their fulness only wish their continuance. South.

4. Completeness from the coalition of many parts.

The king set forwards to London, receiving the acclamations and applauses of the people as he went; which indeed were true and unfeigned, as might well appear in the very demonstrations and fulness of the cry. Bacon's Henry VII.

5. Completeness; freedom from deficiency.

He is the half part of a blessed man,
Left to be finished by such as she;
And she a fair divided excellence,
Whose fulness of perfection lies in him. Shakes. K. John.

6. Repletion; satiety.

I need not instance in the habitual intemperance of rich tables, nor the evil accidents and effects of fulness, pride and lust, wantonness and softness. Taylor's Rule of living holy.

7. Plenty; wealth.

To lapse in fulness

Is sorer than to lie for need; and falsehood
Is worse in kings than beggars. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

8. Struggling perturbation; swelling in the mind.

A principal fruit of friendship is the ease and discharge of the fulness of the heart, which passions of all kinds do cause and induce. Bacon, Essay 28.

9. Largeness; extent.

There wanted the fulness of a plot, and variety of characters to form it as it ought; and perhaps something might have been added to the beauty of the style. Dryden.

10. Force of sound, such as fills the ear; vigour.

This sort of pastoral derives almost its whole beauty from a natural ease of thought and smoothness of verse; whereas that of most other kinds consists in the strength and fulness of both. Pope.

FULSOME. adj. [from fulle, Saxon, foul.]

1. Nauseous; offensive.

The skilful shepherd peel'd me certain wands;
And in the doing of the deed of kind,
He stuck them up before the fulsome ewes. Shakespeare.

He that brings fulsome objects to my view,
With nauseous images my fancy fills,
And all goes down like oxymel of squills. Roscommon.

Now half the youth of Europe are in arms,
How fulsome must it be to stay behind,
And die of rank diseases here at home? Otway's Orphan.

2. Of a rank odious smell.

White satyrion is of a dainty smell, and bean-flowers: again, if the plant puts forth white flowers only, and those not thin or dry, they are commonly of rank and fulsome smell. Bacon's Natural History, No. 507.

3. Tending to obscenity.

A certain epigram, which is ascribed to the emperor, is more fulsome than any passage I have met with in our poet. Dryden.

FULSOMELY. adv. [from fulsome.] Nauseously; rankly; obscenely.

FULSOMENESS. n. f. [from fulsome.]

1. Nauseousness.

2. Rank smell.

3. Obscenity.

No decency is considered, no fulsomeness is omitted, no venom is wanting, as far as dulness can supply it. Dryden.

FUMADO. n. f. [fumus, Latin.] A smoked fish.

Fish that serve for the hotter countries, they used at first to fume, by hanging them up on long sticks one by one, drying them with the smoke of a soft and continual fire, from which they purchased the name of fumadoes. Carew.

FUMAGE. n. f. [from fumus, Latin.] Hearthmoney. Dict.

FUMATORY. n. f. [fumaria, Lat. fumeterre, Fr.] See FUMITORY.

It hath divided leaves resembling those of the umbelliferous plants: the flowers, which are collected into a spike, are of an anomalous figure, somewhat resembling a papilionaceous flower, consisting of two petals or leaves, open like two lips, the upper lip ending in a spur: the footstalk is joined to the middle part of the flower: the fruit is either of a long or a round figure, which is like a pod. Miller.

Her fallow leas

The darnel, hemlock, and rank fumatory,
Doth root upon. Shakespeare's Henry V.

TO FUMBLE. v. n. [fommelen, Dutch.]

1. To attempt any thing awkwardly or ungainly.

Our mechanick theists will have their atoms never once to have fumbled in these their motions, nor to have produced any inept system. Cudworth.

2. To puzzle; to strain in perplexity.

Am not I a friend to help you out? You would have been fumbling half an hour for this excuse. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

3. To play childishly.

I saw him fumble with the sheets, and play with flowers, and smile upon his finger's end. Shakespeare's Henry V.

TO FUMBLE. v. a. To manage awkwardly.

As many farewells as be stars in heav'n,
With distinct breath and consign'd kisses to them,
He fumbles up all in one loose adieu. Shakespeare.

His greasy bald-pate choir

Came fumbling o'er the beads, in such an agony,
They told 'em false for fear. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

FUMBLER. n. f. [from fumble.] One who acts awkwardly.

FUMBLINGLY. adv. [from fumble.] In an awkward manner.

FUME. n. f. [fumée, French; fumus, Latin.]

1. Smoke.

Thus fighting fires a while themselves consume;
But streight, like Turks, forc'd on to win or die,
They first lay tender bridges of their fume,
And o'er the breach in unctuous vapours fly. Dryden.

2. Vapour; any volatile parts flying away.

Love is a smoke rais'd with the fume of sighs;
Being purg'd, a fire sparkling in lovers eyes. Shakespeare.
It were good to try the taking of fumes by pipes, as they do in tobacco, of other things, to dry and comfort. Bacon.

In Winter, when the heat without is less, it becomes so far condensed as to be visible, flowing out of the mouth in form of a fume, or crasser vapour; and may, by proper vessels, set in a strong freezing mixture, be collected in a considerable quantity. Woodward's Natural History.

3. Exhalation from the stomach.

The fumes of drink discompose and stupify the brains of a man overcharged with it. South's Sermons.

Plung'd in sloth we lie, and snore supine,
As fill'd with fumes of undigested wine. Dryden's Pers. Sat.

Pow'r, like new wine, does your weak brain surprize,
And its mad fumes in hot discourses rise;
But time these yielding vapours will remove:
Mean while I'll taste the sober joys of love. Dryden's Auren.

4. Rage; heat of mind; passion.

The fumes of his passion do really intoxicate and confound his judging and discerning faculty. South.

5. Any thing unsubstantial.

When Duncan is asleep, his two chamberlains
Will I with wine and wassel so convince,
That memory, the warder of the brain,
Shall be a fume. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

6. Idle conceit; vain imagination.

Plato's great year would have some effect, not in renewing the state of like individuals; for that is the fume of those, that conceive the celestial bodies have more accurate influences upon these things below, than indeed they have, but in gross.
Bacon, Essay 59.

To lay aside all that may seem to have a shew of fumes and fancies, and to speak solids, a war with Spain is a mighty work. Bacon's War with Spain.

To FUME. v. n. [fumer, French; fumo, Latin.]

1. To smoke.

Their pray'rs pass'd
Dimensionless through heav'nly doors; then clad
With incense, where the golden altar fum'd,
By their great intercessor; came in sight
Before the Father's throne. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xi.
From thence the fuming trail began to spread,
And lambent glories danc'd about her head. Dryd. Æn.
Strait hover round the fair her airy band;
Some, as she sipp'd, the fuming liquor fann'd. Pope.

2. To vapour; to yield exhalations.

Tie up the libertine in a field of feasts,
Keep his brain fuming. Shakespeare's Ant. and Cleopatra.
Silenus lay,
Whose constant cups lay fuming to his brain,
And always boil in each extended vein. Roscommon.

3. To pass away in vapours.

We have
No anger in our eyes, no storm, no lightning:
Our hate is spent and fum'd away in vapour,
Before our hands be at work. Ben. Johnson's Catiline.
Their parts are kept from fuming away by their fixity, and also by the vast weight and density of the atmospheres incumbent upon them. Cheyne's Phil. Princ.

The first fresh dawn then wak'd the gladden'd race
Of uncorrupted man, nor blush'd to see
The sluggard sleep beneath its sacred beam;
For their light slumbers gentle fum'd away. Thomson's Spring.

4. To be in a rage.

When he knew his rival free'd and gone,
He swells with wrath; he makes outrageous moan:
He frets, he fumes, he stares, he stamps the ground,
The hollow tow'r with clamours rings around. Dryden.

To FUME. v. a.

1. To smoke; to dry in the smoke.

Those that serve for hot countries they used at first to fume, by hanging them upon long sticks one by one, and drying them with the smoke of a soft fire. Carew.

2. To perfume with odours in the fire.

She fum'd the temples with an od'rous flame,
And oft before the sacred altars came,
To pray for him who was an empty name. Dryden.
The fuming of the holes with brimstone, garlick, or other unfavorable things, will drive moles out of the ground. Mortim.

3. To disperse in vapours.

The heat will fume away most of the scent. Mrtimer.
FUMETTE. n. f. [French.] A word introduced by cooks, and the pupils of cooks, for the stink of meat.

A haunch of ven'son made her sweat,
Unless it had the right fumette. Swift.

FUMID. adj. [fumidus, Latin.] Smoky; vaporous.

A crass and fumid exhalation is caused from the combat of the sulphur and iron with the acid and nitrous spirits of aqua- fortis. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. ii. c. 5.

FUMIDITY. n. f. [from fumid.] Smokiness; tendency to smoke. DiÆ.

To FUMIGATE. v. n. [from fumus, Latin; fumiger, Fr.]

1. To smoke; to perfume by smoke or vapour.

Would'st thou preserve thy famish'd family,
With fragrant thyme the city fumigate,
And break the waxen walls to save the state. Dryden's Virg.

2. To medicate or heal by vapours.

FUMIGATION. n. f. [fumigatio, Latin; fumigation, French;
from fumigate]

1. Scents raised by fire.

Fumigations, often repeated, are very beneficial. Arbuthnot.
My fumigation is to Venus, just

The souls of roses, and red coral's dust:
And, last, to make my fumigation good,
'Tis mixt with sparrows brains and pigeons blood. Dryden.

2. The application of medicines to the body in fumes.

FUMINGLY. adv. [from fume.] Angrily; in a rage.
That which we move for our better learning and instruction fake, turneth unto anger and choler in them: they grow altogether out of quietness with it; they answer fumingly, that they are ashamed to defile their pens with making answer to such idle questions. Hooker, b. v. f. 22.

FUMITER. n. f. See FUMATORY.

Why, he was met even now,
As mad as the next sea; fingering aloud,
Crown'd with rank fumiter and furrow-weeds. Shakespeare.

FUMOUS. } adj. [fumeux-se, French; from fume.] Producing FUMY. } fumes.

From dice and wine the youth retir'd to rest,
And puff'd the fumy god from out his breast:
Ev'n then he dreamt of drink and lucky play;
More lucky had it lasted 'till the day. Dryden's Æn.

FUN. n. f. [A low cant word.] Sport; high merriment; frolicksome delight.

Don't mind me, though, for all my fun and jokes,
You bards may find us bloods good-natur'd folks. Moore.

FUNCTION. n. f. [functio, Latin.]

1. Discharge; performance.

There is hardly a greater difference between two things than there is between a representing commoner in the func- tion of his publick calling, and the same person in common life. Swift.

2. Employment; office.

The ministry is not now bound to any one tribe: now none is secluded from that function of any degree, state, or calling. Whigiste.

You have paid the heav'ns your function, and the prisoner the very debt of your calling. Shakef. Measure for Measure.

Nor was it any policy of state, or obstinacy of will, or partiality of affection either to the men or their function, which fixed me. King Charles.

This double function of the goddess gives a considerable light and beauty to the ode which Horace has address'd to her. Addison's Remarks on Italy.

Let not these indignities discourage us from asserting the just privileges and pre-eminence of our holy function and character. Atterbury's Sermons.

3. Single act of any office.

Without difference those functions cannot, in orderly sort,
be executed. Hooker.

They have several offices and prayers against fire, tempests, and especially for the dead, in which functions they use sacerdotal garments. Stillingsfleet's Def. of Disc. on Rom. Idol.

4. Trade; occupation.

Follow your function; go, and batten on cold bits. Shakef.

5. Office of any particular part of the body.

The bodies of men, and other animals, are excellently well fitted for life and motion; and the several parts of them well adapted to their particular functions. Bentley's Sermons.

6. Power; faculty.

Tears in his eyes, distraction in his aspect,
A broken voice, and his whole function suiting
With forms to his conceit. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

Nature seems
In all her functions weary of herself:
My race of glory run, and race of shame;
And I shall shortly be with them that rest. Milton.

Whatever warms the heart, or fills the head,
As the mind opens, and its functions spread,
Imagination plies her dang'rous art,
And pours it all upon the peccant part. Pope.

Though every human constitution is morbid, yet are their diseases consistent with the common functions of life. Arbuthn.

FUND. n. f. [fond, French; funda, a bag, Latin.]

1. Stock; capital; that by which any expence is supported.

He touches the passions more delicately than Ovid, and performs all this out of his own fund, without diving into the arts and sciences for a supply. Dryden.

Part

Part must be left, a fund when foes invade,
And part employ'd to roll the watry tide. Dryden.

In preaching, no men succeed better than those who trust entirely to the stock or fund of their own reason, advanced indeed, but not overlaid by commerce with books. Swift.

2. Stock or bank of money.

As my estate has been hitherto either tost upon seas, or fluctuating in funds, it is now fixed in substantial acres. Add.

FUNDAMENT. n. f. [fundamentum, Latin.] The back part of the body.

FUNDAMENTAL. adj. [fundamentalis, Lat. from fundament.] Serving for the foundation; that upon which the rest is built; essential; important; not merely accidental.

Until this can be agreed upon, one main and fundamental cause of the most grievous war is not like to be taken from the earth. Raleigh's Essays.

You that will be less fearful than discreet,
That love the fundamental part of state,
More than you doubt the charge of 't. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

Others, when they were brought to allow the throne vacant, thought the succession should go to the next heir, according to the fundamental laws of the kingdom, as if the last king were actually dead. Swift's Examiner.

Gain some general and fundamental truths, both in philosophy, in religion, and in human life. Watts.

Such we find they are, as can controul
The servile actions of our wav'ring soul,
Can fright, can alter, or can chain the will;
Their ills all built on life, that fundamental ill. Prior.

Yet some there were among the founder few,
Of those who less presum'd, and better knew,
Who durst assert the juster ancient cause,
And here restor'd wit's fundamental laws. Pope on Criticism.

FUNDAMENTAL. n. f. Leading proposition; important and essential part which is the groundwork of the rest.

We will propose the question, whether those who hold the fundamentals of faith may deny Christ damnably, in respect of those superstructures and consequences that arise from them. South's Sermons.

It is a very just reproach, that there should be so much violence and hatred in religious matters among men who agree in all fundamentals, and only differ in some ceremonies, or mere speculative points. Swift.

FUNDAMENTALLY. adv. [from fundamental.] Essentially; originally.

As virtue is seated fundamentally in the intellect, so perspective in the fancy; so that virtue is the force of reason, in the conduct of our actions and passions to a good end. Grew.

Religion is not only useful to civil society, but fundamentally necessary to its very birth and constitution. Bentley.

The unlimited power placed fundamentally in the body of a people, the legislators endeavour to deposite in such hands as would preserve the people. Swift on the Diff. in Ath. and Rome.

FUNERAL. n. f. [funus, Latin; funerailles, French.]

1. The solemnization of a burial; the payment of the last honours to the dead; obsequies.

Here, under leave of Brutus, and the rest,
Come I to speak in Cæsar's funeral. Shak. Julius Cæsar.

All things that we ordained festival,
Turn from their office to black funeral. Shakespeare.

He that had cast out many unburied, had none to mourn for him, nor any solemn funerals, nor sepulchre with his fathers. 2 Mac. v. 10.

No widow at his funeral shall weep. Sandys.

2. The pomp or procession with which the dead are carried.

The long *fun'ral*s blacken all the way. Pope.

You are sometimes desirous to see a funeral pass by in the street. Swift's Directions to the Chambermaid.

3. Burial; interment.

May he find his funeral

P' th' sands, when he before his day shall fall. Denham.

FUNERAL. adj. Used at the ceremony of interring the dead.

Our instruments to melancholy bells,
Our wedding cheer to a sad funeral feast. Shak. R. and Jul.

Let such honours

And funeral rites, as to his birth and virtues
Are due, be first perform'd. Denham's Sophy.

Thy hand o'er towns the fun'ral torch displays,
And forms a thousand ills ten thousand ways. Dryden.

FUNEREAL. adj. [funerea, Latin.] Suited a funeral; dark; dismal.

But if his soul hath wing'd the destin'd flight,
Inhabitant of deep disastrous night,
Homeward with pious speed repass the main,

To the pale shade funereal rites ordain. Pope's Odyssey, b. i.

FUNGO'SITY. n. f. [from fungus.] Unsolid excrescence. Dict.

FUNGIOUS. adj. [from fungus.] Excrescent; spongy; wanting firmness.

It is often employed to keep down the fungous lips that spread upon the bone; but it is much more painful than the escharotick medicines. Sharp's Surgery.

FUNGUS. n. f. [Latin.] Strictly a mushroom: a word used to express such excrescences of flesh as grow out upon the lips of wounds, or any other excrescence from trees or plants not naturally belonging to them; as the agarick from the larch-tree, and auriculæ Judæ from elder. Quincy.

The surgeon ought to vary the diet as the fibres lengthen too much, are too fluid, and produce funguses, or as they harden and produce callosities. Arbuthnot on Diet.

FUNICLE. n. f. [funiculus, Latin.] A small cord; a small ligature; a fibre.

FUNICULAR. adj. [funiculaire, Fr. from funicle.] Consisting of a small cord or fibre.

FUNK. n. f. A stink. A low word.

FUNNEL. n. f. [infundibulum, Latin; whence fundible, fundle, funnel.]

1. An inverted hollow cone with a pipe descending from it, through which liquors are poured into vessels with narrow mouths; a tundish.

If you pour a glut of water upon a bottle, it receives little of it; but with a funnel, and by degrees, you shall fill many of them. Ben. Johnson's Discoveries.

Some the long funnel's curious mouth extend,

Through which ingested meats with ease descend. Blackm.

The outward ear or auricula is made hollow, and contracted by degrees, to draw the sound inward, to take in as much as may be of it, as we use a funnel to pour liquor into any vessel. Ray on the Creation.

2. A pipe or passage of communication.

Towards the middle are two large funnels, bored through the roof of the grotto, to let in light or fresh air. Addison.

FUR. n. f. [fourrure, French.]

1. Skin with soft hair with which garments are lined for warmth, or covered for ornament.

December must be expressed with a horrid and fearful countenance; as also at his back a bundle of holly, holding in fur mittens the sign of Capricorn. Peacham on Drawing.

'Tis but dressing up a bird of prey in his cap and furs to make a judge of him. L'Estrange.

And lordly gout wrapt up in fur,

And wheezing asthma, loth to stir. Swift.

2. Soft hair of beasts found in cold countries, where nature provides coats suitable to the weather; hair in general.

This night, wherein the cubdrawn bear would couch,

The lion and the belly-pinched wolf

Keep their fur dry, unbonnetted he runs,

And bids what will take all. Shakespeare's King Lear.

Such animals as feed upon flesh qualify it, the one by swallowing the hair or fur of the beasts they prey upon, the other by devouring some part of the feathers of the birds they gorge themselves with. Ray on the Creation.

3. Any moisture exhaled to such a degree as that the remainder sticks on the part.

Methinks I am not right in ev'ry part;

I feel a kind of trembling at my heart:

My pulse unequal, and my breath is strong;

Besides a filthy fur upon my tongue. Dryden's Pers. Sat. 3.

TO FUR. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To line or cover with skins that have soft hair.

How mad a sight it was to see Dametas, like rich tissue furred with lambkins? Sidney, b. ii.

Through tatter'd cloaths small vices do appear;

Robes and furr'd gowns hide all. Shakesp. King Lear.

You are for dreams and slumbers, brother priest;

You fur your gloves with reasons. Shakesp. Troil. and Cress.

2. To cover with soft matter.

To make lampblack, take a torch and hold it under the bottom of a latten basin; and, as it groweth to be furred and black within, strike it with a feather into some shell. Peacham.

The sisters, mourning for their brother's loss,

Their bodies hid in bark, and furr'd with moss. Dryden.

Their frying blood compels to irrigate

Their dry farr'd tongues. Phillips.

A dungeon wide and horrible; the walls

On all sides furr'd with mouldy damps, and hung

With clots of ropy gore. Addison.

FUR. adv. [It is now commonly written far.] At a distance.

The white lovely dove

Doth on her wings her utmost swiftness prove;

Finding the gripe of falcon fierce not fur. Sidney.

FUR-WROUGHT. adj. [fur and wrought.] Made of fur.

Silent along the mazy margin stray,

And with the fur-wrought fly delude the prey. Gay's Past.

FURACITY. n. f. [from furax, Latin.] Disposition to theft; thievishness.

FURBELOW. n. f. [fur and below.] Fur sewed on the lower part of the garment; an ornament of dress.

Nay, oft in dreams invention we bestow

To change a flounce, or add a furbelow. Pope.

To FU'RBELOW. v. a. [from the noun.] To adorn with ornamental appendages of dress.

When arguments too fiercely glare,
You calm them with a milder air;
To break their points, you turn their force,
And furbelow the plain discourse. Prior.
She was founced and furbelowed from head to foot; every ribbon was crinkled, and every part of her garments in curl. Addison's Spectator, N<sup>o</sup>. 129.

To FU'R BISH. v. a. [fourbir, French.] To burnish; to polish; to rub to brightness.

It may enter Mowbray's waxen coat,
And furbish new the name of John o' Gaunt. Shak. R. II.
Furbish the spears, and put on the brigandines. Jer. xlv. 4.
Some others who furbish up and reprint his old errors, hold that the sufferings of the damned are not to be, in a strict sense, eternal; but that, after a certain period of time, there shall be a general gaol-delivery of the souls in prison, and that not for a farther execution, but a final release. South's Sermon.

As after Numa's peaceful reign,
The martial Ancus did the sceptre wield;
Furbish'd the rusty sword again,
Resum'd the long-forgotten shield,
And led the Latins to the dusty field. Dryden.

Inferior ministers, for Mars repair
His broken axle-tree, and blunted war;
And send him forth again, with furbish'd arms. Dryden.

FU'R BISH. n. f. [fourbisseur, French, from furbish.] One who polishes any thing.

FURCA'TION. n. f. [furca, Latin.] Forkiness; the state of shooting two ways like the blades of a fork.

When they grow old they grow less branched, and first do lose their brow-antlers, or lowest furcations next the head.

Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iii. c. 9.

FURFUR. n. f. [Latin.] Husk or chaff, scurf or dandriff, that grows upon the skin, with some likeness to bran. Quincy.

2. Raging; violent; transported by passion beyond reason.
Who can be wise, amaz'd, temp'rate and furiosus,
Loyal and neutral in a moment? No man. Shakesp. Macb.
To be furiosus,

Is to be frighted out of fear; and, in that mood,
The dove will peck the estridge. Shakesp. Ant. and Cleopat.

FURIOUSLY. adv. [from furiosus.] Madly; violently; vehemently.

Which when his brother saw, fraught with great grief
And wrath, he to him leapt furiously. Fairy Queen, b. ii.
They observe countenance to attend the practice; and this carries them on furiously to that which of themselves they are inclined. South's Sermons.

She heard not half, so furiously she flies;
Fear gave her wings. Dryden.

FURIOUSNESS. n. f. [from furiosus.] Frenzy; madness; transport of passion.

To FURL. v. a. [fräser, French.] To draw up; to contract.

When fortune sends a stormy wind,
Then shew a brave and present mind;
And when with too indulgent gales
She swells too much, then furl thy sails. Creech.

FU'R LONG. n. f. [farlang, Saxon.] A measure of length; the eighth part of a mile.

If a man stand in the middle of a field and speak aloud, he shall be heard a furlong in round, and that in articulate sounds. Bacon's Natural History, N<sup>o</sup>. 289.

Coming within a few furlongs of the temple, they passed through a very thick grove. Addison's Freeholder.

FU'R LOUGH. n. f. [verloef, Dutch.] A temporary dismissal from military service; a licence given to a soldier to be absent.

Brutus and Cato might discharge their souls,
And give them furloughs for another world;
But we, like sentries, are oblig'd to stand
In starless nights, and wait th' appointed hour. Dryden.

FU'R MENTY. n. f. [More properly frumenty, or frumety, of frumentum, Latin.] Food made by boiling wheat in milk.

Remember, wife, therefore, though I do it not,
The seed-cake, the pasties, and furmenty pot. Tuss. Husb.

FU'R NACE. n. f. [furnus, Latin.] An inclosed fireplace.

Heat not a furnace for your foe so hot
That it may singe yourself. Shakesp. Henry VIII.
The fining pot is for silver and the furnace for gold. Prov.
We have also furnaces of great diversities, that keep great diversity of heats. Bacon's New Atlantis.

The kings of Spain have erected divers furnaces and forges, for the trying and fining of their gold. Abbo.

Whoso falleth not down and worshippeth, shall the same hour be cast into the midst of a burning fiery furnace. Dan.

A dungeon horrible, on all sides around,

As one great furnace, flam'd. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. i.

To FU'R NACE. v. a. [from the noun.] To throw out as sparks from a furnace. A bad word.

He furnaces

The thick sighs from him. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

To FU'R NISH. v. a. [fournir, French.]

1. To supply with what is necessary.
She hath directed
How I shall take her from her father's house;
What gold and jewels she is furnish'd with. Shakespeare.
His training such,
That he may furnish and instruct great teachers,
And never seek for aid out of himself. Shak. Henry VIII.
Thou shalt furnish him liberally out of thy flock. Deut. xv.
Auria, having driven the Turks from Corone, both by sea and land, furnished the city with corn, wine, victual, and powder. Knolles's History of the Turks.

Come, thou stranger, and furnish a table, and feed me of that thou hast ready. Ecclus. xxix. 26.
I shall not need to heap up instances; every one's reading and conversation will sufficiently furnish him, if he wants to be better stored. Locke.

2. To give things for use.
These simple ideas, the materials of all our knowledge, are suggested and furnished to the mind only by these two ways, sensation and reflection. Locke.

It is not any action of the state, but a compact among private persons that hath furnished out these several remittances. Addison's Remarks on Italy.

3. To fit up; to fit with appendages.
Something deeper,

Whereof perchance these are but furnishings. Shakespeare.
Plato entertained some of his friends at dinner, and had in the chamber a bed or couch, neatly and costly furnished. Dio- genes came in, and got up upon the bed, and trampled it, saying, I trample upon the pride of Plato. Plato mildly answered, But with greater pride, Diogenes. Bacon's Apophth.
We were led into another great room, furnished with old inscriptions. Addison on Italy.

4. To equip; to fit out for any undertaking.
Will your lordship lend me a thousand pounds to furnish me? Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. i.

Ideas, forms, and intellects,
Have furnish'd out three different sects. Prior.
Doubtless the man Jesus Christ is furnished with superior powers to all the angels in heaven, because he is employed in superior work. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

5. To decorate; to adorn.
The wounded arm would furnish all their rooms,
And bleed for ever scarlet in the looms. Halifax.

FU'R NISHER. n. f. [fournisseur, French, from furnish.] One who supplies or fits out.

FU'R NITURE. n. f. [furniture, Fr. from furnish.]

1. Moveables; goods put in a house for use or ornament.
No man can transport his large retinue, his sumptuous fare, and his rich furniture into another world. South's Sermons.
There are many noble palaces in Venice: their furniture is not commonly very rich, if we except the pictures from the hands of the best masters. Addison.

2. Appendages.
By a general conflagration mankind shall be destroyed, with the form and all the furniture of the earth. Tillotson.

3. Equipage; embellishments; decorations.
Young Clarion, with vauntful lustyhed,
After his guise did cast abroad to fare,
And thereto 'gan his furnitures prepare. Spenser.

The duke is coming: see, the barge be ready,
And fit it with such furniture as suits
The greatness of his person. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.
The ground must be of a mixt brown, and large enough, or the horse's furniture must be of very sensible colours. Dryd.

FU'RRIER. n. f. [from fur.] A dealer in furs.

FU'RROW. n. f. [furh, Saxon.]

1. A small trench made by the plow for the reception of seed.
Wheat must be sowed above furrow before Michaelmas. Mortimer's Husbandry.

Then ploughs for seed the fruitful furrows broke,
And oxen labour'd first beneath the yoke. Dryden's Ovid.

2. Any long trench or hollow: as a wrinkle.
My lord it is, though time has plow'd that face
With many furrows since I saw it first;
Yet I'm too well acquainted with the ground quite to forget it. Dryd. and Lee's Oedipus.

FU'RROW-WEED. n. f. [furrow and weed.] A weed that grows in furrowed land.

Crown'd with rank fumiter, and furrow-weeds. Shakesp.

To FU'RROW. v. a. [from the noun; fyrgan, Saxon.]

1. To cut in furrows.
While the plowman near at hand,
Whistles o'er the furrow'd land. Milton.

2. To divide in long hollows.

F U R

- No briny tear has furrow'd her smooth cheek. Suckling.
 The billows fall, while Neptune lays his mace
 On the rough sea, and smooths its furrow'd face. Dryden.
3. To make by cutting.
 There go the ships that furrow out their way;
 Yea, there of whales enormous fights we see. Wotton.
- FU'RRY. adj. [from fur.]
 1. Covered with fur; dressed in fur.
 From Volga's banks th' imperious Czar Leads forth his furry troops to war. Felton to Lord Gower.
 2. Consisting of fur.
 Not arm'd with horns of arbitrary might,
 Or claws to seize their furry spoils in fight. Dryden.
- FURTHER. adj. [from forth, not from far, as is commonly imagined; forth, furth, furthest, corrupted from forther, fortheft, forðen, Saxon. Forther is used by Sir Thomas More.
 See FORTH and FARTHER, of which the examples are to be referred to this word.]
 1. At a greater distance.
 2. Beyond this.
 What further need have we of witnesses. Mat. xxvi. 65.
 FU'RTH'ER. adv. [from forth.] To a greater distance.
 And the angel of the Lord went further, and stood in a narrow place. Numb. xxii. 2.
 To FU'RTH'ER. v. a. [from the adverb; forðuan, Saxon.]
 To put onward; to forward; to promote; to countenance;
 to assist; to help.
 Things thus set in order, in quiet and rest,
 Shall further thy harvest, and pleasure thee best. Tuss. Husb.
 Could their fond superstition have furthered so great attempts, without the mixture of a true persuasion concerning the irresistible force of divine power. Hooker, b. v. f. 1.
 Grant not, O Lord, the desires of the wicked; further not his wicked device. Pf. cxi. 8.
 This binds thee then to further my design,
 As I am bound by vow to further thine. Dryden.
 FU'RTH'ERANCE. n. f. [from further.] Promotion; advancement; help.
 The Gauls learned them first, and used them only for the furtherance of their trade and private business. Spenser.
 Our diligence must search out all helps and furtherances of direction; which scriptures, councils, fathers, histories, the laws and practices of all churches afford. Hooker.
 For gain and work, and success in his affairs, he seeketh furtherance of him that hath no manner of power. Hooker.
 Cannot my body, nor blood-sacrifice,
 Intreat you to your wonted furtherance? Shak. Henry VI.
 If men were minded to live righteously, to believe a God would be no hindrance or prejudice to any such design, but very much for the advancement and furtherance of it. Till.
 FU'RTH'ERER. n. f. [from further.] Promoter; advancer.
 That earnest favourer and furtherer of God's true religion, that faithful servitor to his prince and country. Ascham.
 FU'RTH'ERMORE. [from further and more.] Moreover; besides.
 This ring I do accept most thankfully,
 And so, I pray you, tell him: furthermore,
 I pray you, shew my youth old Shylock's house. Shakesp.
 FU'R'TIVE. adj. [from furtive, Fr. furtivus, Latin.] Stolen; gotten by theft.
 Or do they, as your schemes, I think, have shown,
 Dart furtive beams and glory not their own,
 All servants to that source of light, the sun? Prior.
 FU'RUNCLE. n. f. [from furuncle, Fr. furunculus, Latin.] A bile;
 an angry pustule.
 A furuncle is in its beginning round, hard, and inflamed; and as it increaseth, it riseth up with an acute head, and sometimes a pustule; and then it is more inflamed and painful, when it arrives at its state, which is about the eighth or ninth day. Wiseman's Surgery.
 FU'RY. n. f. [from furor, Latin; fureur, French.]
 1. Madness.
 2. Rage; passion of anger; tumult of mind approaching to madness.
 I do oppose my patience to his fury; and am arm'd
 To suffer with a quietness of spirit
 The very tyranny and rage of his. Shakesp. Mer. of Venice.
 He hath given me to know the natures of living creatures, and the furies of wild beasts. Wisd. vii. 20.
 3. Enthusiasm; exaltation of fancy.
 Taking up the lute, her wit began to be with a divine fury inspired; and her voice would, in so beloved an occasion, second her wit. Sidney, b. ii.
 A sybil, that had number'd in the world
 The sun to course two hundred compasses,
 In her prophetick fury sew'd the work. Shakesp. Othello.
 Greater than human kind she seem'd to look,
 And with an accent more than mortal spoke;
 Her staring eyes with sparkling fury roll,
 When all the god came rushing on her soul. Dryden's Æn.
 4. [From furia, Latin.] One of the deities of vengeance, and thence a stormy, turbulent, violent, raging woman.
 The sight of any of the house of York,
 Is as a fury to torment my soul. Shakesp. Henry VI. p. iii.

F U S

- It was the most proper place for a fury to make her exit; and I believe every reader's imagination is pleased, when he sees the angry goddess thus sinking in a tempest, and plunging herself into hell, amidst such a scene of horror and confusion. Addison's Remarks on Italy.
- FURZE. n. f. [from furz, Saxon.] Gorse; gofs.
 The whole plant is very thorny: the flowers, which are of the pea-bloom kind, are disposed in short thick spikes, which are succeeded by short compressed pods, in each of which are contained three or four kidney-shaped seeds. The species are three, each of which grow wild on the heaths and upland-commons in England; the first is sometimes used to make hedges, for which purpose it will do very well for a few years. Miller.
 Carry out gravel to fill up a hole,
 Both timber and furzin, the turf and the cole. Tuss. Husb.
 For fewel, there groweth generally in all parts great store of furze, of which the shrubby sort is called tame, and the better grown French. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.
 From hence uncertain seasons we may know,
 And when to reap the grain, and when to sow,
 Or when to fell the furzes. Dryden's Virg. Georg.
 FU'RZY. adj. [from furze.] Overgrown with furze; full of gorse.
 Wide through the furzy field their route they take,
 Their bleeding bosoms force the thorny brake. Gay.
 FUSCA'TION. n. f. [from fuscus, Latin.] The act of darkening or obscuring. Diæ.
 To FUSE. v. a. [from fundo, fusum, Latin.] To melt; to put into fusion; to liquify by heat.
 To FUSE. v. n. To be melted; to be capable of being liqui-fied by heat.
 FU'SEE. n. f. [from fuseau, French.]
 1. The cone round which is wound the cord or chain of a clock or watch.
 The reason of the motion of the balance is by the motion of the next wheel, and that by the motion of the next, and that by the motion of the fusee, and that by the motion of the spring: the whole frame of the watch carries a reasonableness in it, the passive impression of the intellectual idea that was in the artist. Hale's Origin of Mankind.
 2. A firelock [from fusil, Fr.]; a small neat musquet. This is more properly written fusil.
 FUSEE of a bomb or granado shell, is that which makes the whole powder or composition in the shell take fire, to do the designed execution. 'Tis usually a wooden pipe or tap filled with wildfire, or some such matter; and is intended to burn no longer than is the time of the motion of the bomb from the mouth of the mortar to the place where it is to fall; which time Anderson makes twenty-seven seconds. Harris.
 FU'SEE. Track of a buck. Ainsworth.
 FU'SIBLE. adj. [from fuse.] Capable of being melted; capable of being made liquid by heat.
 Colours afforded by metalline bodies, either colliquate with or otherwise penetrate into other bodies, especially fusible ones. Boyle.
 FUSIB'ILITY. n. f. [from fusible.] Capacity of being melted;
 quality of growing liquid by heat.
 The ancients observing in that material a kind of metrical nature, or at least a fusibility, seem to have resolved it into a nobler use. Watton's Architecture.
 The bodies of most use, that are sought for out of the depths of the earth, are the metals, which are distinguished from other bodies by their weight, fusibility, and malleableness. Locke.
 FU'SIL. adj. [from fusile, French; fusilis, Latin.]
 1. Capable of being melted; liquifiable by heat.
 The liquid ore he drain'd
 Into fit molds prepar'd; from which he form'd
 First his own tools: then, what might else be wrought
Fusile, or grav'n in metal. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xi.
 Some, less skilful, fancy these scapi that occur in most of the larger Gothick buildings of England are artificial; and will have it, that they are a kind of fusil marble. Woodward.
 2. Running by the force of heat.
 Perpetual flames,
 O'er sand and ashes, and the stubborn flint,
 Prevailing, turn into a fusil sea. Phillips.
 FU'SIL. n. f. [from fusil, French.]
 1. A firelock; a small neat musquet.
 2. [In heraldry, from fusus, Latin.] Something like a spindle.
Fusils must be made long, and small in the middle, in the ancient coat of Mountague, argent three fusils in fesse gules.
Peacham on Blazoning.
 FU'SILIER. n. f. [from fusil.] A soldier armed with a fusil.
 FU'SION. n. f. [from fusio, Latin; fusion, French.]
 1. The act of melting.
 2. The state of being melted, or of running with heat.
 Metals in fusion do not flame for want of a copious fume, except spelter, which fumes copiously, and thereby flames.
Newton's Opt.
 FUSS. n. f. [A low cant word.] A tumult; a bustle.

F U T

End as it befits your station;
Come to use and application;
Nor with senates keep a fufs:
I submit, and answer thus.

Swift.

FUST. n. f. [fuste, French.]

1. The trunk or body of a column.
2. [From fuste, French.] A strong smell, as that of a mouldy barrel.

To FUST. v. n. [from the noun.] To grow mouldy; to smell ill.

FUSTIAN. n. f. [futaine, French, from fuste, a tree, because cotton grows on trees.]

1. A kind of cloth made of linen and cotton, and perhaps now of cotton only.

Is supper ready, the house trimm'd, the serving-men in their new fustian and their white stockings? Shakespeare.

2. A high swelling kind of writing made up of heterogeneous parts, or of words and ideas ill associated; bombast.

Nor will you raise in me combustion,

By dint of high heroick fustian. Hudibras, p. ii. cant. 1.

What fustian have I heard these gentlemen find out in Mr. Cowley's odes! In general, I will say, that nothing can appear more beautiful to me than the strength of those images which they condemn. Dryden.

I am much deceived if this be not abominable fustian; that is, thoughts and words ill sorted, and without the least relation to each other. Dryden's Spanish Fryar, Dedication.

Chance thoughts, when govern'd by the close,

Of rise to fustian, or descend to prose.

Smith.

FUSTIAN. adj. [from the noun.]

1. Made of fustian.
2. Swelling; unnaturally pompous; ridiculously tumid. Used of style.

When men argue, th' greatest part

O' th' contest falls on terms of art,

Until the fustian stuff be spent,

And then they fall to th' argument. Hudibras, p. i. can. 3:

Virgil, if he could have seen the first verses of the Sylvæ, would have thought Statius mad in his fustian description of the statue on the brazen horse. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

FUSTIC. n. f. A sort of wood brought from the West-Indies, used in dying of cloath. Dict.

To FUSTIGATE. v. a. [fustigo, Latin.] To beat with a stick; to cane. Dict.

FUSTILARIAN. n. f. [from fusty.] A low fellow; a stinkard; a scoundrel. A word used by Shakespeare only.

Away, you scullion, you rampallian, you fustilarian: I'll tickle your catastrophe. Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. ii.

FUSTINESS. n. f. [from fusty.] Mouldiness; stink.

FUSTY. adj. [from fust.] Ill smelling; mouldy.

Hector shall have a great catch, if he knock out either of your brains: he were as good crack a fusty nut with no kernel. Shakespeare's Troilus and Cressida.

The fusty plebeians hate thine honours. Shak. Coriolan.

The large Achilles, at this fusty stuff,

From his deep chest laughs out a loud applause. Shakesp.

FUTILE. adj. [futile, French; futiles, Latin.]

1. Talkative; loquacious.

One futile person, that maketh it his glory to tell, will do more hurt than many that know it their duty to conceal. Bacon.

2. Trifling; worthless; of no weight.

FUTILITY. n. f. [futilité, French, from futile.]

1. Talkativeness; loquacity.

This fable does not strike so much at the futility of women, as at the incontinent levity of a prying humour. L'Estrange.

2. Triflingness; want of weight; want of solidity.

F Y

Trifling futility appears in their signs of the zodiack, and their mutual relations and aspects. Bentley.

FUTTOCKS. n. f. [corrupted from foot books. Skinner.] The lower timbers that hold the ship together.

FUTURE. adj. [futurus, Latin; futur, French.] That which will be hereafter; to come: as, the future state.

Glory they sung to the most High! good will

To future men, and in their dwellings peace. Milt. P. L.

He fows the teeth at Pallas's command,

And flings the future people from his hand. Addison's Ovid.

FUTURE. n. f. [from the adjective.] Time to come; somewhat to happen hereafter.

Thy letters have transported me beyond

This ign'rant present time; and I feel now

The future in the instant.

Shakespeare's Macbeth.

The mind, once jaded by an attempt above its power, either is disabled for the future, or else checks at any vigorous undertaking ever after. Locke.

FUTURALLY. adv. [from future.] In time to come.

This prescience of God, as it is prescience, is not the cause of any thing *futur*ely succeeding; neither doth God's foreknowledge impose any necessity, or bind. Raleigh.

FUTURITION. n. f. [from future.] The state of being to be; of being to come to pass hereafter.

Is it imaginable, that the great means of the world's redemption should rest only in the number of possibilities, and hang so loose in respect of its futurition, as to leave the event in an equal poise, whether ever there should be such a thing or no? South's Sermons.

FUTURITY. n. f. [from future.]

1. Time to come; events to come.

Not my service past, nor present sorrows,

Nor purpos'd merit in futurity,

Can ransom me.

Shakespeare's Othello.

All futurities are naked before that All-seeing Eye, the sight of which is no more hindred by distance of time than the sight of an angel can be determined by distance of place. South.

I will contrive some way to make it known to futurity, that I had your lordship for my patron. Swift.

This, great Amphiarus, lay hid from thee,

Though skill'd in fate and dark futurity. Pope's Statius.

2. The state of being to be; futurition.

It may be well reckoned among the bare possibilities, which never commence into a futurity; it requiring such a free, sedate and intent mind, as, it may be, is no where found but among the platonical ideas. Glanv. Sceps. c. 10.

To FUZZ. v. n. [without etymology.] To fly out in small particles.

FUZZBALL. n. f. [fuzz and ball.] A kind of fungus, which, when pressed, bursts and scatters dust in the eyes.

FY. interj. [fy, French and Flemish; Φῦ, Greek; vah, Lat.] A word of blame and disapprobation.

And fy on fortune, mine avowed foe,

Whose wrathful wreaks themselves do now allay. Fa. Queen.

Fy, my lord, fy! a soldier, and afraid? What need we fear who knows it, when none can call our power to account? Shakespeare's Macbeth.

A bawd, fir, fy upon him! Shakesf. Measure for Measure.

But fy, my wand'ring muse, how thou do'st stray!

Expectance calls thee now another way. Milton.

Nay, fy, what mean you in this open place?

Unhand me, or, I swear, I'll scratch your face:

Let go, for shame; you make me mad for spite:

My mouth's my own; and if you kiss, I'll bite. Dryden.

Fy, madam, he cried, we must be past all these gaities.

Tatler, N<sup>o</sup>. 54.

G.

G A D

G Has two sounds, one from the Greek Γ, and the Latin, which is called that of the hard G, because it is formed by a pressure somewhat hard of the forepart of the tongue against the upper gum. This sound G retains before a, o, u, l, r; as, gate, go, gull.

The other sound, called that of the soft G, resembles that of γ, and is commonly, though not always, found before e, i; as, gem, gibbet. Before n, at the end of a word, g is commonly melted away; as in the French, from which these words are commonly derived: thus, for benign, malign, condign, we pronounce benine, maline, condine. It is often silent in the middle of words before h; as, might. The Saxon Ġ, ȝ, seems to have had generally the sound of y consonant; whence gate is by rusticks still pronounced yate.

GA'BARDINE. n. f. [gavardina, Italian.] A coarse frock; any mean dress.

My best way is to creep under his gabardine; there is no other shelter hereabout. Shakespeare's Tempest.

You call me misbeliever, cut-throat dog,
And spit upon my Jewish gabardine. Shakesp. Mer. of Venice.
The knight did straight submit,

And laid his weapons at her feet:
Next he disrob'd his gabardine,
And with it did himself resign. Hudibras, b. i.

To GA'BBLE. v. n. [gabbare, Italian; gabberen, Dutch.]

1. To make an inarticulate noise.

When thou could'st not, savage,
Shew thine own meaning, but would'st gabble like
A thing most brutish, I endow'd thy purposes
With words that made them known. Shakesp. Tempest.
Flocks of fowl, that when the tempests roar,
With their hoarse gabbling seek the silent shoar. Dryd. Æn.

2. To prate loudly without meaning.

Have you no wit, manners, nor honesty, but to gabble like tinkers at this time of night? Do ye make an alehouse of my lady's house? Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.

Which made some think, when he did gabble,
Th' had heard three labourers of Babel. Hudibras, p. i.
Such a rout, and such a rabble,
Run to hear Jack Pudding gabble. Swift.

GA'BBLE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Inarticulate noise like that of brute animals.

Not to know what we speak one to another, so we seem to know, is to know straight our purpose: chough's language, gabble enough, and good enough. Shak. All's well that ends well.

2. Loud talk without meaning.

Forthwith a hideous gabble rises loud
Among the builders; each to other calls,
Not understood. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xii.

GA'BBLER. n. f. [from gabble.] A prater; a chattering fellow.

GA'BEL. n. f. [gabelle, French; gabello, Italian; gafel, Saxon, a tribute.] An excise; a tax.

The gabels of Naples are very high on oil, wine, and tobacco. Addison's Remarks on Italy.

GABION. n. f. [French.] A wicker basket which is filled with earth to make a fortification or intrenchment.

His battery was defended all along with gabions, and casks filled with sand. Knolles's History of the Turks.

GA'BLE. n. f. [gaval, Welsh; gable, French.] The sloping roof of a building.

Take care that all your brick-work be covered with the tiling, according to the new way of building, without gable ends, which are very heavy, and very apt to let the water into the brick-work. Mortimer's Husbandry.

GAD. n. f. [gad, Saxon; gaddur, Islandick, a club.]

1. A wedge or ingot of steel.

Flemish steel is brought down the Rhine to Dort, and other parts of Holland and Flanders, some in bars, and some in gads; and therefore called Flemish steel, and sometimes gad steel. Moxon's Mech. Exer.

2. It seems to be used by Shakespeare for a stile or graver, [from gad, Saxon, a goad.]

G A G

I will go get a leaf of brags;

And with a gad of steel will write these words. Shakespeare.

To GAD. v. n. [Derived by Skinner from gadfly; by Junius from gadaw, Welsh, to forsake.] To ramble about without any settled purpose; to rove loosely and idly.

How now, my headstrong, where have you been gadding?

—Where I have learnt me to repent. Shakesp. Rom. and Jul.

Give the water no passage, neither a wicked woman liberty to gad abroad. Ecclus. xxv. 25.

The lesser devils arose with ghastly rore,

And thronged forth about the world to gad;

Each land they fill'd, river, stream and shore. Fairfax, b. iv.

Envy is a gadding passion, and walketh the streets, and doth not keep home. Bacon, Essay 9.

Gad not abroad at ev'ry quest and call

Of an untrained hope or passion;

To court each place or fortune that doth fall,
Is wantonness in contemplation. Herbert.

Thee, shepherd, thee the woods and desert caves,
With wild thyme and the gadding vine o'ergrown,
And all their echo's moan. Milton.

A fierce loud buzzing breeze; their stings draw blood,
And drive the cattle gadding through the wood. Dryd. Virg.

She wreaks her anger on her rival's head;
With furies frights her from her native home,

And drives her gadding, round the world to roam. Dryden.
Gull 'em with freedom,

And you shall see 'em toss their tails, and gad
As if the breeze had stung them. Dryd. and Lee's Oedipus.

There's an ox lost, and this coxcomb runs a gadding after wild fowl. L'Estrange.

No wonder their thoughts should be perpetually shifting from what disgusts them, and seek better entertainment in more pleasing objects, after which they will unavoidably be gadding. Locke.

GA'DDER. n. f. [from gad.] A rambler; one that runs much abroad without business.

A drunken woman, and a gadder abroad, causeth great anger, and she will not cover her own shame. Ecclus. xxvi. 8.

GA'DDINGLY. adv. [from gad.] In a rambling, roving manner.

GA'DFLY. n. f. [gad and fly; but by Skinner, who makes it the original of gad, goadfly. Supposed to be originally from goad, in Saxon gad, and fly.] A fly that when he stings the cattle makes them gad or run madly about; the breeze.

The fly called the gadfly breedeth of somewhat that swim-eth upon the top of the water, and is most about ponds. Bac.

Light fly his slumbers, if perchance a flight

Of angry gadflies fasten on the herd. Thomson's Summer.
GAFF. n. f. A harpoon or large hook. Ainsworth.

GA'FFER. n. f. [gefepe, companion, Saxon.] A word of respect now obsolete, or applied only in contempt to a mean person.

For gaffer Treadwell told us by the bye,

Excessive sorrow is exceeding dry. Gay's Pastorals.

GA'FFLES. n. f. [gafelucar, spears, Saxon.]

1. Artificial spurs put upon cocks when they are set to fight.

2. A steel contrivance to bend cross-bows. Ainsworth.

To GAG. v. n. [from gaghel, Dutch, the palate, Minshew.] To stop the mouth with something that may allow to breathe, but hinder to speak.

He's out of his guard already: unless you laugh and minister occasion to him, he is gagg'd. Shakesp. Twelfth Night.

There foam'd rebellious logick, gagg'd and bound. Pope.

GAG. n. f. [from the verb.] Something put into the mouth to hinder speech or eating.

Some, when the kids their dams too deeply drain,

With gags and muzzles their soft mouths restrain. Dryden.

Your woman would have run up stairs before me; but I have secured her below with a gag in her chaps. Dryden.

GAGE. n. f. [gage, French.] A pledge; a pawn; a caution; any thing given in security.

Who, when the flamed shield of slain Sansfoy
He spy'd, with that same fairy champion's page,
He to him leapt; and that same envious gage,
Of victor's glory, from him snatcht away. Fairy Queen.

There I throw my gage
Disclaiming here the kindred of a king,
And lay aside my high blood's royalty. Shakesp. Richard II.

There is my gage, the manual seal of death,
That marks thee out for hell. Shakesp. Richard II.

They from their mothers breasts poor orphans rend,
Nor without gages to the needy lend. Sandys's Paraphrase.

I am made the cautionary pledge,
The gage and hostage of your keeping it. Southern's Oroonok.

But since it was decreed, auspicious king,
In Britain's right that thou should'st wed the main,
Heav'n, as a gage, would cast some previous thing,
And therefore doom'd that Lawson should be slain. Dryden.

In any truth, that gets not possession of our minds by self-evidence or demonstration, the arguments, that gain it assent, are the vouchers and gage of its probability. Locke.

To GAGE. v. a. [gager, French.]

1. To wager; to depone as a wager; to impawn; to give as a caution, pledge, or security.

Against the which, a moiety competent
Was gaged by our king. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

Drawing near the shore, he found the Turkish merchants making merry upon the main: unto these merchants he gave due salutations, gaging his faith for their safety, and they likewise to him. Knolles's History of the Turks.

2. To measure; to take the contents of any vessel of liquids particularly. More properly gauge. See GAUGE.

We shall see your bearing.

—Nay, but I bar to-night: you shall not gage me
By what we do to-night. Shakesp. Merchant of Venice.

To GA'GGLE. v. n. [gagen, gagelen, Dutch] To make noise like a goose.

Birds prune their feathers, geese gaggle, and crows seem to call upon rain; which is but the comfort they receive in the relenting of the air. Bacon's Natural History, N<sup>o</sup>. 823.

May fat geese gaggle with melodious voice,
And ne'er want gooseberries or apple-sauce. King.

GA'ITY. See GAYETY.

GAILY. adv. [from gay.]

1. Airily; cheerfully.

2. Splendidly; pompously; with great show.

The ladies gaily dress'd, the Mall adorn
With curious dyes, and paint the sunny morn. Gay's Trivia.

Like some fair flow'r that early Spring supplies,
That gaily blooms, but ev'n in blooming dies. Pope.

GAIN. n. f. [gain, French.]

1. Profit; advantage.

But what things were gain to me, those I counted loss for Christ. Phil. iii. 7.

Besides the purpose it were now, to teach how victory should be used, or the gains thereof communicated to the general content. Raleigh's Essays.

It is in praise of men as in gettings and gains; for light gains make heavy purses; for light gains come thick, whereas great come but now and then. Bacon, Essay 53.

This must be made by some governor upon his own private account, who has a great stock that he is content to turn that way, and is invited by the gains. Temple.

2. Interest; lucrative views.

That fir, which serves for gain,
And follows but for form,
Will pack, when it begins to rain,
And leave thee in the storm. Shakespeare's King Lear.

3. Unlawful advantage.

Did I make a gain of you by any of them whom I sent unto you? 2 Cor. xii. 17.

4. Overplus in a comparative computation; any thing opposed to loss.

To GAIN. v. a. [gagner, French.]

1. To obtain as profit or advantage.

Thou hast taken usury and increase, and thou hast greedily gained of thy neighbours by extortions. Ezek. xxii. 12.

2. To have the overplus in comparative computation.

If you have two vessels to fill, and you empty one to fill the other, you gain nothing by that. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

3. To obtain; to procure.

If such a tradition were endeavoured to be set on foot, it is not easy to imagine how it should at first gain entertainment;
but much more difficult to conceive how ever it should come to be universally propagated. Tillotson's Sermons.

4. To obtain increase of any thing allotted.

I know that ye would gain the time, because ye see the king is gone from me. Dan. ii. 8.

5. To obtain whatever good or bad.

Ye should not have loosed from Crete, and have gained this harm and loss. Acts xxvii. 21.

6. To win.

They who were sent to the other pass, after a short resistance, gained it. Clarendon, b. viii.

Fat fees from the defended Umbrian draws,
And only gains the wealthy client's cause. Dryd. Pers. Sat.

O love! for Sylvia let me gain the prize,
And make my tongue victorious as her eyes. Pope's Spring.

7. To draw into any interest or party.

Come, with presents, laden from the port,
To gratify the queen and gain the court. Dryd. Virg. Æn.

If Pyrrhus must be wrought to pity,
No woman does it better than yourself:

If you gain him, I shall comply of course. A. Phillis's.

8. To reach; to attain.

The West glimmers with some streaks of day:
Now spurs the lated traveller apace,
To gain the timely inn. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Death was the post, which I almost did gain:
Shall I once more be tost into the main? Waller.

We came to the roots of the mountain, and had a very troublesome march to gain the top of it. Addison on Italy.

Thus sav'd from death, they gain the Phestan shores,
With shatter'd vessels and disabled oars. Pope's Odyssey, b. iii.

9. To GAIN over. To draw to another party or interest.

The court of Hanover should have endeavoured to gain over those who were represented as their enemies. Swift.

To GAIN. v. n.

1. To encroach; to come forward by degrees.

When watchful herons leave their wat'ry stand,
And mounting upward with erected flight,
Gain on the skies, and soar above the fight. Dryd. Virg. Geo.

On the land while here the ocean gains,
In other parts it leaves wide sandy plains. Pope on Criticism.

2. To get ground; to prevail against.

The English have not only gained upon the Venetians in the Levant, but have their cloth in Venice itself. Addison.

3. To obtain influence with.

My good behaviour had gained so far on the emperor, that I began to conceive hopes of liberty. Gulliver's Travels.

To GAIN. v. n. To grow rich; to have advantage; to be advanced in interest or happiness.

GAIN. adj. [An old word now out of use.] Handy; ready;
dexterous.

GA'INER. n. f. [from gain.] One who receives profit or advantage.

The client, besides retaining a good conscience, is always a gainer, and by no means can be at any loss, as seeing, if the composition be overhard, he may relieve himself by recourse to his oath. Bacon's Off. of Alienation.

If what I get in empire
I lose in fame, I think myself no gainer. Denham's Sophy.

He that loses any thing, and gets wisdom by it, is a gainer by the loss. L'Estrange, Fable 59.

By extending a well regulated trade, we are as great gainers by the commodities of many other countries as those of our own nation. Addison's Freeholder.

GA'INFUL. adj. [gain and full.]

1. Advantageous; profitable.

He will dazzle his eyes, and bait him in with the luscious proposal of some gainful purchase, some rich match, or advantageous project. Scuth.

2. Lucrative; productive of money.

Nor knows he merchants gainful care. Dryden's Horace.

Maro's muse,
Thrice sacred muse! commodious precepts gives,
Instructive to the swains, not wholly bent
On what is gainful: sometimes she diverts
From solid counsels. Phillips.

GA'INFULLY. adv. [from gainful.] Profitably; advantageously.

GA'INFULNESS. n. f. [from gainful.] Profit; advantage.

GA'INGIVING. n. f. ['gainst and give.] The same as misgiving; a giving against: as gainfaying, which is still in use, is saying against, or contradicting. Hanmer.

It is but foolery; but it is such a kind of gainfaying as would, perhaps, trouble a woman. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

GA'INLESS. adj. [from gain.] Unprofitable; producing no advantage.

GA'INLESSNESS. n. f. [from gainless.] Unprofitableness; want of advantage.

The parallel holds too in the gainlessness as well as labori-ousness of the work: those wretched creatures, buried in earth and darkness, were never the richer for all the ore they dugged; no more is the insatiable miser. Decay of Piety.

GA'INLY. adv. [from gain.] Handily; readily; dexterously.

To GA'INSAY. v. a. ['gainst and say.]

1. To contradict; to oppose; to controvert with; to dispute against.

Speeches which gainsay one another, must of necessity be applied both unto one and the same subject. Hooker, b. v.

Too facile then, thou didst not much gainsay;
Nay, didst permit, approve, and fair dismiss. Milton's P. L.

2. To deny any thing.

I never

I never heard yet

That any of those bolder vices wanted

Less impudence to gainsay what they did,

Than to perform it first. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

GA'INSAYER. n. f. [from gainsay.] Opponent; adversary.

Such as may satisfy gainsayers, when suddenly, and besides expectation, they require the same at our hands. Hooker, b. v.

We are, for this cause, challenged as manifest gainsayers of Scripture, even in that which we read for Scripture unto the people. Hooker, b. v. f. 19.

It was full matter of conviction to all gainsayers. Hammond.

'GAINST. prep. [for against.] See AGAINST.

Tremble, ye nations! who, secure before,

Laugh'd at those arms, that 'gainst ourselves we bore. Dryd.

TO GA'INSTAND. v. a. ['gainst and stand.] To withstand; to oppose; to resist.

Love proved himself valiant, that durst with the sword of reverent duty gainstand the force of so many enraged desires. Sidney, b. ii.

GA'IRISH. adj. [geannuan, to dress fine, Saxon.]

1. Gaudy; showy; splendid; fine.

I call'd thee then poor shadow, painted queen,

The presentation of but what I was;

A mother, only mock'd with two fair babes;

A dream of what thou wast, a gairish flag,

To be the aim of every dangerous shot. Shakesp. Rich. III.

There in close covert by some brook,

Where no profaner eye may look,

Hide me from day's gairish eye. Milton.

2. Extravagantly gay; flighty.

Fame and glory transports a man out of himself: it makes the mind loose and gairish, scatters the spirits, and leaves a kind of dissolution upon all the faculties. South's Sermons.

GA'IRISHNESS. n. f. [from gairish.]

1. Finery; flaunting gaudiness.

2. Flighty or extravagant joy.
